Mr. ATKINSON. It means this: There are many articles of food that are compounded articles, especially so in the retail markets of a great city, and this provision is intended to secure the purity of such compounded articles, and that they shall be made up of the ingredients of which they purport to be made. The same is true of drugs. Many of these in common use are compounded of different ingredients, and they are represented to be this particular thing, compounded perhaps of ingredients and in proportions named in the pharmacopœia. They are official, if you please.

Mr. ROGERS. My friend does not answer the question as to the meaning of this provision in the first part of this section:

That no person shall sell any compound article of food or compounded drug which is not composed of ingredients in accordance with the demand of the purchaser.

What does that mean? That the purchaser shall demand such and such an article, and that what he demands shall be put into the compound?

Mr. ATKINSON. No, sir; it means, as I understand it, that the article the purchaser asks for shall be in accordance with the usual requirements of the article. For instance, if he wanted some medicinal preparation known by a popular name, that the ingredients of which it is composed shall be as they are generally understood. That is all I see in this section. That these compounded articles shall be in accordance with the demand of the purchaser; that is to say, that he shall receive the article prepared in accordance with the ordinary and usual method of preparing such a compound article, and that the compound article or drug shall not be fabricated of some other ingredients or adulterated. The object is simply to secure purity in food and drugs.

Mr. ROGERS. I have heard the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but it does not at all satisfy my mind. I really do not know what they mean by this provision. Do you mean to say that you can prohibit a man from selling his merchandise unless he puts it up in conformity to the demand of the purchaser? If it does not mean that, I do not see what it does mean.

Mr. ATKINSON. I do not so understand it. I think I can safely say to the gentleman that it can not be so construed; and certainly it can do no harm in its present form to say that any purchaser who demands a compound article shall be entitled to what he asks for, and that he shall have legal redress against a man who will sell him under such circumstances a fraudulent, adulterated, or different article.

That is all I understand there is of it. I do not see that it can do any harm to any honest vender to have this section enacted into law. The whole purpose is to secure purity, I repeat, in food and drugs, and honesty in commercial transactions relating to them.

Mr. ROGERS. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment, although I do not see the necessity for this provision.

Section 6 was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. That no person shall, with the intent that the same may be sold in its altered state without notice, subtract from any article of food any part of it so as to affect injuriously its quality, substance, or nature, and no person shall sell any article so altered without making disclosure of the alteration, and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not exceeding $100.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to amend that by inserting, after the word "shall," in the fourth line, the words "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. ATKINSON. There is no objection to the amendment.

Section 7 was read:

SEC. 7. That in any prosecution under this act, where the fact of an article having been sold in a mixed state has been proved, if the defendant shall desire to reply upon any exception or provision contained in this act, it shall be incumbent upon him to prove the same.

Mr. ROGERS. I take it that there is a typographical error in this section; and that the word "reply," in the third line, should be "rely."

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. I have not paid attention to this measure so far, but would like to ask the purpose of the bill. Is its purpose to change the rule of common law as to evidence, and to make the defense different in these cases from that in others? Or is it simply declaratory of the common law? If so, it is useless, and if your purpose is to change the rule of the common law, that seems to me to be entering upon a very dangerous field. I have not looked at the provisions of the bill, but it seems, as far as I have heard it read, to be rather a strange production. I ask the gentleman in charge of it whether the purpose is to change the rule of evidence in these cases and make it different in this class of offenses from that obtaining in others?

Mr. ATKINSON. It is to this extent a change, that the defense is allowed in the bill to show absence of knowledge of fraud; that a man may show that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained knowledge of the fraudulent character of the product he sells, and that he did not know of its fraudulent nature. That is the defense authorized by the bill; and this section, 7, provides that the defense shall be shown affirmatively. In other words, under this bill it is only necessary to show that a man has sold an adulterated or fraudulent article of food or drugs in order to convict him. That makes out a prima facie case, and the burden of proof is placed upon the defendant to show that he did not know the article was adulterated or fraudulent, or that with reasonable diligence he could not acquire that knowledge. It does not change the common-law rule; but we specify what shall be the defense in the bill.

I do not know that the section is very material, and perhaps the common-law rule of evidence would cover it. But this is a Senate bill, and we are making an effort now to pass it in the House precisely as it came from the Senate.

Mr. WARNER. I do not care to press the objection, but it seems to me to be a strange provision. I shall not press the objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to strike out the last word, in order to see if I can get some information. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to point out to me, for I have not at this time discovered, where there is any exception in the bill. There are some provisos in the fourth section.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the third section:

That no person shall be liable to be convicted under either of the two last foregoing sections of this act in respect of the sale of any article of food, or of any drug, if he shows to the satisfaction of the court before whom he is charged that he did not know of the article of food or drug sold by him being so mixed, colored, stained, or powdered, as in either of those sections mentioned, and that he could not, with reasonable diligence, have obtained that knowledge.

Mr. ROGERS. That gets at the knowledge of the party in the commission of the act, but it is not an exception. There is a technical meaning to the word "exception" and to the word "proviso." I do not see any exception that you have in the bill; therefore I do not see anything to which that section refers.

Mr. ATKINSON. The exception the gentleman refers to will be found in the fourth section.

Mr. ROGERS. Those are provisos, not exceptions.

Mr. ATKINSON. Well, probably the bill was not constructed in accordance with the strict rules the gentleman would invoke in its interpretation. But it seems to me that the words "exception" or "provision," or either of these two words, refer especially to this proviso in the fourth section.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I mean. They use the words "exception or provision," which ought to be "proviso." If that were the case, the section would be intelligent. As it is, the word "exception" refers to nothing, and the word "provision" serves only to confuse.

Mr. ATKINSON. Well, I have not given the bill enough attention to now demonstrate whether the word "exception" is necessary or not.

Mr. WARNER. I would say without special opposition to this bill that I apprehend, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania states, that this measure has not received a very careful consideration at the hands of the committee. There is a great cry against adulterated food; and of course it is a popular matter to condemn everything of that kind. And anything in the shape of a bill that punishes people for selling or attempting to sell goods that are adulterated immediately meets with the approbation of the House. I think this measure generally is in the right direction; but I think it is following a good deal in the line of the legislation that we had at the last House, and which I think we would not pass at this time. Instead of a bill coming in here, Mr. Speaker, confessedly not carefully considered on so important a question as this, I think it should be carefully considered by the committee. It is placing in the hands of informers or prosecutors the power to annoy business men who are attempting to conduct their business honestly. I think we ought to guard these men against what may turn out to be malicious and trifling prosecutions; and therefore measures of this kind should receive the utmost care at the hands of the committee. Every word should be weighed, to protect business; instead of which you are protecting the stomachs of some people who seem to be very fastidious upon this subject.

Mr. ATKINSON. If there has been anything said by me during the consideration of this bill that led the gentleman from Missouri to believe that it was not carefully considered in committee, I am very sorry, indeed, that such an erroneous impression should have been made upon his mind.

Mr. WARNER. I understood the gentleman to state in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas just a moment ago that this measure had not been carefully considered.

Mr. ATKINSON. That applied to the verbiage of the bill to which he took exception.

Mr. WARNER. The verbiage of the bill is what gives it its force.

Mr. ATKINSON. We did carefully consider the purposes of this bill, and we were especially cautious that no honest dealer either in food or drugs in the District of Columbia should be harmed by its provisions. We were also solicitous that no honest purchaser either of food or drugs should be duped by dishonest dealers. That is the aim and purpose of this bill, and it was carefully considered so far as the purposes of the bill were concerned. The criticism of the gentleman from Arkansas was purely a verbal one, and probably he will admit that it is at least slightly technical; but we insist that the bill is carefully and properly drawn; that it was not drawn by reason of any pressure that was brought upon us, nor because we were misled by any hue and cry against adulteration. It was reported because it was believed that it was necessary for the preservation of the health of the people of the District that some legislation should be enacted to prevent the sale of adulterated food and drugs.

Mr. ROGERS. I trust that my friend from Pennsylvania will not suppose for a moment that I am unfriendly to the object and purpose of the bill. I am not. As far as we may go wisely in the regulation of matters of this character, I am willing to go. But the observations of my friend from Missouri, who has had a good deal to do with the prosecution of crimes, are eminently pertinent at this point in this bill. I avail myself of the present opportunity to make an observation, that I want to invite the attention of the House to in connection with this provision, an observation in relation to the operation of what is known as the oleomargarine law, because the same policy and the same principles are involved in this that were involved in that law. I knew in my own State of a case of this kind.

In the State of Kansas, which produces a great deal of butter, a very excellent firm in one of the Southwestern towns were engaged in the manufacture of it, and sent an agent to my town who, by way of introducing their butter to our market, sold six packages of it to a commission man. The commission man was also a retail merchant. He used one package of the butter, and the other five packages were sold to other retail merchants in the city. After the larger portion of it had been used, the internal-revenue agent became satisfied in his own mind—and I have no hesitancy in saying that he is a man of the very highest character, a man who stands as well socially, morally, and intellectually as any man in the city—he became satisfied, I say, that this so-called butter was not really butter, but was oleomargarine. The result was the interference in the business of six different citizens for that sale, and the seizure of the butter, for it turned out to be butter.

The local chemist, the best that could be had, pronounced it oleomargarine. The matter was contested by the parties, and the agent from Kansas came down to where he had made the sale, in order that if he had committed any offense against the law he might be within the jurisdiction of the courts. Here, then, were six different prosecutions about to be set on foot. The Government declined to prosecute him. The matter was brought to the internal-revenue department here, and after a full examination by the departmental chemist, the alleged oleomargarine was proved to be pure butter.

Now, I give this illustration not by way of antagonizing this bill, because in what we propose to do here we are clearly within the Constitution. We are legislating for the District of Columbia, and in the District of Columbia we have a constitutional right to exercise all the powers which a State Legislature may properly exercise within the State; and, the power existing, the duty also exists to protect the public from anything that may prove injurious or fraudulent. But while we are bound to do that we are bound also upon the highest principles to so frame our laws that they may be administered in such a manner as not to do injustice to the citizen. A most important principle in a free government is that we shall not enact laws that will induce or permit detectives to pry into the private affairs of citizens any further than may be found absolutely necessary for the protection of society.

These principles always guide me when I come to look at any measure that is to operate on the citizen in the transaction of his private business, and they have induced me to give some consideration to this bill and to apply whatever knowledge I may have of the law to perfecting, to some extent, what I conceive to be an imperfect bill. So far as I have been enabled to examine the bill I am not prepared to say that the words to which my inquiry relates are open to any serious objection, because if there is no exception in the bill to which they can apply they are harmless. On the other hand it may be that there is an exception somewhere in the bill, and in order to ascertain that fact I have applied to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] in charge of the bill. If there is any such exception, then by referring to that exception, whatever it may be, we can tell whether or not this would be a proper provision, but unless I can be pointed to some exception I take it that the words should be stricken from the bill as surplusage, and in order to raise that question I move now to strike out the words "any exception or" in lines 3 and 4.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact that his amendment (to which I make no special objection) may possibly deprive a defendant of a defense he might otherwise have. This language which the gentleman proposes to strike out was inserted for the benefit of the accused, not for the benefit of the prosecutor.

I wish to say further that I do not impute to the gentleman from Arkansas any hostility to this bill. It is brought here for consideration, and is subject to any fair criticism. If the gentleman is disposed to examine the bill carefully, as I observe he is doing, I certainly have no objection; and if the amendments he proposes can properly be made, I am not here to resist them. All that the Committee on the District of Columbia desire to secure by the passage of this bill is the health of the people of this District and the prevention of frauds upon them.

Mr. WARNER. Would it vitiate the bill if section 7 were struck out, leaving this matter to be governed by the rules of the common law applicable to such cases?

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to ask my friend from Pennsylvania to permit this section to be passed over, with leave to return to it. This question having been sprung upon me, I am not entirely clear in my mind as to the difference between a proviso and an exception. I am aware there is a difference; and upon that difference depends the character of the indictment. In other words, I recollect that in case either of a proviso or an exception (I am not prepared to say which) it is necessary to negative in the indictment the proviso or the exception. If this section be passed over for the present, I will endeavor to ascertain the precise distinction on that point.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no objection at all to the gentleman's request, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that under section 7 the accused will have the right to take advantage in his defense of any exception or any proviso. For the reason suggested, there might perhaps be some difficulty in drawing an indictment under some of those sections.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that section 7 does not give the defendant any power to rely upon any proviso or any exception. It simply says that if he wishes to rely on any proviso or exception he may and must plead it; but it does not say that such plea shall constitute a defense.

I submit in all candor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we ought not to adopt any provision undertaking to change a time-honored principle, one that has come down to us from "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," that every man is presumed innocent of an offense until his guilt has been established. If the purpose of this bill is to shift the onus and raise a presumption of guilt which would not otherwise arise, then we are in danger of doing more harm by infringement upon the rights of the citizen than we can do good by any attempted protection in regard to the sale of adulterated food.

I entirely concur in the principle upon which this bill proceeds, that the citizen has the right to receive from the merchant or dealer that which is bargained for; and if there is sold to the customer anything else than that which he calls for, it is a fraud upon him, and ought to be punished. But I submit that section 7 does not strengthen the essential features of the bill, while it may have the effect of changing a principle of law which ought not to be departed from. Certainly we should not attempt in a bill of this kind to change a rule of law which is sanctioned by the wisdom of ages. If such change is not proposed, and the bill is designed to be simply declaratory of the common law, then certainly the provision of this section is mere waste paper. I move, therefore, to strike out section 7.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WARNER to strike out section 7, it was rejected—ayes 7, noes 8.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that this section be passed over, by unanimous consent, to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no objection if the gentleman desires to examine the section further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, section 7 will be passed over informally.

The following sections were read:

SEC. 8. That if the defendant in any prosecution under this act prove to the satisfaction of the court that he had purchased the article in question as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded of him by the purchaser, and with a written warranty to that effect; that he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold it that the article was otherwise; and that he sold it in the same state as when he purchased it, he shall be discharged from the prosecution.

SEC. 9. That any person who shall forge, or shall alter knowing it to be forged, any certificate or any writing purporting to contain a warranty, as provided in section 8 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punishable, on conviction, by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year with hard labor.

SEC. 10. That every person who shall willfully apply to any article of food or a drug a certificate or warranty given in relation to any other article or drug, or who shall give a false warranty in writing to any purchaser in respect of an article of food or a drug sold by him as principal or agent, or who shall willfully give a label with any article sold by him which shall falsely describe the article sold shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction be fined not to exceed $100.

SEC. 11. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint a person, who shall be removable at the pleasure of the commissioners, possessing competent knowledge, skill, and experience, as analyst of all articles of food or drugs sold within the District of Columbia, who shall receive a salary to be fixed by the commissioners not exceeding $3,000 per annum: Provided, That the salary authorized by this section shall include any salary or compensation now paid to the analyst appointed by said commissioners: And provided further, That no person shall be appointed as such analyst who shall be engaged, directly or indirectly, in any trade or business connected with the sale of food or drugs.

Mr. ROGERS. I have been trying to prepare an amendment to this section. In order to state the purpose I am seeking, I move pro forma to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is of course aware of the fact that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has as much jurisdiction over the District of Columbia and the Territories as over the several States. The amendment I desire to frame seeks to avoid the creation of a new office and the payment of a new salary by remitting the enforcement of this act to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. ATKINSON. That suggestion brings us to the question of the propriety or impropriety of creating a new office or new offices. I assume it as a rule that there can be no objection to the creation of a necessary office, while perhaps the burden of proving the necessity for a new office rests upon those who ask its creation.

I presume the objection of the gentleman grows out of the fact that a few days ago in this House a list was presented of the number of new offices created during the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses. But, Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that if these officers were needed for the proper transaction of the public business it was entirely right and proper to create the offices and appoint men to fill them. If they were necessary offices, then they should have been created. The only force that I see in that list of officers presented by Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, in the House a few days ago is this, that it is a reply to the allegations made in the last campaign that the Republican party had increased the number of offices improperly, and that the number of office-holders was excessive. It indicates only that the management by the Republican party of the affairs of this nation was an economical and not an extravagant or imprudent management; that they did not employ unnecessary officers, and that seven hundred and ninety-nine more offices are needed to properly discharge the duties of Government now than the Republicans were authorized by law to employ.

But this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas is objectionable, because it will tend to confusion. There is no reason why the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should undertake to manage any of the affairs of the District of Columbia. His is a national office. We are now engaged in purely local legislation. The analyst to whom these cases may be referred will probably have much of his time occupied in the performance of the duties of his office. He will be called upon to testify in court in every case where a prosecution is instituted under this act; his whole time will be taken up by the duties imposed by this bill; and if so, I take it that it is little odds whether the analyst is appointed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia and paid out of the funds of the District, or whether he is appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and paid out of the funds of the General Government.

The time of an officer will be occupied in the performance of these duties anyhow, and we are sitting here now as the legislature for the District of Columbia only. If this bill passes in its present form one-half of the salary of this official will be paid out of the taxes assessed against the District of Columbia. If the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas is adopted, the entire salary of this officer will be paid out of the moneys of the United States.

I believe that the gentleman from Arkansas should reconsider his purpose and allow this officer to be an officer of the District of Columbia and not of the National Government. The people of the District of Columbia are the only ones who are to be benefited by his services; and that being the case, the gentleman should not insist, I think, that an officer performing these duties should be paid exclusively out of the funds of the United States where the people of the District of Columbia are the beneficiaries and the sole beneficiaries of his labors. I hope that the nightmare of additional officers will not so impress itself upon his mind as to induce him to insist on the adoption of such an amendment as this.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer in lieu of section 8. I withdraw the formal amendment and move to strike out the eighth section and incorporate this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 8 and insert:

"That the enforcement of this act shall be under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Pennsylvania misinterprets my action and motives altogether. The speech made the other day, to which he alludes, by the gentleman from Illinois in relation to the creation of new officers and a non-reduction of the number already in existence when the present Administration took control of the Government did not have the slightest weight with or effect upon me. I am opposed in principle to the creation of new offices that are not necessary. This, in my judgment, is not necessary.

It is said that to strike out this provision of the bill will disturb the harmony of the system which has been adopted in this District, and that the duties which are assigned to this officer by the bill are confided now to the District government. Mr. Speaker, it should be remembered that the internal-revenue laws which are applied to the States apply also to the District of Columbia, and are under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be carried into execution here just as they are in all the States and Territories. They apply here just as everywhere else; and the same in regard to the oleomargarine law, which applies not only to all of the States and Territories of the Union, but applies with equal effect to the District of Columbia, and is also under the auspices of the Department of the Interior. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has control of the enforcement of the laws, so that instead of destroying the harmony of the system it simply places the execution of this law in strict harmony with all of the other internal-revenue laws, which apply to the tax upon whisky, beer, tobacco, and manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and other provisions of that character.

Now, it is not possible, sir, in policing the District with reference to pure food or products for the people, that it will be found necessary to have another analytical chemist. They have them now employed by the Government in the Department of Agriculture and in the Treasury. Why therefore create another position with an official salary of $3,000 a year when we have in the Departments already persons who are entirely capable of dealing with the questions presented? By all means we should not create another office when we do not need it; neither should we permit any political advantage or any political injury to another party to enter into the question which influences our action. It is a matter purely of sound policy; and the expenditure of $3,000 a year to pay for the services of another analytical chemist is certainly unwise and uncalled for when we already have officials who can perform whatever duty may be assigned them.

Now let this matter go to the Treasury Department. They are accustomed to deal with the subject. They have their rules and regulations with reference to oleomargarine, tobacco, and whisky; and we have nothing in the world to do but to extend the power and make the necessary changes to enable them also to cover food products and then you will have a perfect system under the Internal Revenue Commissioner. But if you do it this way you are creating a new bureau for the administration of the law in the District of Columbia. I insist that the amendment I have offered is in the line of economy and of good government to the District of Columbia.

Mr. ATKINSON. I am as adverse to creating new offices as the gentleman from Arkansas, and I wish to call his attention to the verbiage of his amendment if he will permit me to do so.

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly; I drew it hastily.

Mr. ATKINSON. His amendment reads that "the enforcement of this act shall be under the control of the Commissioner," etc. I ask whether the amendment does not refer to the analysis that is to be made in the enforcement of the act. I will suggest to the gentleman that instead of the word "enforcement" he should say that the analysis provided for or analyses provided by this act shall be under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr ROGERS. My friend is correct in his suggestion. I accept the modification of the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment as modified, as follows:

That the analyses provided for under this act shall be under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I moved awhile ago to strike out section 8. It should have been section 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That any purchaser of an article of food or of a drug in the said District shall be entitled to have such article analyzed by such analyst, and to receive from him a certificate of the result of his analysis, and any health officer, inspector of nuisances, or any food inspector may procure any sample of food or drug, and if he suspects the same to have been sold to him contrary to any provision of this act, he shall submit the same to be analyzed by the analyst of the said District, and such analyst shall, with all convenient speed, analyze the same and give a certificate to such officer, wherein he shall specify the result of the analysis.

Mr. ROGERS. My attention was called away for a moment and I notice in line 9 of section 12 that a change should be made so as to make it conform to the other section.

Mr. ATKINSON. It should conform to your amendment and should be changed.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will give me a moment I shall try and offer an amendment so as to make it conform to the previous amendment.

Mr. ATKINSON. I should suggest in line 8 to strike out the words "by the analyst of said District;" so that it will read:

He shall submit the same to be analyzed by the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. ROGERS. Very well; that will be sufficient. I move to insert, in line 8, the following: "to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be analyzed;" so that it will read as follows:

And if he suspects the same to have been sold to him contrary to any provision of this act he shall submit the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be analyzed.

And then strike out, after the word "analyzed," in line 8, beginning with the word "by," down to and including "with," in line 9, and insert, in lieu thereof, before the word "all," the words "who shall with."

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no objection to the amendment. An additional amendment, I take it, should be introduced in line 10. I ask the gentleman if he has prepared an amendment for that line?

Mr. ROGERS. I move to strike out "analyze," in line 10, and insert "any such analysis."

Mr. ATKINSON. You would also strike out the words "the same," and insert the words "cause such analysis to be made."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That if any officer mentioned in section 12 of this act shall apply to purchase any article of food or any drug exposed to sale or on sale by retail on any premises or in any shop or store, and shall tender the price for the quantity which he shall require for the purpose of analysis, not being more than shall be reasonably requisite, and the person exposing the same for sale shall refuse to sell the same to such officer, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined for such offense not exceeding $50.

SEC. 14. That the term "food," as used in this act, shall include every article used for food or drink by man other than drugs and water. The term "drug," as used in this act, shall include all medicines for internal or external use.

SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed as modifying or repealing the provisions of chapter 840 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, entitled "An act defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 6, 1886.

SEC. 16. That the analyst appointed under the provisions of this act may, with the approval of the commissioners of the District, from time to time declare certain articles or preparations to be exempt from the provisions of this act; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District to prepare and publish from time to time a list of the articles, mixtures, or compounds declared to be exempt from the provisions of this act, in accordance with this section.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to amend that section; but it will take me a moment to prepare the amendment. I move to strike out all after the word "that" in line 1, section 16, down to and including the word "District" in line 3; and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may from time to time," etc.; so that it will read:

SEC. 16. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may from time to time declare certain articles and preparations to be exempt from the provisions of this act, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I think there should be an amendment on the following page, in line 4, after the word "act."

Mr. ATKINSON. I think it is complete now. You substitute the commissioners for the analyst.

Mr. ROGERS. I was simply going to propose to require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to notify officially the District commissioners of a list of such articles, and let them publish the list if they desired.

Mr. ATKINSON. The act contemplates that there shall be joint action by the analyst and the commissioners. Now, as it is amended it will require joint action by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the commissioners of the District, and I see no impropriety in leaving it just as it is, so that they may consult together, if they please, without having a mandate go down from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the District commissioners.

Mr. ROGERS. I was about to propose a provision requiring the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to notify the District commissioners of his action with reference to any such article or articles, so that they might do as they pleased about it; but I will not press the proposition.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no objection to it.

Mr. ROGERS. I will not offer it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] proposed to return to section 7.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATKINSON. That section, I believe, was stricken out by the action of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. It was not, but it should have been. I really think the whole section ought to go out; but if it does not go out of course it ought to be amended.

Mr. ATKINSON. The only question is whether it is declaratory of the common law or whether it establishes some new rule of evidence. I do not believe that it establishes any new rule. It imposes upon the defendant the obligation of proving an affirmative; that is, his want of knowledge. I do not believe it should be stricken out. It seems to be in harmony with the other provisions of the bill. It has met the approval of the Senate of the United States as well as of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think it ought to stand.

Mr. ROGERS. There is no such thing in this entire act as an exception. There are several provisos, and evidently section 7 relates to the provisos in section 4, or else it does not relate to anything. Now, I call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania to that which was not exactly clear in my mind when I was upon this point before. I read from Dwarris on Statutes:

An exception in the statute must be negatived in pleading, but a proviso need not.

Now, I take it that if the gentleman desires to make this section of the bill effective at all, he should strike out in the fourth section the words "any exception or," and then should convert the word "provision" into the word "proviso."

Mr. ATKINSON. I prefer striking out the word "exception" in the seventh section. If the language is deemed objectionable, or if it is likely to lead to confusion in pleading, or if it imposes a duty on the prosecuting officer which should not be imposed upon him, then I propose to strike out "any exception or" in the third line of section 7. I will make that motion, if that is satisfactory to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. It is, except that my own judgment is that the word "provision" should be changed to "proviso," because "proviso" has a technical meaning. That amendment will perfect the section. Whether the section is a wise one or not, I am not prepared to say at this time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ATKINSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSOCIATION FOR WORKS OF MERCY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to call up the bill (S. 3168) regulating admissions to the Institution of the Association for Works of Mercy in certain cases, and for other purposes. I yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Association for Works of Mercy, a charitable corporation in the District of Columbia, is hereby authorized and empowered to receive and have the custody and control of, and to suitably maintain, teach, employ, and discipline girls under the age of eighteen years, resident in the District of Columbia, until they attain the age of eighteen years. The right to the custody and control of any such girl shall be obtained in the manner following:

First. By a written instrument executed by the father of such girl, giving such custody and control to said association and renouncing parental rights.

Second. If the father be not living, or is unknown, or not resident in the District of Columbia, by a written instrument executed by the mother of such girl, giving such custody and control to said association and renouncing parental rights.

Third. By a written instrument executed by the guardian of the person of such girl, giving such custody and control to said association and renouncing the rights of guardianship.

Fourth. If there be no father or mother or guardian of such girl living or known, resident in the District of Columbia, by an instrument in writing execute by such girl, surrendering herself to the custody, control, and maintenance of said association.

Fifth. No such instrument shall be effectual in law until it shall be approved by the judge of the orphans' court of the District of Columbia by an indorsement of such approval thereon signed by such judge.

SEC. 2. That when any girl under the age of eighteen years shall be duly convicted of any offense punishable by fine or imprisonment for a term less than two years before any court in the District of Columbia, if shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that such girl is a suitable subject for the custody of said association, the court may, instead of imposing such fine or imprisonment, and with the assent of said association, cause such girl to be committed to the custody and control of said association, there to remain until she shall attain the age of eighteen years, or be otherwise discharged in due course of law.

SEC. 3. That a girl, duly received into the institution of the said association, shall be kept there, disciplined, instructed, employed, and governed under the direction of said association until she is either reformed and discharged or has attained the age of eighteen years; but the association shall have the right to discharge and return to the parents, guardian, or protector, any girl who, in its judgment, ought, for any cause, to be removed from the institution, and in such case the association shall enter upon its minutes the reasons for her discharge; and in case such girl was received under the order of any criminal court, a copy of the minute of such reasons shall be forthwith transmitted to the court under whose order she was received.

SEC. 4. That the orphans' court of the District of Columbia shall have power to appoint the said association the guardian of the person of any girl under the age of eighteen years, in the same manner and with the same effect that it now has power to appoint guardians of the person of female infants. And such guardianship shall continue until such girl shall attain the age of eighteen years, unless the orphans' court shall discharge the same or otherwise direct.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, this, as will be seen, is a Senate bill; and it has come to the House at so late a day that the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which it was referred, has not, for want of a quorum, been able to report it back. At one meeting of the committee the bill was under consideration, was quite fully examined, and no opposition whatever was developed; on the contrary, it met the warm approval of those members who were present. It was not disposed of simply because no quorum was present; there was no other reason.

In view of these facts, and of the manifest good purpose of the bill, I have been authorized by all the members of the committee who are present this morning (and their number is only one short of a quorum) to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be put on its passage at this time without a formal report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be now considered in the House. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Vermont to two clerical errors in the bill.

Mr. GROUT (having examined the bill). I move to amend the bill by changing "execute," in line 24 of section 1, to "executed;" and also by inserting "it" after the word "if" in line 4 of section 2. These verbal amendments are obviously necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the amendments will be agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to hear the bill read; I have not yet heard it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be again read. Any member has the right upon the third reading of the bill to demand that it be read in full.

The bill was again read.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to know whether any protest from citizens of the District against the passage of this bill has been received.

Mr. GROUT. None whatever, so far as I am aware. The committee has certainly heard of none.

The bill was passed.

Mr. GROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 10873) making an appropriation for the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the benefit of the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia, a corporation incorporated by act of Congress of.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add "July 9, 1888."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact that this bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I offer the following additional amendment:

Add to the bill the following:
"One-half of said sum to be paid from the United States Treasury and the other half from the revenues of the District."

Mr. HOLMAN. I was just going to ask why such a provision had not been inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to ask why this appropriation did not take the usual course, why it was not incorporated in the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The bill establishing this institution was passed by the House without any appropriation, the expectation being that the Committee on Appropriations, in presenting their bill for expenses of the District, would include an appropriation for this institution. But the measure did not get through in time to have the appropriation put on that bill, and this is the only way in which an appropriation can now be made for it.

Mr. BURNES. It is very difficult for us to determine, when the matter is presented in this way, whether the amount proposed to be appropriated is in harmony with the contributions which are made by the Government to other eleemosynary institutions of the city. It may be that the amount is not too large and that it is not too small. I suppose the gentleman has investigated the matter and can make a comparison between this appropriation and appropriations for similar institutions.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I am not informed as to that. There is a reform school for boys in this District, but there was no place to which girls could be sent, nor could they in any other way be managed except as out-and-out convicts in penitentiaries and jails. The bill passed by the House undertook to institute a reform school for girls. This is simply to make an appropriation to acquire property and start the institution. It is impossible for the Committee on the District of Columbia to go into any comparative statement as between this appropriation and the appropriations heretofore made for eleemosynary institutions, because this is the first appropriation for this institution. The object is, first, to acquire property and start the institution. It puts it on a different basis from the institutions already in existence.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this amount is approved by the commissioners as a reasonable and fair appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. McCOMAS. I wish to say to the gentleman from South Carolina in charge of the bill I have made sufficient investigation of this subject to know the need of such an institution in the District of Columbia. Judges of courts, where females have been held for minor offenses, have sentenced them to jail, where they may be much injured and not reformed. But this bill does not designate whether this appropriation is for the purchase of a site or for a building or for outfitting the institution. From the language used it is impossible to tell. The act of incorporation is some sanction on the part of Congress, but it seems to me the appropriation should be for a site or building, and we should use some other language than the general phrase "for the benefit of."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes.

Mr. McCOMAS. Instead of "for the benefit of," it should be for the site or the building or both, or as a contribution to carry out the purpose intended, as it is a bad policy in these charities to give money indefinitely. Not that I am not in favor of this institution, because my investigation as one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations has satisfied me there is necessity for the establishment of such an institution. But the language "for the benefit of" is too vague. There is no supervisory power. It should be for site and building, and the private charities in the District ought to fit up the building. When these ladies say this institution is so much needed they will surely try to keep up the institution after the site has been purchased and the building erected. I ask the gentleman to accept the amendment, instead of "for the benefit of," to insert "for site and building."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; I think that is not out of the way.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I move the amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to strike out "for the benefit of," in the fifth line, and insert "for the purchase of a suitable site and for a building for the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was read.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will put the amendment in a different way. I move this as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum herein appropriated shall be used for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a suitable building for the Girls' Reform School in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the amendment, Mr. Speaker, ought to have been worded in this way: "That the sum appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary," so that if there be any money over after erecting the building it should go to the support of the institution. I ask unanimous consent to insert those words. For instance, if they can purchase a site and put up the building for $25,000, they should be allowed to use the balance to run the institution.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the amendment is right as it was adopted, and that the appropriation should go for the site and building. It will be bad policy to come every year to the Committee on Appropriations. I would not add those words. It seems to me it would spoil the purpose of the bill. As it requires unanimous consent, I think I will object.

Mr. HEARD. I suggest this whole amount should not be expended unless it is necessary.

Mr. McCOMAS. But the gentleman will bear in mind that this is September, and Congress again meets in December, if it ever adjourns.

Mr. HEARD. But the position the gentleman takes would necessitate the expenditure of the whole amount of this money.

Mr. McCOMAS. Oh, no; only such as is necessary for the building and site.

Mr. HEARD. That is just what the gentleman from South Carolina proposes; and any other provision, such as that suggested by the gentleman from Maryland, would cover any unexpended balance back into the Treasury and not make it available, as he suggests.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask the insertion of the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the District of Columbia will not further claim this day.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, ATLANTIC COAST.

Mr. TARSNEY. I desire to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1856) to establish a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast between Indian River Inlet, Delaware, and Ocean City, Md., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

T. H. B. BROWNE,
T. E. TARSNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN P. JONES,
WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement:

The House of Representatives passed on July 17 Senate bill 1856, "An act to establish a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast, between Indian River Inlet, Delaware, and Ocean City, Md.," amending it so as to limit the cost of the station to $5,000.

The Senate disagreed to this amendment and requested a conference, during which the House conferees agreed to recede from their amendment, as it was shown to them that the station might not be completed within the limit fixed by the House amendment, but at any event could cost but little more than $5,000.

T. E. TARSNEY,
T. H. B. BROWNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TARSNEY. I will state that this is a Senate bill passed by the House with an amendment limiting the cost of the structure to $5,000. It was made to appear to the House conferees that because of peculiar circumstances surrounding this structure it might possibly cost a little more than that sum. The average cost of the life-saving stations is about $4,500 each, and the opinion of the House conferees is that this will not cost much if any more than $5,000.

The report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TARSNEY. I submit another privileged report.

Mr. KILGORE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TARSNEY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. KILGORE. Is that a privileged report? If so I withdraw the demand.

ESTABLISHMENT OF LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. TARSNEY. I submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add, at the end of said amendment the following:

"One at or near Walles Sands, New Hampshire; one at or near Plum Island, Massachusetts; one at or near Lynnhaven Inlet, Virginia; two between Ocracoke Inlet and Cape Lookout, North Carolina, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; one at or near Ashtabula, Ohio; one at or near Marquette, Mich.; one between the Ocean House, south of the entrance of the harbor of San Francisco, and Point St. Peter, California, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

T. E. TARSNEY,
T. H. B. BROWNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS W. PALMER,
JOSEPH N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House submitted the following statement; which, on motion of Mr. TARSNEY, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without being read:

STATEMENT OF THE HOUSE CONFEREES.

H. R. 1923, "A bill providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis.," was passed by the House on May 9, 1888.

When the bill was considered by the Senate it was amended by adding other life-saving stations in various parts of the country to the one proposed.

Amendment numbered 1 provided for several life-saving stations in Oregon, which were contained in House bill 8151, "A bill for the establishment of life-saving stations," reported favorably by the House committee, and recommended by the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service. Your committee therefore see no objection to agreeing to this amendment, and have added to it the other life-saving stations, the establishment of which was contemplated by House bill 8151. The Senate conferees agreed to this amendment.

Your committee disagreed to amendment numbered 2 of the Senate, as the provisions of that amendment are contained in a separate bill, Senate 1856, which provides for the establishment of a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast.

Your committee agreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, as that amendment merely changes the title of the bill so as to make it conform to its new provisions.

All the life-saving stations provided for in the bill as amended and agreed upon by the conferees were recommended favorably by the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, and by the House Committee on Commerce.

T. E. TARSNEY,
TH. H. B. BROWNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. W. JACOBS.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Claims from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10895) for the relief of J. W. Jacobs, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. W. Jacobs, of Sigourney, Iowa, late sheriff of Keokuk County, Iowa, the sum of $341.55, in full payment for his services, fees, and moneys expended by him in the apprehension of certain persons concerned in the burglary of the post-office at Webster, Iowa, in the year 1882; and to enable the Secretary to comply with the provisions of this act the said sum of $341.55 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa if the case made out by that bill is not covered by the general law?

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. WEAVER. The bill is of this nature. The post-office at this place was burglarized and Jacobs was appointed by the Federal court, or rather by the marshal, to make the apprehension. He arrested the thieves, and what was done with them is all certified to by Judge Love, and the accounts have been passed upon and sent to the House by the Secretary of the Treasury. They have passed the scrutiny of the First Comptroller.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let us have the report read.

Mr. WEAVER. There is no report. These are the facts and it has all been approved by the Federal judge and by the First Comptroller. This is to allow compensation for the apprehension of the thieves.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amount?

Mr. WEAVER. Three hundred and forty-one dollars and odd cents.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I would like to have the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary as to the propriety of this action.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not understand the purpose of this bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Does not the gentleman from Texas understand the provisions of this bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the very reason I asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. WEAVER. There is no report. I have asked that the committee be discharged from the consideration of this bill, and that it be considered at this time. The post-office at Webster, county of Keokuk, Iowa, was entered by some thieves and money and other property in the post-office stolen. J. W. Jacobs was at that time sheriff of Keokuk County. He arrested the thieves, brought them before the Federal court, where they were tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Has any committee reported this bill?

Mr. WEAVER. No; no committee has reported it, but the Secretary of the Treasury has certified to the correctness of the bill, and also the Federal district judge who tried the criminals.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. As I do not recognize the Secretary of the Treasury as a part of the legislative department, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, and Mr. KILGORE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion until I can offer a resolution for reference. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was put on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 28.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and unless it is withdrawn——

Mr. McCOMAS. Can I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not when the regular order is demanded.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have risen for the purpose of asking a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rose for the purpose of suggesting that the vote disclosed the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is not required on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that a former Speaker held, on a motion to adjourn, that when it was disclosed that there was an absence of a quorum it was the duty of the House to order a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not necessary that there shall be a quorum on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] states that he rises to a privileged report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw it in order that the gentleman from Maryland may introduce his resolution.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I want to have it referred; that is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman for that purpose. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] withdraws his privileged report, the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who has desired to be recognized.

EXTENSION OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back to the House the bill S. 1080, being a bill to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

I will state, Mr. Speaker, that while this bill contemplates an extension of the laws of the United States over the "Public Land Strip" and the organization of that Public Land Strip into a land district so as to permit a survey of the land of that Public Strip, and to enable the homesteaders there to make entry upon their lands and extending the laws of the United States over it, this matter as to the entry of the lands by the settler is of so much importance that I have felt authorized to say that if the bill were taken up and considered at the present time and modified so that it would simply provide for the organization of a land district in the Land Strip, so that the ten or fifteen thousand people there on those lands might obtain the right to make their entries and secure their homes, I would waive the other provisions of the bill. The people are appealing to Congress, as all gentlemen know, for at least this relief, and I hope this at least will be done, so that they may be enabled to secure their homes. I therefore ask that the bill be considered. If any gentleman desires to so amend the bill as to confine it to the purpose which I have suggested, I will, so far as I am concerned, acquiesce in such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not sent up his report.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to say this in reply. It is useless for the gentleman to press that bill, because it will require a quorum to pass it. This is really a rival project to the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is purely a temporary measure, except so far as it enables these people to secure their homes under the homestead law.

Mr. WEAVER. I know what it is. It is temporary, but it is a rival project to the Oklahoma bill, and it is designed to disembowel the Oklahoma proposition. It is a measure which is far-reaching in its consequences and which has been denounced at a recent meeting by the people now inhabiting that territory, who declare in favor of the Oklahoma bill and in opposition to this. They do not want any such measure as this. I am in communication with them, and I give the gentleman notice now that it will require a quorum to pass this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am for the Oklahoma bill, but I do not see why we should be obliged to wait until we have a quorum in the House in order to consider legislation, because I do not suppose there will be a quorum here again during the remainder of this session. At all events, Mr. Speaker, we are not in any hurry to get away. [Laughter.] The weather has been very pleasant here. I have never spent a pleasanter summer in Washington than this one, and I rather like it. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. You have been at home a good deal of the time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, I have been home occasionally at the end of the week, but it is so pleasant here that I think the session might as well be prolonged. Of course I do not expect that we shall have a quorum again this session, but those men who are away are losing a great deal of fine weather. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. We tried to act upon the gentleman's plan with reference to the Oklahoma bill, but those who were in favor of this measure called a quorum on that. If we could have passed that bill it would have given the people all the relief that this proposes, and much more.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not believe in calling a quorum. I believe the fewer of us there are here the better progress we can make in business, because there are fewer objections. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Missouri. I think it is a duty which Congress owes to the settlers on the Public Land Strip, to our own people who have gone there and settled, to give them some kind of temporary government. I think they are entitled to it. I never contemplated this measure as one in antagonism to the bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma. My friend misapprehends me if he thinks I am opposed to that measure, although with proper safeguards I desired to amend it in several respects. I am in favor of the homestead principle being applied as strictly as possible to all lands that may come under Government control.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I first brought this subject, acquiring the western half of the Indian Territory, before the House in a report which I made as chairman of a committee appointed to inquire into Indian matters. In that report it was suggested that a Territory should be organized out of that western section, and I favor that policy; and because gentlemen desired to offer amendments to the Oklahoma bill, that fact does not justify the suggesting that they were trying to antagonize that bill with another. Now, if concessions can not be made for the sake of allowing these people to have some kind of government to protect them and punish the robberies and murders that have become so common in that region—if we can not give them that, let us at least permit them to secure their homes; and I trust my friend from Missouri will see the obligation which rests upon Congress to protect our own people there, and to legislate for them to that extent at least. Give these people, these pioneers, this measure of relief; it will not interfere with Oklahoma.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I did as sincerely hope that the gentleman from Indiana would have seen the justice of the Oklahoma bill, or of some measure of that kind, rather than have joined in the obstructions that were thrown in the way of the passage of that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the contrary, if my friend will permit me, I have never cast a single obstructive vote in connection with that measure, as the public record will show, although I have strenuously insisted on amending the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I think the public record may so show. I remember distinctly that the last time I was upon the floor when the Oklahoma bill was the matter under consideration, and a motion was made to adjourn, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] voted for the adjournment and came to where the tellers, the gentleman from Illinois and myself, were standing. The motion to adjourn was carried by a viva voce vote, and I called the attention of the gentleman from Indiana at the time to the fact that he had voted for it. The yeas and nays were demanded, and it is true that the gentleman does not appear in the RECORD as voting for the adjournment, because on the call for the yeas and nays he voted against it. Therefore the gentleman can safely appeal to the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply differ with my friend as to the statement of fact.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Illinois was present; it was a public matter on the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will pardon me; that is purely a personal matter; this is a great public measure——

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will excuse me. I was simply responding to his appeal to the record. Mr. Speaker, new legislators—those who are just getting their wings as statesmen—do not fully understand how to make up a record.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think you have made a very good one. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WARNER. I hope so. As I was saying, new members on this floor are foolish enough——

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will pardon me, as I have the floor. New members are foolish enough to vote the same way when their names are called and the votes go into the RECORD, as when they simply stand up and are counted by the Speaker——

Mr. HOLMAN again rose.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman must excuse me. I hope he will not be uneasy. I said then publicly to the gentleman, as I say now, that gentlemen who were fighting the Oklahoma measure, while pretending to be the friends of that bill—men who were slaying it in the house apparently of its friends—would, before election day, repent and see the error of their ways. I think the gentleman from Indiana is now upon the stool of repentance.

Mr. HOLMAN. When was that lecture delivered?

Mr. WARNER. It was delivered publicly here; and I repeat it now, for fear the gentleman may have forgotten it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not heard the lecture before.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman is very solicitous about the poor people upon the Public Land Strip——

Mr. HOLMAN. Have I not been pressing that bill all the time?

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman must excuse me, and permit me to have my say. We have tried in season, and, as the gentleman has thought, out of season, to give relief to the people residing upon this strip. The bill as finally offered extended the Territorial government only over the Public Land Strip. The first ground on which gentlemen objected to the Oklahoma bill was that the proposed Territorial government extended over a portion of the Indian Territory; they avowed this as the reason of their opposition. When we said, "We will modify the measure so that the Territorial government shall extend only over the Public Land Strip," they then raised the cry, "We must extend this Territorial government further." The bill was opposed in every way—by the call of no quorum, and by amendments.

The gentleman from Indiana, as I remember, delivered a lecture here—a very admirable speech—upon the subject of the homestead. He urged that the safety of our Government rests not upon our fortifications, not upon our ships on the high seas, but upon the shoulders of the individual landholders of the country. "From scenes like this," he said, "our grandeur must spring." When we heard that lecture on the beauty of the homestead law we almost thought, "Here is the veritable author of the Cotter's Saturday night." The gentleman advocated a proposition, involving as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], I believe, said, merely a bagatelle—a matter of no consideration at all. But he was willing to put that into the Oklahoma bill; and I submit to the friends of that measure throughout the country whether he was not seeking to kill the bill by his kindness?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has no right to say that.

Mr. WARNER. I do not assert it; I simply submit the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has no right to say it, because——

Mr. WARNER. I have a right to submit the question to the country whether such was the case. I do not charge the gentleman with that; I certainly would not do so——

Mr. HOLMAN. No, because——

Mr. WARNER. I simply submit the question to the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. That speech of mine was in harmony with my whole record ever since I have been in public life.

Mr. WARNER. No doubt it was in harmony with the gentleman's record; but I have a right to submit to the country the question as to the gentleman's purpose in the proposition he advocated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to this bill?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly I am at this time.

Mr. WEAVER. So am I.

Mr. WARNER. In opposing the bill, I do not act under cover. I say to the gentleman that this bill can not be passed at this session by the enemies of Oklahoma. I do not fight under cover in this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I have to say, as it is very manifest there is no quorum——

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend has spoken very well——

Mr. WARNER. I thank the gentleman for the compliment.

Mr. HOLMAN. He has spoken well; he always does.

Mr. WARNER. But I wish to go further and say a word with respect to the patriotism of gentlemen, their love for the old soldiers of this country. I have never paraded before this House my devotion to the soldier, and never will. I believe that the men who fought for this country deserve well of it. I believe they are entitled to more than they have received. But my friend, the experienced statesman from Indiana, was one of the gentlemen who favored the giving of all this land to the old soldiers who may go and settle upon it. That amendment the gentleman has never proposed to place on any public land bill that he has brought into this House; he does not now embrace it in the measure with reference to the Public Land Strip. It was another attempt to kill the Oklahoma bill with the "soothing sirup" manufactured by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the gentleman should say that. I see present the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON], who offered that proposition; and I believe he offered it in perfect good faith. I have adopted a rule which my friend from Missouri would do well to adhere to, especially in view of the exalted position he holds before the country——

Mr. WARNER. Oh, I wish the gentleman——

Mr. HOLMAN. I recommend the gentleman to adopt the principle to which I have adhered—never to cast a vote against the interests of the Union soldier under any circumstances. The country owes them too much to justify that.

Mr. WARNER. I am not through with my remarks.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment having been offered I voted for it, and my friend from Missouri voted against it.

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir, I voted against it. I did so before the country, knowing that I was voting in the interest of the soldier or any other man who might wish to go there and establish a homestead. I was not voting for the measure because it was put as a knapsack upon the back of every Union soldier and labeled "patriotism," because I knew the soldiers of the country were against it; but, sir, if I thought they were not against it, and I believed it was wrong in principle, then, standing here representing the American people, I would have voted against it if every soldier had asked me to vote for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think my friend is justified in arraigning gentlemen who have served with honor and distinction on this floor.

Mr. WARNER. I am referring to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has no right to arraign them for bad faith in their legislative action upon this floor. I do not think the gentleman is justified in that. These gentlemen have feelings as well as the gentleman himself. They favor that measure as well as he does.

Mr. WARNER. They had the right to vote as they chose.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] both are arraigned by the gentleman from Missouri, one for his amendment securing this land for the homes of our people under the homestead laws, and the other for his amendment for the benefit of the Union soldiers; these gentlemen, I say, are arraigned by the gentleman from Missouri as not acting in good faith, but offering their amendments for the purpose of defeating the Oklahoma bill. Now the gentleman from Missouri is not authorized to make that statement. He is not authorized to impute to me any opposition to this measure except that which grew out of a desire to amend the measure and place proper safeguards around this land for the benefit of actual settlers. When he comes to think this matter over he will not make these charges imputing want of good faith.

I think neither proposition submitted to the House, neither the one dedicating this land for homesteads nor the one permitting the Union soldiers to have proper advantages can be charged as being brought forward to defeat the measure to which the gentleman has referred. I will yield now to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. WARNER. I have the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I have the floor, and only yielded to the gentleman from Missouri. I want the report accompanying the bill to be read.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman can not take me off the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1080) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, and I hope without objection he will be heard.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I should like to know by what authority the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. PAYSON. What is the parliamentary condition of this matter? Is the bill open to consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] upon the statement that it was privileged. The Chair has not examined to see whether it is or not.

Mr. PAYSON. No point of order has been made against it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana, by unanimous consent, has yielded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. PAYSON. Is it in the nature of debate upon the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. No, sir; it is an answer to a libel. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman move his amendment in the nature of a substitute for this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Indiana has yielded the floor to me to answer a libel, to reply to an unauthorized reference by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to a series of efforts which he alleges to have been made on the part of different members to defeat the passage of the Oklahoma bill. Not satisfied with making these assertions, he has seen fit to go out of his way and attack an amendment I offered as one of that series of obstructive measures. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that I never offered any proposition in more earnestness and sincerity of purpose than the one I offered as an amendment to the Oklahoma bill proposing to grant to the Union soldiers 160 acres of land each without price and without expense.

If the men on this floor who are so ready to characterize others as demagogues had stood by that amendment and been real friends to the Union soldiers and done what they ought to have done, the ex-Union soldiers would have received from this Government what the soldiers of every other war have been granted in the way of public lands, and that meritorious and practical amendment of mine would have been adopted and made part and parcel of the Oklahoma bill. It would have been a great improvement to that bill, and notwithstanding the gentleman's record as a soldier, and notwithstanding the high position he now holds by virtue of his record as a Union soldier, I undertake to say he does not speak for the soldiers of the country when he says they do not want that amendment to the Oklahoma bill.

Gentlemen are flippant to arraign men for alleged obstructionary measures offered to a bill with a view to its improvement and to make it as unobjectionable as possible. Why do gentlemen say amendments, good in themselves, are designed to kill the bill?

I want to say to the gentleman that I was in favor of the bill, though perhaps not so specially interested as the gentleman from Kansas City, but I have been from the beginning and am now in good faith for the passage of the Oklahoma bill. But I do not arraign any man as introducing measures to obstruct the passage of the bill, but where gentlemen seem to go out of the way to put me in a false light by classifying an amendment I offered in good faith and whose merit has never been refuted, as a measure intended to be obstructive in its nature, I feel it my duty to repel it on the spot. If the gentleman disclaims involving me, his language is unfortunate, and I regret it, as I have great regard for the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the reading of the report.

Mr. WARNER. Allow me to have a few moments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the report read.

Mr. WARNER. I shall not consume more than five or six minutes. Say ten.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for gentlemen to work themselves into a passion. Certain it is that the gentleman from Iowa knows as well as any one that I was not attempting to reflect upon him. The gentleman from Indiana and myself were having a friendly little tilt without any feeling in the matter whatever. I was referring to the attitude of the gentleman from Indiana in this matter, and was alluding to the present measure as another evidence of his attempt to kill the Oklahoma bill by excessive kindness; and I submit the question now to the friends of Oklahoma in this House, and to its friends throughout the country, to say whether I was correct or not.

I did not use the word "demagogue," which the gentleman is swift to imply. I am not here speaking for any soldier directly. When I stand on this floor I speak not as a man who arrogates to himself that right, for I do not arrogate to myself something that does not belong to me. Gentlemen refer to "exalted position," but I certainly did not bring that question into this debate. I stand here as a Representative of my district, of my people; and when I speak in my representative capacity I speak for my people, for myself, and for no one else. I say now I am willing to submit to the friends of Oklahoma on this floor, I am willing to submit to the friends of that bill throughout this country, whether that amendment, whether so intended or not, if it had been adopted, would not have been the death blow to the bill in this House on its final passage.

The same proposition I am willing to submit in reference to the homestead amendment of the gentleman, and neither the gentleman from Indiana nor any one else, not even my distinguished friend from Iowa, can go further than I will go legitimately, and I do not think that they are going illegitimately in this matter; but no one will go farther in the direction of homesteads for actual settlers or land for the landless soldiers of the Union than myself. I am willing to follow wherever their plumes may lead in that direction, and I will go as far as the farthest; but, Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of piling on amendments to a bill of this kind, which will accomplish the destruction of a measure which is intended to benefit the landless people of the country and the soldiers of the country.

What I have said was said without feeling. The gentleman, I repeat, has used the word "demagogue." I apprehend that he did not intend to apply it to any one. It is familiar with some gentlemen, and is used quite flippantly. What relevancy it has here I do not know. This was simply a matter of discussion between the gentleman from Indiana and myself, and the gentleman from Iowa was not brought into it at all.

I thank the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not press that now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WEAVER. I renew it, but withhold it to receive a message which I understand is waiting from the President.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, in writing, was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message also announced the approval of bills of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. 1661) for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 1761) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 221) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "Joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a 'Joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.'"

An act (H. R. 1073) for the relief of the Roman Catholic church of St. Peter and St. Paul, Chattanooga, Tenn.;

An act (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 10998) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 2601) for the relief of the Baptist Female College of Lexington, Mo.;

An act (H. R. 988) for the relief of Joseph R. White;

An act (H. R. 10856) for a pension for Eliza N. Aiken;

An act (H. R. 7708) to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates;

An act (H. R. 109) to refund to Dr. F. O. St. Clair $976.80 duties on a monument to the memory of Francis J. Townshend, late United States Navy;

An act (H. R. 649) for the relief of A. C. Bradford; and

An act (H. R. 5670) for the construction of a revenue-cutter for New Berne, N. C., to replace the revenue-cutter Stevens.

VETO MESSAGE—CERTIFICATION OF LANDS, KANSAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and on motion of Mr. HOLMAN was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I am unable to give my assent to a joint House resolution numbered 14, and entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify lands to the State of Kansas for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," and I therefore return the same with a statement of my objections thereto.

By an act of Congress passed July 2, 1862, certain public lands were granted to such of the several States as should provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

Under the terms of this act the State of Kansas was entitled to 90,000 acres of land, subject, however, to the provisions of said statute, which declared that when lands which had been raised to double the minimum price, in consequence of railroad grants, should be selected by a State, such lands should be computed at the maximum price and the number of acres proportionately diminished.

Of the lands selected by the State of Kansas, and which have been certified, 7,682.92 acres were within certain limits of a railroad grant, and had therefore been raised to the double minimum in price, so that the number of acres mentioned and thus situated really stood for double that number of acres in filling the grant to which the State of Kansas was entitled.

It is now claimed that after the selection of these lands the route of said railroad was abandoned and another one selected, and that in consequence thereof such lands included within its first location were reduced to the minimum price and restored to public market at that rate. It is supposed upon these allegations that justice and equity require that an additional grant should now be made to the State of Kansas from the public lands equal to the number of acres selected within the limits of the first railroad location.

But an examination discloses that the joint resolution is predicated upon an entire misunderstanding of the facts.

The lands heretofore mentioned as amounting to more than 7,000 acres, selected by the State of Kansas, and charged at double that amount, because their price had been raised to the double minimum in consequence of their being within a railroad location, have all, except 320 acres, remained either in the new or old railroad location up to the present time, and if now vacant would be held by the Government at the double minimum price.

It seems clear to me that the State of Kansas has been granted all the public land to which it can lay any legal or equitable claim under the law of 1862.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, September 24, 1888.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATION IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to make a conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a privileged matter now pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair a conference report is a matter of the highest privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "twenty," in line 28 of said amendment, section 4; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same.

S. W. PEEL,
THOMAS R. HUDD,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. W. DANIEL,
J. M. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE EFFECT OF THE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

First amendment: The effect of this amendment is to make the termini of the proposed railroad more definite and certain than in the original bill.

Second amendment: The effect of this amendment is to provide that in case the railroad company fails to agree with the individual occupants as to compensation for their respective holdings, that then such compensation shall be ascertained and paid in the same manner as is provided for the adjustment of like controversies under the laws of Minnesota, and that in respect to tribal compensation the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the same.

Third amendment: The effect of this is to authorize the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company to acquire by purchase from the Indians on the Umatilla reservation and by their consent 10 acres of ground for station purposes and 2 acres for a road and approach to the same for the purpose of accommodating the village of Dawson, just 2 miles from the proposed station. The compensation to be paid the Indians is to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. The amendment to this amendment is simply to correct the description—the 2-acre tract.

The fourth amendment is to empower the Secretary of the Interior to set apart for the Umatilla Indians on their reservation a quantity of land in addition to that now authorized by existing law for a general reservation in order that the boundaries of this reservation may be better arranged for the benefit of the Indians.

The fifth amendment is simply to correct the numbering of the sections.

And the sixth amendment is merely to amend the title by adding the words, "and for other purposes."

Dated September 24, 1888.

S. W. PEEL,
THOS. R. HUDD,
KNUTE NELSON,
House Conferees.

Mr. NELSON. Unless somebody desires to ask questions I am unwilling to take any time. I will, however, make a brief statement in addition to the statement which has been made in the report. The original bill provided for a right of way for the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad through a small reservation about 25 or 30 miles west of Duluth called Umatilla reservation. It is about 2 or 3 miles across it. This bill passed the House and was amended in the Senate. The first amendment is for the purpose of making the termini of the road more definite, fixing Duluth as one and Grand Rapids, the headwaters of the Mississippi, as the other. The second amendment was to this effect: It provides that in case the railroad company is unable to agree with the individual Indians on that reservation as to the damages, or compensation for those damages, it shall be ascertained in the same manner as we ascertained them under the laws of Minnesota—by commissioners and condemnation—and that in addition to that the tribal damages, as distinguished from individual damages, shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now the Senate amends the bill by making provision for the Oregon Navigation and Railroad Company to acquire for a station 10 acres of land, and for the road 2 acres of land, in the Umatilla reservation. It seems that already it is within 2 miles of the boundary of the reservation, and right across the boundary is the little village of Dawson. They want a station accessible to them. This bill proposes to allow the company to buy from the Indians, with their consent, 10 acres for the station ground and 2 acres for the road. The last material amendment authorizes the President or the Secretary of the Interior to enlarge the boundaries of the Umatilla reservation, and that is explained by a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which I hold in my hand, but which is quite lengthy. Now, I desire to say nothing more. The other two amendments are merely formal, and unless some gentleman desires to ask questions I will move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BLAIR EDUCATIONAL BILL.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I was absent during the call of the States and Territories for the introduction of bills, and I only ask to present this resolution in order that it may be referred to a committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object.

Mr. McCOMAS. For reference only.

Mr. McMILLIN. And I object.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why do you object?

Mr. McMILLIN. Because I choose.

Mr. McCOMAS. It is to ask a day to be fixed for the consideration of the Blair bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have objected.

Mr. McCOMAS. Do you object to the fixing of a day for the consideration of the Blair bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have addressed myself to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asked unanimous consent to introduce a resolution. Objection has been made.

Mr. McCOMAS. Can I have it read? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made and the regular order demanded. The Clerk will report the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

EXTENSION OF LAND LAWS.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1080) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the laws of the United States, except those providing for pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries of the public lands, are hereby extended over the unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas and Colorado, and between the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico, and north of Texas, known as the Public Land Strip; and that for the purpose of the execution of said laws all that portion of the State of Kansas lying south of the sixth standard parallel south, and west of the line between ranges 30 and 31 west of the sixth principal meridian, and the tract of unorganized territory known as the Public Land Strip as aforesaid, be, and are hereby, constituted a new and separate land district, to be called the Cimarron land district; and the subdivisional lines of townships in said Public Land Strip may be surveyed under current appropriations for the surveying service, the work to be done under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and said Public Land Strip is hereby attached to the judicial district of Kansas. Until the establishment of civil government in said Territory, lands therein may be entered for town-site purposes, for the several use and benefit of the occupants of town sites, by such trustee or trustees as may be named by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, such entries to be made under the provisions of section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, as near as may be; and when such entries shall have been made, the Secretary of the Interior shall provide by regulation for the proper execution of the trust in favor of the inhabitants of the town site, including the survey of the land into lots, according to the spirit and intent of said section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, whereby the same result would be reached as though the entry had been made by a county judge, and the disposal of the lots in such town site, and the proceeds of the sale thereof, had been prescribed by the legislative authority of a State or Territory: Provided, That no more than 320 acres shall be embraced in one town-site entry.

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a register and receiver of public moneys for the land district hereinbefore created; and said officers shall reside in the place where said land office is located, and shall have the same powers and shall discharge similar duties and receive the same fees and emoluments as other officers discharging like duties in the other land offices in the State of Kansas.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I ask that the amendments proposed by the committee be read. It is the amendments that bring the bill within the rule.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House a message from the President.

Mr. WEAVER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendments proposed to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. I yield for the message.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist upon the regular order. I ask to have the amendments read.

Mr. WEAVER. I will withdraw my motion in order to let the message be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the message will be read.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendments proposed to this bill be now read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in section 1 of said bill: In lines numbered from 8 to 12, all after the word "strip" to and including the word "meridian" in the twelfth line. Insert the word "said" before "tract" in the twelfth line. Strike out the words "be" and "are" in the thirteenth line, and insert the word "is." Add after the word "Kansas," in the nineteenth line of said section, the words "until Congress shall otherwise provide." Add after the word "entry," in the thirty-sixth line of the bill, the words "unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Interior under existing laws." Add to the first section the following proviso: "Provided, however, That the said lands, except as to town sites, shall be disposed of only under the provisions of the homestead law, except section 2301 thereof."

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it be proper to ask for the reading of the first proposed amendment again? There was so much confusion it was not heard distinctly.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PAYSON. That strikes out Kansas.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; it strikes out Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report, which will explain the effect of the amendments.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 1080, being an act to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments (above stated). The effect of the amendments will be to organize the Public Land Strip into a land district without adding thereto any portion of the State of Kansas, the President to designate the location of the land office; and it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to extend the limit of town sites within the Public Land Strip beyond 160 acres of land, but within the limits prescribed by the general laws in relation to town sites; and it leaves the Public Land Strip attached to the judicial district of Kansas until Congress shall otherwise provide. The important and leading change proposed by the amendments is to confine the land district proposed to be organized to the limits of the Public Land Strip. The committee recommend the adoption of these amendments, and that the bill be passed as proposed to be amended.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, Mr. Speaker, that simply amounts to a proposition to organize town sites down there, and it can not pass here without a quorum. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 30, noes 18; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. DORSEY: A bill (H. R. 11490) for the relief of John Stibley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FUNSTON: A bill (H. R. 11491) granting a pension to J. M. Stevens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11492) for the relief of Mary E. Hottenstein—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11493) to authorize the construction of a toll-bridge across the Missouri River at the foot of Kansas or Minnesota avenue, in Kansas City, Kans., in Wyandotte County, in the State of Kansas, to the county of Clay, in the State of Missouri—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 11297) in relation to grants of lands to aid in the construction of railroads was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 11139) to authorize the building of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bill and joint resolution were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. 10873) making an appropriation for the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to continue the provisions of existing laws providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

INQUESTS UNDER NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning at the close of the formal morning business I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 1516) to provide for inquests under national authority, with a view of submitting some observations upon it.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of John F. Armstrong Council, No. 130, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of Senate bill 553, concerning foreign immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6591) for the relief of S. Dillinger & Sons, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9663) granting a pension to Jesse Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 11317) granting a pension to Fredericka Liesegang;

A bill (H. R. 10433) for the relief of Leaman L. Bowers;

A bill (H. R. 11362) for the relief of William R. Rodgers; and

A bill (H. R. 7305) granting a pension to Aaron R. Gilkison.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3561) granting a pension to Edwin W. Warner, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill

(H. R. 9776) for the relief of Nancy E. Sawyer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 206) granting a pension to William H. Starr;

A bill (H. R. 2061) granting an increase of pension to Francis De Freitas;

A bill (H. R. 8613) granting a pension to Ann Bryan;

A bill (H. R. 10908) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira J. Towner; and

A bill (H. R. 9310) granting a pension to Capt. William J. Duley.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9385) for the relief of Christian Kimzie, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a concurrent resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1887, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by said Superintendent.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably without amendment a concurrent resolution to print 38,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887–'88. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887–'88 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

TOWNSHIP MAPS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10934) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell township maps or plats remaining on hand in his office. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior, through the Commissioner of Public Lands, be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell the photolithographic township plats or maps of the States and Territories now remaining on hand in that Department to citizens of the United States at the following prices: Authenticated copies, 50 cents per copy; unauthenticated copies, 25 cents per copy; the proceeds of said sales to be covered into the Treasury of the United States by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ought there not to be a reservation of some part of these maps for the future use of the Department?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think that would be within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This seems to be a provision for selling them all.

Mr. MANDERSON. There are some six or seven hundred thousand of them. I do not apprehend there will be such a demand as to deprive the Interior Department entirely of copies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be, but we ought not to make a law in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is a House bill, and therefore I should prefer, unless there be strong reasons why it should be changed, that it should not be amended, as the bill is in the form recommended by the Interior Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it is right, in point of frame or principle, to provide for selling everything that the Secretary of the Interior has on hand, as this does in terms; but as the Senator having it in charge is familiar with the business and thinks there is no danger, I shall not oppose it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3168) regulating admissions to the Institution of the Association for Works of Mercy in certain cases, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation in the State of Minnesota; and

A bill (S. 1856) to establish a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast between Indian River Inlet, Delaware, and Ocean City, Md.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3585) for the relief of Viancey Taggard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3586) to incorporate the National Electric Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3587) granting a pension to Henry Feltch; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3588) granting a pension to Ellen B. Farr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MRS. FANNIE PEARSON.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the "miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate," to Mrs. Fannie Pearson, widow of Granville L. Pearson, deceased, late a session laborer of the Senate, the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' salary at the rate per annum allowed by law to the laborer aforesaid; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PROGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ART.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, for the use of Congress, 10,000 additional copies of the work known as "Progress of Industrial Art," of which 3,500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,500 for the House of Representatives.

ASSOCIATION FOR WORKS OF MERCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3168) regulating admissions to the Institution of the Association for Works of Mercy in certain cases, and for other purposes; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 23, strike out the word "execute" and insert "executed," and on page 2, line 5, after the word "if," insert "it."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to correct an error in the engrossing or copying of the bill here or as reported, to merely make the grammar correct. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

FOND DU LAC INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, which will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 24, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit the report on the part of the Senate conferees on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the word "twenty," in line 28 of said amendment, section 4; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same.

JNO. W. DANIEL,
J. M. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. W. PEEL,
THOMAS R. HUDD,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator explain what that striking out of "twenty" means?

Mr. DOLPH. It is merely to correct an error in the direction of a line, and to authorize the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company to purchase depot grounds. It is merely to correct an error in the description of the line of the road.

Mr. DAWES. It does not affect anything else?

Mr. DOLPH. Not at all. It is to correct a mistake which was made in the Land Office in copying the description.

Mr. DAWES. With that exception, then, the bill is as it went from the Senate?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes; the Senate amendments are concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (S. 1856) to establish a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast between Indian River Inlet, Delaware, and Ocean City, Md.

The resolution of the House was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 24, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1856) to establish a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast between Indian River Inlet, Delaware, and Ocean City, Md.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] to the action of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I have not the report of the Senate conferees with me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The matter had better be laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution of the House of Representatives concerning House bill 1923.

The resolution of the House of Representatives was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 24, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add, at the end of said amendment, the words:

"One at or near Walles Sands, New Hampshire; one at or near Plum Island, Massachusetts; one at or near Lynnhaven Inlet, Virginia; two between Ocracoke Inlet and Cape Lookout, North Carolina, at such points as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend; one at or near Ashtabula, Ohio; one at or near Marquette, Mich.; one between the Ocean House, south of the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco, and Point San Pedro, California, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

T. W. PALMER,
J. N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
T. E. TARSNEY,
T. H. BAYLY BROWNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if all these additional topics were in the original bill or the amendments pending between the two Houses? I see there are four or five apparently entirely new places that were not in discussion between the two Houses when the bill went to the conference.

Mr. PALMER. I am not positive whether they were or not. I think that they were. At least they were all approved by the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce having light-houses in charge and agreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the report is apparently quite outside of order in respect of the capacity of conferees, but as it is on a subject which we can all readily enough understand in regard to these locations, for one I shall waive any point of order. I only refer to it now so that it shall not be drawn into a precedent for similar proceedings in the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I gave notice that I should ask the Senate to take up to-day the resolution relating to the recent election in the State of Louisiana. Instead of asking the Senate to take up the resolution at this time, I give notice that I shall ask that it may be taken up on Thursday during the morning hour.

TREATY WITH CHINA.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate what information he has received since September 7, 1888, with regard to the action of the Chinese Government upon the recent treaty with the Emperor of China.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that resolution had better be considered in executive session for a reason that I will state in executive session. I ask, therefore, that it be laid aside.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table for subsequent consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the consideration of morning business is through, I wish to move a short executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is not yet concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over by agreement in the order of current business from yesterday, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move a short executive session before the Senator from Alabama goes on, if he will allow me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator want to address the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to address the Senate, but I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. It is desirable that there should be a short executive session.

HEIRS OF COL. W. R. M'KEE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for just one moment? I simply want to ask the consent of the Senate to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 10082) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the widow and orphan children of Col. William R. McKee, late of Lexington, Ky.," reported from the Committee on Public Lands by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. It is simply to correct the issue of land certificates under the act of 1853 made to the orphan children of Colonel McKee, of Kentucky. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has written a letter on the subject. The House bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate without amendment. It simply proposes to correct the issue of certificates, one of which was issued by a false and improper name. The bill is merely amendatory, of course. It extends no rights or privileges, except that the certificates which have been outstanding for nearly thirty years may be made available to these infant heirs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to look at the bill a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will hand the Senator a copy of the bill. If he will permit me, I will state that Colonel McKee was in command of a regiment of infantry, and was killed in command of it on the field of Buena Vista. In 1853 an act was passed allowing 160 acres of land to each of his minor children. He had but three children. One was a daughter. She married and left three infant heirs. Of the two sons, one is now a major in the regular Army of this country, Maj. George McKee; and the other was Lieut. Hugh McKee, who was killed in storming the works on the Isle of Corea. Hugh's name it was intended to change. He was an infant at the time of his father's death, and his mother named him for his father, and the land office issued the certificate in the name of William R. McKee, but the purpose was never executed, and he died a lieutenant in the Navy under his original baptismal name of Hugh McKee, and he died without heirs. He gave his certificate to his mother, who has died since this bill has been on the Calendar, and she gave it to one of the infant children of her dead daughter.

All that the bill proposes to do is to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in accordance with his own letter sent to the House of Representatives, to issue the certificates in the correct name, so that the children may have the benefit of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to just look at the House report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will hand it to the Senator. Here it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me and allow us to have a short executive session, while we are going through with a little business that ought to be done, I shall look at it before the doors are reopened.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will do that. There is the report of the House committee.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive businesss.

After fourteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN September 17, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between these countries and the United States, and for that purpose have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I would not again call up the subject of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio after so much debate upon this topic, and in advance of the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the House bill to enlarge the powers of the President of the United States under the retaliatory law of March 3, 1887, if I could feel satisfied that the action of the committee would be favorable to the passage of that measure.

The time seems to be near at hand when the congestion which the Mills tariff bill, as it is called, has produced in the Senate is to be relieved, and we are to have the privilege of a glance at a substitute for that measure, and then probably an adjournment.

Some debate on that measure will be had, if such a thing is to be permitted, and that will crowd out of consideration all other general legislation except to complete the appropriation bills.

It is now an obvious fact that delay in the settlement of the disputed questions about the fisheries and the transit of commerce through the lakes is a distinctive policy of the Republican party.

The settlement is not really desired by that party until they can get the credit of making the arrangement, if it is desired in any event. The best way to prevent a settlement is to defeat all measures looking to a settlement.

When the President negotiated the treaty of last February, its defeat was resolved upon by the Republican party before its merits had been discussed in the Senate.

The merits of the fishing rights claimed for our fishermen would be discussed, for no one had the power to prevent that, but no amendment of the treaty was to be permitted whereby the treaty could possibly be improved, and no delay in its rejection was to be tolerated. Such urgency was voted in considering the treaty that the Senate, which has loitered much in business both before and since the treaty was up for debate, changed the rules of that body so as to meet at the hour of 11 o'clock every day, one hour sooner than the rules prescribe. A motion to postpone action until December on the treaty, so that we could find a clearer atmosphere for the consideration of great international questions than is found in the field of a fierce political campaign, and when we could properly estimate the value of the modus vivendi provided in the protocol of that treaty, was voted down.

Motions to amend the treaty made by Democrats to meet objections stated in debate by Republicans were voted down, and the treaty was rejected, not upon its merits, as the Senator from Ohio alleges, but because the Republicans, having the majority in the Senate, refused to put into it the features that would give it merits in their eyes.

It is, therefore, a conclusion that can not be shaken by argument, that the Republican party in the Senate have resolved, if they can help it, that none other than a Republican administration should have the settlement of the questions that are now open between the people of the United States and those of Canada.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] early in this controversy and in the course of the debate upon the treaty offered the following resolution, which I will read:

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Chair whose duty it shall be to report upon the relations of commerce and business existing between the United States and the dependencies of Great Britain in North America, including the effect upon the commerce and carrying trade of the United States of the Canadian system of railways and canals now existing and in contemplation, and the prospect of the displacement of any existing industries of the United States by industries established there; also whether the obligations of existing treaties and of international law are and have been observed by the said dependencies toward the people of the United States, and the number, amount, and character of the existing claims against Great Britain by reason of the violation of such obligations toward the people of the United States in said dependencies.

Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a clerk, messenger, and stenographer, and to sit anywhere in the United States during the session and during the recess of Congress.

Any subcommittee by them appointed may exercise the same powers as the full committee.

This resolution looked to the future, and covered every inquiry about our relations with Canada that is really possible.

It is a distinct step towards the assumption of power by the Senate to shape the negotiations with foreign powers which until now has been conceded to the President of the United States.

What I said a week since about the recent tendency of the Senate to usurp the powers and functions of the President and the dangers of such an aggressive spirit finds full support in the purposes and scope of this resolution.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] then grew anxious over the question whether we were not intruders on British soil when we made the canal in the St. Clair Flats. That was a question which seemed to be entirely at rest, and seemed to be covered really by prescription, if it were not covered by the actual line of the boundary dividing us from the Canadian possessions of Great Britain.

Mr. CULLOM. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should make a remark?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as I was concerned it was a mere inquiry. I rise now, as I was absent during the last week, to state that I introduced the resolution of inquiry as to what our rights were in the Detroit River and St. Clair Flats, and I am not aware whether that resolution has been answered by the Department or not. I did not express any opinion of my own.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not speak of the opinions of the Senator, but of his anxiety to have the President determine a moot question, which it seems had been at rest for a good many years—I do not know how many; perhaps thirty or forty years—as to what was the actual boundary in the vicinity of the St. Clair Flats.

Now, the Senator from Ohio has sudden fears that the solution of the Canadian questions will postpone the annexation of the Dominion to the United States, and he demands the delay or defeat of the President's request for additional powers over the question of the fisheries and customs, because it might mar his plan of annexation that has grown up like Jonah's gourd in a night. The Senator saw at once that the President had mastered these questions, and he thought to eclipse the President's plan with one far more magnificent and infinitely distant as to the hope of its consummation.

His carefully prepared speech was evidently designed to state a policy which would relieve the Republican party from an embarrassing position.

This new policy required an entire change of front on the fisheries question, and a very decided disavowal of the heroic treatment, through retaliatory legislation, which has been so earnestly advocated of late by the Republican party.

There are also other prominent reasons for disclaiming at once and decidedly the line of diplomatic interference in the affairs of foreign countries which in Great Britain is called "jingoism."

In the brief time that Mr. Garfield was in office we had many of these pragmatical interferences in the affairs of other states, notably in the internal policies of Peru, Chili, Bolivia, Guatemala, and Mexico, besides many declarations of the State Department that indicated a very vigorous treatment of questions of international character, that were not intended so much to influence matters that were then of a practical nature or advantage to us as to formulate a policy that would make us aggressive in every matter where we might possibly in the future have material interests at stake.

There is a certain attractiveness in the self-assertion of a nation that is growing stronger with every day that passes that makes such a course popular with earnest politicians; but there is a recoil in such a policy that is severe upon those whose industries must support a government which causes them to question its wisdom. The distinguished Secretary of State under Mr. Garfield seems to have so much power in shaping and controlling the course of the Republican party that the country appears to have no doubt that he will have equal control in shaping the policy of the administration in the Cabinet if that party should carry the Presidential election in November.

We have had other examples in this country, notably those of Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster, where men of great influence in the political parties with which they acted continued to control their destinies after they had been defeated in their aspirations for the Presidency.

The death of Mr. Garfield disappointed the hopes of Mr. Blaine in relation to the foreign policy he initiated with so much of zeal, dash, and enterprise, and with so little of the caution and prudence that is required in our diplomatic dealings with other countries, and saved the country from very unwise and dangerous involvements. Then Mr. Blaine's defeat for the Presidency would have given a less ardent politician to understand that the American people rely more wisely upon their increasing growth in population, wealth, knowledge, and moral power for their just influence among other nations than upon their self-assertion, their display of the resources of war, or their declamatory announcement of their determination to claim everything and concede nothing that has the appearance of being supported by plausible argumentation.

The Senator from Ohio evidently looks forward with anxious solicitude to the possible reappearance of this excessive zeal and reckless enterprise in our Department of State in the event of the election of Mr. Harrison, and desires to give warning now that this impassioned diplomacy will be resisted by very strong men in the Republican party.

He seems from his remarks, to which I am endeavoring to reply, to consider jingoism and heroic treatment and all appearance of panic as entirely out of place in our diplomatic or other relations with Great Britain, and refers to the treaty of 1871 as a full settlement of all the questions of a practical nature, except the fisheries, then open between the United States and Great Britain. As to the fisheries question, he evidently understands that the arrangement in the treaty of 1871 was a part of a general settlement which was intended to be final, although those clauses were made determinable on notice.

The Senator from Ohio has also a strong reason for his desire to modify his course and that of his party in the Senate, so that the door to diplomatic effort to settle the fisheries questions shall remain open, instead of being shut, as was attempted to be done in the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, against the earnest protest of the minority of that committee.

I will read again, that there may be no doubt about what that committee insisted was the attitude of the United States on this subject of treating further with Great Britain on the fisheries question.

The committee, after having considered the whole case, after having summed up all the facts upon which they chose to base their report, after having argued those facts in a very earnest way, after having reproached the President with severe criticisms, and after having intimated against him certain occult threats of future severity in dealing with him if he did not submit his will to that of the Senate of the United States, proceed to say:

In view of the plain history of these transactions and of the matters hereinbefore stated, it does not seem to the committee that the existing matters of difficulty are subjects for treaty negotiation; and such appears to have been the opinion of the Senate by its action and by the remarks of many of its members of both political parties and by the action of the House of Representatives upon and in the passage of the act of March 3, 1887, and its approval by the President.

So that there can remain no doubt that the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Ohio, concurring with his colleagues of the Republican party, intended to make a statement in this report conclusive in its nature, based upon facts and argumentation, that "in view of the plain history of these transactions" the subjects of difficulty between the United States and Great Britain relating to the fisheries question are no longer open for treaty negotiation.

It is insisted in these parts of the report that self-respect, the solemn declarations of Congress, and the dictates of wisdom all united to compel the President to resort to retaliation rather than to diplomacy, and that the retaliation should relate to the securing, by compulsion, of commercial privileges to our fishermen, which it is clearly stated in that report are not in any way provided for in the treaty of 1818.

Added to these strong statements are criticisms of Senators who voted for the retaliatory law of March 3, 1887, and who are charged with having abandoned the ground then taken to follow the President in his attempt to settle these disputes by a treaty.

This strong avowal by the committee of which the Senator from Ohio is chairman, that the time for negotiation had passed, that the fisheries were no longer a fit subject for negotiation, and that legislative retaliation was the only remedy for violations of the treaty of 1818, and the only means of securing reciprocity of commercial intercourse for our fishermen in Canada, was followed and reiterated by every Republican Senator who spoke on the question so far as I recall the debate.

No room is left for question that, when the vote was taken and the treaty was rejected, retaliation was all the means that was left open to the President for securing our rights under the treaty of 1818 and the new commercial privileges we claim for our fishermen in Canadian ports.

No such censures were ever before uttered against a President where he had any discretion to choose his line of action; no censures of a President were ever made with more bitter invective or in words more scathing and defamatory; no expressions of contempt were ever more intense and few threats made against a President (certainly none by a committee of the Senate) than were employed by Senators who engaged in the debate to denounce and belittle Mr. Cleveland because he had not issued his proclamation, under the act of March 3, 1887, to cut off commercial intercourse between Canada and the United States.

It is not going too far to say that the rejection of the treaty, after refusing to amend it to suit the views of the Senate, whatever they were, and after refusing to postpone its consideration until December, was to compel the President to resort to the retaliation prescribed in the act of March 3, 1887, or, failing in that, to tacitly confess that he would do nothing to redress our grievances or to prevent a recurrence of them in respect of our fishing rights.

On the rejection of the treaty, absolutely and without leaving a ray of hope that any further effort at negotiation would be received by the Senate with the least favor, or even with toleration, the President at once prepared to deliver the blow that Congress had empowered him to inflict upon the commerce of Canada whenever, in his discretion, he thought it best to strike.

He had often declared in terms that were stronger and more specific than any that Congress had employed officially, the wrongs and injustice done to our fishermen in violation of our interpretation of the treaties of 1871 and 1818. His attention to the complaints of our fishermen had been earnest and practical, and in the employment of counsel to defend them in the Canadian courts and in many other ways he had shown a stronger determination to protect and defend them than had been shown by any of his predecessors in office. So that his sincerity can not be questioned in his earnest purpose to resort to the next means in reach to exact from Great Britain a more just and liberal treatment of our fishermen.

In looking over the field he saw that a remedy was easily in reach that would have the strongest influence upon the people of Canada to compel them to the course that all admit on this side the border line is due to us under the treaty of 1818, and to induce them to extend to our fishermen the privileges of trade and the liberty of commercial intercourse that we accord in our ports to their fishermen.

The President saw the plain and open fact, about which little had been said in the Senate, that Canada was compelled to reach the Atlantic seaports and the ports in Canada from the seaboard for six months in the year through and over the territory of the United States. He saw that this transit was worth far more to Canada than the navigation of the St. Lawrence River.

The flow of the St. Lawrence to the far northeast carries the shipping out to the sea in a long circuit that is practically blockaded by ice for half the year. The outlet to the sea from all the central and western parts of the Dominion is through our New York and New England ports. The railroad lines that are practicable for the connection of the seaports of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia with the St. Lawrence River cross a high range of hills that are excessively bleak in winter and covered for long periods with a great depth of snow. The Intercolonial road makes this connection, but its great length and the severity of the winters along the line render it inadequate, no matter how much it may be enlarged, for the needs of Canadian commerce.

It appears that as much as one-third of the value of the Canadian Pacific Railroad depends upon its outlet to the New England seaboard, which is about 200 miles the shorter line and as much as two days saving in time between Vancouver and Liverpool.

The privilege of passing goods across our territory without paying duties is really indispensable to the commercial prosperity of Canada. Its value in money is really worth as much or more to Canada than the exclusive use of all her inshore fisheries. This privilege will grow more and more important to Canada every year that passes. Her fisheries will lose their value, to a marked degree, from the competition now setting in with our Alaskan fisheries, while her agricultural and mineral productions and the lumber trade from the vast region north and west of the Lakes will increase beyond all present estimates and must have an outlet to the Atlantic through our ports if they are to compete with like productions of the United States in trans-Atlantic markets.

The commercial prosperity of Canada, in competition with the United States, depends upon the continuance of this reciprocal right of transshipping goods free of duty across our country to the Atlantic seaboard to an extent that renders this privilege indispensable to Canada.

The reverse side of this statement is barren of advantage to the United States. We have nothing to ship through Canada to the United States from places outside of the Dominion except fish, and this meager privilege has been denied to us under the treaty of 1871.

The duties on $60,000,000 of commerce passing free through our country would, under the average of our tariff, be not less than $20,000,000 annually, or one-third the market value of the goods, while Canadian duties on what we would bring through that country would not equal $200,000 annually.

The Senator from Ohio is eloquent in his remarks upon the want of reciprocity in the treaty that the Senate has just rejected, but he has only praises for the treaty of 1871, concluded by his own party, which provided for a reciprocity of $200,000 in our favor annually and of $20,000,000 in favor of Canada every year since 1873. In that time our Treasury has lost $300,000,000 under this article of the treaty of Washington, and our people have had a chance to save $3,000,000, which is far more than they have saved in duties on fish imported through Canada to the United States.

Why this arrangement was ever made is the most astonishing puzzle in our commercial history. Only two reasons for its support can be given, as it appears to me: First, that it diverted freights from the St. Lawrence River to the New England railroads. This is of some advantage to our people, but it is confined to a few people and to three or four lines of railway, the profits accruing to which are paid in much the largest share to the British and Canadian people whose money built them. This profit, however, would be reduced but to a small extent if this article of the treaty were abrogated, since for one-half the year these railroads would do almost the entire transportation for the Canadian people through commerce now being immensely increased by the trade furnished by the British lines of Pacific steamers and by the trade from the interior of Canada over the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The second reason for this arrangement, and possibly the strongest, is that the invitation thus held out to Canada to ship her productions to foreign markets would keep them out of competition with us in our own markets.

The $20,000,000 of annual increase of our tariff revenues above our present enormous surplus would furnish an additional argument for a general reduction of our duties and a large increase of the free-list that would seriously affect the plans of the consolidated phalanx of high-tax advocates in this country.

So we find the railroad barons and the high-tax barons rushing to the assault upon the President for suggesting that Canadian goods should pay duties when they pass through the United States. Mr. Blaine ceases to "jingo" and the Senator from Ohio makes his congé to Great Britain when protection comes in sight.

The railroads of New England come in for the advantage of the united support of both these distinguished gentlemen. They find no difficulty in yielding $20,000,000 of revenue to Canada annually on her imports and exports, when the carriage of the goods, duty free, adds a few millions to the income of the railroads leading from our New England seaboard to Canada.

The President with a sagacity that never fails him saw that the safest, cheapest, best method of retaliation upon Canada, and the best way to save our own people from the losses incident to any other form of retaliation, was to again resume the collection of customs duties on goods imported from and into Canada just as we collect such duties on goods coming from Mexico and all other countries.

It is more than probable that no human being in the United States engaged in any ordinary vocation will lose a cent from this collection of taxes on goods in transit through this country. Indeed, it is far from being certain that the railroads will lose anything by the resumption of the collection of these duties. The most direct effect and one of the most important that will flow from this restoration of our former policy of collecting duties on Canadian commerce will be to transfer a large trade, which Canada now conducts with Great Britain and other foreign countries, to our own merchants and manufacturers.

Canadians can not afford to pay their own tariff duties and ours in addition on imported or exported merchandise; they can not afford to import during the summer all their supplies for summer and winter, and they can not supply themselves at such expense as they would incur in the loss of constant access to the markets. The money required to carry stocks of supplies and other goods for a year at a time would be a great embarrassment to Canadian merchants, and would place them at the mercy of all foreign markets. The result would be that they would be compelled to supply the immediate wants of commerce by purchases in the markets of the United States.

The transportation for these goods would soon pay the railroads of New England all that they would lose by a return to our former policy, and the trade of our Western railroads, merchants, and manufacturers would be steadily and largely increased.

Canada fails to perceive, in a practical way, and in the actual experience of her people, the geographical barriers which interrupt their foreign trade. Their statesmen see this matter and realize its importance, but the people, always trustful of a government that is liberal and just to them, imagine that they are indebted to British diplomacy and power for advantages that are vital to them, which they in fact owe to our forbearance, or, rather, to the selfishness of favored localities that have been petted and fostered by our Government until they, like the Canadians, believe that we are compelled to shape the whole revenue system of the United States to provide for their peculiar advantage.

The President in his recent message has taken a broad and sincere view of this great question, and points out with unanswerable force and clearness how a restoration of the former duties on Canadian commerce would answer the double purpose of causing the Canadians to concede proper commercial and other privileges to our fishermen, also to restore to the United States some of the revenues that were formerly taken away by the treaty of Washington of 1871.

This, Mr. President, would be the first great practical advance to that commercial union with Canada that will lead to our ultimate political association with the Dominion.

Neither the President nor any other fair-minded American citizen regards the action of the Canadian authorities in denying to our fishermen the right to ship their fish in bond free of duty to the United States as being due to a feeling of hostility towards our country. They evidently take a business view of this subject, and hold that we never had the right to make such shipments under their construction of the treaty of 1818. And it was in that attitude that the President of the United States found this question when he was driven away from his duty and constitutional authority, in which the Senate shares, to make a negotiation with Great Britain, and was forced by the vote of the Senate to resort to some plan of retaliation against Canada.

The Senate refusing to treat with Great Britain on any basis that it was willing to suggest, or in any terms that it was willing to state, retaliation for our wrongs was the only remedy left open to him.

Now, can there be a doubt in the mind of any man whose memory is capable of carrying facts for six months at a time that the attitude of the United States toward Great Britain and Canada on the determination of this treaty of February last by the rejection of it by the Senate, was that our rights were not abandoned, our grievances were not condoned, our sensibilities were not in any respect relieved from affront, but that we intended to have redress from Great Britain and Canada for this long accumulation of abuses of the treaty of 1818, and that such redress must now come through retaliation upon Canadian commerce?

That was the serious attitude of this question before the world, and in the debates upon the treaty in this Chamber no doubt whatever was left that it was the intention of the Senate of the United States to corral the President and to compel him to execute the act of 1887, not according to his discretion which was given him under that law, but according to the commands of the Senate of the United States; not of Congress, but of the Senate.

That was an embarrassing situation, one that had to be met. The President was thus thrown upon the retaliatory law of March 3, 1887, as apparently the only means which remained to him of executing what was declared in the debates on the treaty to be the will of Congress, in the event that he found that wrong and injustice had been done to our fishermen through the conduct of the Canadian people. This was the Republican declaration at that time, only a few days since, but it is far from being the declaration to which the Senator from Ohio now adheres.

That subject, in all its bearings, then came before him for examination and for action. It will be admitted by any man who will read the act of March 3, 1887, carefully, that it conferred upon the President of the United States a very broad and almost irresponsible discretion. More than that, it was an act the violation of which was just as easy in the direction of its execution as in the direction of omitting to execute it. So strong was the feeling on the part of the persons who had insisted upon the passage of this law, that the President should be forced to execute it according to their selfish wishes, that they essayed as the representatives of a fishing association at Gloucester, in Massachusetts, very early after the enactment of this law, to indicate to the President of the United States what should be his line of action in the enforcement of the law. They argued and strongly insisted that, inasmuch as the law related to the redress of grievances on account of the fisheries, the exclusion of fish from the United States should be absolute, and that should be the boundary and limit of the retaliation that he was to institute in the execution of that law.

They set up their alleged losses of money in the competition with Canadian fisheries as the thing that was to be compensated in the enforcement of a law that was demanded for the protection of the honor of the nation.

There are some other interests in this country that are very largely concerned in the exclusion of competing commodities from Canada. I can mention some. The lumber interest of this country is largely concerned in the exclusion of lumber brought from Canada into the United States even under our existing tariff. There are other interests which would be very materially fostered if a prohibitory declaration or ukase were issued by the President of the United States to prevent absolutely the importation of those commodities into this country from Canada. The growers of barley and of wool in the United States, to say nothing of the owners of petroleum wells and those who have a demand for iron-ore, particularly the qualities that produce steel, would find themselves very considerably benefited, notwithstanding the rates of the present tariff, by a law or a proclamation that would prohibit absolutely the introduction of those articles into this country. Such exclusion would give them a larger control of what is called the home market which, it is said, belongs almost exclusively to the manufacturers of this land.

So the President, upon a question of the mere pecuniary advantage that his proclamation might work in behalf of certain people of the United States, could not justly confine himself, as was demanded by the Gloucester fishermen, to the prohibition of the introduction of fish into this country, but it would be equally his duty in that view of the subject to spread the prohibitions of his proclamation so as to exclude from the United States at least those articles which were in competition with what we produce in our own country. He took a very much broader view of this question. He did not hesitate to reply, as he does not hesitate to reply upon any question, to the demand that was thus made upon him, in terms which were befitting to the magnitude of the subject, the gravity of the situation, and what he conceived to be, and what I believe to be, his duty as the Chief Executive of this nation. He said in reply to the letter of the president of the American Fisheries Union, on the 7th of April, 1887:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, D. C., April 7, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter lately addressed to me, and have given full consideration to the expression of the views and wishes therein contained in relation to the existing differences between the Government of Great Britain and the United States growing out of the refusal to award to our citizens engaged in fishing enterprises the privileges to which they are entitled either under treaty stipulations or the guaranties of international comity and neighborly concession. I sincerely trust the apprehension you express of unjust and unfriendly treatment of American fishermen lawfully found in Canadian waters will not be realized; but if such apprehension should prove to be well founded, I earnestly hope that no fault or inconsiderate action of any of our citizens will in the least weaken the just position of our Government, or deprive us of the universal sympathy and support to which we should be entitled.

The action of this Administration since June, 1885, when the fishery articles of the treaty of 1871 were terminated under the notification which had two years before been given by our Government, has been fully disclosed by the correspondence between the representatives and the appropriate departments of the respective Governments, with which I am apprised by your letter you are entirely familiar. An examination of this correspondence has doubtless satisfied you that in no case have the rights or privileges of American fishermen been overlooked or neglected, but that, on the contrary, they have been sedulously insisted upon and cared for by every means within the control of the executive branch of the Government.

The act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, authorizing a course of retaliation, through executive action, in the event of a continuance on the part of the British-American authorities of unfriendly conduct and treaty violations affecting American fishermen, has devolved upon the President of the United States exceedingly grave and solemn responsibilities, comprehending highly important consequences to our national character and dignity, and involving extremely valuable commercial intercourse between the British possessions in North America and the people of the United States.

I understand the main purpose of your letter is to suggest that, in case recourse to the retaliatory measures authorized by this act should be invited by unjust treatment of our fishermen in the future, the object of such retaliation might be fully accomplished by "prohibiting Canadian-caught fish from entry into the ports of the United States."

This is a quotation from the letter addressed to the President.

The existing controversy is one in which two nations are the parties concerned. The retaliation contemplated by the act of Congress is to be enforced, not to protect solely any particular interest, however meritorious or valuable, but to maintain the national honor and thus protect all our people. In this view the violation of American fishery rights and unjust or unfriendly acts towards a portion of our citizens engaged in this business is but the occasion for action, and constitutes a national affront which gives birth to or may justify retaliation. This measure once resorted to, its effectiveness and value may well depend upon the thoroughness and extent of its application; and in the performance of international duties, the enforcement of international rights, and the protection of our citizens this Government and the people of the United States must act as a unit, all intent upon attaining the best result of retaliation upon the basis of a maintenance of national honor and duty.

The nation seeking by any means to maintain its honor, dignity, and integrity is engaged in protecting the rights of the people; and if in such efforts particular interest are injured and special advantages forfeited, these things should be patriotically borne for the public good. An immense volume of population, manufactures, and agricultural productions, and the marine tonnage and railways to which these have given activity, all largely the result of intercourse between the United States and British America, and the natural growth of a full half century of good neighborhood and friendly communication, form an aggregate of material wealth and incidental relation of most impressive magnitude. I fully appreciate these things, and am not unmindful of the great number of our people who are concerned in such vast and diversified interests.

In the performance of the serious duty which Congress has imposed upon me, and in the exercise, upon just occasion, of the power conferred under the act referred to, I shall deem myself bound to inflict no unnecessary damage or injury upon any portion of our people; but I shall nevertheless be unflinchingly guided by a sense of what the self-respect and dignity of the nation demand. In the maintenance of these, and in the support of the honor of the Government, beneath which every citizen may repose in safety, no sacrifice of personal or private interests shall be considered as against the general welfare.

Yours, very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

GEORGE STEELE,
President American Fishery Union, and others,
Gloucester, Mass.

I have read this entire letter because I could not take up a section or clause of it and read it with justice to the President of the United States. The whole of it is full of pith and substance, and it contains a direct statement of what the President conceived to be the proper breadth of the field to be covered in the exercise of the retaliatory power intrusted to his discretion by the Congress of the United States in the act of March 3, 1887. Whatever may have been the intention of the real authors of that act, it was not the purpose of those who supported it at large that it should merely furnish an opportunity for the benefiting of a particular industry in the United States, a speculative opportunity for a few men to make money out of, but it was intended as a broad vindication of the national honor and that in its enforcement there should be a broad exercise of national duty. So the President regarded it; so he informed the gentlemen who claimed that he should retaliate alone in reference to the very narrow ground of prohibiting fish alone, as early as April 7, 1887.

After that declaration on the part of the President of his willingness to proceed with any measure of retaliation that might be found necessary, the question recurs, why did he not proceed at once? Why did he not proceed to lock up commercial intercourse between the United States and Canada as early as April, 1887, when he wrote this letter? It was but a very short time after that when the Government of Great Britain signified its desire to enter into negotiation about this matter, and many of those who voted for this retaliatory act of March 3, 1887, did so merely because they believed that it would stimulate Great Britain to activity in her diplomatic effort to settle this controversy upon a just basis. I believe that it had that effect, not that I believe Great Britain was intimidated by anything that we did, for that was neither our purpose nor was it a rational view to take of the subject; but Great Britain saw that this country was in earnest about this matter and up to that time there was no division between Republican and Democrat in regard to the causes which led to our action or the manner in which that action should be executed and fulfilled.

Never before did any Congress, or any President evince so decided a purpose to bring these disputes to a just and final settlement.

Great Britain seemed to be equally in earnest, and the best hopes for amicable arrangement seemed to inspire the action of both governments.

The British Government became active in its demonstration of a wish and purpose to negotiate about this matter. Was there a man in the United States who at that time, March 3, 1887, would have dared to rise upon the floor of this Senate as a Senator and to have announced that it was the purpose of the Senate of the United States and of the House of Representatives in voting for that bill to cut off absolutely all negotiation with Great Britain on the subject of the fisheries and to force the controversy into a fight à l'outrance? I assume with confidence that there was no man in the United States who had the recklessness to have taken a position of that kind on this subject. We conveniently, as I have often remarked before, referred this matter of retaliation to the discretion of the President. We turned our responsibility over to him and yoked it upon his shoulders, and then, instead of trusting him as an honest and honorable citizen and a sworn officer of the United States Government to obey and observe the Constitution and the laws, instead of giving to him the credit of his action, as he deserved to have in view of all the history of this transaction, we turned around immediately and commenced to impeach him in the most severe and defamatory way because he did not see proper to execute this act in the manner in which it was prescribed to him by this association called the American Fisheries Union.

They claimed the exclusion of Canadian fish from our markets. Some of them being Democrats, the Republicans eagerly joined in their demand for the exclusion of fish and nothing else.

In all the debate that has been had upon this question in this body not one single Senator has ever yet intimated that the President of the United States, in the exercise of the power of retaliation, ought to have taken into consideratien any other subject than fish. No Senator can point to a word or line in that debate which intimated an opinion by any Republican that the President of the United States should, in the execution of that law, have prohibited the introduction of barley, of coal, of petroleum, of iron ore, of lumber, of cattle, of wool, or any product of Canada except fish. So I assume, without the slightest apprehension that I am doing any person an injustice, that the demand of the Republican party upon the President of the United States for the execution of the act of March 3, 1887, was confined to the prohibition of the introduction of fish into the United States.

The fact that this act was broad enough to cover all goods coming from Canada does not alter the demand so persistently made that the exclusion should relate only to fish.

Now, sir, that is an unseemly position for the Republican party to take if they have any respect for their own history; for do we not know and does not the world know that both by act of Congress in 1872, and by the treaty of 1871, and by the subsequent act of Congress of 1883 the Republican party in the United States enacted that fish for immediate consumption, fresh fish coming into the United States, should come free of duty? And do we not know that under the processes of freezing fish which are of modern practice more than two-thirds of the actual value of the importation of that commodity into the United States is free of duty under the construction of that act of Congress? All fish of every description was made free of duty under the treaty of 1871, which I suppose no one will deny was a Republican treaty in every particular. What did that party demand? What did they expect from the President of the United States? Simply this, that they having enacted a law to let in fresh fish free of duty, the President of the United States in the enforcement of the retaliatory law of March 3, 1887, should prohibit their introduction and thereby give the bounty of the entire market in the United States into the hands of the fishermen of New England.

Now contrast that narrow ground of private speculation, personal gain, and local advantage with the broad and statesmanlike utterances of the President of the United States as to the basis of his policy, which he stated in the letter to Mr. Steele, which I have just read, and you will see at once which of these parties is entitled to the consideration and respect of the American people for enforcing the laws of this country in a proper, just, statesmanlike, and national way. You will see one party contending for the advantages to accrue to few men as a mere private speculation, a local benefit, and the other insisting that the controversy with Great Britain upon the subject of the breach of the treaty of 1818 is a national matter and it must be dealt with in a national way by a national executive.

So when the President of the United States came to look about to see in what manner he should exercise the only alternative left to him by the action of the Senate in the rejection of this treaty, he at once discovered, or rather at once laid before the Senate of the United States, that which he had previously seen, and to which he makes distinct reference in his letter of April 7, 1887, to Mr. George Steele, that there was a way of reaching Canada on this question which would injure no citizen of the United States; a way that would inform Canada of her dependence upon our forbearance and our neighborly conduct for the prosperity of her commerce; a way to inform Canada that He who had constructed the geography of this continent had put barriers in the winter time in the way of her intercourse with foreign countries that Canada could only overcome by some arrangement through which she could reach speedily and safely the seaports of New England and New York.

Canada seems to undervalue the commercial power thus lodged in our hands, and we seem to regard it as a matter too insignificant for consideration; and yet this is by far the most important fact in the entire situation.

Nothing can be stated that more deeply concerns the future of Canada as the neighbor of this great Republic than the frozen barrier to her commerce that is interposed every winter.

Up to the time of the treaty of 1871, excluding the time of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, customs duties were laid upon goods imported from Canada into the United States, and duties were laid upon goods that Canada might see proper to import through our ports into her own ports crossing our territory. That was an advantage to us and a disadvantage to Canada, which both countries perfectly understood and fully appreciated. When we came to the celebrated treaty of 1871, which the Senator from Ohio seems to regard as a final settlement of all difficulties between us, by far the most important concession that we made to Canada and to Great Britain in that treaty was couched in the twenty-ninth article, wherein we provided that all of their commerce crossing the United States and going to foreign countries, or coming from foreign countries and crossing the United States going to Canada, should pass through our territory under bond and free of duty. This concession was not limited to Canadian productions or to importations made by Canadian merchants. It included and still includes all that Great Britain may choose to send to Asia or South America through Canada. We can not deny to British exports or imports transit through our territory under bond and free of duty if Canada chooses to class them as Canadian commerce.

There we opened wide the gateways of commerce for Canada and gave to her advantages to the value of a great many millions of dollars annually. We contributed to her prosperity more than any decree of Great Britain or, I had almost said, any decree of fate could have contributed. We unlocked for her the frozen barrier of the St. Lawrence during six months of the year by permitting her commerce to go and come free across our own territory to the New England and New York seaboard. Let some man state some treaty arrangement, some act of great statesmanship, some broad act of legislation which could by any possibility, in favor of Canada, approach in value the equivalent of this great concession which we made to her in the treaty of 1871. I do not believe it possible for one country to grant to another a greater boon than this.

More than $60,000,000 of commerce annually passes through the United States without the payment of one cent of duty, a commerce that is bound to pass through the United States for more than half of each year, or else Canada, like a man who in conducting a business is compelled to suspend his labors entirely for six months in the year, must be terribly crippled in h r business of every sort. Canada is absolutely at our mercy in respect of her commerce during six months in the year. We conceded to her every dollar of duty that we have charged her upon this commerce up to 1873, when we put the treaty of 1871 into execution by an act of Congress. We conceded to her duties that would have amounted in the Treasury of the United States to $20,000,000 annually at the very lowest calculation, duties that since the act of 1873 would have amounted in the Treasury of the United States, as I have said, to $300,000,000. We made the concession to her, and there it stands, if it stands at all, under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871.

What did we get in return for that? We got duty free on the articles that we import from places beyond the Dominion of Canada through her territories into the United States. What are they? Nothing in the world comes through that line to us as commerce except the fish caught in the seas adjacent to Canadian territory. I have stated in the previous part of my remarks that that sum was probably $200,000 per year. That is a mere estimate, but I should be greatly surprised if it should exceed $50,000 a year. That is what we got in return from Canada for a concession of $20,000,000 a year of duties on goods that she is compelled to export and import.

I need not dwell any longer upon this subject. I merely propose to draw the outline of this picture and let the American mind fill it up, as it will be very certain to do.

The President of the United States found this concession to Canada in practical operation on the 30th of June, 1885. When he came to enforce the laws of the United States in respect of retaliation he saw that, instead of proceeding so as to cut down the trade and traffic of every private citizen in the land, whether in selling his merchandise, agricultural productions, manufactures, lumber, or what not; and instead of antagonizing the private interest of private citizens against the power of the Government of Canada, so as to throw upon the shoulders of the weak, the poor, and the helpless the burdens that would follow the cutting off intercourse with Canada, which must be very heavy, he preferred to take the burden upon the shoulders of the Government and return to the ground that we occupied before 1873. The President preferred to go back to that system of legislation which our fathers established, and which nobody before 1873 had found a reason for abandoning. He preferred to restore our tariff duties upon goods imported from Canada into the United States, and put Canada upon a footing with Cuba or Mexico or all other countries.

The President is clearly in the right. If we reinstate the law as it stood before 1873, Canada, feeling the weight and burden of an act, not of injustice or of national discrimination, feeling the effect of the withdrawal of our generosity to her, will see at once that it would become her to be just, if not generous and liberal, towards the people of the United States in respect to their fishing rights in the ports of Canada and in the adjacent seas under the treaty of 1818. In the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871 we gave to Canada enough to have induced her to consent to all our rights in the fisheries as they existed in 1783.

What clearer proposition could be stated to an intelligent and a patriotic mind than that? But the President of the United States did not by any means have to reach these conclusions by riding down treaties or asking for the repeal of statutes. But Congress, in its neglect of the rights and interests of the people and of its solemn duties, had permitted the statute laws of the United States to go into that shape and condition where it became necessary in order even to guide the Executive in the performance of his oath to see that the laws are faithfully executed that it should come to his relief and place upon the statute-book some enactments indicative of the public policy of the United States on this grave and important subject. The law enacted in 1873, which put the treaty of 1871 into force, had expired by its own express limitation on the 5th July, 1885, that being the date of the termination of Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX of the treaty of 1871.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The Senator from Alabama will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the pending order be laid aside informally that the Senator from Alabama may conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the pending order will be informally laid aside.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Oregon for his courtesy. I prefer to conclude my remarks this morning, as I have some engagements out of the Senate for to-morrow which will prevent my attendance.

The President of the United States found the law in a condition, as I will observe again, where it was necessary that Congress should act in order to give to the executive head of the Government a guide to go by in its further execution. We find that up to 1873, under the laws of the United States, Canada paid duties upon her goods like all other countries. We find that in 1873 that requirement upon Canada was suspended. It was suspended in a way, however, which required that after the act of suspension had expired it should be re-enacted before the President of the United States could put it in force. Now, how was that? I will read a part of the act of 1873 so as to make my remarks upon this subject entirely intelligible. Section 2866 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> From the date of the President's proclamation declaring that he has evidence that the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, the Parliament of Canada, and the Legislature of Prince Edward Island have passed laws on their part to give effect to the provisions of the treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, as contained in Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX of said treaty, and so long as said articles remain in force, according to the terms and conditions of Article XXXIII of said treaty, all goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at the ports of New York, Boston, and Portland, and any other ports in the United States which have been, or may from time to time be, specially designated by the President of the United States and destined for Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America, may be entered at the proper custom-house and conveyed in transit, without payment of duties, through the territory of the United States, under such rules, regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury may, from time to time, prescribe.

Another act of Congress, the revenue act, contains a similar provision, but seems to enlarge the scope of the act of March 1, 1873, so as to provide for the exemption from duties of Canadian commerce passing from Canada to our seaboard and to foreign countries.

That was the state of the law as the President of the United States found it at the date of his message to Congress recently delivered to us. What did it provide? That, in express terms, the act permitting goods imported into Canada to come free through the United States should expire by its own limitation whenever Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX of the treaty of 1871—the treaty of Washington—should be terminated.

Did Congress have the right to impose that restriction upon the operation of the treaty of 1871? The answer to that question is that Congress has the right at any time to repeal the treaty of 1871. In this country, as I have had occasion before to observe during the long debate upon the subject of the treaty, the Congress of the United States is the dominant power and represents the true sovereignty of the people of the United States whenever it chooses to exercise its will in the form of legislation, and no treaty can stand for a moment in the way of Congress thus commissioned to execute the will of the people.

So the Congress of the United States gave its assent to the operation of Article XXIX of the treaty of 1871, which exempted Canadian commerce passing through our country from the payment of duty. But for how long a time? Only for the period of time, says Congress, during which Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX shall be in force. In 1885, after two years' notice, we terminated Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX by an express act of Congress. There of course arose the condition upon which the act exempting Canadian products from duties ceased longer to have any operation. That stands in the nature of a repealing statute. During the time, at least, of the operation of Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX, through the effect given to them by Congress, the statute virtually repealed the laws which required the collection of revenues from Canadian produce imported into or carried through the United States.

But our law, as declared in the statutes, is that the repeal of a repealing statute does not revive the original act unless by express command. When this statute expired by its own limitation its repealing effect upon antecedent laws requiring the collection of duties on Canadian commerce ceased to have full operation, and it became necessary for the Congress of the United States to re-enact these laws so far as Canada is concerned if we chose to extend the term of Article XXIX and to reimpose these duties upon goods coming from Canada or passing through the United States into Canada, if we preferred not to extend that term of Article XXIX of that treaty. It became the duty of the Congress of the United States to re-establish the revenue laws and the duties of the revenue officers before the President could execute the laws by collecting those revenues.

Now, sir, we will put the treaty of 1818 out of view. We will put every quarrel with the Canadian Government out of view for the moment. When we find that the act of 1873 has expired by its own limitation, what is the plain and palpable duty of Congress? It is, if public policy so demands, that we should reinstate and continue the force and effect of Article XXIX of the treaty; or if public policy is the other way, that we should refuse to do this, and we should order our custom-house officers to collect the duties upon Canadian commerce as they are collected upon goods from all other countries coming into the United States.

With every other consideration out of view, it was the plain duty of the President of the United States to call attention to the condition of the law upon the question of duties on imports coming from Canada, so that Congress might take such action as it should be advised was proper, either to renew and extend that law or else to allow it to remain dead, and in its place to substitute the revenue laws of the United States.

It so turned out, however, that we could make a double use of this opportunity, and instead of the President recommending that Congress would renew for another period of ten years the exemption of Canadian products from the payment of duties, he recommends that the duties should be reinstated, and that the tariff laws of the United States should operate generally upon Canadian commerce just as they do upon commerce brought from Germany or France. That is the whole proposition. That simple proposition, of which such good use can be made, so just in itself, relieving this country from any improper and unjust discrimination in respect of Canadian commerce, it is suggested by the President shall be restored to the statute-book as it stood before 1873, the date of the act from which I have just read.

What will be the effect of it? It will be, as I have observed, to inform Canada that hereafter she can not have access to the Atlantic Ocean through our railways and through our ports, or from the Atlantic Ocean through our ports and railways to her own ports for her commerce, unless she stops at the borders and pays the same duty to our custom-house that the people of Germany, the people of France, and the people of Great Britain have to pay on goods entered for consumption. That is the whole subject included in this branch of the President's message.

When the Canadians are informed that that is the situation upon which we have resolved, then they will discern that there is not merely a relation of blood and kindred between us, but that the Almighty in the configuration of the physical geography of this continent has put the commercial prosperity of the Dominion of Canada so far dependent upon the will of the people of the United States as that their best interests now and hereafter must depend either upon our benevolence and their good neighborship, or else it must depend upon some identification of material interests between us and them.

If there is any one thing that would lead to the realization of the hopes so well expressed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and in which every American citizen North and South equally coincides, if anything would advance the era when this people of a common origin and a common blood should unite themselves under the beneficent system of government that we have in the United States, it would be a resort to a policy which would inform the Canadians that their material interests as well as their affections and their sympathies are bound up very intimately with the people of the United States.

If I were to forecast the period of time when Canada might be admitted as an integral part of the Government of the United States, of course, with her own consent, I would say it would be at that period of time when Canada had determined in her own councils that her best interests led her into close and valuable commercial union with us; and that period of time will arrive after she has seen that her whole commercial prosperity is dependent upon the legislation of the Congress of the United States far more than upon the legislation of the Parliament of Great Britain.

I believe that this one stroke of masterly policy suggested by the President of the United States will have more to do with the coming of Canada within reach of our political affiliation than any other act that could be stated, for it brings before the eyes of the Canadian people the great practical fact that their material interests are so bound up with us that a common government is a necessity for all alike. A zolverein would soon lead to this result, and I would welcome such an arrangement if I could see how it could be made practicable and equal in its operations through the action of two independent governments.

The Canadian Government for some reason that can not be characterized as one influenced by very sound policy thought it necessary under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington to prohibit our fishermen from shipping their catch of fish from the cod banks, the mackerel fisheries, and the halibut fisheries of the northeastern waters across Canadian territory, under bond and free of duty—a mere bagatelle, something that was of no account, so far as the money in it was concerned, to Canada or to us. Nevertheless, it was a right guarantied to us under the treaty of 1871, as has been often asserted. Why Canada should have been so purblind as to refuse the admission of our fares of fish under bond to pass free of duty across her territory is beyond the imagination, I think, of any right-thinking man. Still it has been done, and I suppose it will continue to be done.

In that respect, according to the interpretation that we put upon the treaty of 1871, she violates it. If Mr. Cleveland had taken advantage of its violation, he would have been justified in saying that Canada has violated the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871, and we retort upon her by declaring its abrogation.

The argument made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] upon another phase of this question deserves the closest attention of constitutional lawyers and publicists, for he has established to a demonstration upon technical reasoning that the twenty-ninth article of that treaty, not containing a period for its own termination, was referred by the treaty to that period which covered the continued existence of Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX. He also argued that when Articles XVIII to XXV and Article XXX were abrogated, or when they were terminated, to use the correct word, by the act of the Congress of the United States the period had ended, and the only period had ended which was fixed in the treaty as the limit of the life of the twenty-ninth article of the treaty.

I am willing to concede that that is technical argumentation. I am willing to concede that the current of American and British opinion is the other way. Nevertheless, when we submit that article of the treaty to the judgment of a tribunal that must pass in strict judgment upon constitutional questions, I apprehend that the argument of the Senator from Mississippi will be found very hard to answer.

But the President does not take either of these grounds. He merely says to the Congress of the United States that in his opinion we will not find the twenty-ninth article of the treaty or any act of Congress heretofore existing in our way when we desire to reimpose duties upon Canadian commerce. Sir, that is true beyond all dispute. The House of Representatives, which has the right to originate all bills relating to revenue and taxation—the House, without which the Senate can not begin to act upon a revenue question, when it came to consider the revenue propositions that were involved in the treaty of 1871, measured its consent first to the existence and then to the continuance of the provision made in Article XXIX of the treaty by its own view of public policy.

The House of Representatives had a perfect right to introduce a bill and pass it, with the consent of the Senate and the concurrence of the President, which would have limited the operation of that treaty to one year if they had seen proper to do it, and it was the course of wisdom to place strict guards of limitation upon the operation of a treaty that was so entirely one-sided as that. The House perfectly understood that we were yielding up to Canada out of the revenues of the United States $20,000,000 a year upon her exports and imports through our country, and that Canada was probably not yielding to us as much as $200,000 a year in her revenues upon the importations of fish through her territory into our country. The House saw that this was an unilateral affair, that the weight and burden of the concession was all upon the people of the United States, and none of it upon Canada; and, seeing that, they wisely and prudently said, "We connect together this right of the fisheries and all the privileges that our fishermen are to enjoy under the treaty of 1871 and the concession of $20,000,000 a year in the way of revenues that we are making to Canada; we unite them in our action so that the one may stand in some respects as being reciprocal to the other. Thus uniting them, thus considering the question, thus measuring the policy upon which we are inclined to act, we absolutely limit this act of March 1, 1873, so that it shall continue," in these words:

So long as the said articles remain in force.

What articles? The articles named here, Articles XVIII to XXV, and Article XXX of the treaty of 1871. Did the House of Representatives and the Congress of the United States have the right to give their consent to the operation of this treaty during that limited period of time?

If Congress had that right—and there is no disputing it—that is all that it did; that is the right it has exercised. The President has said to the Congress of the United States that we will not find this act in our way, because, according to the limitations that Congress placed in it, it has expired; it has ceased; it is functus officio; but he found it in his way as President of the United States, because having passed this repealing act, Congress must reinstate this, or provide some other law for his guidance before he can proceed.

So, whether Canada has been kind or unkind to us, just or unjust to us; whether we have overstated or understated our rights in respect to the fisheries in our dealings and in our diplomatic correspondence with Great Britain, it makes no difference; the laws of the United States are in this lame condition and they need rectification. It is a duty we owe to our country as well in respect of the collection of the revenues due to the Government as in respect of the relations we hold to Canada that this legislation should be attended to and arranged.

Because the President asks for this legislation the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate quickly changes its policy and declines to become active in respect of Canadian interference with the treaty of 1818.

I will not follow the Senator from Ohio through all the mazes of his argumentation, in which I think the Senator, after he gets his mind a little cool from the influence of this passionate political campaign that is now raging through the United States, will find that he has done the President of the United States great injustice in the statement of the President's position.

Turning to the other branch of this inquiry, there is but one thing to be said about it, and that relates to the discrimination in the tariff charges on ships, property, and passengers passing through the great lacustrine system divided between the United States and Canada by invisible lines drawn through the water. We have divided the lakes and the rivers that connect them by invisible lines drawn through the middle of the stream, a very inconvenient and difficult sort of boundary line to maintain and to respect.

When we were negotiating the treaty of 1871 the Government of Great Britain took the ground the provinces of Canada have so much of autonomy, so much of local self-government, so much of freedom and of independence, that they had not the power under the empire to compel her to open her canals to the transmission of goods and passengers and ships free of charges, in fact that Great Britain had no such power over them. Whatever is done in this particular by the provinces of Canada must be done by the consent of their local legislatures. We on the other hand said to Great Britain that we were much in the same condition, or precisely in the same condition.

There are some canals here, like the Erie Canal, passing entirely through the State of New York and owned by that State, leading from the Great Lakes out to the seaboard. There are some other canals shorter than this which are within the States and belong to the States or to the people of the States. The United States have no power to compel any one of these States to make any concession in regard to these canals. So both powers are in the same situation. What could they do? They both agreed in this treaty that they would use their best endeavors to persuade the respective local governments that they should not discriminate between American and British or colonial commerce in the rates charged for the passage of ships and traffic through these canals. That was as far as they could go. There the powers of diplomacy and treaty making ended; there they found a barrier which terminated their powers, and the two governments contented themselves with an assurance to each other that they would recommend, the one to its colonies and the other to the States, such arrangements as should result in an equable and just schedule of charges upon commerce and passengers and ships going through. That was the situation.

It was further provided, however, in the treaty that in the event that either of them, any State or any colony, should not comply with this mutual agreement then the other Government could proceed to legislate in its own way as if that article were abrogated.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has long been very familiar with these questions, when he was debating the treaty before the Senate announced his disagreement with the President of the United States and with the policy which he had adopted, because the President had not treated with Great Britain about this canal question. With the treaty before that honorable Senator, showing plainly and palpably the reasons why Great Britain could not do it, and why the United States could not do it, neither having any control of States or of colonies, the Senator complained that the President of the United States had not opened negotiations with Great Britain for a treaty on this subject.

The Senator from Ohio recognizes the situation. He knows that neither of these Governments can advance a hair's breadth farther than it has already gone in the arrangement of a treaty regarding the subject of fares upon the canals and the passage of ships and passengers and commerce through them. Then what remains to be done? There has been discrimination, there has been wrong, there has been that concealment about the discrimination and wrong that stamps it as in the nature of an overreaching act. What is to be done? No power can act but Congress, and the Senator knows it.

The President of the United States comes here and asks us to act. The Senator from Ohio holds up the utopian scheme, blazoned with the brightest hopes that ever challenged human admiration, of the ultimate admission of Canada into the Union as the all-healing balm for these troubles. He will not introduce a bill here to assist the President of the United States; he will not vote for a bill now before his committee to help the President of the United States to correct these and other evils; but when he is asked to consider a measure in the committee and to bring it into this body and vote for it so as to give justice to American shippers through Canadian canals, of which they are deprived by Canadian artifices secretly perpetrated, the Senator from Ohio opens his all-embracing arms and proposes to take in Canada clear up to the north pole.

That is the answer to the President's proposition. The first answer is made by the Senator from Ohio: "I will not give you, Mr. President, the power to reinstate the taxes through the consent of Congress, upon Canadian commerce. On that subject, I will change my whole programme."

The Senator, in the course of his remarks, mentioned an amendment that he said he intended to offer, or did offer in the committee. What was it? An amendment to strike out the fifteenth section, or so much of it as related to any reciprocity of trade between the United States and Canada.

Why did the Senator make that motion? Why did he advocate it? Upon a doctrine that he is as thoroughly grounded in as he is in the great history that he has wrought for his country in this and in the other House of Congress. What is that? He has been the uniform champion of the doctrine that there shall be no arrangement of customs duties between the United States and any foreign country by treaty, taking the high ground that only the House of Representatives has the constitutional right to originate a measure of that kind, and that the Senate can not originate a measure that relates to revenue. And yet when the President of the United States sends his message to this body and asks the Senator from Ohio to reinstate a law that was upon the statute-books until 1873, whereby we could collect revenues from Canada, he says, "No, I prefer to treat with them, and that is the object of my resolution, for the taking all of Canada into our possession, and then we shall not fear any discrimination in duties; we shall not need any regulation of commerce between the two countries."

Mr. President, following up the Senator's traditional ground upon this question in the Senate, oftentimes expressed and never abandoned until this occasion, we find that he would be compelled by his action to concede to the President of the United States the restoration of the duties upon Canadian commerce, but instead of doing that he withholds the power from the President and censures him for asking for it. He says that his motives are merely to get up a political clamor.

Why, sir, if Mr. Harrison is elected President of the United States, I confidently expect that on the very first day of the next Congress measures will come in from the Republican party to reinstate the duties on Canadian commerce, and treaty propositions will be offered between the United States and Great Britain containing concessions broader than any that Mr. Bayard ever made to the Canadian people and advantages far less to us than those that he achieved by his treaty, and everything will work as smoothly as a toboggan, and as rapidly. It will be down-hill from the beginning and no obstruction.

Now, Mr. President, let us deal fairly and squarely and candidly with this question. The President of the United States has sought to retaliate upon the Canadian Government and the British Government for wrongs done under the treaty of 1818, and he has stated them time and again and made demands for reparation. The Republican party from time to time have announced the existence of these wrongs, though I recall not one single demand, except that of the Sunday fishing in the Bay of Fundy made by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] when he was Secretary of State, ever made by a Republican President upon the Government of Great Britain for a single wrong that had been done to us during the last seventy years. There is not a Senator on this floor who can rise in his place and state from the records of the history of this country a single specific demand made in regard to a single American ship that was ever made by a Republican administration in this country under the treaty—not one.

Instead of making demands for wrongs, they have paid almost unlimited sums for peace and for the passing over of these questions in silence. When Mr. Cleveland came in, he opposed his powers with a bold front against the aggressions and demands of the British Government. He made a demand for compensation to every ship that had been unlawfully seized, for every article of property that had been improperly dealt with, and for every fisherman whose rights had been transgressed by the conduct of the Canadian authorities.

Not only did he that, but he went into negotiation with the British people for the purpose of seeing if an adjustment of their rights could be made, and then, as I remarked the other day, instead of withholding this treaty, postponing the subject, dallying with it until the heat and burden of this great political campaign had passed away, when it could not become an element of political exploiting by either of the great parties of the country—instead of doing that, he came boldly forward with his treaty and laid it before a Republican Senate and asked their concurrence in it when he knew it took two-thirds of that body to concur.

Allow me to remark again—for I like to remark upon it—there is no act of political statesmanship that ever characterized the conduct of a President of the United States that has in it more of honest, sincere manhood and moral heroism than that act of the President of the United States. He wants open discussion of everything. He wants the people of the United States to see and to feel that they are right. He resorts to no concealment. When he has a proposition to submit to the Congress of the United States he comes boldly forward with it, no paltering, no double dealing, no hiding away of his opinions, but he puts the subject before the people and the Congress in such a direct and sincere and manly form as that no man who reads it can misunderstand it.

So he comes to the Congress of the United States and asks in his message that we shall give him this power not merely to retaliate upon Canada for wrongs she has done us, but to convince her that she must not do these things any more. He asks Congress to put the revenues of our country in respect of Canada upon the same footing that they are in respect of Mexico or any other foreign state, and also to relieve him from an embarrassment which every lawyer must see that he can not escape from as long as the law remains in its present imperfect and confused form. That is what he asks of us, a plain, simple thing. The question is whether we will grant it. I do not believe that Congress will grant it, notwithstanding the almost solid vote of the House. There is no intention on the part of the majority in the Senate to grant it. There will not be any action taken upon it according to present appearances.

It will be but a few days now, as we are informed, until the report comes in on the tariff, and that will wedge everything else out, and after we have stood here and implored the postponement of action upon this treaty until December, so that the people of the United States might have a chance of having actual experience and actual observation of its benefits under the equivalent operation of the modus vivendi in the protocol; after refusing to postpone it, when the President asks for a power from this Congress which would be available, they say to him, "No, do not reinstate duties upon Canadian commerce; you will hurt the railroads of the country if you do that; you will hurt the corporations; go and make proclamation of non-intercourse where the burden will fall not upon the great corporations of the country, but upon the individual laborers who are engaged in manufactures, in mining, the timber and lumber industries, and in agriculture." Instead of making the yoke to fit the necks of the corporations, who are the instigators of all this trouble, they want the President, by his proclamation of non-intercourse, to put yokes upon the necks of the working people of the land.

The next outbreak of sympathetic eloquence we shall hear when the tariff comes in from the committee will be "what trusted and sympathetic friends of the poor and the laboring people are the Senator from Ohio and his friends on this floor," who are now so careful of the railroad companies.

The President of the United States knows how to discriminate in the measures he recommends so as to save the people whom he loves from unnecessary burdens falling upon the individual man. If burdens must come and be borne, let them be borne at least in a fair share by those who have amassed great accumulations of capital and who enjoy enormous corporate privileges and franchises at the hands of the Government.

But the moment we undertake to strike a blow for the honor and welfare of the country which may reach a railroad corporation, then we find the great Senators on this floor and the great politicians of the Republican party rallying to shelter the railroad corporations against a fair share of the burdens, and demanding of the President of the United States that he should pass them by and let the burdens of retaliation fall upon the necks of the laboring people of the land.

That is the situation, and right there, Mr. President, I leave it.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I had not intended to occupy the attention of the Senate on the fisheries question or on the question of our relations with Canada again this session, and should not have done so except for the extraordinary speech which has just fallen from the lips of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]; and even now I shall be very brief.

The Senate has constituted two committees to inquire into our commercial and other relations with Canada and to report to the Senate thereon. The treaty recently before the Senate has been rejected. The President still declines to enforce the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, commonly known as the retaliation act. His attempt to divert attention from his refusal to do so, and from the conspicuous failure of his attempt at negotiation with Great Britain has proved futile, and I am quite satisfied with the situation. Our friends on the other side of the Chamber do not appear to be satisfied.

In March, 1887, they presented a united front in favor of the position that a treaty was not necessary, that negotiation was not desirable, that retaliation was the true remedy for the aggressions of the Canadian provinces upon our fishermen and fishing vessels. Suddenly they changed front. They became the defenders of the Administration; they sang the praises of the treaty which had been negotiated and which was recently rejected by the Senate, but there was always an interlude of a proposition to postpone the consideration of the treaty until after the November election; just as if a treaty which would be desirable after the 6th of November would not be a good thing before the election. Now, after the treaty is rejected and the President still refuses to exercise the powers for retaliation placed in his hands by Congress, they turn around and complain of the Republican majority of the Senate because we do not precipitately grant the President's request for further power to retaliate upon the Canadian provinces.

From the advocates of the British side of this fisheries controversy they become now the most radical advocates of retaliation. They can not state the British aggressions upon American fishermen and the wrongs of Canada against the United States too strongly. Witnessing the facility with which they change positions on this question, one is ready to exclaim:

O consistency, thou art a jewel!

Mr. President, I regard the message of the President of the United States of the 29th ultimo, relating to legislation concerning intercourse with Canada, as a most extraordinary document. To be properly understood it must be considered in connection with certain facts relating to the controversy between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fishery rights of our citizens in British waters under the treaty of 1818 and our claim to reciprocal commercial privileges in Canadian waters.

These controversies, as I stated on a former occasion, may be stated to be first in regard to the delimitation of the common waters within which American citizens have a right to fish under the treaty of 1818 from the waters in which we renounced the right to fish under the renunciatory clause of that treaty on certain coasts of the British provinces; and second, as to the laws which have been passed by the Canadian provinces to regulate the exercise by American fishermen and American fishing vessels of their rights to fish in Canadian waters and their right to enter certain bays and harbors for the purpose of shelter and repair and for obtaining wood and water.

The controversy in regard to the delimitation of the common from the restricted waters turned on the question of the meaning of the words "bays and harbors" as used in the renunciatory clause of the treaty of 1818, and that of course could only be settled finally by agreement or by arbitration. The claims of citizens of the United States against the British Government for the unlawful seizure and confiscation of their vessels for alleged violation of provincial laws could only be determined by agreement or arbitration with the British Government; but the question of delimitation was not an important or a pressing question from the fact that neither Great Britain nor the provinces, with one or two exceptions, had ever undertaken to enforce the headland theory, and the question of the claims of our citizens against Great Britain was not of great urgency. Such claims lose nothing by lapse of time and will remain demands against the British Government until they are finally determined and settled.

The important question of the controversy was the question of our commercial relations with the Canadian provinces, the question of reciprocal commercial privileges to our vessels, including our fishing vessels, in Canadian waters, and the interests and the dignity of the United States demanded, inasmuch as this question of commercial privileges did not depend upon treaty but upon the laws of the two countries, I say the interest and the dignity of the United States demanded that there should be denied to Canadian vessels in our ports the privileges which were denied to our commercial vessels, including fishing vessels, in the ports of Canada.

The Congress of the United States by the act of March 3, 1887, conferred upon the President of the United States power to deny to the vessels of the Canadian and other British provinces of North America the privileges in the ports of the United States which were denied to American vessels in the ports of the Canadian provinces, and it further conferred upon him power to retaliate upon the Canadian provinces for the unlawful, unjust, and brutal treatment of our fishermen in Canadian waters, and for the denial or abridgment of the rights of our citizens under the treaty of 1818 or under international law in Canadian waters.

The President did not enforce that act, which I will show presently contained ample power of retaliation. What did he do? He negotiated a treaty by which the United States surrendered in large part their claim upon the question of delimitation, their contention as to what were bays and harbors within the meaning of the renunciatory clause of the treaty of 1818, by which no provision was made for the presentation or determination of the claims of American citizens for wrongs inflicted upon them by the provinces or by Great Britain, for the unlawful seizure and confiscation of their vessels; and by which the United States surrendered, or would have surrendered if the treaty had been ratified, our claim to reciprocal commercial privileges in Canadian waters, and agreed that if our fishermen were to receive even partial commercial privileges such privileges should be purchased by the surrender of duties to the amount of about $1,000,000 a year.

And, sir, when that treaty was before the Senate and under discussion, as I have said before, appeals were made from the other side of the Chamber for the postponement of the treaty, a motion was made by a member of the other side for the postponement of the consideration of the treaty until December next, and the Republican side of the Chamber were threatened that if the treaty was not ratified the President would enforce the act of March 3, 1887, and in such a manner as to injure the business and destroy the industries of the American people and bring bankruptcy upon the country. Such threats were used in order to endeavor to secure the ratification of the treaty.

Well, sir, that treaty, which was a shameful surrender of American rights, was rejected, as it should have been. The President was left free to execute the act of March 3, 1887, free to retaliate upon Republican Senators for the rejection of the treaty; but he chose to bluster instead of to act. He declined to exercise the power which had been placed in his hands; he refused to accept the measure of retaliation which had been established by law. He undertook to instruct Congress upon the question. He demanded power to do what? To prevent the transportation in bond of goods brought from Canada into the United States for the purpose of being shipped abroad and goods imported from abroad and brought into the United States for the purpose of being taken into Canada—a power the exercise of which would hurt American transportation companies alone; a power which would tend to destroy American interests, and which it is very doubtful if it would harm Canada at all, because if transportation were diverted from American transportation lines it would be transferred to Canadian lines, and would build up Canadian transportation companies and cause the construction of new lines of railroad, and in the end, as is claimed by leading men in Canada, would be a benefit to the Canadian provinces.

The exercise, as I will show in a moment, of the power which was placed in the President's hands under the act of March 3, 1887, would have injured Canada. Was that the reason the President did not exercise it? The power asked for would injure American interests, and it is doubtful if it would injure Canada in the long run. Is that the reason the President desires the power? If I am correct in regard to the effect of the exercise of this power it would seem to be the desire to retaliate upon the people of the United States rather than those of Canada. Why, sir, if the President had exercised the power which was placed in his hands to deny to Canadian vessels entry into our ports, it would not have been thirty days until our fishing vessels would have been granted full commercial privileges in the Canadian provinces.

If the President had denied the importation into the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or lumber, it would not have been thirty days until the Canadian provinces would have been casting about to see how they could amend their laws to give our fishermen all the privileges we have ever contended that they should have under the treaty of 1818.

Sir, I deny that the act of March 3, 1887, does not contain complete power for retaliation, and power to retaliate on Canada in such manner as to harm Canada and be harmless to ourselves. Let us see what that act provides. It provides, first—

That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen, visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are then or lately have [been] unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights, or otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed in said waters, ports or places; or—whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any such fishing vessels or fishermen, having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation, or shall be unjustly vexed or harassed in respect thereof, or otherwise be unjustly vexed or harassed therein, or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may there be lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation; or—

Second—

Third—

whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any other vessels of the United States, their masters or crews, so arriving at or being in such British waters or ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied any of the privileges therein accorded to the vessels, their masters or crews, of the most favored nation, or unjustly vexed or harassed in respect of the same, or unjustly vexed or harassed therein by the authorities thereof, then, and in either or all of such cases, it shall be lawful, and it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect—to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America, any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of or within the United States (with such exceptions in regard to vessels in distress, stress of weather, or needing supplies as to the President shall seem proper), whether such vessels shall have come directly from said dominions on such destined voyage or by way of some port or place in such destined voyage elsewhere; and—also to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States.

First—

Second—

Here there is conferred upon the President of the United States ample authority to prevent the entry into any port of the United States of any vessel belonging to the British provinces, and authority, as I said before, to prevent the importation of fish, either fresh or salt, or any other product of Canada. The Senator from Alabama insists that it requires legislation to enable the President to prevent the importation into the United States of products of Canada intended to be transported abroad, produce simply passing through the territory of the United States. The language of this act is broad enough to authorize the President to prevent any production of Canada from coming into the United States either for consumption in the United States or for transportation to a foreign country.

The Senator says, and the President declares in his message, that the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871 has ceased to be in force. In my opinion that article is still in force. I believe the Canadian authorities are right in regard to that, and it will be in force until two years' notice has been given by the United States, under the authority of Congress, to terminate it, unless this act of March 3, 1887, shall be held to be an abrogation of that article of the treaty. Certainly if that article is not in force, as the President declares, then there is nothing in the way of this act, and the President has ample power under the provisions of this act to prevent the importation into the United States of any production whatever of Canada.

But if it should be held that the act of March 3, 1887, must be construed in connection with the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of 1871, and that it was not the intention of Congress to abrogate that article, and the article is still in force, then it is a treaty obligation, and unless we are willing to violate the treaty it requires a notice to the British Government to terminate it.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] dwelt upon the immense amount of foreign merchandise that is transported in bond across the territory of the United States and into Canada free of duty, and of Canadian products that are transported in bond across our territory intended for exportation, and he talks about the duties which we lose by that transportation. I did not suppose there was a man in the United States, capable of understanding a plain statute and knowing the circumstances, who believed that this transportation of merchandise in bond across the territory of the United States affects our revenue from duties at all. If duties were collected on merchandise to be imported into the United States intended for Canada or on merchandise brought into the United States from Canada intended for exportation, it would not be transported across the territory of the United States. The products of Canada would seek other routes to the sea, and her importations would be through her own ports. It is not an arrangement affecting the revenue at all; it is a mere matter of the convenience of the two countries.

While the Senator magnifies the amount and character of transportation in bond, so far as it is claimed to be beneficial to Canada, he belittles the question of transportation in bond of American products across Canadian territory. I will inform the Senator that there is a large amount of products of the Pacific coast that is now transported by the Canadian Pacific through Canadian territory and brought again into the United States. I understand there is a large amount of American products also brought over the Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada, products of the Western States that are shipped through to New York. Probably there is quite as much of transportation of American products in bond through the Canadian provinces—I do not speak after an examination of the question, but from my observation—as there is of transportation in bond through the United States of the products of Canada or merchandise imported intended for Canada.

I have shown, as I believe, that the President has ample authority, if disposed to retaliate on Canada, to do so in such a manner as to hurt Canada and not to injure the United States; that he is not confined by the Republican party, as was claimed by the Senator from Alabama, to retaliation by forbidding the importation of fish. Nothing that the Senate has done or that Congress has done limits his powers; and outside of Congress it is certain the Republican party can not control the President of the United States in the exercise of his powers under this act. He is not confined to the prohibition of the admission into the United States of fresh fish or of salt fish, but may prohibit the entry of wheat, or barley, or lumber, or any other Canadian product.

While he refuses to exercise the power conferred upon him, when he has, as I believe, deliberately refused to execute such power, and wisely determined not to carry out the threats which were made freely on this floor as to what would be done if the treaty was rejected, I for one am not willing to place in his hands a further power which, if exercised, would probably only hurt American interests without harming Canada.

The bill offered by the Senator from Alabama and which has been referred to by him contains a section relating to the question of tolls upon Canadian vessels on the canals of the United States. I have examined the correspondence which was submitted by the President in answer to the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] calling for the correspondence upon the subject. I do not find anything in that correspondence that makes action by Congress so urgent that we can not wait until after the committee appointed to examine our relations with Canada shall have had time to investigate the subject and report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the resolution will now be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs, by unanimous consent, on the motion to refer the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. I had some thought of making some remarks on the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several Senators who wish to discuss the subject-matter of the resolution. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow it to be now referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, it will no doubt be reported back one way or the other without delay.

Mr. GEORGE. It will be reported back very soon?

Mr. SHERMAN. Very soon, one way or the other; I can not say which way; and then the Senator will have an opportunity to speak upon it. I should like to have it referred so that it may be considered to-morrow, if possible.

Mr. GEORGE. With that understanding I consent to the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will then be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire simply to state that I expect to say something on the resolution myself; but if the Senator from Ohio expects soon to get it back into the Senate from the committee, I shall defer my remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be reported one way or the other very soon.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to continue the provisions of existing laws temporarily for the expenditures of the Government. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. PLATT. When will the time run out by the present extension?

Mr. ALLISON. October 10.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF ADULTERATED FOOD IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 249) to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated food or drugs in the District of Columbia; which were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "health," insert "or manufacture any article of food which shall be composed in whole or in part of diseased, decomposed, offensive, or unclean animal or vegetable substance."

In line 6, after the word "sell," insert "in the District of Columbia."

In line 7, after the word "stained," strike out "or."

In line 7, after the word "powdered," insert "or manufactured."

Page 3, line 18, strike out the words "any exception or provision" and insert "proviso."

Page 4, line 14, strike out all after "Sec. 11" down to and including the word "drugs," in line 26, and insert: "That the analysis provided for in this act shall be under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Page 5, line 4, after the word "same," insert "to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Page 5, line 4, strike out all after the word "analyzed" down to and including the word "with," in line 6, and insert "who shall with."

Page 5, line 6, strike out the words "analyze the same" and insert "cause such analysis to be made."

Page 5, line 30, strike out all after the word "That" down to and including the word "District," page 6, line 2, and insert "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may."

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension cases on the Calendar favorably reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business, being the Northern Pacific Railroad forfeiture bill, may be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported to which there is no objection. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the indulgence of my colleague upon the Committee on Pensions to call up a House bill which is of local concern, but quite important, and which ought to have been passed some time ago.

Mr. DAVIS. I am willing to waive the pension cases for a few moments.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think it will take more than three minutes to pass the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection if it can be done without prejudicing the pension cases.

OLD CAMP SHERIDAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7410) for the relief of settlers upon old Camp Sheridan military reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent having been given for the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar, the Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that this order may be informally laid aside to enable him to call for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7410) for the relief of settlers upon old Camp Sheridan military reservation.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY NEWTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first private pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9227) for the relief of Mary Newton.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that bill. Let it go to the other Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar under Rule IX.

ELIZABETH EVANS.

The bill (H. R. 2120) granting a pension to Elizabeth Evans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Elizabeth Evans, dependent sister of William Ayers, late a private in Company F, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL ANDERSON.

The bill (H. R. 10017) granting a pension to Samuel Anderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel Anderson, late a private of Company E, Fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

The bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of Philip H. Sheridan, late General of the Army of the United States, and pay her at the rate of $3,500 per year during her natural life, from and after the 5th day of August, 1888.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been read three times, shall the bill pass?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the bill, nor do I care to call for the yeas and nays. I wish to state, however, that I am opposed to the bill, and I shall vote "no" upon its passage.

The bill was passed.

GEORGE RHODY.

The bill (H. R. 2139) granting a pension to George Rhody was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of George Rhody, late a private in Company K, Thirty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, to $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY L. TANNER.

The bill (H. R. 10705) granting a pension to Mary L. Tanner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary L. Tanner, widow of Alanson G. Tanner, late of Company K, One-hundredth New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY C. THOMPSON.

The bill (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "pension," to strike out "of ——— dollars a month" and insert "corresponding with the grade of captain;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary C. Thompson, widow of the late Dr. Fillmore Thompson, of Hot Springs, Ark., who was chief guide to the expedition of General Frederick Steele, during the spring of the year 1864, undertaken for the purpose of co-operating with General Banks, and who lost his life by reason of exposure in said service, and to pay her a pension corresponding with the grade of captain.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some information about that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. PLATT. When I was upon the Pensions Committee I made an unfavorable report in that case. As I remember it, Dr. Fillmore Thompson was a Union man at Hot Springs, Ark., and was engaged by General Steele to lead the expedition which attempted to make a union with General Banks. On that expedition, by reason of exposure, Dr. Thompson was taken sick, and soon after his return to Hot Springs died. There was no question upon the papers but that he lost his life in consequence of his services as guide to that expedition; but at that time we had not been in the habit of pensioning even scouts. The committee had not reported any bill pensioning a scout, but had reported uniformly against them at that time.

The report in behalf of the committee, as I recollect it, stated that this was a very meritorious case, and that it was only because the committee had not reported favorably upon such cases that it was reported against at that time.

At the present session Mrs. Thompson, the widow, came to me with my former report and spoke of the hard straits to which she was reduced; that she had lost not only her husband's life, but his property, by reason of his death at that time; and that she was utterly without means to support herself, and with some persons dependent upon her, as I remember.

I then made inquiries as to the course of the committee and of the Senate since that time. I found that the rule of the committee at the time when I was upon it had been reversed by the Senate, so that now cases of scouts who were wounded in the service were reported favorably upon and pensioned by the Senate; and also that in the case of widows of scouts who had lost their lives while engaged in their duties the Senate had been in the habit of granting pensions to such persons.

I said to her, therefore, that I thought the Senate ought to reverse its action in this case, and I introduced a bill in her behalf which was referred to the committee and has been reported favorably.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is but one point I wanted to inquire about. I am aware of what has been done here in regard to pensioning scouts; but the last clause of the amendment proposes to place Mrs. Thompson upon the pension-roll and give her a pension as the widow of a captain. I have never known the Senate to pension a scout in the position of a captain.

Mr. PLATT. Congress places a scout in a great deal better position than a captain very often, because a captain if totally disabled gets $20 a month, while a scout very often under the provisions of special acts gets a pension which a captain could not get. But I think, with my view of the somewhat distinguished character of the gentleman who was her husband, the amount which the committee put in the amendment is very modest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ANN REID.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10954) for the relief of Mary Ann Reid.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the bill. Let it go on the other Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

THOMAS SHACKELFORD.

The bill (H. R. 9719) for the relief of Thomas Shackelford was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Shackelford, late of the Eleventh United States Infantry of the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. CARR.

The bill (H. R. 4102) granting a pension to Mary A. Carr was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Carr, widow of Jeremiah Carr, late a private in the Third Battery Light Artillery Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID O. SANBORN.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR September 4, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2474) granting a pension to Joseph Lincoln Young, have examined the same, and report: The facts in this claim are correctly stated in the appended House report, which is herewith adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

The beneficiary named in the bill is the child of Joseph Young, who died August 21, 1864, at Andersonville prison, while a private of Company H, Seventeenth Maine Volunteers, to which command he was transferred from Company H, Third Maine Volunteers.

His widow drew pension until her death, January 20, 1868, whereupon his minor children were placed upon the pension-roll, and continued to receive pension until November 6, 1878, on which date the youngest, Joseph Lincoln, became sixteen years of age.

It appears from the evidence before your committee that Joseph Lincoln Young is incapable of taking care of himself by reason of a mild type of insanity, and that he is dependent upon others for support. The probate court of Essex County, Mass., has declared him insane, and appointed a guardian.

Congress having on many occasions liberally responded to the requests for relief in this class of cases, your committee feel warranted in returning the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "private," in line 7, and inserting therein instead the words "of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $18 per month, payable to his legally constituted guardian."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER September 13, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11243) granting a pension to Mary E. McQueen, have examined the same, and report:

The report on which this bill was passed by the House is approved, and is as follows:

"The proposed beneficiary is the daughter of Anthony McQueen, jr., who served as private in Company D, Thirty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, from August 14, 1862, to June 20, 1865, and died April 14, 1869, from chronic diarrhea contracted in service. His widow, Ellen McQueen, was a pensioner and is now dead, as appears from the certificate of the United States pension agent at Des Moines, Iowa. The soldier left surviving him six children under sixteen years of age, all of whom are now over pensionable age, and consequently no one is now drawing any pension on account of his death.

"Mary E. McQueen is about thirty years of age and is an imbecile, utterly incapable of self-support, as shown by medical and lay testimony before your committee. She has no means of support, being dependent upon relatives who have a hard struggle to provide for themselves.

"The liberal policy of Congress towards the dependent relatives of deceased soldiers not provided for under the general pension laws suggests the propriety of relief in this case."

The bill is reported favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER O. WATSON.

The bill (H. R. 200) granting a pension to Walter O. Watson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Walter O. Watson, late a private in Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

MRS. R. S. HORTON.

The bill (H. R. 8) to restore Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to this bill. It reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, empowered and directed to replace or restore Mrs. R. S. Horton, widow of Capt. William H. Seaton, late of Company D, Twenty-sixth Ohio Volunteers, upon the pension-rolls.

The only question is whether it does not give her pay back from the time she was dropped from the roll on account of her marriage.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is evidently not the intention of the committee that she should be paid for arrears while she was the wife of Mr. Horton.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the bill be passed over and I will examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That concludes the pension cases on the Calendar. There are two bills——

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate in order that I may have an order made which will get it out of the way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will see that the unfinished business is laid before the Senate prior to adjournment.

Mr. DOLPH. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] desires to submit some remarks on Monday, and when the bill is before the Senate again I shall ask the Senate to postpone its consideration until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done now by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be done at this time, and then the bill will be out of the way for the rest of the week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon refers to the unfinished business, the bill relating to the Northern Pacific Railroad lands?

Mr. DOLPH. I refer to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of the unfinished business be postponed until Monday—at 2 o'clock?

Mr. DOLPH. Immediately after the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that the further consideration of the unfinished business be postponed until Monday next immediately after the morning business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REGISTERED-MAIL LOCKS.

Mr. PLATT. I rise to a question of privilege. I entered a motion, or desired to enter a motion, to reconsider the bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor. The bill was not in the possession of the Senate, but was recalled from the other House, and is now with the Senate. I do not desire to enter the motion, or if it has been entered I desire to withdraw it and allow the bill to stand as passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider has been entered, and, leave of the Senate being given, it will be withdrawn. What action does the Senator desire on the bill?

Mr. PLATT. I suppose that leaves the bill passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill stands passed.

RAILROADS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are two House bills which have been reported favorably and are upon the Calendar, and it is a matter of interest to a great many parties that they should be passed. They are House bills No. 7186 and No. 6612, granting the right of way to certain railroads through the Indian Territory. They have been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and there can be no objection to them.

I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 9, line 6, before the word "crossings," to strike out "high-road" and insert "highway;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 100 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, after the word "act," in line 10, to strike out the following proviso:

And provided further, That the purchase by said railway company of material and fuel to be used in the construction and operation of said road from any of the civilized tribes of Indians through whose possessions the road may pass, and the temporary occupancy of such possessions as may be necessary to secure such material and fuel, shall not be deemed a violation of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, line 2, after the word "act," to strike out "Sec. 13. That," and insert the word "and;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to this bill, and ask a conference with the House on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask for the consideration of Order of Business 2252, which is a bill of the same kind.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, at the end of section 1, line 65, to strike out "granted" and insert "provided for;" so as to read:

Also an extension of said branch line from such point of intersection, or from some other station or point on said railway as now constructed, southeastwardly, by the most practicable route through the lands of the Choctaw Nation, to a point on Red River, in Red River County, of said nation, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, and sidings in connection with all or any of said railways as said company may deem to its interest to construct upon the right of way and depot grounds hereby provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right of way of 200 feet in width through said Indian Territory is hereby granted for each of said two railways, and for said branch railway and the extension thereof hereinbefore named, to the said St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet in addition to the right of way, is hereby granted for stations on each of said lines for every 10 miles of road, no portion of which shall be sold or leased by the company, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided always, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein granted shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used said portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 10, after the word "referees," to strike out "to be appointed by the President," and insert "one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company;" so as to read:

In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 6, after the word "all," to insert "fences, roads, and;" in the same line after the word "crossing" to insert "and necessary bridges;" in line 7, before the word "highways," to insert the words "roads and;" in the same line, after the word "highways," to strike out "may" and insert "do now or may hereafter;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 100 miles of said railways in said Territory within two years after the passage of this act, or this grant shall be forfeited as to the portion or portions not built; that said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, road, and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railways wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross any of said railways, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, in the following words:

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to this bill, and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, were appointed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 3124, Order of Business 2269.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3124) creating three additional land offices in the State of Colorado.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

P. H. WINSTON.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the Senate to take up Order of Business 2163, being House bill 4239.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate the title of the bill?

Mr. VANCE. It is the bill (H. R. 4239) for the relief of P. H. Winston.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A Senate bill on the same subject has passed the House of Representatives, the Chair thinks.

Mr. VANCE. The bills were introduced simultaneously, and when the Senate bill got to the House of Representatives they passed the bill which was originally introduced into the House. It came over here and was referred to the same committee, and the House bill is reported. The Senate bill is in the House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4239) for the relief of P. H. Winston.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE subsequently said: I am informed since the passage of the bill (H. R. 4239) for the relief of P. H. Winston that the Senate bill has passed the House and has been sent to the President. If that be so, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the vote by which the bill was passed and ordered to a third reading will be reconsidered, and the bill will resume its place on the Calendar to await further action.

Mr. HARRIS. Would it not be better for the Senator just to enter a motion to reconsider and then ascertain the status of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done; but the information appears to be direct that the bill has passed both Houses and is now in the hands of the Executive for approval, in which event it might be as well to dispose of this bill by indefinite postponement.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, if the information is certain, that is the proper course.

Mr. VANCE. I reckon there is no doubt about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House bill will be indefinitely postponed, the votes passing the bill and ordering it to a third reading being first reconsidered.

PETROLEUM AS FUEL ON STEAMERS.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Order of Business 2113, being Senate bill 3427.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3427) to amend section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "however," to strike out:

That the permit of the Secretary of the Treasury shall not be required to use petroleum as fuel on steamers not carrying passengers.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit the use of petroleum as fuel on steamers not carrying passengers without the certificate of the supervising inspector of the district where the vessel is to be used, subject to such conditions and safeguards as the Secretary of the Treasury in his judgment shall provide. For a violation of any of the conditions imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury a penalty of $500 shall be imposed, which penalty shall be a lien upon the vessel, but a bond may, as provided in other cases, be given to secure the satisfaction of the judgment.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit the use of petroleum as fuel on steamers not carrying passengers, without the certificate of the supervising inspector of the district where the vessel is to be used, subject to such conditions and safeguards as the Secretary of the Treasury in his judgment shall provide. For a violation of any of the conditions imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury a penalty of $500 shall be imposed, which penalty shall be a lien upon the vessel, but a bond may, as provided in other cases, be given to secure the satisfaction of the judgment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LINE-CARRYING PROJECTILES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up Senate bill 2182.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2182) to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes requiring life-saving appliances on steamers.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, after the word "projectiles," at the end of the bill, to add "and the means of propelling them;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes shall be amended by inserting after the words "life preservers," wherever they occur, the words "line-carrying projectiles, and the means of propelling them."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER W. BALDWIN.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2162, being Senate bill 3438.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3438) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of the late Alexander W. Baldwin, as United States district judge for the district of Nevada. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the estate of Alexander W. Baldwin, late United States district judge for the district of Nevada, the sum of $624.59, being the internal-revenue tax illegally collected on his salary.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LINCOLN LAND DISTRICT IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that Senate bill 3390, Order of Business 2004, a bill to create the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico, reported by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] from the Committee on Public Lands, be considered. It is a very short bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 3390) to create the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OZIAS MORGAN'S SURETIES.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the consideration of Calendar No. 2112, Senate bill 1839.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Daniel C. Rodman and others, sureties on the bond of Ozias Morgan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, which was, in line 10, after the word "seventy," to insert the words "and their heirs and legal representatives be;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel C. Rodman, Ossian B. Hart, Charles Slazer, Calvin L. Robinson, Ozias Buddington, and Joseph R. Richard, sureties upon the bond of Ozias Morgan, given as security for the faithful performance by said Ozias Morgan of his duties as receiver of public moneys and disbursing agent of the United States land office at Tallahassee, Fla., from 1866 to 1870, and their heirs and legal representatives, be, and they are hereby, released and discharged of and from all and every obligation and liability whatsoever on account of said bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 112) requesting the President of the United States to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine, according to the rules of the Washington convention of November 12, 1884, all questions touching the boundary line between the United States and Mexico where it follows the bed of the Rio Grande and Colorado Rivers; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William R. Dean; and

A bill (H. R. 9619) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senate to consider Order of Business 2332, being House bill 7843.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 7843) granting to Citrous Water Company right of way across Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, which was, in line 10, after the word "Arizona," to strike out the words:

Provided, That all persons residing along said right of way shall have equal rights to water-supply at reasonable compensation.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

For the sole purpose of constructing a ditch or canal, to be used in conveying water across said reservation for use in irrigating lands and supplying water to owners of land below: Provided, That so long as said reservation shall continue for the use and occupation of said Indians, said Indians shall, free of cost, be supplied with water from said ditch or canal in such quantity and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that reasonable compensation only, subject at all times to the control of Congress, shall be charged to those supplied with water for use upon land held under the United States: Provided further.

So as to make the section read:

That the Citrous Water Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, and transacting business in the Territory of Arizona, is hereby granted the right of way, 100 feet in width, across, through, and out of township south 5, range west 5, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, the said described land being a part of the Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona, for the sole purpose of constructing a ditch or canal, to be used in conveying water across said reservation for use in irrigating lands and supplying water to owners of land below: Provided, That so long as said reservation shall continue for the use and occupation of said Indians, said Indians shall, free of cost, be supplied with water from said ditch or canal in such quantity and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that reasonable compensation only, subject at all times to the control of Congress, shall be charged to those supplied with water for use upon land held under the United States: Provided further, That said right of way herein granted shall not be mortgaged, sold, transferred, or assigned except for the purposes of construction: And provided further, That unless said canal for which this right of way is granted be completed within two years after the approval of this act the provisions of this act shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section:

SEC. 2. This act, and all rights acquired under the same, shall be subject at all times to modification, revocation, amendment, or repeal by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, and Mr. STOCKBRIDGE were appointed.

HEIRS OF JOHN H. NEWMAN.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask consent to call up Order of Business 2095, being House bill 834.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that it appears of record that at its December term, 1874, the Court of Claims in the case of John H. Newman vs. The United States, numbered 3162, rendered a judgment in favor of Newman for the proceeds of 50 bales of cotton, valued at $177.55 per bale, when, under the proof, the court adjudged that the claimant was entitled to the proceeds of 230 bales. The bill therefore proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of John H. Newman, deceased, late of the county of Warren, Mississippi, $32,679.20, balance due on account of captured cotton, as shown by the opinion of the court in rendering the judgment, the amount to be paid out of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property now in the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report with that bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read if the Senator from Connecticut desires to have it read.

Mr. PLATT. I want some statement explaining the case. I understood from the reading of the bill that there was a judgment of a court, and that this was to pay something more than the judgment of the court. I may have misunderstood the reading of the bill. I should like to hear some explanation of the case.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I examined this case and can explain to the Senator the facts.

This claimant, Newman, placed in the hands of an attorney in this city a claim for 250 bales of cotton; gave him a power of attorney to present the claim and prosecute it in the courts and collect the money. In presenting the claim he made it for 50 bales of cotton. It was not ascertained at the time that there was an error in the original application until the two years' time within which the tribunal had a right to act had elapsed. When the error was discovered, a motion was made to amend the original petition by making it 250 bales instead of 50, but the court held that the two years within which it had a right to act had expired, and it would be in the nature of a new action to allow the claim to be amended so as to make it 250 bales; but the finding was that the taking of the 250 bales was proved, every item in the case necessary to be proven was proved, and the judgment rendered was that the proof being made for 250 bales of cotton, the judgment should have been rendered for that amount but for the fact that the claim had been presented for 50 bales, and the finding of the court must be confined thereto. The proof was not for 250 bales, but for 234 bales of cotton, I think, and this bill is to pay the balance of the amount found by the court to be due to this claimant, but which was by error of his counsel omitted to be claimed in the original complaint.

That is the whole case and those are the facts in the case.

Mr. PLATT. Is the finding of the court attached to the report of the committee?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think so.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to examine the claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the report read?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I suggest that the Senator let the bill pass and he can move a reconsideration if he is not satisfied on examination that it is correct. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. PLATT. I do not quite like to pass a $32,000 claim in a thin Senate of twenty members or so without any examination whatever. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, August 14, 1888:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, have considered the same and report as follows:

The Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, to whom this bill was referred, made a report which is substantially embraced in the following extracts, which this committee adopts as its own report:

"Your committee have before them the record in this case from the files of the Court of Claims. The claimant there, John H. Newman, now dead, gave his power of attorney to B. D. Whitney 'to sue for, demand, collect, and receipt for the proceeds of 250 bales of cotton taken from him by authorities of the United States, and the proceeds of which have been turned over to the Treasury Department.' Under this power Whitney brought suit by his attorneys under the act of March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts of the United States,' but by some oversight in the petition filed he asked for only 50 bales instead of 250 bales, and dated the taking July, 1864, instead of June, 1863.

* * * * * * *

"Commissioner Eben Eveleth made the following report, which we take from a certified copy of 'Consolidated copy of the reports of Commissioner Eveleth, filed May 24, 1875,' page 11:

"'John H. Newman vs. The United States. No. 3162.

"'This action was brought to recover the proceeds of 50 bales of cotton, alleged to have been taken from the plantation of the claimant, in Warren County, in the State of Mississippi, some time in the month of July, 1864, and sold by the officers of the Treasury Department.

"'The proof shows that the plaintiff's plantation was situated in the county above mentioned, near Bovina, and 12 or 14 miles from the city of Vicksburg.

"'That in June, 1863, the claimant had on his plantation about 100 bales of cotton, in bales, and about 45 bales in lint and seed cotton. He had also transported from his plantation 100 bales of cotton, for safety, to the plantation of one Kidd, on the eastern bank of the Big Black River. The 100 bales of cotton on his plantation and the lot on the Kidd plantation were taken by Captain Schenck, an officer of the Quartermaster's Department on duty at the headquarters of General Osterhaus, then located at the railroad bridge at the Big Black River, in said county, and near the plaintiff's plantation; said cotton was hauled to said headquarters.

"'The evidence shows that afterwards some of this cotton was put on the cars and "started towards Vicksburg;" some of it was hauled in wagons towards Vicksburg, and some of it was taken to the fortifications near the headquarters of General Osterhaus.

"'The cotton in lint and seed was taken to a neighboring gin by an agent of the Treasury, where it was ginned and baled. From thence it was transported to Vicksburg by the Treasury agent.

"'I find from the evidence that 245 bales of the claimant's cotton went into the Vicksburg cotton, and that he should be charged one-fourth for ginning and bailing 45 bales, or 11 bales, leaving 234 bales to the credit of the claimant.

"'But inasmuch as he has claimed only 50 bales in his petition, he can be allowed out of the fund only for 50 bales. And therefore the claimant is entitled to judgment for the value of 50 bales of cotton, at the average rate per bale, payable out of the first fund—50 bales of cotton, at $177.55½ per bale, $8,877.50.

"'On May 24, 1875, the court made the following order: "And it is further ordered that the engrossed and consolidated copy of the reports of the commissioner, as amended by this order filed herewith, stand as the findings of fact of the court."'

"This made the finding of Commissioner Eveleth the finding of the court, and the Supreme Court of the United States has held in the 'intermingled cotton cases' (92 U. S. Reports, p. 651), where the Court of Claims had adopted the finding of the commissioner, 'that the judgments as rendered are the result of the deliberation of the court, and not that of the commissioner alone.'

* * * * * * *

"The money which claimant asks is not the property of the United States, but a trust fund held for him. The United States occupies a strictly fiduciary relation to claimant, and never intended to divest him of his property, but by taking it constituted itself claimant's trustee (13 Wallace, p. 128), and from this trust fund the bill provides that he shall be paid.

"There is, in the judgment of this committee, neither law, reason, justice, nor policy in withholding this money claimed from its rightful owner, and we therefore urge the passage of the bill herewith reported, with an amendment as follows:

"In line 8 strike out the following words, 'said judgment,' and insert in lieu thereof 'the opinion of the court in rendering said judgment.'"

In addition to the matter set out in the foregoing report, your committee respectfully submit the following:

It appears from the record of this case in the Court of Claims, which record your committee have carefully examined, that when the attorney for the claimant became aware of the fact that he had made a mistake in the original petition he filed a motion to correct the same by claiming the number of bales which his client had in the first instance authorized him to sue for. A copy of the record of the court containing the motion and a similar motion in other cases is filed as a part of this report.

In view of the fact that the court affirmed the report of the commissioner, wherein it was found that the claimant was entitled under the proof to the proceeds of 234 bales, it appears at first sight a matter of surprise that the application of the claimant for leave to amend his petition was overruled. On examination of a case decided by the court about two months prior to this motion, being the case of Thomas Kidd, guardian, etc., the theory of the law which governed the court in this case is set out. The court held that an application to amend the petition so as to claim an additional number of bales of cotton was in the nature of a new demand; that the act of March 12, 1863, known as the abandoned and captured property act, which authorizes the bringing of suits of this character "at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion," was a statute of jurisdiction rather than of limitation. The following is taken from the opinion of the court delivered by the chief-justice:

"Every statute of limitation acts upon existing causes of action by prescribing a period of time within which they must be prosecuted by a suit at law and barring their prosecution after that time.

"No such statute is involved in this case, for the simple and conclusive reason that, until the passage of the act of March 12, 1863, no person whose property in the rebel States was captured by military forces of the United States or seized by the agents of the Treasury Department had, or could possibly have had, any semblance of a right to sue the United States in this or any other court for the recovery of the proceeds of the sale of such property.

"It is this act alone that conferred the right. Of course it conferred it upon those only who are designated in the act, and they can exercise the right only in such manner, at such place, and within such time as the act prescribes. Who is so designated? 'Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property.' How is the claim to be asserted? By claimant's preferring in this court his claim to the proceeds of such property. When may he prefer his claim? 'At any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion.'" (Kidd vs. The United States, 8 Court of Claims, 264.)

It was held, therefore, that while the report of the commissioner, based on the evidence, showed that the claimant would have been entitled to the proceeds of 234 bales had he claimed that amount in his original petition, that the two years within which suits of this character could be brought having expired he could not avail himself of the right by amending his petition. A careful examination of the evidence submitted by the claimant before the Court of Claims leaves no reasonable doubt as to the fact that the cotton was actually taken by the authorized forces of the United States. This taking raises a presumption that it was sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, for the Supreme Court of the United States, in affirming a number of cases of like character with that of this claimant, decided at the same term of the court and upon precisely the same character of evidence that Newman submitted in support of his claim for 245 bales, held as follows:

"The Court of Claims found as a fact that the cotton of each of these several plaintiffs contributed to and formed a part of this mass so intermingled and sold. This finding was not based upon evidence specifically tracing the property of each claimant, but upon the assumption that under the circumstances attending these collections all cotton started from the place of capture, on the way to Vicksburg or Natchez, in a manner that would naturally carry it into the mass, must be presumed to have gone there, unless it was shown to have been lost or shipped to some other point." (Raymond vs. United States, sundry cotton cases, 92 U. S. Rep., 651.)

Your committee are therefore of the opinion that the bill ought to pass, and it is so recommended.

WASHINGTON, Monday, February 3, 1873.

The court met according to adjournment.

Present, Charles D. Drake, chief-justice; Edward G. Loring, Charles C. Nott, and Samuel Milligan, judges.

Thomas Kidd, guardian of William Bell, vs. The United States.

The chief-justice read the opinion of the court and the motion to file amended petition was refused.

John H. Newman vs. The United States. 3162.—Thomas Kidd, executor of Matthew A. Bolls, vs. The United States. 3182.

Messrs. Bartley and Casey filed motions asking leave to file amended petitions in these cases.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 26, 1873.

The court met according to adjournment.

Present, Charles D. Drake, chief-justice; Charles C. Nott and Samuel Milligan, judges.

John H. Newman vs. The United States. 3162.

The motion filed April 24, 1873, to amend petition by increasing the number of bales sued for, and by changing the time assigned as the date of seizure of the cotton from July, 1864, to June, 1863, was denied as to the increase of the number of bales and allowed as to the change of date.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original records of the court.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the court this 11th day of July, 1888.

ARCHIBALD HOPKINS,
Chief Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. PLATT. Is there any explanation or reason why since 1875 up to the present time nothing has been done to recover this claim?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My impression is that this matter has been constantly presented to both Houses of Congress all the time since. While I do not remember distinctly about those facts—it has been some time since I have examined the case—my impression is that it has passed each House, or passed the House of Representatives once or twice. I am not positive, however, about that, and I do not undertake to make that statement.

Mr. PLATT. Or is there any reason why the attorney who had authority to sue for 250 bales of cotton taken, which manifestly was not the exact amount, only sued for 50 bales.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It was an error, a mere oversight, a mere mistake, a clerical mistake in bringing the suit for 50 bales instead of 250 bales of cotton. The power of attorney given to the attorney in the first instance was to bring suit for 250 bales of cotton. They proved 234 bales, and not 250, and that resulted, as I understand, from the fact that part of this cotton was in seed and the exact amount was not known to the claimant at the time he authorized his agent here to bring suit in the first instance. The claimant in this case, as I understand, was quite an old man, and died within a year or two after the close of the war, and some years elapsed after this suit was brought before his widow, who was old and poor, as I understand, and knew nothing about the facts in the case, learned what the facts were, and it was in a comparatively recent year that she ascertained what the truth was in the case, and presented her petition asking for relief.

Mr. PLATT. It does not appear, I believe, when the power of attorney was given nor when suit was brought.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The law authorizing these suits was in existence but two years. The power of attorney was given within that time, and the suit was brought within that time. The motion to amend made by the attorney himself, to make the complaint for 250 instead of for 50 bales of cotton, was not made within the two years, and was overruled by the court because it was not made within the two years for which that statute remained in force.

Mr. PLATT. In some way the case seems to have been pending in the Court of Claims for ten years before final decision.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Not at all; the decision was rendered within a reasonable length of time. It was nowhere in the neighborhood of ten years. I do not recollect the date.

Mr. PLATT. The report says:

On May 24, 1875, the court made the following order: "And it is further ordered that the engrossed and consolidated copy of the reports of the commissioner, as amended by this order filed herewith stand as the findings of fact of the court."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not remember the date on which the judgment was rendered.

Mr. PLATT. The report says:

Commissioner Eben Eveleth made the following report, which we take from a certified copy of "Consolidated copy of the reports of Commissioner Eveleth, filed May 24, 1875," page 11:

Mr. President, I do not know but that this claim is all right, but it illustrates what induced me to make some inquiry into it, and that is, that after a day which has tired Senators with the variety of business it is quite the habit to take up just at 5 o'clock, or just a few minutes before the time when we should naturally adjourn, not only large claims, but this kind of claims. While I do not know but that upon examination I should find that this claim was one that ought to be passed, I am not willing to vote for it now, and I shall ask for a division upon it if a vote is to be pressed now.

It appears certainly by the report that this claim is outlawed, that the statute of limitations runs against it. It seems to me that, in such a claim at least, we ought to have the clearest proof as to the reason why the mistake was made by the attorney, if that is the ground upon which it is put, and why it was not discovered, and everything which appeals to the equity side of the Senate to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. As I said, perhaps on a fuller examination it will appear that this claim is all right, but I am not ready to vote for it now.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. For myself, as to the intimation or the imputation conveyed in the language of the Senator from Connecticut, saying that it is quite the habit to call up claims of this kind at a late hour, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, I desire distinctly to repudiate it. So far as I am concerned I claim to be as honest in the discharge of my duties here as any other Senator. I did not call this case up, although I should not have hesitated to have done so at this hour or any other. It has gone through a committee of this Senate composed, at least in part, of gentlemen who are as reputable perhaps as the gentleman who criticises the motive in calling up the bill at this hour.

This bill has been thoroughly examined by that committee. Every solitary member of the committee was thoroughly satisfied that the claim ought to pass, and it has passed the committee unanimously and has been reported to this body, and has been on the Calendar for quite a while. It seems to me that this ought at least to make out prima facie that the bill is entitled to some sort of consideration.

I have no objection to every Senator being fully satisfied of the justice of every claim that passes here. I have no sympathy, so far as I am concerned, with the large mass of claims of this nature that come up here, and I am, I think, perhaps in many instances inclined to be too rigid as to the proof that should be required; but when the proof has been carefully examined by the committee on more occasions than one, and every member of it is entirely satisfied, so far as I am concerned I have no sort of fear that any imputation of any disreputable motive in bringing up a claim of this kind at this hour will lie against me or against any other honorable member of this body.

The investigations which are made by the Court of Claims in this class of cases require a great deal of time. Commissioners are sent by the court down to the places where these claims all originate. This case was connected with a large number of claims which came up from Mississippi, involving immense amounts of cotton that were shipped and sold by the Government of the United States, and that belonged to the owners of the cotton and never belonged to the Government. When the Court of Claims was acting under the authority conferred upon it by Congress, and sent officers to the ground for the purpose of making these investigations, and the matter was reported back, and that court has solemnly decided that this party was entitled to 234 bales of cotton, and that decision of the court was read at the Secretary's desk, I did not suppose it was necessary to recite every solitary fact that came to the consideration of the court to establish that.

When the Supreme Court of the United States had decided that the finding of this court and the report of Commissioner Eveleth, adopted by the Court of Claims as the judgment of the court, was correct, it seemed to me that that decision should be entitled to some respect even from the most distinguished members of this body, and that some sort of consideration would be given to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States indorsing and ratifying a decision of the Court of Claims.

I have no objection to the Senator taking any length of time he desires to investigate this case.

I have time after time and day after day asked the Senate to take up the Calendar and proceed with it in the morning hour, but it has been objected to by Senator after Senator. There is no chance on the face of this green earth to get up a claim for consideration—to get the consideration of this kind of business—except at a time like this, when nobody has any desire to bring up any matter of general public interest. If the Senator will use his very great influence to induce the Senate to consider the Calendar in regular order, I, for one, will object to the consideration of any claim outside of the hour set apart by the rules of the body for the consideration of claims on the Calendar.

But I submit that when we go on week after week neglecting the business on the Calendar, when we have just and honest demands for consideration at the hands of this body, claims reported unanimously by committees of this body, it certainly does not lie in the mouth of any Senator to impute wrong motives to a man who calls up one of these cases for consideration when the Senate, by its conduct, absolutely refuses to consider claims at a time when they, under the rules, ought to be considered. I am perfectly willing to have a reformation on that subject at any time. I am willing for it to-morrow, and I should be glad to see the Senate persistently refuse to have anything but the Calendar considered after it actually gets through the routine morning business until the expiration of the morning hour every day.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I really had no expectation that I should call down upon my head such a rebuke as the Senator from Arkansas has conceived it to be his duty to administer to me. I certainly had no intention of imputing anything wrong to any Senator, and the very fact that offense is taken so quickly, and, perhaps I might add, so testily, at what I said only emphasizes the intimation which I made that the Senate ought to have adjourned before calling up claims of this character.

Mr. President, it is nevertheless true that when we have had a day like this and the Senate is just about ready to adjourn, it almost always happens that a claim ranging anywhere from thirty to fifty or one hundred or two hundred thousand dollars happens to be called up just about the last moment.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he can not find a very much better reason why that fact is true than the one he intimates it is attributable to?

Mr. PLATT. I do not intimate anything.

Mr. HARRIS. When the regular business of the day has been concluded, if it ever is before the hour of adjourning, there has generally been, I will say always has been, a scramble as between Senators for consideration of one and another of the private bills on the Calendar. It is universal.

Mr. PLATT. I wish distinctly to say again that I am attributing no improper motive to anybody for calling up this bill. Only a few days ago a bill involving two hundred and sixty-nine or two hundred and seventy thousand dollars was called up just in this way at the last moment, a bill which would have passed, in my judgment, if it had been called up at any other hour of the day, and a bill which upon examination I am satisfied ought to pass, but I do not think it is wise to do business exactly in this way.

In regard to this claim, I say it may be all right. I do not wish to cast any reflection upon this claim; but I do say in a claim of this sort, where the statute of limitations has run against it and where we are asked to relieve against that statute of limitations by reason of the fact that an attorney twenty-four years ago neglected to carry out his instructions and made a mistake, we ought to have a full opportunity to examine and see whether the facts and circumstances are such as make it equitable that we should remove the bar of the statute of limitations in this case.

I am very sorry that anything I have said has seemed to imply to any one that there was any impropriety in calling the case up so far as the motive of the person calling it up was concerned.

I want to say one word, and that is this: I know that committees examine cases, that they examine them with care, that they have better opportunities for coming to a correct conclusion upon them than Senators who are not upon the committees; but it would be a very unsafe rule to adopt that every case which is reported favorably by a committee here is to pass because it has been reported favorably by a committee; and it seems to me, with all respect to the Senator from Arkansas, that he is hardly justified in suggesting that other Senators had not a right to take time to examine——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Arkansas made no such insinuation or intimation and no such statement. On the contrary, I stated I thought it was proper for every Senator to look into every case until he was satisfied about it. I simply stated that this claim had met the unanimous approval of the committee to show that it was not altogether and absolutely a barefaced fraud.

Mr. PLATT. But the Senator took me to task because I wanted a little time to examine this, and because I happened to say that I thought it was an improper time to call up such a bill.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him to say that I did not take him to task for any such purpose. I did resent, with some feeling, I admit, the imputation, as I understood it, made by the Senator that there was something or other a little bit disreputable or discreditable in taking a time when the Senate was thin and Senators were out, to call up these bills. It is quite the habit, the Senator said, to call up these things at such times. I understood him to make an imputation, and that I will resent every time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has distinctly disavowed making any such imputation. The Chair thinks, therefore, that it is not in order for the Senator from Arkansas to comment upon it, and there is danger that colloquies of this kind may degenerate into personalities which ought to be avoided.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I was simply attempting to explain what I meant or what I intended to say.

Mr. PLATT. Then it occurs to me, Mr. President, that there is no force in the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas that claims ought to pass somewhat upon the conclusions of the committee that has examined them. Perhaps the Senator from Arkansas will say that he did not make that suggestion——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will say it.

Mr. PLATT. That that was not the force of his argument. But if it was not, I can not understand what his argument was. He rehearsed before the Senate the care which the committee had taken to investigate this, their very great opportunities for investigation, and if there was not a suggestion in it that the Senate should take the conclusions of the committee without any very careful or thorough consideration of the case, then I beg his pardon. I so understood him.

Now it is true that we have to rely somewhat upon the conclusions of committees, but there is danger that we may go too far in this respect, that claims may pass here solely because they happen to be recommended by committees. Committees are not infallible. A committee may make a mistake, a committee may act upon insufficient evidence, and, taking this report, the committee seem to have acted without any evidence whatever showing why this attorney failed to carry out his instructions and bring suit for the whole two hundred and fifty bales. That evidence may have been before the committee; it may have been perfectly explained in the committee, but the committee has not deigned to inform the Senate why that was so; and when anybody desires an opportunity to examine the point which it seems to me covers this whole case and is vital to its decision, then we are somewhat taken to task.

For one, Mr. President, I propose to examine the bills which are before the Senate, and I propose to have time to do it if I can get it under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suppose, so far as interest is concerned, that I have more interest in this case than anybody else, though I have no personal interest in it. These claimants are a widow and orphans who reside in the State of Mississippi. I called the bill up in the usual way in which bills are called up on evenings of this sort.

I merely desire to say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have no disposition in the world to prevent him from giving this case a full and fair examination. I am satisfied myself that the claim is just. It was so held by the Court of Claims, so held by the committee of the House of Representatives, so held by the House of Representatives, and so held by the committee on the part of the Senate, and I simply desire to say now that if there is any motion I can make which will extend to the Senator the time he desires to examine or look into the matter thoroughly and fully, I shall be glad to make that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I can suggest a motion, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy; and

A bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 112) requesting the President of the United States to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine, according to the rules of the Washington convention of November 12, 1884, all questions touching the boundary line between the United States and Mexico where it follows the bed of the Rio Grande and Colorado Rivers; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 26, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 25, 1888.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

John G. Parkhurst, of Michigan, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Belgium, vice Lambert Tree, nominated for the mission to Russia.

POSTMASTERS.

William R. Kelley, to be postmaster at Fernandina, Nassau County, Florida, vice Columbus L. Jack, deceased.

Walter C. Newberry, to be postmaster at Chicago, Cook County, Illinois, vice S. Corning Judd, resigned.

Charles H. Tracey, to be postmaster at Anaconda, Deer Lodge County, Territory of Montana, vice Benjamin F. Mahany, resigned.

FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

Inspector-General's Department.

Capt. Henry W. Lawton, of the Fourth Cavalry, to be inspector-general with the rank of major, September 17, 1888, vice Burton, promoted.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Robert F. Coates, of Wichita, Kans., to be receiver of public moneys at Wichita, Kans., vice Samuel L. Gelbrot, resigned.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

John B. Baird, of Atlanta, Ga., to be register of the land office at Seattle, Wash., vice John Y. Ostrander, resigned.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate September 25, 1888.

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY.

Chief of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

Capt. Winfield Scott Schley, a resident of Maryland, to be Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting in the Department of the Navy, with the relative rank of commodore.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 25, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FORT WALLACE MILITARY RESERVATION, KANSAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN, to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 8310, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas."

This bill provides that a portion of this reservation which is situated in the State of Kansas shall be set apart for town-site purposes and may be entered by the corporate authorities of the adjoining city of Wallace.

The second section of the bill permits the Union Pacific Railroad Company to purchase within a limited time a certain part of the military reservation, which is particularly described, at the rate of $30 per acre.

I am informed that this privilege might by reason of a faulty description of the lands enable the railroad company to purchase at the price named property in which private parties have interests, acquired under our laws.

It is evident that the description of the land which the railroad company is allowed the option of purchasing should be exact and certain for the interest of all concerned.

Section 4 of the bill grants a certain portion of the military reservation heretofore set apart by the military authorities as a cemetery to the city of Wallace for cemetery purposes.

There should, in my opinion, be a provision that no bodies heretofore interred in this ground should be disturbed, and that when the same is no longer used as a cemetery it should revert to the Government.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, September 24, 1888.

SALES FOR OVERDUE TAXES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 10060) prescribing the times for sales, and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes was passed some time ago by both Houses, signed by their presiding officers, and sent to the President, but was afterward recalled by a concurrent resolution of the two Houses. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] now asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the House passed the bill may be reconsidered in order that certain amendments changing dates named in the bill may be inserted. The Clerk will read the amendments proposed, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

In line 14 of the printed bill strike out "September, 1888," and insert "January, 1889."

After the word "and," in line 15, insert "the first Tuesday in September;" so as to read, "the first Tuesday in September of each year thereafter."

Mr. ATKINSON. The only purpose of these amendments is to make the act of Congress operative. The bill did not reach the President before the time fixed for advertising; and therefore unless the bill be amended no advertising can be done during the present year. The proposition is now to postpone the time for advertisement from the first Tuesday of September of this year till the first Tuesday of January next.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the votes by which this bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and by which it was passed will be reconsidered; these amendments will be agreed to, and the bill as thus amended will be again passed. The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JACKSON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, indefinitely, on account of important business.

REPRINTING OF A REPORT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, asks that report No. 3210, made by that committee, be reprinted with certain exhibits which accompanied the original report, but which were not included in the first print. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William R. Dean; and

A bill (H. R. 9619) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River.

PURCHASE OF SWORDS OF GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. MANSUR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 202) to construe and determine the amount to be paid by the Secretary of War under the following act of Congress, passed at this session, namely, "An act to purchase of the widow and children of the late General James Shields certain swords."

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. KILGORE (before the reading was concluded). I call for the regular order.

Mr. MANSUR. Let me appeal to my friend from Texas——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT POINT ISABEL, TEX.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 11342) providing for the re-establishment of the light-house at Point Isabel, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROAD THROUGH MILITARY RESERVATION, PLATTSBURGH, N. Y.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11452) to construct a road from the village of Plattsburgh, N. Y., through and along the Government military reservation in said village; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. H. CAYCE.

Mr. WHEELER. I am instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to report back favorably the resolution in the case of Willian H. Cayce, claiming the right of homestead entry to certain lands; which is a privileged matter, and ask that it be printed and recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS, MICHIGAN AND INDIANA.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2176) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation bills of the following titles; which were severally ordered to be laid on the table and the accompanying reports printed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 9698) for the relief of August Cansdell, Company D, Ninth Kansas Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 6617) granting a pension to Sylvester Sharp;

A bill (H. R. 10716) granting a pension to Charles Bays;

A bill (H. R. 190) granting a pension to Johanna Trew;

A bill (H. R. 10421) for the relief of Eliza Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 10114) to pension John P. Swenson;

A bill (H. R. 10552) granting a pension to Stephen Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 3611) granting a pension to William Lutz;

A bill (H. R. 5224) granting a pension to Jacob Zannuck; and

A bill (H. R. 3823) to rerate the pension of Stephen C. Monroe.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills under the rule begins at thirty minutes past 12 o'clock.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a little bill here rectifying the record of three men who enlisted during the war, served during the entire war, but who had been sold as substitutes without their knowledge. The bill passed the House by unanimous consent some two months ago and went to the Senate, where there was a technical amendment inserted. It is now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand that the demand for the regular order has been withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think there ought to be some uniformity in regard to this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asked the House to give its consent to consider the amendments of the Senate to this bill. The Chair announced what the regular order was, and the gentleman from Texas has demanded the regular order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania myself, but think there should be some regularity; and if the regular order is withdrawn for his benefit other gentlemen on this side ought to have an equal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order has not been withdrawn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Can this request be entertained if it is not withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes the point.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not make the point myself; I only want some uniformity.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas insist upon the demand for the regular order?

Mr. KILGORE. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw it for a minute. This is a bill that has passed the House, and the amendment of the Senate is informal.

Mr. KILGORE. I will withdraw it for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine insists that if the demand is withdrawn, it must not be withdrawn for any particular person.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I insist upon the demand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has announced the regular order. The present occupant of the chair, not having been present at the last hour for consideration, will ascertain what committee is entitled to the call. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that the last call rested with the Committee on Commerce, that it had occupied one hour, and had a measure under consideration; is that correct?

Mr. CRISP. No, sir; the Committee on Commerce had occupied its two hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then call other committees in their order.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

INTERNATIONAL GEODETIC ASSOCIATION.

Mr. COTHRAN. I ask the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the Government of the United States has been invited by the Imperial German Government to become a party to the International Geodetic Association: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested and authorized to accept said invitation, and that he is hereby authorized and requested to appoint a delegate, who shall be an officer of the United States Geodetic and Coast Survey, to attend the next meeting of said International Geodetic Association, but no extra salary or additional compensation shall be paid to such by reason of such attendance.

Mr. COTHRAN. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman object to having the report read?

Mr. COTHRAN. Not at all.

The report (by Mr. COTHRAN, without the accompanying papers) was read, as follows:

[To accompany H. Res. 181.]

On the 20th of February, 1888, the President of the United States transmitted to Congress a report from the Secretary of State, relative to an invitation from the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

The object of the association is, by application of the highest order of skill in the use of scientific means, to determine as nearly as possible the exact measurement of the earth.

Apart from the matter of abstract science which the association seeks to promote, it is believed that the practical advantage to be derived from the ascertainment and determination of the location of national, State, and Territorial boundaries, our extensive coast line and the safest approaches thereto, by the most scientific and satisfactory means, thereby settling disputed questions of boundary, and effectually avoiding such in the future, as well as diminishing in great degree the perils of navigation, should induce this Government to take part in an association the invitation to which has doubtless been induced not only on account of its importance among the civilized governments of the world, but also by the excellence of its own work in this important field of scientific investigation.

These reasons might be extended, but the committee deem it unnecessary to do so.

Heartily concurring in the views presented by the honorable the Secretaries of State, Mr. Bayard, and of the Treasury, Mr. Fairchild, and by Mr. F. M. Thorn, the efficient Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, set forth in the report of the President of the United States, submitted herewith, the committee submit the accompanying joint resolution, to carry out the purposes set forth in this report, and recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I wish to make this inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina having this resolution in charge: whether under the usages of the Government the actual expenses of the commissioner appointed would be paid? I find that this provides for the appointment of a member of the Geodetic Survey, but does not provide additional compensation. Now, if he travels long distances, unless the matter of his expense for such travel is provided for in the regulations of the Department, or by existing law, there ought to be some provision embodied in this resolution to reimburse him.

Mr. COTHRAN. The resolution carries no appropriation.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I understand that; but does it provide for the payment of his traveling expenses?

Mr. HERBERT. I understand it does.

Mr. COTHRAN. Certainly they ought to be paid.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman may be very sure that it does provide for it. It would not have come in without some such provision.

Mr. BLOUNT. This only involves, as I understand it, the appointment of a delegate?

Mr. COTHRAN. That is all.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does not involve anything in the matter of surveys, or expenditures for that purpose?

Mr. COTHRAN. No; only the acceptance of the invitation.

Mr. BLOUNT. And our surveys are to be carried on independent of this resolution?

Mr. COTHRAN. They are.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman know what expenditure is involved?

Mr. COTHRAN. It involves no other expense than the acceptance of the invitation, and I presume the traveling expenses of the delegate.

Mr. McMILLIN. What nations are now members of this association?

Mr. COTHRAN. All of the European nations; but this invitation comes specially from the German Government.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand the purpose of this resolution is to authorize a representative of the Geodetic Survey to attend the international geodetic congress, and it seems to me, that if we are going on with this geodetic work it would be very well to allow one of the members of the survey to attend, the purpose being in that world's congress to as far as possible harmonize the work of geodesy, which aims to ascertain the shape of the earth. While I have opposed on this floor extravagant expenditures which in my opinion have been made and are still being made for this coast and geodetic survey, it seems to me that if work of this kind is to be carried on at all there can be no possible harm in having a representative from our survey at that congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. Work is being carried on at present in the States and Territories.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; a very great deal of work is being carried on in some of the States and Territories now by this bureau.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am very glad the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has expressed some interest in this bureau. I was very much surprised the other day at his remarks and his views upon all these scientific bureaus of the Government, and to-day it gives me pleasure to find him speaking in favor of this resolution. I favor this resolution. I favor the work done in all the scientific bureaus of the Government, and am always ready and willing to vote them appropriations, because I believe those appropriations are being expended by gentlemen of great culture, great intelligence, and great integrity, and not one dollar is lost to the advancement of this Government with all the countries of the world in scientific research. I only desire to congratulate the country that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has seen fit to approve of some one thing in connection with these scientific bureaus.

Mr. HERBERT. I accept the gentleman's compliment with all the more humility because I think I may not have deserved it. I am opposed to the Government expending so much money as it does upon science. I believe the best thing the Government could possibly do would be to abolish this geodetic work; but since we do not abolish it, we ought to do it well; and there can be no possible harm, as this bureau exists and is to exist, in having some member of it confer with the members of other associations abroad to harmonize this work.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have always esteemed the gentleman from Alabama highly as a gentleman of culture and education, and at the same time I must say that I think it comes with very poor grace for one who has been educated as he has to express sentiments against the interests of such of these Departments of the Government as are bringing our country to the front in the progress of science and making us felt everywhere throughout the civilized world.

I am very much inclined to take back what I have said; but I think so much of the gentleman, individually, that I think I will let it stand. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COTHRAN. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand, so that I may be permitted to make a statement.

Mr. COTHRAN. I will withdraw the demand until I hear the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I believe that there has been a statement generically made, but not specifically, that there is some existing law under which the expenses of the delegate would be paid. Now, there can be no question but that they should be paid, and I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Probably you had better let it go as it is. The making of additional appropriations for that bureau and magnifying its importance would be resisted; and it should be.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The amendment I desire to offer is to add to the resolution, after the words "no extra salary or additional compensation shall be paid by reason of such attendance," the words "except the actual expenses of the delegate necessarily incurred in attending said meeting of said association, to be audited and paid by the proper officer of the Treasury Department."

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him in order that I may make an explanation? I desire to say that the gentleman may be very certain that the general law authorizes the payment of the expenses of the delegates in this case. All legislation of this kind originates and necessarily must originate in these scientific bureaus; and when this bill was introduced, as a matter of course, if not prepared, it was at least suggested by some one connected with that bureau who had examined that matter. The gentleman may lay it down as a matter of fact that any bureau of this Government having a bill introduced for such a purpose as this would get into it a provision to pay expenses if such should be necessary. I know very well that the representative to the Geographical Congress some years ago had his expenses paid, and of course it is contemplated to pay the expenses of this delegate.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. There is no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. COTHRAN] has not withdrawn the demand for the previous question. Does he demand the previous question?

Mr. COTHRAN. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COTHRAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. HITT. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to call up for consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 112) requesting the President of the United States to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine, according to the rules of the Washington convention of November 12, 1884, all questions touching the boundary line between the United States and Mexico where it follows the bed of the Rio Grande and Colorado Rivers.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine, according to the rules laid down in the convention between the two countries, signed at Washington on the 12th day of November, 1884, all questions touching the boundary line between the United States and Mexico where it follows the bed of the Rio Grande and the Colorado Rivers.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is to authorize and request the President to negotiate with Mexico for the appointment of an international commission which shall determine all uncertainty and all questions in regard to our boundary where it follows the Rio Grande and Colorado Rivers. This is to be done in accordance with the rules laid down in the Washington convention of November 12, 1884.

The Rio Grande River, flowing between the United States and Mexico, is a wide, shallow stream, with a changing, uncertain channel. By the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, concluded February 2, 1848, after the war with Mexico, the boundary line from the mouth of the Rio Grande was declared to be "up the middle of that river, following the deepest channel where it has more than one." The same words, "up the middle of that river," are repeated in the treaty with Mexico of December 30, 1853.

A survey of the boundary was made under the treaty, and the actual boundary was then what was the middle of the river. Since that time it has shifted its channels so often and so far, in some cases gradually, in others abruptly and by cut-offs, that no man knows accurately where the boundary is to-day. The channel will sometimes move slowly by accretion on one side and erosion on the other. Sometimes the stream will suddenly cut a new channel, abandoning the old ones altogether, and in a single day, by a cut-off, a tract or "banco" of a hundred acres will be found to be on the other side of the river.

These causes have produced uncertainty as to the boundary, and this encourages smuggling, which is always carried on more or less on the border. When a man smuggles from a banco it is almost impossible to catch and convict him. No surveys are made nor official records kept of the time and place of cut-off changes, and no one can tell with accuracy the extent of the cut-off. The bed of the old channel is the boundary, though it may be long since dry. There are sometimes two or three old beds, and it is hard to tell where is the middle of the old bed contemplated by the treaty. At the last term of the United States district court at Brownsville, the most noted smuggling case was lost by the Government for want of that accurate knowledge that would satisfy the court. Some bancos increase by deposit; some wear away till they are entirely swept off.

Questions of ownership and of jurisdiction arose long ago under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

In 1856 Attorney-General Cushing discussed the subject with his characteristic learning and ability in an opinion dated November 11, which rests upon and reasserts the long-established principle of Roman law.

Says Mr. Cushing:

When a river is the line of arcifinious boundary between two nations, its natural channel so continues notwithstanding any changes of its course by accretion or decretion of either bank; but if the course be changed abruptly into a new bed by irruption or avulsion, then the [deserted] river-bed becomes the boundary.

In order to remove all doubt from this subject, Secretary Frelinghuysen signed a convention with Señor Romero, minister of Mexico, November 12, 1884, in which was laid down a body of rules which are in accordance with the doctrine of the civil law for determining questions concerning the dividing line, the middle of the channel of the Rio Grande and Rio Colorado—to avoid difficulties which may arise through the changes of channel to which those rivers are subject through the operation of natural forces.

But no method was there prescribed for applying the rules and the commission proposed in this joint resolution is simply designed to provide for the application of the rules laid down in the convention of 1884, by which the boundary lines between Mexico and this country can be determined and be made practically fixed, known, and useful in the administration of the law. I can not state what, if any, expenditure will be incurred by the passage of the resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman what is the rule laid down in the convention?

Mr. HITT. The rules are based on the principles of the old civil law. The first two rules laid down were: The dividing line shall forever be that described in the treaty and follow the center of the normal channel of the rivers named, notwithstanding any alterations in the banks or in the course of those rivers, provided that such alterations be effected by natural causes through the slow and gradual erosion and deposit of alluvium, and not by the abandonment of an existing river-bed and the opening of a new one.

Any other change wrought by the force of the current, whether by the cutting of a new bed or when there is more than one channel by the deepening of another channel than that which marked the boundary at the time of the survey made under the treaty, shall produce no change in the dividing line as fixed by the surveys of the international boundary commission in 1852; but the line then fixed shall continue to follow the middle of its original channel bed, even though this should "become wholly dry or be obstructed by deposits."

Other rules declared that artificial change of channel should not affect the line, nor should rights of property be disturbed by the channel changes above described.

Mr. ADAMS. Will my colleague tell me whether, according to the rules laid down by that convention, the boundary line is to be fixed, or is to be hereafter a vibrating line varying with the variations in the channel? Is it to be marked out with reference to what the channel was or is at one particular time, or is it to follow the subsequent changes in the channel?

Mr. HITT. The rules which I have just stated declare that the dividing line shall forever be that which is described in the treaty, and follow the center of the normal channel of the rivers——

Mr. ADAMS. As that normal channel shall be from time to time?

Mr. HITT. The rule applicable to changes is clearly prescribed, and that is the rule of the civil law, which is that the boundary is to follow the center of the normal channel notwithstanding any alterations in the banks or in the course of those rivers; provided that such alterations be effected by natural causes through the slow and gradual erosion and deposit of alluvium, and not by the abandonment of an existing river bed and the opening of a new one.

Mr. ADAMS. One question more. Has not the President the power to appoint this commission without a resolution of Congress?

Mr. HITT. It is deemed by the Department of State better that the authority should be given by Congress, as expense may be incurred and it concerns an international question touching so grave a subject as a boundary even though it be changed ever so little.

This convention of 1884 provided no means for applying the rules I have mentioned to given cases. It declared that the boundary as fixed in 1852 should continue in the middle of the old bed, even when it becomes dry. But who is to determine where is the middle of the old bed? When there are two or three old beds how is it to be decided which was abandoned by the river before 1852, and which since? These bancos with their uncertain boundaries afford retreats for smugglers, thieves, kidnappers, murderers, and every class of criminals, as well as bases of supplies from which to carry on their operations free from interference by either Government. Liquors, tobacco, and all kinds of dutiable merchandise are taken there and smuggled into the United States as opportunity offers. The collector at Brownsville says:

The two inspectors at Santa Maria lately had positive information of 100 gallons of mescal in the Balsa banco ready to be brought over. They watched day and night for it, but could not catch it. While they were on one side the liquor went out on the other, and was consumed at some big Christmas "bailes" (dances) about 15 miles in the country. That is one instance of smuggling known to the officers, who could not prevent it. I could give you a hundred. If these nests could be broken up, smuggling would be greatly reduced. I think the only way to do it is to make a new treaty, defining the boundary between Mexico and the United States.

The Secretary of the Treasury, upon being consulted by the Secretary of State on the question, replied:

In view of the difficulties constantly experienced in enforcing the revenue laws on the Mexican frontier, owing in a great measure to the present uncertainty as to the boundary line between the two countries, I concur in your suggestion for the appointment of an international river commission to apply the rule prescribed by the boundary convention of November 12, 1884.

Our committee has carefully considered this subject and approve the resolution.

I think it is manifest, Mr. Speaker, in view of the collection of the revenue, the prevention of crime, the maintenance of good order on the frontier, and the preservation of international harmony, that these boundary questions should be settled by a commission as soon as possible.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HITT. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. So far as I have been able to examine the joint resolution which the gentleman from Illinois has called up for consideration, it meets my approval, and I think it necessary that something should be done in the line contemplated by it. There is, however, another question, which is to some extent kindred to it, and is of very great importance to the border along the Mexican frontier, and I would like, with the permission of the gentleman, to enlarge the scope of the resolution by an amendment authorizing the President to negotiate also with the Government of Mexico for the abolition of what is known as the Zona Libre, or Free Zone.

Mr. HITT. I must say to the gentleman that the question which he proposes is a very grave and important one, and I am not authorized by the committee to accept such an amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I will ask to have the amendment read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the President is also authorized to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the abolition of the Zona Libre.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to offer this amendment; and I would like, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], to submit a few remarks upon it.

Mr. HITT. I must call the previous question. I can not yield for the amendment, as it relates to an entirely different question from that involved in this resolution.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That Zona Libre is a mere custom-house regulation.

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, no; it means a great deal more than that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mexico establishes the Zona Libre some distance back from the Rio Grande, where it is thought more convenient to have her custom-houses than right along the bank of the river.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman does not, I think, fully understand the question.

I hope the gentleman from Illinois will allow me to have read in this connection two brief statements setting forth the importance and necessity of the abolition of this Free Zone.

Mr. HITT. I do not feel justified in delaying our business during this hour. No doubt the gentleman can obtain consent to publish in the RECORD the statements to which he refers.

Mr. LANHAM. Then, with the permission of the House, I will say a few words in explanation of the statements, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, my reasons for offering this amendment are such as I think ought to attract the attention of the House and the efforts of our Government in behalf of the people who live along the Mexican border. It is the duty of the Government to employ all legitimate agencies in behalf of its citizens in every part of the country, as well as to take all necessary steps to prevent any fraudulent practices which may exist in avoiding the just collection of its revenues. Quoting from Senate Executive Document No. 130, first session Fiftieth Congress, I give the following definitions of the Zona Libre:

The Zona Libre is a narrow belt extending along the frontier from the Gulf of Mexico to Tijuana. The principal ports of first entry in it are Matamoros, Mier, Laredo, Piegras Negras, Paso del Norte, and Nogales. The estimated population is about 100,000.

* * * * * * *

The Free Zone shall extend from Matamoros to Tijuana, along the frontier of the Republic in the States of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Chihuahua, Sonora, and the Territory of Lower California, with respect to length; and as to width, 20 kilometers into the interior from the frontier line.

From the beginning of my service in this House, representing as I do a district a large portion of which is bounded by the Rio Grande River, I have had occasion to give consideration to this subject and to correspond and confer with the Secretary of State upon the matter. The existence of this Free Zone, into which goods and merchandise are imported free of duty, has been a constant source of complaint by my constituents who reside upon the border. In 1884 I received the following protest from numerous and representative citizens of El Paso, Tex.:

EL PASO, TEX., April 10, 1884.

Whereas the recent extension of the Zona Libre, or Free Zone, along the northern frontier of Mexico, extending as far west as Nogales, Ariz., opens Paso del Norte, Mexico, immediately opposite El Paso, Tex., to the free importation of all classes of merchandise, unrestricted commerce, and greatly increased opportunities for smuggling, and the utter demoralization of legitimate business; and whereas American merchants and industries will be brought into sharp and unequal competition with foreign merchants and industries wholly unprotected; and whereas values will be decreased and business paralyzed on the American side of the river, while on the Mexican side there will be a corresponding increase in business and values, the stimulation of unlawful commerce, and an organized and extensive system of smuggling far into the interior of the United States on account of the various railways extending in every direction from El Paso, Tex., and into Mexico, by reason of the many and great obstacles presented by the Rio Grande River being done away with, and believing, as we do, that such a state of things on the frontier will not only be prejudicial to our own interests, but to the interests of the country at large, and that it is of vital importance that the extension and establishment of the "Free Zone" be overthrown if possible:

Therefore, we earnestly protest as citizens of the United States against the destruction of our property and commercial interests by the Mexican Government, and believing it is in violation of the late reciprocity treaty, we very respectfully and earnestly ask our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their utmost efforts with the proper authorities of the United States to arrest this unfriendly and unwise scheme of the Mexican Government; and, failing in this, that they ask for the immediate establishment of a "Free Zone" on our own borders to the same extent as that established by Mexico. We also earnestly beg that such laws as are necessary to put in full force the late reciprocity treaty with Mexico be enacted by Congress at an early day.

At a later date I received and presented to the House and had referred to the Committee on Ways and Means the following petition, signed by many leading merchants and business men of El Paso, which distinctly sets forth their grievances, and, it seems to me, shows such a condition of affairs as to emphasize the necessity for making this subject a matter of international negotiation:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizen tax-payers of the United States, herewith most respectfully and urgently represent that the recent extension of the Free Zone by the Mexican Government along the northern frontier of Mexico, opens all the Mexican towns along said border to the importation, through the United States, of all classes of merchandise from foreign countries upon which no duty is paid either to the American or Mexican Governments. Said act creates a rendezvous where merchants from foreign countries can land their free goods, take their time and opportunity to smuggle or sell them to those who will smuggle them into the United States.

A glance at our tariff list will at once prove the great incentive to do this, and that American merchants in the American towns can not pursue a legitimate business with success in competition with those in the Free Zone.

Referring more particularly to the free port of Paso del Norte, Mexico, directly opposite El Paso, Tex., we call attention to the ample opportunity and great ease with which an extensive smuggling business can be carried on, for the reason that all classes of individuals can go there in the street-cars and in other conveyances, or on foot, day or night, purchase any article of wearing-apparel, and wear it over to the American side. As well also can merchandise upon which the greatest duty is imposed be carried over by men, pack-animals and other conveyances at various places up and down the river. The Rio Grande River is fordable the greater part of the time, and there are also bridges and boats in ample supply when the river is not fordable.

Now that railways are operating to and from all the cities of the United States, an extensive amount of smuggling can and will be carried on, and these free goods will find their way throughout our country.

Merchants from Vera Cruz and other foreign cities are now opening large stocks of foreign merchandise in convenient places in Paso del Norte for the purpose of supplying the American trade. They are advertising their advantages in our papers, and are pushing their wares into our country. This fact is fast demoralizing our trade and depreciating our property values.

Even with numerous guards, which would entail largely increased expense to the Government, we do not believe this pernicious practice could be completely and effectually suppressed, so long as the free zone exists.

All other points in Mexico along this free border, where there are railway facilities, are fast becoming harbors for smugglers, and every day's delay works a loss to the commerce of our country and revenues to the Government.

The reasons assigned for this act are admitted by the Mexican people to be that it will build up their border towns and check the growth of the American towns; that it will increase their population along the border and decrease our population, thereby strengthening their border and weakening ours.

Therefore, it can not be possible for the merchants on the American side, as well as the jobbers and manufacturers in our large cities, to compete for the growing trade of Mexico as against the jobbers and manufacturers of Europe. This is a vital question to the jobbers and manufacturers of all the cities of the United States who have been selling goods to the merchants in the American towns on the border, and to the merchants and others in Mexico, because the free goods in the free towns of Mexico, created by the Free Zone act, will prove an effectual barrier between them and the trade of Mexico.

Each day this matter is assuming greater proportions, and the longer it exists the greater the difficulty in overcoming it.

Paso del Norte is made the principal point for carrying on this business, because the many railways centering at El Paso, Tex., furnish quick and ready transportation to all portions of the United States.

The question, as we view it, is whether this act of the Mexican Government is a violation, implied or otherwise, of the existing treaty. If so, we ask our authorities to demand its suppression. If not, is it an act of injustice and unfriendliness by which our general interests are damaged sufficiently to seek at an early day a treaty of reciprocity which would effect its discontinuance and prove of mutual benefit to both countries? By no other means will our manufacturers and merchants be able to secure the large and increasing trade of Mexico. Failing in this, there is no other way for our Government to suppress it except to create a like free territory on the American border, to be continued until such time as the Mexican Government abandon this unjust and unfriendly act towards the general commercial interests of the United States.

Not to trespass further upon the time of the House, I would refer gentlemen who may feel an interest in the subject to the executive document before mentioned, where much valuable and pertinent information can be obtained. I earnestly hope the Government will adopt some methods which will result in a solution of these troubles.

Mr. HITT. I now insist upon the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HITT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HITT. I now call up for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 59.

The SPEAKER (after examining the resolution). This resolution is on the Private Calendar, and does not come within the class of business which a committee may call up during this hour. If the Committee on Foreign Affairs has no further business to present, the call will proceed.

NAVAL ACADEMY COURSE.

Mr. HERBERT (when the Committee on Naval Affairs was called). I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9674) to regulate the course at the Naval Academy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Academic Board of the Naval Academy shall on or before the 30th day of September in each year separate the first class of naval cadets into two divisions, as they may have shown special aptitude for the duties of the respective corps, in the proportion which the aggregate number of vacancies occurring in the preceding fiscal year ending on the 30th day of June in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and Marine Corps of the Navy shall bear to the number of vacancies to be supplied from the Academy occurring during the same period in the lowest grade of commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy; and the cadets so assigned to the line and Marine Corps division of the first class shall thereafter pursue a course of study arranged to fit them for service in the line of the Navy, and the cadets so assigned to the Engineer Corps division of the first class shall thereafter pursue a separate course of study arranged to fit them for service in the Engineer Corps of the Navy, and the cadets shall thereafter, and until final graduation, take rank by merit with those in the same division, according to the merit marks; and from the final graduates of the line and Marine Corps divisions appointments shall be made hereafter as it shall be necessary to fill vacancies in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and Marine Corps; and the vacancies in the lowest grades of the commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy shall be filled in like manner by appointments from the final graduates of the Engineer division: Provided, That no greater number of appointments into the said lowest grades of commissioned officers shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which shall have occurred in the same grades during the fiscal year then current; such appointments to be made from the final graduates of the year, in the order of merit as determined by the Academic Board of the Naval Academy, the assignment to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the Academic Board at the conclusion of the fiscal year then current; but nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments of such final graduates below seven in each year to the line of the Navy, and not less than two shall be appointed annually to the Engineer Corps of the Navy, nor less than one annually to the Marine Corps; and if the number of vacancies in the lowest grades aforesaid occurring in any year shall be greater than the number of final graduates of that year, the surplus vacancies shall be filled from the final graduates of following years, as they shall become available.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect when the first class shall be divided under its provisions.

Mr. HERBERT (before the reading was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I can explain this bill in less time than it will take to read it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope we shall have both the reading of the bill and the explanation.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us have the report read.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to explain this bill briefly, after which gentlemen, if they desire to do so, can oppose it.

The original bill, for which this has been reported as a substitute, provided for an increase in the number of cadets. The committee was opposed to that, and did not report in favor of it. The original bill provided also for shortening the course at the Academy. The committee was opposed to that, and did not report in favor of it. This bill provides simply that at the end of the third year the course shall be divided; and that a proper proportion of the class, those who are to be engineers will after that time take a special, while the others pursue the usual course. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this recommended by the Navy Department?

Mr. HERBERT. It is recommended by the Academic Board, by the Secretary of the Navy, and unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the bill allow the student to choose whether he will take one course or the other?

Mr. HERBERT. That is left to the decision of the board; but the board will, while consulting fitness, of course regard also, as far as may be, the wishes of the cadet.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section.

Mr. HERBERT. I will state to the gentleman that if he insists on the amendment it will defeat the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before the amendment is read I wish to ask my friend from Alabama this question: After the division in the course, will either branch be shortened below what it would be without this legislation?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; neither branch will be shortened. The sole effect of the bill is what I have stated.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wanted to make that inquiry, because if the bill had the effect of shortening in any way the course of study, the tendency would be to increase the number of cadets, which I think would be improper.

Mr. HERBERT. I stated expressly that the committee had decided against any such increase.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the gentleman's statement in that regard.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the first section the provision which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after the 4th day of March, 1889, the minimum age of admission of cadets to the Academy shall be sixteen years, and the maximum age twenty-one years.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment because from my own experience in the appointment of cadets I have been convinced that the present minimum age of admission, fourteen years, is too low, the result being that youths whose minds are too immature to enter advantageously upon the studies of the Academy are sometimes sent there and obliged afterward to leave, which necessitates the making of new appointments. Besides, this amendment will make the age of admission to the Naval Academy almost the same as the age of admission to the Military Academy, where the minimum is seventeen years and the maximum twenty-two years.

I propose by this amendment a minimum of sixteen and a maximum of twenty-one years of age. I think it is better in all respects when a youth graduates from the Naval Academy he should be in age more of a man than when entering at fourteen and graduating at eighteen. Just as at West Point, a youth grows up and develops himself physically, but he does not enter the Army before he is twenty-two years of age, and then he is a man fitted to command men. So those graduating from the Naval Academy when entering the naval service should be fitted to command men, which they are much more likely to do at twenty-one years of age than they are at eighteen years. Entering the Naval Academy at fourteen, he can not, in many instances, grasp or understand exactly what he is preparing himself for; whereas, if the period of entrance be advanced a few years, instead of entering at fourteen he enters at eighteen years of age as a maximum, I believe we will thereby have a better class of officers; and when they do graduate they will be men themselves and fitted to command men. I hope, therefore, the House will adopt the amendment. I have offered it in good faith, because I believe it is carrying out a very excellent idea, not my own entirely, as I have heard others express themselves in the same way, and I am convinced it should be adopted. I offer it to this bill where it is applicable.

Now, I will say, Mr. Speaker, so far as my amendment is concerned that it does not affect the present appointments. It does not take effect until the 5th day of March next. I understand the power to designate by members of Congress does not come until after the 4th day of March next, so that those members who are re-elected to the next Congress will be notified soon after the expiration of this Congress. Hence it does not affect any one to-day, but takes effect in the future, and I believe it will have a good effect upon the naval service to make this change in the age of those who enter the Naval Academy.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the Naval Committee have considered this question and decided against it. It has not been recommended by the academic board of the Naval Academy, and it has not been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and while the matter has been before us many times we have not been able to take a step in that direction, much less to change the age of entrance to the extent of three years.

Mr. BLOUNT. What are the reasons on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs for that action?

Mr. HERBERT. In the first place, the superintendent of the Naval Academy, Captain Sampson, who has examined the question with a great deal of care, thinks that those who have entered at say fifteen years of age have made a better record than those who have entered at an older age. While he would favor making a change in the age he would not favor such a change as this; that is, from fourteen to sixteen years.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will make it from sixteen to twenty, but my amendment is intended more in reference to the age of entrance at the Naval Academy; that is, not to leave it where it now is at fourteen, but advance it to sixteen.

Mr. HERBERT. I have the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I thought you asked me a question.

Mr. HERBERT. No, I do not. The Committee on Naval Affairs have not had an hour during this session of Congress, and there are several important bills still to be called up, and the time is passing away.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have the right to offer an amendment if it be applicable to the pending bill.

Mr. HERBERT. We have considered an amendment like this, but the committee was against it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. HERBERT. I have the floor and do not yield.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. You have offered it, and I have taken the floor in my own right.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs have recommended this unanimously.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not yield to the gentleman for any purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I presume the Naval Committee of the Senate is as capable of judging in reference to this matter as Captain Sampson or any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HERBERT. This matter is before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and they will be likely to present the matter to the House when they have come to a conclusion upon it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It has been before the Naval Committee three or four months, and nothing yet has been brought into the House by that committee on the subject.

Mr. HERBERT. I will state, while the committee has considered the question, they have not been able to agree upon it. Nevertheless, they are opposed to an amendment going as far as the one now pending, moved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not wish to stop to debate that question. We have other bills to bring up, and I hope the few minutes allotted to the committee will not be taken up by this bill.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SAVINGS OF SEAMEN.

Mr. HERBERT. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any enlisted man or appointed petty officer of the Navy may deposit his savings, in sums not less than $5, with the paymaster upon whose books his account is borne; and he shall be furnished with a deposit-book, in which the said paymaster shall note, over his signature, the amount, date, and place of such deposit. The money so deposited shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds, and shall pass to the credit of the appropriation for "pay for the Navy," and shall not be subject to forfeiture by sentence of court-martial, but shall be forfeited by desertion, and shall not be permitted to be paid until final payment on discharge, or to the heirs or representatives of a deceased sailor, and that such deposit be exempt from liability for such sailor's debts: Provided, That the Government shall be liable for the amount deposited to the person so depositing the same.

SEC. 2. That for any sums not less than $5 so deposited for the period of six months or longer, the sailor, on his final discharge, shall be paid interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

SEC. 3. That the system of deposits herein established shall be carried into execution under such regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. Unless some gentleman desires an explanation of the bill, I shall ask the previous question on its passage.

Mr. SOWDEN. What is the purport of the bill?

Mr. HERBERT. It allows sailors to deposit their savings with the paymaster.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEMPORARY HOME, DISCHARGED SEAMEN.

Mr. HERBERT. I now call up the bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy, and ask leave to consider this in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to ask whether this involves an expenditure of money.

Mr. HERBERT. It necessarily involves a small expenditure.

Mr. SOWDEN. What amount?

Mr. HERBERT. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SOWDEN. If it makes an appropriation I object.

Mr. HERBERT. But I ask to have it considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SOWDEN. If it involves any expenditure of money I object.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HERBERT. I call up the bill H. R. No. 4353, and ask its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit any person receiving the honorable discharge authorized by section 1429 of the Revised Statutes to elect a home on board of any of the United States receiving-ships, during any portion of the three months granted by law as the limit of time within which to receive the pecuniary benefit of such discharge, the men so choosing a home to be entitled to one ration per day for their keeping while furnished with such home, but not to pay, other than that authorized by section 1573 of the Revised Statutes of the United States upon re-enlistment: Provided, That the persons so furnished with a home shall be amenable to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy or other competent authority.

Mr. HERBERT. In further answer to the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will state that the only expense the bill involves is this: It provides that a sailor who has been discharged from the United States Navy and who may now under the law re-enlist within three months thereafter with continuing pay, instead of being driven during that three months to resort to sailors' boarding-houses, may have the privilege at any time within that period of having his home upon any United States receiving-vessel then in port, and drawing one ration per day.

The Secretary of the Navy has recommended the bill; the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting has recommended it, and it is believed that it will have a good effect upon the sailors by keeping them from the sailors' boarding-houses. The only possible expense, as I have said, will be the rations which will be furnished to the sailor during such part of the three months as he may occupy a home on the vessel.

Mr. SOWDEN. After hearing the statement of the gentleman from Alabama I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

APPRENTICES, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HERBERT. I now call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to furnish as a bounty to each of said apprentices after his enlistment, and when first received on board of a training-ship, an outfit of clothing not to exceed in value the sum of $45.

Mr. HERBERT. This bill also involves an appropriation. As gentlemen know, we now have a system of training boys to make sailors of them, and they are taken at from fourteen to seventeen years of age. At the present time the Government furnishes them with their rations and pays them also a small amount at the time of enlistment, which increases as they progress. The suit of clothes that is provided for the boy at enlistment is charged up against him and deducted from these wages. The full equipment, including his clothes, blankets, etc., costs from $35 to $45, which amount, being charged against the meager wages he receives, keeps him in debt for a long time.

Mr. HOLMAN. What compensation do they get?

Mr. HERBERT. I am not prepared to give the exact amount, but I think the pay commences at $8 a month and runs up to $10 or $12, and some of them become petty officers afterwards, when the pay is much larger. But the compensation is very small, and they are kept in debt for a long time. The chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting recommended the passage of this measure; the Secretary of the Navy also recommended it, and the committee, after carefully considering it, think it will encourage enlistments, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill. There are usually from three hundred to four hundred and fifty or five hundred boys in the training school.

I ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SOWDEN. What will be the expense in each case?

Mr. HERBERT. I have stated that the whole equipment of each one costs from $35 to $45, not exceeding that for each boy.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration House bills 4353 and 10652, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that they do pass.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time, and passed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 433) to provide temporary homes for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy; and

A bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the votes by which the bill were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAISH. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was absent when the Committee on Military Affairs was called, and I ask unanimous consent that we go back in the call of committees to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was necessarily and temporarily absent from the House when that committee was called, and he asks that the committee shall not lose its place on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The hour for the consideration of bills this morning has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which I send up to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], and unless that be withdrawn——

Mr. LANHAM. I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. KILGORE. I will withdraw it in the interest of my colleague.

Mr. NELSON. If it is only withdrawn for that, I object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the Speaker was in doubt as to the result.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 12.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BOUND (by request): A bill (H. R. 11506) granting a pension to Charles E. McFarland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 11507) granting a pension to J. B. Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: A bill (H. R. 11508) granting a pension to Elijah West—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: A bill (H. R. 11509) granting a pension to Clinton Allen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. J. M. ALLEN: Petition of Mrs. M. S. Kennon and Irby Bonsall, heirs of John H. Irby, for reference of their claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition of citizens of Nebraska, for the adoption of the metric system—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. DUNHAM: Petition of Richard D. Townsend and 56 others, citizens of Cook County, Illinois, for amendments to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition for a pension for Elijah West—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: A petition, numerously signed by Union soldiers of the late war, representing that during the war of the rebellion the Government, through Congressional enactments, most solemnly agreed to deal justly with those who became the defenders of the nation; that equal and exact justice demands that every soldier who is entitled to a pension for wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty should receive such pension from the date of his discharge; that by the repeal of the arrearage clause of the pension law as in force prior to July 1, 1880, an injustice was done to those who had incurred wounds or disease in the service—an injustice uncomplainingly submitted to at the time, being regarded as a temporary measure adopted to enable the Government to maintain specie payments; that the necessity for continuing this injustice has long since ceased; that in view of the affluent condition of the national Treasury the solemn contract-obligation of the Government to those who bore arms under the national flag should now be promptly fulfilled by a re-enactment of the arrears law which was in force prior to July 1, 1880—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEEL: Memorial of Choctaw Nation, to grant the right of way to the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of heirs of Thomas Gale and of heirs of Alexander Carper, of Davidson County, Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 26, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of E. R. Olderman and 29 others, the petition of S. M. McMillen and 34 others, the petition of Theo. F. Davis and 11 others, and a petition of Knights of Labor Lodge No. 562, officially signed, representing 250 members, all citizens of Washington County, Ohio, praying for certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a petition of Garfield Assembly, No. 4762, Knights of Labor, of Dallas, Iowa, numbering 78 members, praying for an amendment to the interstate-commerce law. As the subject referred to in the petition has been acted upon, and is now pending in conference between the two Houses, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of Thomas L. Farrell and 59 other citizens of Gunnison County, Colorado, praying for certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of citizens of Hill County, Texas, and a petition of citizens of Tyler County, Texas, praying for an amendment of the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3485) restoring the homestead right of Charles Weitfle, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

CONNECTICUT AND RHODE ISLAND BOUNDARY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3098) concerning the settlement of the boundary lines between Connecticut and Rhode Island. I should like to have the bill now considered, if there is no objection. In asking unanimous consent to consider the bill now, I have only to say that it is against my usual course, but this is a mere constitutional ceremony. The two States agreed upon a new demarkation of the line between them, their commissioners have laid it out, and their respective Legislatures have affirmed it, but to be valid under the Constitution it requires the assent of Congress. I therefore venture to ask that the bill may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

FLORIDA PUBLIC LAND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands I report back a resolution of the Senate passed on the 18th of April last, directing the Committee on Public Lands or a subcommittee thereof to investigate the facts concerning the alleged illegal and fraudulent conveyance of public lands in the State of Florida. The committee do not recommend any legislation. The report may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and the resolution placed on the Calendar.

COMMISSION TO PHILIP C. JOHNSON.

Mr. CHANDLER. I report from the Committee on Naval Affairs favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3011) to provide for the issue of the commission of Philip C. Johnson as a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the bill may be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Philip C. Johnson, after a long, faithful, and creditable service in the United States Navy, became entitled to promotion to the grade of rear-admiral on the 25th day of January, 1887, but died without being commissioned: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue the commission of Philip C. Johnson as a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, to be dated January 25, 1887, and to deliver the same to the widow of said Philip C. Johnson.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was this gentleman ever nominated by the President to the Senate and confirmed?

Mr. CHANDLER. He was not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then how can we create an office and fill it by law? Of course it is a mere form, but we can not make a man a rear-admiral by law, I should think, under the Constitution, if he were living. It may be we could if he were dead. I suppose the object is to give him the honor or give his widow the pay to which he would be entitled.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is hardly to give the honor to him, because he is dead, and it would not give anything to the widow. I will state the object of the bill, if the Senate will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to it. Let it go on the Calendar. I do not see any necessity for it. If the Senator will show any reason why we should be passing any such legislation as that I will not object to it; but unless there is some substantial reason given I shall object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no written report. Commodore Johnson became entitled by operation of law under existing statutes to his commission as rear-admiral subject to examination and subject to confirmation by the Senate. He became thus entitled while he was on his death-bed. He died, I think, within a week after that time, leaving a widow and two children. The widow is desirous that she may have this parchment from the Government for her sake and for the sake of her two boys. Mrs. Johnson was a South American woman, and was married by Commodore Johnson during some one of his cruises. She will think very highly of this paper if it is compatible with law and the greatness of the United States to give it to her.

The bill has no effect whatever beyond that. We have given her the highest pension which is allowed by law. She comes to the Secretary of the Navy and to Congress and says, "If there is no objection, if there is no injury to result from giving me this parchment for the benefit of myself and my children, I should like to have you give it." The committee saw no objection to giving it, and I trust that Senators will see none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to it emphatically.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the favorable report of the committee.

CRUISE OF THE CORWIN IN 1885.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, at the Government Printing Office, 5,000 copies of the report of Capt. M. A. Healy, United States revenue marine, upon the cruise of the revenue steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean in the year 1885, and its accompanying documents and illustrations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

CRUISE OF THE CORWIN IN 1884.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of the report of Capt. M. A. Healy, United States revenue marine, upon the cruise of the revenue steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean in the year 1884, and its accompanying documents and illustrations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution. There are two different reports, one for 1884 and one for 1885.

Mr. COCKRELL. The same number of each will be printed?

Mr. MANDERSON. The same number of each.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the same relative proportion of copies between the Senate and the House?

Mr. MANDERSON. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

ROGERS'S PANAMA CANAL REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth at the Government Printing Office, and including illustrations and maps, 3,000 copies of the report of Lieut. Charles C. Rogers, United States Navy, on the Panama Canal; of which number 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 copies to be distributed by the Secretary of the Navy.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3589) granting a pension to Rachel Haynie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3590) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Pike's Peak Astronomical and Meteorological Society certain lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3591) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Summers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3592) granting a pension to William Seams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 544) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the county of Grand Isle in the State of Vermont; and

A bill (S. 2616) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in compliance with the request of a concurrent resolution of Congress, the bill (H. R. 10060) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes, the House of Representatives had reconsidered and passed the same with additional amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 9674) to regulate the course at the Naval Academy.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INQUESTS UNDER NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. GEORGE. According to previous notice I desire to call up the bill (S. 1516) to provide for inquests under national authority, with a view to submit some remarks thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Mississippi is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I had hoped that I would have no occasion whilst I had a seat in this body to say anything on the sectional questions which the debates during the present session have brought to the front. It was my fixed purpose when I took my seat here that, whatever else might flow from my public service, I would so guard my conduct that when that service ended it could not be justly imputed to me that by speech or action I had in any degree contributed to sectional bitterness or retarded the return of harmony and mutual confidence between the once hostile States of the Union. In pursuance of this determination I have been silent when I was strongly tempted to speak; I have, when compelled to speak, confined my speech to legitimate and necessary defense. I have not met crimination with recrimination. I have not essayed to point out defects and errors in other sections as a cover or excuse for wrongs charged against my own. I have waited, though I admit with some impatience and chagrin at the long delay, for the coming of that period when whatever was wrong and within the power of Congress to remedy might be discussed in a calm, dispassionate, and non-partisan spirit and when truth and justice would be the sole ends of our deliberations.

I regret I can not say that that time has yet arrived, and yet an occasion has arisen when longer silence on my part would be criminal. Though I feel deeply, I shall speak without anger. I shall speak under a full sense of the great responsibilities that rest on me as an American Senator charged with the high duty of promoting the general welfare of all sections and States, and charged also with the no less high trust of meeting and repelling unjust imputations cast upon the people whose commission I hold as a member of this body.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES FORGOTTEN.

Mr. President, we live in an age of tremendous activities. Events of the utmost potency for the weal or woe of humanity crowd on each other with bewildering rapidity. So far as these are the result of the natural evolution of social, economic, and political forces the march is ordinarily without friction, or at least without dangerous convulsions.

Society in its natural and normal development rarely neglects to take steps to secure itself from the introduction of dangerous forces. This safeguard is abandoned when reforms and changes are sudden and the result merely of physical force.

In this rapid march of events, intoxicated with the splendor and magnificence of our achievements, wholly intent on the affairs of the present and its exacting demands, impelled by that spirit which has worked out the wonderful magnificence of the material advancement of our present civilization, we are apt to forget the past, its successes, its failures, its errors, its lessons, whether of glory or of shame. We cast aside the memory of the principles on which our successes are based and deny reverence to the social and political laws on which our institutions are founded.

I do not believe I can better discharge my duty to the Senate and to the country than by recalling some of the events of our history and some of the principles which lie at the foundation of our Government. They will throw more light on the subject under consideration than many are prepared now to concede.

THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES NAMED.

If there is anything fundamental in our political system, the very pith and marrow of our free institutions, it is that the people, all of them, of every State, of every locality and section, were adjudged to be capable of self-government; that is, had capacity to govern themselves and were unfitted to be governed by others, incapable from their natures, their history, their traditions, and their inherited instincts, of being made subservient to an external authority not derived from or exercised by their free consent.

It was also fundamental in forming the Constitution that the people of each State were the equals in rights, in powers, and in political capacity of the people of every other State. The Constitution was framed and based on this necessary principle. No one then suggested, no one then believed that the people of any State were incompetent to govern themselves, to manage their own affairs, to exercise all the powers and duties of local self-government as they were reserved to the States or to the people by that instrument.

It was no part of the scheme of the Constitution that there was ignorance and incapacity and want of patriotism in the people of some of the States, which required the fostering care and supervision or the forcible intervention of the people of the other States or of the United States. None of the States were invited to accept the Constitution on any idea of securing a guardianship from the wiser, purer, and more capable people of the other States. On the contrary, the people of each State which acceded to the Constitution freely granted of their own sovereignty, to a common government, certain powers to be exercised by all for the good of all.

The equal suffrage in the Senate, secured to each State against even a possible amendment of the Constitution, guarantied to each an equal voice in the enactment of every law. All were absolutely equal in the powers reserved, and equal in the exercise of the powers granted. The virtue, intelligence, and conceded capacity of each made the Constitution, and were acknowledged by its framers as essential elements of the new government, and the bases on which it rested.

THE PEOPLE WHO FRAMED THE CONSTITUTION.

The people who framed the General Government, being the people of the several States, were of a race trained in the principles and practice of free institutions. They had been tutored in free government for more than a millennium in the peninsula of Schleswig, in England, and afterwards in the colonies. They had achieved freedom for themselves. They had through long centuries cherished the principles and been accustomed to the practices of free government.

They had, at that time, but recently gained their independence won from their kinsmen in England. In this struggle all had participated, all had contributed their due share. Jealous of local self-government, they carefully defined the powers which they surrendered to the common government. Their subsequent history showed their extreme jealousy against encroachments on local autonomy.

Mr. President, such were the people who made the Constitution and with it, and under it, the Union; and such were the principles in which they laid its foundations.

SECTIONAL DIFFERENCES AND WAR.

Years passed; a difference arose about the slavery of the African race, which had its origin here by the equal fault of both sections. No power was granted by the Constitution to the Federal Government over the subject of slavery except to return fugitives to their masters. But men, consulting their consciences and their convictions of right and wrong for the sources of Federal power, and thereby finding it, thence deduced the duty to interpose. To them the wrong was patent and their duty was clear, and these being established, the power, in their judgment, existed.

I admit that the men entertaining these extreme views were few in number at first; but by incessant agitation, by that earnest and, if you please, unselfish warfare on what they regarded, on what the world regarded as a great wrong on human rights, the personal slavery of one man to another, they produced a sentiment so hostile to that institution, so general, too, in the stronger section of the Union, that it looked to and threatened the ultimate destruction of slavery by the action, direct or indirect, of the Federal Government. This was met in the other section by counter agitation for defensive purposes. The South claimed that slavery existed in nearly all the States when the Constitution was formed; that that instrument contained guaranties for its protection, and that it was solely a local domestic institution and for State action alone. For that reason the South inclined to a very strict construction of the Constitution. For a contrary reason a majority in the North insisted on a more enlarged and liberal construction of its powers, and upon the duty of Federal action against slavery to the full extent of any power which by their construction of the Constitution was found to exist.

The pride of the South, resentment against what the people regarded as an unconstitutional interference with their guarantied rights of local self-government—always a strong sentiment in the Anglo-American people—even caused a great change in the minds of the Southern people as to the rightfulness of slavery. In the beginning it was regarded as an evil, as a misfortune, as something already in existence which had better not be, but which was difficult to get rid of. But smarting under the assaults of the anti-slavery men, in excitement and exasperation this question was re-examined, and it was found, or thought to be found, that slavery was sanctioned in the Bible. The South went to the extent of insisting that slavery was not only not sinful, not an evil, but was an altogether righteous and useful and proper institution for the African race. Whilst these things were going on the Mexican war occurred, resulting in a very large acquisition of territory to the United States, out of which are now formed the Territories of New Mexico, part of Arizona, Utah, the great State of California, the State of Nevada, and a large portion of the State of Colorado. This war, it has been charged, was a war of the South's own seeking to the end of strengthening slavery. I do not admit this to be a historical truth, but it is not necessary for the purposes of the present argument to deny it.

The South had contributed more than its proportionate share of the gallant soldiers and great commanders who had won this magnificent domain, and added it to the common property of the Union.

It was proposed to exclude the Southern people from an equal participation in this property. This was felt by the South as a great wrong, and even an indignity and insult, at the hands of the common government of all. Partisan animosities became more excited, and as the North seemed to become more determined, the South became more exasperated and defiant. At this stage a President was elected on a pledge of opposition to slavery.

I admit, Mr. President, that this election of itself, and considered solely by itself, furnished no just ground for secession, nor did I then, nor do I now, think that election was the cause of it. It furnished the mere occasion for the exercise of a right which the Southern people believed they had, and which they deduced not only from the nature of the Constitution, but also from its interpretation by many of the fathers of the Republic.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as saying here or now, or in any part of this argument, that the South had just cause for secession, or that the interpretation they placed on the Constitution was correct, nor as admitting the contrary. What my own opinions are is well known to those with whom I associate, and can be known by all who have any curiosity on the subject by inquiry at the proper time and place. What I have said on slavery agitation and secession and what I shall say on them and the war which followed, I wish it to be understood as my statement, as my belief, as to the history of these transactions. I express here no judgment on them. At all events, whatever may be the true reason, the South was determined to go out of the Union and to maintain slavery, or dispose of it according to the will and judgment of each State in which it existed. The North was equally determined that the South should remain in the Union and submit to the exercise by the Federal Government of whatever powers it should deem proper to exercise in respect to slavery.

All effort at compromise failed; each side was too much in earnest, too much inflamed with the intensest passions to deliberate with calmness. On the one side was the claim of equality in all things, which was believed to be seriously menaced, and the right to withdraw from the Union for safety, and the claim to judge absolutely of the conditions necessary for safety. On the other side there was a denial of any menace and the assertion of the duty of unlimited submission and of the power to enforce it. Under these circumstances, who made the first attack, who fired the first gun is wholly immaterial; war was certain, as certain as the decrees of fate; and war came. The sound of the first gun at Sumter called a continent to arms. The old thirteen States, who by common sacrifices had won our independence, were divided in the struggle. Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia were contesting against Massachusetts, New York, and the others their right to the independence which had been won for each by the joint efforts of all.

Mr. President, I have named Virginia as one of the seceding States. If there was nothing else to give dignity and elevation to the Southern movement in 1861 it would be redeemed from the charge of want of sincerity and a patriotic devotion to duty by the action of that grand and honored State, the mother of the forest-born Demosthenes whose matchless eloquence fired the American heart to resist the tyranny of Great Britain; the mother of Washington and Jefferson, Madison and Monroe and Marshall (I omit all mention of the grand men, her sons, engaged on either side of the civil war), and of a long list of heroes and statesmen who have devoted their lives to the service of their country. She was also the generous donor to her co-States of the magnificent Northwest, out of which five great States have been created—that great State, the pride of the Union, a leader in all that pertained to the common weal, the good of the whole country, without whose unselfish co-operation the Union could not have been formed, she alone of all the States possessing the territory and resources sufficient for an empire and to guaranty safety in isolation.

This grand State, by a necessity which she deplored and through imperial policies against which she as a colony had protested, found herself encumbered with the institution of African slavery—an evil and menace which her great statesmen had vainly endeavored to remove. She saw the evil and the danger, yet she deemed that under the compact of Union it was her business, not the concern of the Union. When war was threatened, she pleaded for peace, for compromise, for settlement consistent with the honor and welfare of all the States and consistent with the Constitution. Finding all her efforts unavailing and war actually flagrant, she cast her lot with her Southern sisters. Her fair fields became the battle-grounds of the war, the camping-grounds of grand armies.

When war ended, grand in her desolation as she had been grand in power and prosperity, dismembered of one-third of her territory, she was subjected to a discipline which unsettled all the forces of society and government, destroyed enterprise, suppressed industry, and to a reconstruction of government which was both a grotesque travesty of political forces and a tragic immolation of all that government was instituted to secure. Then as now, crippled in resources, despoiled of her wealth, unable to meet the inexorable demands of her creditors, she was struggling to preserve private honor and public faith.

There never was in all human history a grander or truer Commonwealth, and none so chastened and devastated for her adherence to her faith and her principles.

THE CIVIL WAR.

But, sir, as I said, war came. It was no petty insurrection, to be put down by the civil power—by constables, and marshals, and the police—no conflict even between mere organized military forces. It was war—the mighty struggle of peoples and States under regularly-organized governments, claiming and exercising absolute sovereignty up to the common border-line of division. Each within its own lines of power had organized civil government, with all its machinery, executive, legislative, and judicial organisms; making laws, defining rights, enforcing its laws in an orderly and regular way. Beyond this line neither had power to enforce the duties of allegiance, or protect its adherents, or to punish resistance to its authority. It was public war, with all its rights and incidents, including flags of truce, military compacts between commanders, and the exchange of prisoners.

Within the Southern lines the United States treated the inhabitants as enemies, national enemies, subject to all the treatment, as to seizure of their property as prizes of war, usual among civilized nations, and this without reference to the individual sentiments of those who sided with them. This character of national enemies was extended, as in all cases of public war, to all ages and sexes, whether they were actually engaged in resistence or were incapable of it or unwilling to take up arms. With what valor, with what heroism, and with what patriotic devotion to their cause the soldiers of the Union fought, and with what manly and heroic resistence they were met, what dangers they encountered, is attested by the monuments erected to them everywhere, by the beautiful cemeteries all over the land, in which a grateful nation has placed the lifeless forms of those who fell; by the annual decoration of the graves of the dead heroes; by the manifold pensions paid to the survivors who were disabled, and by the glory accorded to all who were engaged in the struggle.

Mr. President, I do not detract from, but add to the heroism and the true glory of the Union soldier when I bear testimony to the courage and patriotism of their Southern antagonists. In this spirit I will say that the necessities of that war brought out in the Southern soldier an endurance, a self-sacrifice, a heroic fortitude, under privations and dangers in camp, on the march, and on the battle-field that have never been surpassed in all the long ages since men learned to kill each other in war.

The South was vanquished. They could not succeed against fate. To her conquerors you vote pensions, you build monuments, you award glory. I do not blame you, nor do I complain. I join you in voting the pensions and in this award of glory, for these brave men fought and triumphed over the bravest and most heroic foe that ever went down before irresistible numbers.

When the end came the South lay prostrate at the feet of the victor. There was no treaty of peace, except the honorable military capitulation which the magnanimous Grant accorded to the heroic Lee. There was no consultation, no conference, even, with the conquered as to terms, no consideration, even, of what was good for them. Whatever pleased the victor was exacted and it was yielded. By the cruel irony of fate the man whose election to the Presidency had been the occasion of secession, and who had shown magnanimity and good feeling toward the Southern people, and who had both the will and the power to give them good terms, was assassinated by a crazy enthusiast, who had never drawn his sword in defense of the South nor cast his fortunes with her.

Desolated by war, ruined by marches and countermarches of opposing armies subsisting on the land; with factories burned, homes and fields destroyed; with the flower of her young men slain in battle or disabled from wounds or disease; without commerce and almost without production, for all able-bodied men had been in the army; without agricultural implements and live-stock; without money and without credit; with her domestic and economic system overturned; with her State governments overthrown; with arrogant and pretentious intermeddling by bureau agents with the relations between her dissimilar and discordant races, the South was left to commence the world anew.

THE FIRST RECONSTRUCTION.

We knew, sir, that slavery was to be abolished, so without murmuring and as soon as the necessary forms could be observed the Southern States ratified the thirteenth amendment; we knew that would be demanded. We also knew that the substantial purpose of the war, though sometimes denied, was to abolish slavery. On this point I quote from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] in a speech made in this Chamber on April 7, 1886. He said:

> Against the race prejudice, against the deep incrusted prejudices of centuries, men who hated the face of the negro and who would not have him near them, were led into and plunged into a great war and carried it on for four years, disguise it as you please, the substantial purpose of it all being to make it true that there should not be a slave on this continent.

Having abolished slavery by the ratification of the thirteenth amendment, and also by inserting the same provision in their several State constitutions, the seceding Southern States, at the invitation of the President, and in obedience to the Constitution of the Union, sent Senators and Representatives to Congress. They chose for these places those of their sons who were most distinguished for their conservatism, and those only who had been opposed to secession.

They were refused admission. It was held, in effect, that an "indissoluble union of indestructible States" had been dissolved and the States destroyed. It was held that the old maxim of "taxation without representation is tyranny" did not apply. It was also held that indefeasible and inalienable rights, as we had always proclaimed them, were forfeited; and forfeited, too, upon the same ground that these same rights had been held forfeited in every kingly government from the time of Adam down to the present hour, namely, the apprehended or assumed treason of the people. The great fundamental principle of our free institutions, "that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," embalmed in the Declaration of Independence as a justification for three millions of people, subjects of a monarchy, in their forcible resistance to the pretensions of the British Crown and Parliament, was considered as inapplicable to eleven millions of the same people, citizens of a free Republic, and the descendants and political heirs of the men who had made that declaration and sustained it against the power of the strongest nation on earth.

As yet it had not been determined to do more than free the African slaves. Congress had, as late as July 2, 1864, passed a bill and the President (Mr. Lincoln) on the sixth day thereafter signed a proclamation, both providing for reconstruction on the basis of white citizenship only. But after the death of Mr. Lincoln Congress and the then President quarreled.

I shall not stop to inquire who was in the right—it is sufficient to state that they quarreled. From that quarrel came to the people of the South the greatest misfortune that can befall a free people—that being subject to a dominant and irresistible power, their fortunes and their destinies were subjected wholly to the chances of skillful play of politicians for party and personal advantage, and to the disposal of their ambition, their resentments, and their passions.

THE SECOND AND FINAL RECONSTRUCTION OF THE SOUTH.

A new reconstruction was determined on—the State governments were a second time overthrown. Military rule was established as the precursor and efficient promoter of a still more horrible misrule. The State governments were again reconstructed; and then under them followed those dark years of governmental pillage and official brigandage, of belligerent peace and light-fingered, furtive, peculating war, in which virtue, public or private, was treated as a crime, and personal infamy held to be no bar, but a just claim to high public station.

In the mean time a change came over the minds of the statesmen of the North in reference to African citizenship. The pretext for this change was certain laws passed by the Southern Legislatures when elected on the basis of white citizenship. These laws were harsh indeed—were in the main unnecessary and were never enforced with rigor. Yet the situation was unparalleled, the two races were nearly equal in numbers, and in some States the negroes were in a majority. They were of a servile race, and had been for all the long ages of history, first in their native land and then in this. At the close of the war, in May and June, 1865, when the crops were just planted, many of them, unused to the license of freedom, many more seduced by bad advisers, deserted the uncultivated fields and flocked to the cities and towns to get support from the Freedmen's Bureau.

The result was small crops and a threatened famine and an outlook of still smaller production in the future. So, under these conditions, the Southern whites stumbled. But, Mr. President, they did not stumble willfully or maliciously. For these harsh, unjust, and unnecessary statutes they had prototypes in the legislation of the Northern States in respect to free negroes within their respective borders. I do not mean to say, Mr. President, that because our Northern brethren, not having one colored person among them to one hundred whites, and therefore very remotely affected, if at all, by the presence of a dissimilar race, passed these laws, we of the South were justified in following their example, even in the perilous circumstances by which we were surrounded. I mean only to appeal to their sense of justice and to ask that justice to which we are entitled from having only ignorantly and under circumstances of peril and danger followed their example.

Mr. President, some years ago I made a synopsis of the statutes of most of the Northern States on this subject, which I will not detain the Senate now by reading. I may hereafter bring it to the attention of the Senate as full proof of the statement I have made.

The newly-enfranchised race had never been considered as a part of the American people, of the people who had organized the State governments, who had won their independence and had framed the Constitution of the United States. They were not so treated in the first bond of union between the States—the Articles of Confederation—which regulated the quota of troops to be furnished by each State in the war of the Revolution by the number of white inhabitants, nor by that great charter of free government, the ordinance of 1787, which, though prohibiting slavery within the Northwest Territory, provided for the return of fugitive slaves to their owners. Up to the year 1866 they had been regarded by many, perhaps by a majority, of the whites as entitled to personal freedom, as wrongly enslaved, yet by nearly all they were adjudged as unfit for American citizenship and they were excluded from naturalization.

The people of the United States, in a political sense, were white people only, mainly of the Anglo-Saxon race, to whose genius and aptitude for free government, the outgrowth of an experience of over a thousand years, we owed our free institutions. A majority of the statesmen who joined in the Declaration of Independence, and its immortal author, a majority of those who framed the Constitution, the great captain and statesman who led the armies of the States in the war for independence and presided over the convention which framed the Constitution, and then over the young and feeble republic in its inauguration, and by his patriotism and wisdom guarded its infancy through the perils of internal contending centripetal and centrifugal forces and foreign complications and enmities, and the great Chief-Justice who, as if by intuition, saw the true meaning of the Constitution and molded its powers to orderly and safe administration, were all slaveholders.

HOMOGENEITY IN RACE AS UNDERSTOOD BY OUR STATESMEN.

Mr. President, in what I have just said I am making no defense of these revolutionary sires and their transactions. To their countrymen, their descendants who, through their genius, their patriotism, their labors, and their sacrifices are now enjoying the blessings of free institutions and constitutional government, I am making no apology for these errors, these mistakes, these short-comings, or whatever else of disrepute we may please to deem them. I am simply repeating history, not making materials for it. In further repeating the events of history (now somewhat obscured) I will state that in the opinion and judgment of the fathers as to the necessity for homogeneity in the people of a free country as the groundwork of success, subsequent statesmen, our own contemporaries—statesmen illustrious for their patriotism, for their philanthropy, for their sincere and earnest and, I may add, effective opposition to African slavery—fully concurred.

The concurrence of Mr. Lincoln, as expressed in the debates with Mr. Douglas in 1858, and partially reproduced in 1882 in the discussion of the Chinese question by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] are well known. His later opinion, as expressed in his proclamation dated July 8, 1864, and the opinion of Congress at that time, all to the same effect, I have already alluded to. And coming down later, to the year 1882, only four Congresses ago, the same judgment as to the necessity of homogeneity (the same race) in a people was expressed by the most eminent Republican members of this body, and notably by Senators EDMUNDS, TELLER, and JONES of Nevada. I would be glad to quote from all of them, but I find I must be content with quoting only from the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

That Senator in his speech in this body on March 7, 1882, among other things, said:

I do not need to call the attention of Senators to that fundamental principle—

Ay, "fundamental," said that eminent Senator—of domestic government, that in order to success, that just success which produces happiness to its people, no republic can succeed that has not a homogeneous population.

He proceeded:

That was for so long a time the curse of our Southern States.

It was the want of homogeneity—that they (the Southern States) thought was mitigated and helped out by the fact that the different races occupied different positions, one dominant, the other servile. It did not accomplish it then, as they will all tell you now, Mr. President; and the one great evil there now is, not that the white man is better than the black man, or the black man better or equal to the white man, but it is that there has not yet been time, if ever there may be, that in the real and best sense of a homogeneous order in a republic these two peoples can assimilate and coalesce so as to make such a domestic State as I have been speaking of.

All this, Mr. President, is fundamental in the long reaches of historic observation everywhere. My learned friends from Massachusetts may begin with Aristotle and come down to Webster, and they will find that everywhere over that long reach of human experience that the fundamental idea of a prosperous republic must be in the homogeneity of its people.

And in another part of the same speech, in reply to the Senators from Massachusetts, he said:

I doubt whether the people of Massachusetts * * * would desire that immigration of the people of Africa to that great and noble old Commonwealth should be encouraged.

The people of Massachusetts * * * I do not think would be hungry for an irruption of a million of the inhabitants of the continent of Africa, to-day or to-morrow or next year, not because the people of Massachusetts have any hostility to the African; not because they do not desire his development, his growth, his education, every amelioration that may belong to him, but because they believe by instinct or by education that it is not good for the two races to be brought into that kind of contact in that place.

Then, after repeating that he did not believe the people of Massachusetts were "hungering," as he expressed it, for African immigration, he proceeded:

Speaking in part for the people of Vermont, I am sure it is not so with them. It is not based, I repeat, on any hostility toward Africans; it is based upon the belief that nations and races, as they have been constituted by the God of nature and by political and geographical divisions and arrangements, get on better as separate families, with their separate independence and their separate institutions than they do amalgamated together, unless their origin, their race, their tendency, their nature be such that being put together they assimilate and become one perfect homogeneous and prosperous mass.

Nor did either Senator from Massachusetts undertake, so far as I have seen, to deny the statement of the Senator from Vermont as to want of hunger on the part of the people of that State for African immigration. And again, in the same debate, replying to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], he reiterated the necessity of homogeneity in population as essential to the success of a republic, and he attributed the downfall of the Greek republics to the want of such homogeneity.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator any objection to putting in his speech the statement that my colleague [Mr. HOAR] is absent from the Senate?

Mr. GEORGE. None in the world. Is that all?

Now, Mr. President, I hope no man will accuse me of referring to these opinions of eminent Senators with the view of making any charge of inconsistency or bringing on them any reproach whatever. I do it that it may be known that the fundamental principle stated by the Senator from Vermont as essential to a free Government is announced, not as the result of the speculations of mere theorists, but rests on the universal experience "of long reaches of historic observation everywhere," all over the globe, from the days of Aristotle, over two thousand years ago, down to our own era, embracing all of known human history.

If I am required to fortify so eminent an authority, I could point to the fact that the history of the world is written in blood shed in race conflicts. The Old Testament is an everlasting and unimpeachable witness to this great truth. So is the history of Rome. That imperial city gathered under its banners the nations and peoples of the world. Their want of homogeneity first destroyed the republic, and then the empire fell to pieces, the rents being along the lines of race demarkation. Modern Europe teaches the same lesson. In Britain there is the irreconcilable and everlasting conflict between Saxon and Celt. On the Continent the aspiration of many states of the same race to be one nation and their hatred of another race, their neighbors, keep Europe armed with millions of men, to be ready for a conflict ever impending. The history of Southeastern Europe—the Balkan peninsula and Greece and Stamboul—is but a record of race animosities, race contests, race divisions, and wars. Polyglot Austria-Hungary to-day is staggering under the load of a composite nationality based on many different races. And the imperial despotism of Russia, with its 100,000,000 of people, fails to be the predominant nation of the world because of the diversity of the races in her borders.

THE BALLOT GIVEN TO THE NEGRO.

Notwithstanding these facts, Mr. President, it was deemed proper to give to the colored race suffrage and citizenship. At the same time every white man who had ever held civil office of any kind was disfranchised. The two came together, and the negro found himself suddenly in possession of a privilege—a great civic trust—denied to his late master. He had not asked for the ballot. His race nowhere in all the world, at no time in human history, had either aspirations or capacity for self-government. In his native land, in the jungles of the dark continent, he had been and was then a savage and a slave. He had been transplanted to America by force, and had been here a slave. Whatever of advancement he had made from barbarism and brutal superstition had come to him from the tuition of slavery. He had no actual experience in the duties of citizenship. He had no ancestral traditions connected with liberty, no inherited instincts or aptitudes for free government. He was without training, mental or moral, for civic trusts. In slavery he had been in the main docile and patient and even uncomplaining. As a general rule, even when opportunity was offered, he had refused to participate in the war, in which his freedom was at stake and by which it was won. His enfranchisement came to him unasked and cast on him duties and burdens for which he had neither aspirations nor capacity. He had no conception of what he was to do with it. He felt none of the inspirations of liberty. He could only mimic the voice of freedom and ape the methods of those, his leaders, who, in the name of liberty, fraternity, and equality, were driving a noble people to despair and outbreaks by plundering States and reducing millions to penury. He must need be taught. Like a child armed with an infernal machine charged with danger and death, he could not use it without destruction to himself and others. The teaching began. The lessons had no concern with his civic duties and the responsibilities of citizenship. He was taught hatred and distrust of his fellow-citizens of the white race. He was reminded of his former slavery here and made to believe that was a deprivation of a freedom enjoyed by his race in his native land.

His known inferiority, he was taught to believe, was the result of injustice and wrong perpetrated by those among whom he lived. Political co-operation with the whites was denounced as a sin, the wages of which would be a return to slavery. The property owned by the white man, he was taught, was of right his. Not only private theft and trespass on it were encouraged, but its public confiscation by onerous taxation was held out to him as a proper end of political action and of race elevation. Without the power of political organization, and without the slightest conception, even, of what civil government was, or of its functions, the negro fell under the control of political adventurers—strangers with no other interest in the State than to gather from the impoverished people the little that remained to them after the ravages of war. From these he received his induction into political science.

The freedmen were organized into secret leagues. They were forbidden to attend political discussions in which the white race participated. They were ordered not to confer with the whites in any way about that which deeply concerned both races and the good of society, of which both races were members. They received their ballots in midnight meetings of these leagues, without knowing what names were inscribed on them, and came to the polls in armed processions, crowding away the white race, and remained there a compact and defiant body till the farce of an election was over.

They were taught that to scratch the ballot put into their hands by their leaders and political masters, even to erase the name of a known thief, was a pollution of the heart for which there was no forgiveness and no cleansing in this world nor hereafter. The arson of a public building to conceal the defalcation of corrupt officials was publicly justified and accepted as a proper means of defense to a charge of embezzlement made against a partisan who led them.

In short, sir, the fountains of the great deep of human depravity were broken up and the waters of pollution and race hatred flooded the land. Society was saved from utter dissolution and anarchy only by the conservative forces of the white race, the overthrow of whose influence in affairs had been the end sought by the scheme of reconstruction.

NECESSITY FOR HOMOGENEITY IN A PEOPLE.

This conservative force might in the end have availed to educe order from chaos and to have given some security to society. But, sir, events drifted by accident or were ordained by design to prevent this. It was known then, and it is known now, all history had taught it, that a free government must rest for security and success on a homogeneous people; or, in other words, there must be one people, capable of political association, and with aspirations corresponding. Mr. Lincoln had so expressed it. The fathers of the Republic had laid its foundation on this as an essential truth; for no account had been taken in the formation of the Government of the Indians, large numbers of whom were in our territory, or of the negro except to provide for the return of those escaping from slavery. Such also had been the subsequent practice of the States and the General Government.

And such now is the recognized doctrine to be applied everywhere, save only in the Southern States.

How we acted at a recent date on the subject of Chinese exclusion I shall not discuss. My colleague has told that story; it needs no repetition from me. The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution itself recognizes two races, two peoples, in its prohibition against discrimination on account of race.

RACE DIFFERENCES INTENSIFIED BY FEDERAL ACTION.

But, sir, the white people of Mississippi had to encounter all this danger in its most aggravated form. We had not only the physical difference between the races, which Mr. Lincoln had declared "would forever forbid the two races from living together on terms of social and political equality," but, sir, we had, as I have but faintly depicted, the conditions which (seemingly under the auspices of the National Government and with its sanction, and certainly so believed by the colored race) enforced on the ignorant and unreasoning negro the duty of refusing all political fellowship and co-operation with the Southern white man. We thus had instead of one homogeneous people two distinct races with all the prejudices and mutually repellant conditions of race differences.

But we had even more than this; we had what the ignorant negro believed to be an authoritative fiat from the General Government, his emancipator and friend, his protector and guardian, that he should regard his white fellow-citizens with distrust and antagonism, not to use harsher terms. We had two distinct peoples, the most divergent in race and physical formation of all the human family, locally intermingled, yet, in all else than mere physical contact, as wide asunder as the poles—the one smarting under defeat, irritated by an enforced political association with an inferior race wholly unfit for self-government; the other ignorant, servile, in that they had always, even in their native land, been slaves, with memories of recent wrongs received from the first, and with passions inflamed by their unscrupulous leaders, and, superadded, the duty inculcated of political isolation from the white race and antagonism to it. The result was a mere contest for race supremacy. No question as to what was best for the State was made, no consultation accorded for the common good. The wisest and best of the whites made vain efforts for a better understanding with the colored race. Many, after a short trial, quit in disgust. As it was evident that the negroes were in a majority, a few of the basest and most venal of the whites joined them for plunder. Others, good men, joined the party to which they belonged in the hope that they could mold it for good. In nearly every instance their efforts met with the humiliation of utter failure with the race they joined, and utter loss of character and influence with the other; and they retreated from their position.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

An election was held for a constitutional convention, and a large majority of it was composed of characterless adventurers of both races. They spent many months in forming a constitution and drawing their salaries. They took good care to disfranchise enough of the whites to insure their own supremacy for a generation, reserving, however, the power to restore the disfranchised to political rights as a means of purchasing support for their iniquitous measures.

In order to secure proselytes they created an extraordinary and un-American test of eligibility to office—the political opinions and partisan association of the citizen. This was accomplished by excepting from the operation of the sweeping clause of disfranchisement inserted in their constitution "those"—I quote from the constitution as framed—"who aided reconstruction by voting for this convention, or who have continuously advocated this convention, and shall continuously and in good faith advocate the acts of the same." (See section 5, article 7, of the constitution as framed.)

In this way they attempted to establish an espionage over and an inquisition into the sentiments and opinions of citizens, and to control their free action, and to bribe them with a gift of what belonged to them of right, and of that which they could not be justly deprived. They established and maintained a partisan press by immense largesses from the treasury, and by providing for the publication of judicial advertisements only in newspapers that had no circulation and no other existence than such as were derived from fees thus received, and no other aim than to perpetuate misrule and official brigandage through race prejudice.

The constitution was submitted for ratification, and by some means or other—I never could satisfactorily account for it other than as the interposition of Providence—it was defeated.

Under the proclamation of General Grant and an act of Congress a new submission was had with the disfranchising clause I have described stricken out, and the constitution was ratified, and at the same time members of the Legislature, members of Congress, and all State officers were elected.

THE RECONSTRUCTED LEGISLATURE AND TAXATION.

The Legislature met, the new government was inaugurated, and then that era of crime and profligacy so abundantly shadowed forth by the proceedings of the convention set in in earnest. For up to that time the military government was some restraint. So unhappy was our condition that a military despotism was a refuge and protection against the free government which had been instituted over us, in effect free only to plunder and destroy.

Mr. President, it is impossible to give by mere words and figures to any one not personally cognizant of the condition of affairs in Mississippi at that time any adequate idea of the wrong and outrage perpetrated under the forms of law, and of what the people suffered during the six years of this infamous rule.

In the first year the State tax was increased 500 per cent., in the second 400 per cent., in the third 850 per cent., in the fourth 1,250 per cent., in the fifth 1,450 per cent., in the sixth, by a transfer from the State treasury of all the expenses of the courts and the administration of justice to the county treasuries, the increase was only 925 per cent. County levies were increased in the same, and in many instances even a greater ratio. With all this crushing taxation there was a constantly increasing deficit, and the State's indebtedness was increased during that period one hundred-fold to every dollar of debt when the State was turned over into their hands. A considerable portion of the common-school fund provided for in the constitution was diverted from education and wasted in useless and corrupt expenditures. The land scrip donated for an agricultural college was converted into money and every dollar of the money consumed in the same corrupt and wasteful administration. And for all this there was nothing to show in the way of public works except $80,000 donated to a narrow-gauge railroad company.

The salaries of all officers were largely increased. The fees of officials were not only nominally largely increased, but an ingenious and dishonest system of computing them was devised, which increased them still more enormously. The public printing was given to a political organ, and the disbursements on that account were increased more than 900 per cent. over any previous disbursement. In one year I remember, and possibly in others—I have not the figures before me—the expenditures for public printing largely exceeded the amount appropriated for common schools. The taxes collected for common schools were so manipulated that only about 30 per cent. of the amount collected from the people was really devoted to that purpose. Teachers wholly incompetent were hired and used as political agents and emissaries, school-houses were built without reference to the public needs and beyond the ability of the tax-payers, and costly furniture imported, merely to give jobs to political favorites. There was no physical object, there was no mental or moral subject, sacred or profane, which the devilish ingenuity of the rulers did not convert to purposes of plunder.

The few conservative white members of the Legislature from the white counties were utterly powerless to do good. The remainder, consisting almost universally of adventurers and strangers and unlettered negroes, felt no responsibility to the people whose rulers they were. A large part were wholly incompetent to discharge their duties, another large part recognized no duty but to enrich themselves and their friends by public plunder. A successful job was considered the highest achievement of statesmanship. Two hundred thousand acres of State land was voted to a corporation organized by the Legislature and owned and controlled by its leading members, and not one cent was ever paid for it. Three sessions of the Legislature were held in one year, in order that omitted opportunities for spoliation might be utilized. The effect of all this robbery and plunder is evident.

Six and one-half millions of acres of land, over 10,000 square miles (an area larger than Massachusetts and Rhode Island combined), were forfeited to the State for taxes levied beyond the ability of the owners to pay. This was about one-third of the lands in the State held by private owners. There was a constant and continuing decrease of about $6,000,000 per annum in the valuation of all property.

COUNTY ADMINISTRATION.

The county governments were, if possible, more corrupt and wasteful. The boards of supervisors, having unrestricted power of taxation, were in many instances composed of ignorant negroes who could not read or write. They fell under the control of the sheriffs and clerks of the counties, who used them for their corrupt purposes. Large and illegal allowances were made from the county treasuries, and these allowances were doubled in amount by the issue of county warrants at 50 per cent. discount. The members voted jobs to themselves and to increase the amount of their per diem, the sessions were prolonged beyond all necessity. Ignorant and illiterate negroes were elected sheriffs, with no power to give official bonds and no capacity for the duties of their offices, and arrangements were made with white men to give the bonds and discharge the duties of these offices. Fees and emoluments were provided for both, the real and the elected officers. Clerks were elected who utilized their recently acquired ability to write by forging county warrants and altering public records; and county warrants after they had been paid were stolen by the officials and reissued to be paid again.

THE COURTS WERE IGNORANT AND CORRUPT.

The courts ceased to be temples of justice. In some instances men were licensed as lawyers to be commissioned the next day, or the next week as judges or chancellors. The governor, at one time, in violation of a plain statute refused to send in to the Senate for confirmation the appointments for chancellors whose terms were about to expire, in order that he might keep the appointees selected in vacation under his influence and control. He undertook to dictate a decree to one of these and failed, and he then refused to send in his name for confirmation at the next session of the Senate, and thus removed him from office. In another instance he had made an appointment of a chancellor in vacation who refused bail to one of the governor's favorites charged with the murder of a leading Republican—his successful competitor for sheriff—and he removed him from office. The Legislature then enacted a law to cover the case, providing for another trial on habeas corpus, with the result that the murderer was bailed by the new judge; and leaving the State, was placed in a lucrative Federal office in this city, untried and unpunished, and so remained till removed a little over a year ago.

Justices of the peace in the black counties caught the infection and converted their offices into engines of oppression to both races. The ignorant negroes who elected them were in many instances charged with trivial and technical violations of law, and released only on payment of enormous and illegal fees. I can give no better idea of this degradation than to quote the words uttered by a lawyer of distinction, an eminent citizen, who had been before, and has been since, honored by the trust and confidence of the people of Mississippi. For a manly assertion of the rights of the bar he was threatened with imprisonment. In answer to this he said:

> Send me to jail. The court has power to do it, but its order will not inflict any personal degradation. Our prisons have become the abodes of honest men, whilst wrong and dishonor sit enthroned in our temples of justice.

DESPAIR OF THE WHITES AND THEIR EFFORTS FOR RELIEF.

The white people were in despair. Many of the best citizens left the State. The desire to leave was universal. They resorted to every means in their power to procure redress. They abandoned their party organization in order to secure a better understanding, some sort of friendly co-operation with the colored people. In 1872 they voted for Mr. Greeley, their lifelong opponent, and the lifelong friend of the colored race. In 1873 they voted for Governor Alcorn for chief magistrate of the State. He was then a member of this body, had joined the Republicans in Mississippi in the first instance, as I have always believed, with the hope that he could mold or control them for good. He is a man of wealth, talent, and political experience. He saw the drift of things and in 1873, announced himself as a candidate for governor in opposition to General Ames. He desired reformation, he wanted economy in administration, but though there was discontent and division in the Republican party, he received but few votes outside of the whites who were not Republicans.

He was badly beaten. He found out that he who would lead that party in Mississippi must go with it in all its extremes—be controlled by it instead of controlling it, must partake of its corruptions and share in its excesses. He learned also the further great truth, that in the long run public men must in the main be the outcome and reflect the sentiments, morals, tendencies, and aspirations of the men who elect them.

In the counties the white people voted for conservative Republicans wherever they could find them. In fact, there was no Democratic organization in the State. Every advance made by the great body of the whites was repelled, even spurned by the negroes. Political co-operation was found impossible except on terms of an absolute surrender of all prospects of bettering the condition of affairs.

The State went from bad to worse. The blacks, organized and partly led by a few whites, were in absolute control. Complaints of crushing taxation were met by an avowal of a purpose to load property with such burdens as to make its surrender by the owners necessary and certain.

A convention of the citizens of the State was held at the capital on the day preceding the meeting of the Legislature in January, 1875. Of this convention many Republicans were members, and a respectful petition was drawn up to the Legislature stating the condition of the country and asking for a redress of grievances.

The Legislature treated it with contempt, and the governor was reported to have denounced it as the "howlings of faction."

RACE CONFLICTS AND BLOODSHED.

There was trouble at Vicksburg—bloodshed was threatened. The sheriff was advised to summon the negroes and secure his ends by force. The governor advised this, and said, in answer to a suggestion that blood would be shed, "that the killing of twenty-five or thirty negroes would be good for the party." A conflict actually ensued, in which the whites in repelling the attack of the blacks killed more than the number of martyrs desired by the governor. An act providing for the purchase of Gatling guns and the organization of an army of blacks in time of peace was passed. A negro militia company, fully armed and equipped, with flying banners and martial music and led by a colored desperado, was actually marched 40 miles and back through one of the most populous counties in the State, with no other known object than to irritate by bravado and menace and thus to precipitate a conflict between the races. A conflict thus sought was prevented only by the utmost endeavors of the cool-headed and conservative white men of the county.

The purposed organization of negro troops was intercepted by an injunction issued by the chief-justice of the State (a Republican) restraining the drawing of the needed money from the treasury. The injunction was promptly dissolved at the end of ten days, the earliest allowable period under the law, by the chancellor, who had been appointed to succeed one who had been removed for his independence. This was foreseen, and another injunction was obtained, which could not be dissolved till after the election, and after that the money was no longer needed.

An escape was had from this condition of affairs by the election of 1875. Whatever may be said about that election, it saved the State from anarchy and society from dissolution.

NEGROES NOT VICIOUS, BUT MISLED.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to make the Senate understand something of the condition of affairs in Mississippi resulting from the rule of the colored race organized and led as I have described. I know I can not make you understand it fully as it existed.

Mr. President, I do not mean to be understood as charging that the colored race was wholly vicious, wholly bent upon the mischievous and criminal rule which I have described. Many were misled from ignorance, many were forced against their will and better judgment to join in a crusade against the whites for which they had no heart. Social and religious ostracism was the fate of those who were conservative. Their wives threatened to leave them, they were dealt with in their churches, they were charged with desertion of their color, they were threatened with violence, and in many instances were cruelly beaten. Denied social equality with the whites by an inexorable law, the ineradicable instinct of human nature, as set forth by Mr. Lincoln and then reverberated by him on every stump in Illinois, they were left as outcasts if they persisted in voting with the whites.

AFFAIRS IMPROVED.

I am glad to say that affairs have improved since the whites have been in power. Taxes have been reduced, expenditures have been cut down, better facilities for schools and better schools for both races have been furnished. My colleague's statement on this subject made in his speech a few weeks ago is full, and I adopt it. Most of the pestilent adventurers of both colors who had misled and inflamed the prejudices of the colored race have left the State, some to escape the penitentiary for felonies, some to evade suits for a restoration of the fruits of their peculations, some because they had lost their offices, the only interest they ever had in the State. The colored people have begun to learn that bad government is no benefit to them. They have also learned that a change of party ascendency did not mean their re-enslavement, a falsehood sedulously inculcated during the period I have described. They are also learning industry and frugality.

TWO DISTINCT RACES.

Still, Mr. President, there remain on the soil of Mississippi the two distinct races, made so by God; and made by the events I have described and other causes into two distinct peoples, with the same physical differences alluded to by Mr. Lincoln, and the same want of that homogeneity declared by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to be essential to a successful and permanent republic. One of these peoples are proud of their race and lineage and of their history, with inherited aptitudes and aspirations for free government. The other the reverse of this, ignorant, credulous, easily led and deceived, the facile and willing victims of whoever would inflame their prejudices or their passions. The latter is in the majority, and if voted as a race, as they were in the years I have alluded to and as seems now to be desired by Senators on this floor, would control the government of the State, and would control it now as they controlled it then.

IS THERE A REMEDY?

Mr. President, in the presence of such a danger the question arises, what is best to do?

This question has been considered with care and patience by the thinking and most conservative white people of Mississippi. No man knows how to solve or answer it. The question of the propriety of negro citizenship is no longer a matter of discussion; it is an accomplished, an irreversible fact. No Southern man thinks that the North will reverse it. We must do with it as best we can. We are educating the negro to remove his incapacity for self-government, if education can do it; but when that is accomplished there still remain the race differences, the race prejudices and antagonisms, as likely, if not more likely, to be increased than to be diminished by education. No man can tell. Whatever of good there is in the education of the negro we are seeking to get; whatever of evil may come from it we agree to risk.

Whether the experiment of negro suffrage will be a success is yet undecided. For one, I am willing, and I believe the white people of Mississippi are willing, not only to give it a fair trial but to contribute in every way to the utmost of our power to its success. The selfishness of human nature, our highest interest, demand this, for we know that however disastrous it may be to us, it will be maintained to the bitter end. Many good men have advised the selection of negroes for such civil places as they are at all competent for, in order that they might be trained for self-government. Co-operation in elections, giving each race its representatives, has been proposed, and in some instances tried with success. A more kindly feeling has grown up in business; some disposition is shown for concert and consultation in political matters. Great progress, it is hoped by some, will come from this course.

THE TWO GREAT OBSTACLES TO SUCCESS.

But there are two great obstacles in the way of success—the one primary; the other the incident and an aggravation of the other. The first is the difference in race, the want of homogeneity in the population. The second, the permanent fixing of the two races into distinct and separate peoples by outside influences and external predominant forces. The two permanently combined are insurmountable. They are combined now. Whether the first alone is an insuperable barrier to success is to be determined by the course of events, if only the presence of the latter can be eliminated. I have already discussed to some extent the former, and introduced the opinions of the great men of our own and of a past generation on this subject.

NO DESPAIR.

Mr. President, I derive no pleasure from a contemplation of these facts. They may furnish subjects of curious and serene speculation for Senators from the Northern section of this Union, but to me and mine they are pregnant with forebodings of disaster and ruin. I have said only "forebodings." I have not said that salvation was impossible in the present constitutional order. I have not allowed myself to look for safety outside of the present constitutional relations between the two races in Mississippi. A change of those relations I know to be impossible. I know, sir, that whatever of harm may come to the people of the South of both races, there will be no change, no relenting. So, sir, I have not allowed myself to relinquish all hope of having in some way and at some time a permanently safe and orderly government in the South with both races, equal in political and civil rights and equally participating in the government, though I confess the prospect for it is gloomy indeed.

I am not prepared to say that this will come; I only say that I will not give up all hope that it will ever come. Despair means anarchy, a dissolution of society and government. We dare not despair. Like the struggling pilgrim in the Slough of Despond we dare not faint or surrender hope, but must strive and press forward to the land of promise, not relaxing the striving and the strain to consider whether the long sought for haven is a reality or an illusion.

THE GROUND FOR HOPE.

But, sir, whatever there is of hope in the future lies in the contrary direction from that in which we are now tending and that recommended by Republican Senators. It can only be realized by a recurrence to another fundamental principle in our system already alluded to—the recognition of the equality of States and the capacities of the people of the several States for self-government and for a discharge of their Federal duties and responsibilities—a full return to the principle and practice of local autonomy. Sir, you must do this or you destroy your system everywhere in the Union. The necessity of homogeneity in the processes and methods of the National Government is just as fundamental, just as essential, as homogeneity in population. You can not have for any long period local autonomy in New England and national imperialism in the States of the South. There is an ever-enduring conflict in the two principles, and they can not have their birth and practice and growth in or under the same constitution. All must be one or the other. The danger is common to all.

THE SECOND OBSTACLE CONSIDERED.

I come now to consider more particularly the second obstacle to successful government in the South, namely, the perpetuation of two distinct peoples out of the two races by external influences and forces constantly operating. Now, Mr. President, want of homogeneity or sameness of race in a population may be per se nothing, the consequences which necessarily flow from it constitute the danger. These consequences are want of harmonious co-operation, antagonisms, distrusts, rivalries, contests for race supremacy, diverse aims, and repugnant and mutually repellant aspirations. I have shown, sir, that in the opinion of the most eminent Northern men, these make it impossible to have a prosperous and happy republic. Now, sir, what is the most requisite and exigent demand of wise and patriotic statesmanship in conditions presenting want of homogeneity in a people occupying the same territory and constituting one body of citizenship? The answer is plain: if nothing can be done to diminish, at all events nothing must be done to increase the natural results of race difference.

FEDERAL ACTION INTENSIFIES THE DIFFERENCES.

The action of the Government has been all along exactly the reverse of this. Having forced two races, the most diverse, into a political association of the closest character, distasteful to both, every step since taken has been to perpetuate the two non-assimilable races into two distinct and hostile peoples. Assuming, as you were bound to assume under our present Constitution, that both races separately were capable of self-government, were the proper depositories of high political trusts and civic duties, and that the two combined would constitute a people sufficiently homogeneous, sufficiently one in purpose and aims for the common good, to make a safe and happy and prosperous State, you have constantly treated the one as in helpless infancy requiring Federal guardianship and care, and the other as enemies both of the nation at large and of the State in which they live. You have sown in the minds of the one race the seeds of distrust and bitterness towards the other, and taught them a servile dependence unworthy of freemen on exterior and eccentric forces, hostile, or believed by them to be hostile, to the other race, for the discharge of interior and domestic political trusts. To the other race you have never turned your faces unless with frowns and threatenings. You have exaggerated their faults, magnified their shortcomings, mocked at their calamities, assumed and offensively asserted a pretended superiority over them, and in Congress and in the public press held them up to the contempt and invoked on them the unpitying scorn of mankind.

Mr. President, I have sometimes feared that this course of exciting and intensifying race prejudices would be persisted in for mere party purposes until the conscience of the nation shall be awakened by the sudden bursting of that cloud even now discernible, charged with memories of race contests, with convictions of mutual wrongs endured, and with the mutual desire of revenge overwhelming one portion of our country in a deluge of blood shed in internecine war. I beg, sir, that it may cease. You can not produce love and confidence by abuse and distrust; you can not by statutes and constitutions reverse the will of God, nor annul the decrees of Providence. Now, Mr. President, I have shown the situation in the Southern States, especially in Mississippi. I have shown the danger of and the excitement to conflicts between the two races. It is admitted that these conflicts come. Allusion has been made in this debate to the killing in Copiah and also at Carrollton.

I may be asked if I justify these killings, these outrages. My answer is, they are the inevitable outgrowth of the conditions I have described. My further answer is that the only standard of morals I know of in a Christian country is the Bible, the infallible revelation of the will of God, our Creator. That Book teaches if a man be smitten on the one cheek that he turn the other to the assailant; and if a robber take away one's coat that he give him his cloak also. I understand these and other teachings of that Book to condemn all irregular and illegal violence and all fraud as a redress of wrong-doing, and I accept fully this condemnation as just. But, sir, whilst this is the high standard of right presented by the divine law, and to which all men should strive to attain, what man, what community, has lived up to it? The divine law condemns murder, yet in what community is not the swift slaying of the wretch who violates the purity of woman or destroys the honor of a family condoned, if not applauded? The divine law condemns all deceit and falsehood, yet in what community is not tolerated the deceiving of a murderer and robber whereby his intended victim is saved? The divine law also commands that every human soul "be subject to the higher powers, and there is no power but of God" and "that the powers that be are ordained of God." Yet, sir, what free people have not rebelled and resisted, when they were wronged and oppressed? Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.

SOME ACTS OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Certainly, sir, the party of the majority of the committee who reported this bill have no right to cast a stone or to impute to any one unrighteousness in political methods. The divine law enjoins the sanctity of oaths, the inviolability of agreements, both public and private. Yet, with oaths to support the Constitution fresh upon their lips, they usurped power in violation of that instrument to enact the reconstruction laws and to overturn by force the constitutions and institutions of eleven States; and to make their usurpation sure and effective repealed an ancient and necessary statute authorizing a revision and annulment of their unconstitutional action by the Supreme Court. And in this way they substituted for the Constitution their passions, their own unbridled will, and their greed for power. That the results of this policy have been incorporated in the Constitution as accomplished facts, have become a part of the fundamental law, which all ought to obey, does not detract from the wrong committed in the processes by which these results were achieved.

The divine law condemns fraud and perjury; yet in 1876, rather than release their hold on power, when the people had elected to the Presidency by a majority of over a quarter of a million votes the greatest statesman who had lived in this country since Mr. Jefferson, they decreed fraud and perjury to be unimpeachable muniments of title to the highest office in the Union, called troops to the capital to overawe the people, and seated in the chair of Washington the man whom the people had rejected.

The administration thus installed was true to its birth. It rewarded every fraudulent actor, every perjurer engaged in this conspiracy. It loaded them with public honors and enriched them with the money of the people whose voice they had suppressed and whose wishes they had thwarted. In this profligate school was fostered a plunder of the Treasury by the star-route thieves, the most gigantic ever known in our history.

The same party, emboldened by this success in 1876, proceeded deliberately to win the election of 1880 by the most shameless bribery through money raised by political assessments, by the donation of a part of the public plunder of the star-route conspiracy, and by funds contributed by those who had assurances, if not (as charged by members of the party itself) express contracts, that they should receive or control appointments to the highest places in the land. To such an extent had these flagitious proceedings gone, and for such a great length of time had they not only been condoned but rewarded with success, that the political morality of the country had become so debauched, so tolerant of successful wrong and outrage, that a chief actor in them, one of the star-route conspirators, was complimented for his conduct by a public dinner and openly applauded for his crime by the man who afterwards succeeded to the Presidency by the double title of prearranged bribery and the lucky drawing of the highest prize, so felicitously denominated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] "in the lottery of assassination."

PICTURE DRAWN BY A REPUBLICAN.

But, Mr. President, lest it should be supposed that I have spoken rather from an embittered partisanship than from a true conception of the course of public events, I will present to the Senate and to the country a picture drawn by a master hand and a member of the Republican party.

This picture was drawn twelve years ago, on May 6, 1876, before many of the events I have alluded to had transpired. It was drawn by the Senator from Massachusetts, the author of the bill now under consideration, in these words:

> My own public life has been a very brief and insignificant one, extending little beyond the duration of a single term of Senatorial life. But in that brief period I have seen five judges of the high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption and maladministration; I have heard the taunt from friendliest lips that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only product of her institutions in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption.
> I have seen in the State in the Union foremost in power and wealth four judges of her court impeached for corruption and the political administration of her chief city become a disgrace and a by-word throughout the civilized world. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, now a distinguished member of this court, rise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting the youths to be educated at our great military school. When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men grown old in public office that the true way by which power should be gained in the Republic is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service, and the true end for which it should be used when gained is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. I have heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of the trusted companions of the President. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session of Forty-fourth Congress, volume 4, part 7, page 63.)

These brave, manly words of burning eloquence, worthy of the great Cato, who fell in his resistance to the corruptions of Rome and the usurpations of Cæsar, were spoken in the vain effort to induce this body, then sitting as a court of impeachment, to convict a great official of high crimes and misdemeanors. He was acquitted on a technicality, and thus a precedent was made for the acquittal, on another technicality and by the statute of limitations, of another great criminal who, whilst a Senator on this floor, dishonored his high place by selling his influence to carry out a job for the plunder of the Treasury. And if the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts were speaking to-day under the same inspiration of virtuous indignation at great crimes committed by his party he could with equal truth say that he had seen the public service so debased and corrupted that a widespread belief existed that the last administration abused its great trusts by making contracts through which the enormous profit of 20 per cent. per month was given to its favorites, and that the trusted companion and partner of a great chieftain, once President, traded on this conviction with the result of obtaining millions of money.

The great significance of these transactions is not that this great soldier had or had not a guilty participation in them. I acquit him fully of such guilt and of any ground for suspicion of guilt. My point is that the course of events had been such that the shrewdest business men in the greatest commercial city in the Union believed and acted on this belief (by investing millions of money) that he and the administration were capable of engaging and were actually engaged in them. It is a no less significant fact that the national convention of a great party showed such disregard and contempt of public opinion that it nominated in 1884 a man for the highest office under the Constitution whom a large number of its ablest and purest members charged with the gravest and most scandalous maladministration in a high office.

PICTURE DRAWN BY MR. TILDEN.

Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments more on this subject. The great statesman who up to this time has the unparalleled distinction of being the only man elected to the great office of President who was not permitted to discharge its duties (may he also be the last!) in his letter of the 10th of June, 1880, declining the unanimous nomination then about to be tendered by his party for re-election, said:

> Twenty years of continuous maladministration under the demoralizing influences of intestine war, and of bad finance, have infected the whole governmental system of the United States with the cancerous growth of false constructions and corrupt practices. Powerful classes have acquired pecuniary interest in official abuses, and the moral standards of the people have been impaired.

And shrinking, on account of declining physical strength and advancing years from undertaking the work of reform, he said:

> To redress these evils is a work of great difficulty and labor, and can not be accomplished without the most energetic and efficient personal action of the Chief Executive of the Republic.

Mr. President, I take no pleasure, but rather humiliation and shame, from the contemplation of these things; but they are a part of the history of the country, part of the acts of the political party which has arraigned the people of Mississippi for acts done by a few individuals in passion, under great provocation, the result of madness and frenzy caused by conditions created by that party itself, and which would be considered intolerable in any free country. I will not allege that this outcry, now made against offenses committed by an inconsiderable number of men, is all false and hollow; but I trust I may be pardoned for saying that some part of it might be, with great public benefit, directed against greater crimes, greater outrages committed by the most conspicuous men in the country.

MISSISSIPPI CONDEMNED TO ILLITERATE SUFFRAGE BY CONGRESS.

Mr. President, the chairman of the committee which investigated the troubles in Copiah County [Mr. HOAR] asked one, if not more, of the witnesses, in substance, if it would not have been better if the constitution of Mississippi had, whilst depriving no man then possessed of it of the right of suffrage, prescribed an educational qualification for voters. The answer of the witness stated truly that the white people of Mississippi had but little to do with framing that constitution.

Treating that question, as I think it was intended, as suggesting that the admitted evils of ignorant suffrage ought to be corrected by a constitutional amendment, and as insinuating a fault in the white people of Mississippi for their failure to make such amendment, I beg leave to say this in further reply:

In the first place, as stated by the witness, the white people of Mississippi were not consulted in forming that constitution. They had no potential voice in determining what should be its provisions. So far from being able to prevent the extension of suffrage to the illiterate and propertyless negro, they were unable to prevent the convention from inserting a provision disfranchising large numbers of the most intelligent and conservative of their own race, and as I have shown, for more than six years thereafter they had no influence or control whatever in the government. If the object of the question be further to suggest that that exclusion should be adopted now (and as to that I am in doubt), I say that it is hazardous and difficult, if not impossible. The constitution was formed under the reconstruction laws and conferred the right of suffrage on all male citizens twenty-one years old, resident in the State six months and in the county one month. The constitution also prohibited forever the affixing of either a property or educational qualification to suffrage.

With these provisions in the constitution it was submitted to Congress for approval, and in the act passed in February, 1870, admitting the State to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union, it was declared to be upon a fundamental condition as expressed in these words:

> That the constitution of Mississippi shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote under the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for crimes as are now felonies at common law, * * * provided, that any alteration of said constitution propsective in its effects may be made in regard to the time and place of the residence of the voters.

So, sir, it is seen that the right of the State to representation in Congress, secured to her by the Constitution equally with all the other States, was made dependent upon her retention of illiterate and pauper suffrage. Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, condemning as unsafe and dangerous, one of them illiterate suffrage, another pauper suffrage, and the third both pauper and illiterate suffrage, united with the other Northern States in passing an act fixing by its express terms to all eternity on Mississippi both illiterate and pauper suffrage. We are condemned by the action of our accusers to an everlasting heritage of a government based on heterogeneous races and an illiterate suffrage, both of which are deliberately adjudged to be unsafe and dangerous in New England.

Mr. President, it is a significant fact that what is considered as not only harmless, not only as not unrepublican, but even as a necessary means of preserving republican government in those States should be denounced as the greatest of all crimes against liberty and republican government if committed in the South.

DISFRANCHISEMENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

By the constitution of Massachusetts, paupers, persons under guardianship, persons who have not paid all State and county taxes assessed against them within two years preceding the election are excluded from voting. And by article 20, adopted in 1857, all persons are excluded from voting or holding office who can not read the Constitution in the English language and write their names, except such as are prevented by physical disability from complying with these requisitions, and excepting also those then entitled to vote and those over sixty years of age when the article was adopted. And so strong is the idea that payment of taxes is a necessary qualification for the exercise of political power that representation in the Legislature is apportioned, not according to population, but according to the number of taxable polls in each town.

DISFRANCHISEMENT IN RHODE ISLAND.

By the constitution of Rhode Island no naturalized citizen is allowed to vote unless he be the owner of freehold lands worth at least $134, and, as I shall show hereafter, he must under the surroundings be worth a great deal more. No native-born citizen is allowed to vote unless he pays taxes to the amount of $1. He is allowed to purchase this great privilege if his taxes do not amount to $1 by voluntarily contributing the deficit to the public treasury. And no one, native or foreign, can vote on any proposition to impose a tax or to expend money in any town or city unless he shall, within the preceding year, have paid a tax assessed on property owned by him to the value of $134 at least.

DISFRANCHISEMENT IN CONNECTICUT.

Under an amendment to the constitution of Connecticut, made in 1845, "good character" was a requisite for the privilege of voting. In 1855 there was superadded, as a qualification for suffrage, the "ability to read any article of the constitution or any section of the statutes of the State."

COMMENTS ON DISFRANCHISEMENT.

The people of Massachusetts and Connecticut, the white people of those progressive, enlightened, and prosperous Commonwealths, acting on the most momentous of political subjects, the rightful and safe depository of political power, have deliberately and in the most solemn manner determined, and fixed their determination in their organic law, that no man of any race who can not read the Constitution and laws in the English language can safely be trusted with the right to vote. They have done this, too, in communities the most enlightened and conservative, where there are but few who do not possess this qualification and who, if allowed to vote, would but imperceptibly influence the result. And yet these same States not only concurred in but urged that in Mississippi and the other Southern States the right to vote and hold office should be possessed by ignorant negroes for all time to come, and that the organic law of the State should be framed by them. And they now insist that political power vested in persons who would not be allowed to vote in their borders is not only safe but absolutely beneficial in the South, even where they comprise the majority of the people.

Mr. President, Massachusetts and Connecticut have safe, conservative, progressive, order and property preserving governments. They are peopled by a race which above all others possess the greatest capacity and the fullest aptitude for free government. Responsibility and accountability of public officials are everywhere enforced within their limits. Enjoying these great blessings under constitutions which forbid illiterate and ignorant suffrage as destructive of good government, and having also a homogeneous population, with no race disturbances, no race conflicts, no race antagonisms, they are shocked when they see in other communities, in sister States, the reverse of all this, resulting from an ignorant and servile suffrage, which they, rejecting for themselves as the worst of all political evils, have imposed on other States to degrade and destroy them. And Rhode Island, little only in her territory, great in all things else, is equally shocked when she sees irritation and disorder coming from waste and plunder in State and municipal administration in Mississippi, produced by a class which she has carefully excluded from political power in her own borders, whilst she at the same time concurs in enforcing their absolute supremacy in Mississippi.

Mr. President, it is threatened that for alleged irregular and unlawful action on the part of a few men in the South there shall be a curtailment of our representation in the other House. I shall not discuss now the constitutionality of such action. I will merely state that when opportunity for such discussion shall come it can be shown that such diminution of representation can only constitutionally come through disfranchisement by State action. I refer to the civil rights cases, 109 United States Reports, for support of that position. I now notice that threat, to show only that this disfranchisement of the Southern States comes with an ill grace from New England. I have alluded to the qualification of voters prescribed by Rhode Island. A little inquiry into the facts will show that disfranchisement there is of no small proportions. By the last census the total population of that State was 276,531. Of these 73,993, or nearly one-third, were foreign born. I have not learned exactly the number of male persons twenty-one years old of each class in the State. But taking note of the fact that of the persons engaged in all occupations in the State only 75,404 were native and 41,575 were foreign born, the latter being largely over one-half of the former, we may safely conclude that in proportion to the total number of each class the foreign male adults are greater than that of the natives. So we may safely assume that the foreign male adults are at least one-third of the others. We thus see what a large number of persons must have the freehold qualification of $134 in order to vote.

How difficult it is to have this qualification in Rhode Island is evident when we consider that of all Heaven's blessings land is the scarcest in Rhode Island. Of agricultural improved lands there are 298,486 acres. These are assessed at $25,852,079 or at $86.61 per acre. The census writer estimates this value at only 60 per cent. of the true value, which must make the average price per acre about $150, so that of agricultural lands $134 would not purchase one acre even if a proprietor would, for the average price, disfigure his farm by selling so small a quantity. The average size of farms in Rhode Island is 48 acres. It is fair to presume that a farm of the average lands would not be profitable if of less than one-half this size, say 24 acres. This farm at the average price would cost about $3,500, which would be the smallest amount to be invested in a farm to make it profitable and desirable. What poor men can not have profitably they can not have at all. When we add the necessary live-stock and agricultural implements we will see that no less than $4,000 will be necessary to be invested in the smallest allowable farm of average lands. So that so far as farm lands are concerned we see that it requires a very large sum to enable a poor man or a moderately well-to-do man of foreign birth to be a voter. How few of such are farmers and planters, even including renters and lessees, is seen by table 34, page 844, volume 7 of the census, where the number is stated at 658. Probably not half of these are freeholders. So it is seen how few citizens of foreign birth can vote in Rhode Island as freeholders in agricultural lands.

If we go to the towns and cities we find the prospect still more dismal for the foreign-born citizen. Of this urban population the number in Rhode Island is 235,441 out of a total of 276,531, or about 85 per cent. of the whole. The whole value of real estate as stated in the census is $400,000,000, which after deducting $43,000,000 for agricultural land, would leave $357,000,000 as the value of urban property. This indicates such high values for this property that $134 would not purchase land enough to enable a man with a small family to stand on. We may, I think, Mr. President, conclude that the foreign-born citizens of Rhode Island are practically nearly all disfranchised. If we turn to the native-born citizens, the prospect is also gloomy. By the census of 1880 there were in Rhode Island 76,898 males over twenty-one years of age. Without estimating for any increase, only 42.6 per cent. of males over 21 voted in 1884 for President—the lowest percentage of any State in the Union except Nevada.

The census tables show that the population of Rhode Island increased at the rate of 27.2 per cent. from 1870 to 1880—2.26 per cent. per annum. With a like increase continued in the present decade there would have been 89,000 voters over twenty-one years of age in 1887. Yet only 33,284 voted for Governor in 1887, or about 37 per cent. In 1886 there were cast for members of Congress in that State only 22,326, or about 25 per cent, and in 1882 there were cast only 10,207 votes. Bad as this is for State and national elections, we may expect to find it worse when we come to municipal affairs in appropriations of money, for in these even the native-born citizen must pay taxes on $134 worth of property before he can vote, whilst this restriction does not apply to State and national elections. Within the last year there has been some relaxation of these restrictions, the extent of which I know not.

Let us look at Massachusetts—the model commonwealth—where, judging from what we sometimes hear, we might suppose that it was the principal duty of all good men to persuade all other men to go to the polls and vote just as they pleased and to furnish them the means to do so. Yet in that great, intelligent, and patriotic State where the voters are supposed not only to take an interest in their own political affairs, but are wide awake to assume a much-needed guardianship in these matters over less fortunate States, we find that by the census of 1880 there were 502,648 males over twenty-one years of age, and that in 1884 only 60.3 per cent. voted for President. And this, too, when there were four tickets in the field, at the head of one of which was a gifted and popular and favorite son of the State, General Butler. Within a small fraction of 200,000 did not vote, very nearly as many as there were all told of voters in Mississippi or in South Carolina or in Louisiana, more than there were voters in Arkansas, three times as many as were voters in Florida.

Only once in the last five decades, namely, from 1860 to 1870, including the war, has the increase of population in Massachusetts been less than 20 per cent. for a decade. From 1870 to 1880 it was 22.3 per cent. At this rate the number of males over twenty-one in Massachusetts would be, in 1884, 539,843, and yet of these only 303,363 voted, leaving 236,480 who either could not vote or would not vote.

By the same method of calculation we find that in Connecticut over 50,000 males over twenty-one years of age did not vote in the Presidential election of 1884, which is nearly 20,000 more than all the voters in the State of Nevada, even if we include 5,622 Chinese and Indians, who are not voters.

Now, Mr. President, I have been unable to ascertain how many of these men, not voting, were prevented by the disfranchising clauses of the constitutions of these States. I have not been able to ascertain how many in Rhode Island did not own the property required, or did not pay the taxes necessary to secure the right to vote; nor how many in Connecticut were adjudged not to be of good character, or incapable of reading the constitution and laws of the State; nor how many in Massachusetts did not pay taxes, or could not read the State constitution and write. Certain it is that these disfranchising clauses exist in these constitutions, and certain it is, also, that the large number of men in these States I have mentioned did not vote at the elections named.

But, sir, in the face of these facts we do not find the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] or the Senators from Massachusetts or any other Republican Senator making complaint and proposing to reduce the representation from these States in the other House and in the Electoral College. These States have not only not lost by these disfranchisements—as a loss was required by the fourteenth amendment—but it seems they have been carefully rewarded for them by an unconstitutional increase of their representation beyond what they are justly entitled to. Counting all the disfranchised in Massachusetts as entitled to representation we find that that State now has representation in the other House and in the Electoral College for a population greater by 39,849 than she actually has; and Rhode Island for 29,083 more, whilst Mississippi has 68,220 citizens for whom she has no representation at all. Rhode Island has 2 votes in the Senate and 2 in the House and 4 in the Electoral College on a vote cast in 1884 of 32,771, or 1 vote in both Houses and in the College for every 8,193 votes, whilst Mississippi has 1 for every 13,335 votes cast. Nor is Rhode Island alone in the exercise of political power disproportionate to the number of actual voters. The Commonwealth of Vermont furnishes some valuable instruction on this point.

This model commonwealth was not one of the original thirteen States joining in the Declaration of Independence; nor was she one whose sovereignty and independence were acknowledged, at the end of the war by Great Britain. Her territory and sovereignty over it were claimed by New Hampshire, New York, and Massachusetts. Out of this controversy Vermont, though, as the people admitted when they formed their Constitution in 1777, had belonged of right to New Hampshire, managed to secure for herself a separate and independent existence. What influence this accident of hers may have had on her history it is needless to inquire.

True it is, however, that this intelligent and progressive State has never been and is not now behind any of her sister States in devising and advocating measures and policies, which, if only beneficial to herself, she cares little that they are destructive to other States.

As recent as 1882, through one of her Senators, she plead for homogeneity in the people of a State as necessary for a just success in domestic government, and used her great influence and power to exclude the Chinese from all the States as a menace to their happiness and welfare, declaring at the same time her want of hunger for the presence of the African in her own borders. Yet we find Vermont now here ready to immolate Mississippi and the other Southern States because they have not been kept where Vermont helped to place them, and has striven ever since to keep them, under the domination of a race whose presence in her own borders she does not covet, she will not have.

Vermont joins in the cry that black men do not vote freely in the South, and complains that political power is unduly and disproportionately exercised by the white men of the South. Yet we see from some cause or other that the intelligent, prosperous, and patriotic people of that State, whilst thus deeply concerned about the absence from the polls in other States of persons entitled by law to vote, and assuming that such absence can only come from improper means being used to secure it, are themselves not addicted to a very general attendance at elections.

In 1884, out of 95,621 persons qualified to vote, as shown by the census of 1880, only 59,382, or 61.1 per cent., voted; nearly one-half remained away from the polls, notwithstanding two favorite sons of New England were candidates. So that in the electoral college of that year Vermont had 1 vote for 12,797 votes, whilst Mississippi had 1 in that college, for every 13,335, and Virginia 1 for every 23,760, and West Virginia 1 for every 22,026.

Nevada gave for President in 1884 12,797 votes, and has 3 votes in the electoral college, or 1 electoral vote for every 4,266 popular votes cast. Nevada is Republican, casts 3 Republican votes for President, has two Senators—as many as New York—and one Representative; yet, sir, I have heard no complaint that she has undue political power, either in Congress or in the electoral college.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer possibly than I ought to have done, and yet there is much that I have left unsaid that would throw light on the important questions I have discussed. I see now, and I have seen for a long time, that the fortunes, the happiness, the welfare of the people of Mississippi of both races weigh nothing in the scale against the success of a political party. I have endeavored, as fairly as I could, to present such considerations as seemed likely to be weighed by the thoughtful and patriotic men of the whole country.

If the people of the North have determined or shall determine that the South after being subjugated by arms shall remain forever a palsied and withered arm of the Republic, cut off from progress and advancement, condemned to an eternal disturbance by outside and hostile influences operating on an ignorant, credulous, and incapable race, which they themselves reject, it is possible that they may achieve success, but it is probable they may fail. But, however this may be, whatever fate may await us in the future, it is my duty, it is the duty of the white people of the South, to oppose to this determination all the constitutional resistance in our power, and to strive to secure whatever there may be of good in the hard conditions which may be imposed on us.

For myself I declare I have no other aspiration, no other wish than to contribute both in my private and public action all in my power to the progress and welfare of every section and every part of the Union. That I earnestly desire my own State and my own section to partake of this progress and enjoy this welfare is true. I will never surrender the hope that this participation will be accorded by the people of the North so long as the Constitution of our fathers shall be recognized as the supreme law of the land. At all events, sir, the people of Mississippi mean—the white people of Mississippi mean—to carry on the struggle for the preservation of their civilization, for their own safety and welfare, for their just and rightful equality in the rights, privileges, and advantages of that freedom and independence which were won by our fathers for themselves and their posterity forever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill called up on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi will resume its place on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 1938) to reduce the Fort Lowell military reservation in Arizona; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2519) to make enlisted men of the Signal Corps responsible for public property; and Joint resolution (S. R. 10) relating to the inclosure of certain points of especial interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to continue the provisions of existing law providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 9674) to regulate the course at the Naval Academy was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 1938) to reduce the Fort Lowell military reservation in Arizona was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TAX SALES OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 10060) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes, upon its return by the President and reconsideration by the House.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, on page 1, lines 11 and 12, to strike out the words "September, 1888," and insert the words "January, 1889," and on page 1, line 12, after the word "and," to insert the words "the first Tuesday in September."

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

COL. DANIEL M'CLURE.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask the Senator from Virginia to give way for a moment that I may make a request.

Mr. DANIEL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. HAMPTON. On the 13th of August I reported from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 401) for the relief of Col. Daniel McClure. I ask leave to withdraw the original report and substitute another. The committee have directed me to make some alterations in the report. I do not wish to withdraw the bill, but simply to substitute another report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original report submitted will be withdrawn, with the consent of the Senate, and the report now sent to the desk by the Senator from South Carolina will be substituted.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asked for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNES, Mr. SAYERS, and Mr. MCCOMAS as managers at the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the deficiency bill be laid before the Senate at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

A subsequent message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed Mr. RYAN as one of the managers on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes, in place of Mr. MCCOMAS.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit some remarks upon the reference of the President's message to the Committee on Finance, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate if there be no objection, and the Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the issue now joined between the Democratic party on the one side and the Republican party upon the other is not an issue between free-trade and protection, nor is it an issue against the manufacturing industries of the country.

It is simply an issue propounded by the people through their Democratic spokesmen for the release of a surplus of unneeded money in the Treasury, now amounting to $130,000,000; for the relief of taxpayers from excessive and unneeded taxation; for the removal of incumbrances to manufacturing industry by furnishing cheaper raw materials for manufacture; for the lifting from commerce and navigation of galling restrictions; for the supply to the people of cheaper clothing and cheaper food, and for unbinding the cords that tie the hands of labor. It is an issue in brief for and in behalf of labor in many fields of enterprise, and against monopoly and overtaxation in many branches of oppression.

THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF RATES FIXED BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND UNCHANGED BY THE MILLS BILL.

Here, Mr. President, let me call attention to the long list of articles now protected by tariff rates fixed by the Republican party and left unchanged in the Mills bill. Upon reading them it will be seen at a glance that protection taxes remain unaltered upon a vast mass of imported articles, and that the Mills bill is not drawn upon lines of delimination between protection and free trade, but simply upon the foundation line that taxes must be reduced and that their reduction should fall where the least disturbance of values will be created and where the highest stimulation can be given to the varied industries of the country. I shall print this list as an appendix to my remarks for reference.

A FREE-TRADE TARIFF AN ABSURDITY.

A tariff is a tax. Free trade is trade untaxed; and to speak of a free-trade tariff is to set up a paradox. "Words are made to conceal thoughts," says Talleyrand. The existing tax system bleeds the people, strangles industry, gluts the Treasury, aggrandizes the few, and flays the many, and the Republicans, hard pressed for devices to defend it, find subterfuge in concealing thought under piles of epithet. A Republican Senator [Mr. PLATT, of Connecticut] spoke for two days in answer to his own question: "Is the President of the United States a free-trader?" And after quoting a learned professor for the proposition that he who favors "a tariff for revenue only" is a free-trader, he came to the conclusion and announced to the country the double finding, (1) that President Cleveland is for a tariff for revenue only, and (2) that so being, therefore he is a free-trader. Neither proposition is sustained by the President's message or the Mills bill.

As we must raise, and as we will raise under the Mills bill and under the recommendations of the President's message, over one hundred and fifty millions of revenue by tariff taxation alone to meet Government expenses, the Senator is reduced to the extremity of making out that this vast sum of tariff tax is the same as free trade, albeit that a vast portion of that revenue will be raised by the very protective duties that were fixed by the Republican party, and which remained unchanged in the Mills bill.

The Senator might have obtained a satisfactory answer to his catechism had he looked over his right shoulder and propounded it to the Senator from Ohio, who sat near him.

That Senator [Mr. SHERMAN] would doubtless have answered him in the language which he employed in 1867, when he said:

It is simply an absurdity to talk now about free-trade tariff, and to talk about a protective tariff unnecessary, because the wit of man could not possibly frame a tariff that would produce one hundred and forty millions in gold without amply protecting our domestic industry.

Democracy has attributed to it now a wit beyond the human, and is alleged to have discovered some mysterious plan of identifying this heavy and necessary tariff with free trade. If the response of the Senator from Ohio did not relieve the anxieties that infest the mind of his Connecticut colleague, he might have found comfort in the utterances of the late President Garfield, whom he pictured in his speech as "a true, noble type of the highest Americanism," as one "who well represented the people," and as not a free-trader.

Now let us see what Garfield said to elicit this panegyric:

We have seen—

Said he in the House of Representatives—

We have seen that one extreme school of economists would place the price of all manufactured articles in the hands of foreign producers by rendering it impossible for our manufacturers to compete with them, while the other extreme school by making it impossible for the foreigner to sell his competing wares in our market would give the people no immediate check upon the prices which our manufacturers might fix for their products. I disagree with both these extremes.

I hold that a properly adjusted competition between home and foreign products is the best gauge by which to regulate international trade. Duties should be so high that our manufacturers can fairly compete with the foreign products, but not so high as to enable them to drive out the foreign article, enjoy a monopoly of the trade, and regulate the prices as they please. This is my doctrine of protection. If Congress pursues this line of policy steadily we shall year by year approach more nearly to the basis of free trade, because we shall be more nearly able to compete with other nations on equal terms. I am for a protection which leads to ultimate free trade.

This view of Garfield is statesmanlike; but what a stinging rebuke it is to the Republican platform of the Chicago convention. He was afterwards elected President, the Senator from Connecticut applauding him then, and applauding him still. But now the Republican party, having assumed the position which Garfield so forcibly criticised—the extreme position of "making it impossible for the foreigner to sell his competing wares in our market"—and thereby creating monopoly, the Senator and his party make a right-about wheel, and with praises of the man upon their lips, denounce the policy which he and themselves have alike indorsed.

HENRY CLAY AND GROVER CLEVELAND ON THE SAME PLATFORM.

If not reassured by the words of SHERMAN and Garfield, surely the disquietude of the Connecticut Senator about President Cleveland would have been relieved had he gone to the fountain-head and consulted the history and the teachings of the renowned father of the American system. Henry Clay would have risen up to soothe his excited fancy and drive away his fears. In 1833, when Mr. Clay offered his tariff bill, he said:

There are four modes by which the industry of the country can be protected: First, the absolute prohibition of the rival foreign articles; second, the imposition of duties in such a manner as to have no reference to any object but revenue; third, the raising as much revenue as is wanted for the use of the Government, and no more, but raising it from the protected and not from the unprotected articles; and, fourth, the admission, free of duty, of every article which aided the operations of the manufacturers.

These—

are the four modes for protecting our industry; and to those who say that the bill abandons the power of protection I reply that it does not touch the power, and that the fourth mode, so far from being abandoned, is extended and upheld by the bill.

He would, he also said, have preferred the third mode as a general policy, but he recognized that the manufacturing industries could be protected by putting the raw material on the free-list while reducing duties on everything else. All this will be found in the life of Henry Clay by Carl Schurz, volume 2, page 14.

And yet, when Mr. Cleveland recommends the admission free of tariff tax of some of the raw materials that enter into manufactures, in order to enable them to compete successfully with foreign manufacturers who now undersell them right here under their noses by reason of the fact that they can command the raw materials free, and when it is proposed to reduce duties not "on everything else," but upon some of the primary necessities of life, Henry Clay, whose identical plan the President adopts in the most conservative form, is held aloft as the paragon of protective tariff perfection, and Cleveland, his follower, is denounced as a free-trader.

IF THE DEMOCRATIC PLAN IS FREE TRADE, THE PREVIOUS REPUBLICAN PLAN IS THE SAME.

Still stronger evidences that the free-trade cry is a mere scarecrow wherewithal "to fright the souls of fearful adversaries" is found in the fact that the Republican party boasts of its free-trade achievements in the most imposing official document, in which it sounds the alarm that Democracy is for free trade; and that self-same document demonstrates that it has adopted already more of free trade than the Democracy now propose.

In the report of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House against the passage of the Mills bill it is boastfully alleged that the Republican party has reduced taxes to the extent of many millions of dollars, and it is pointed out that this was in part accomplished by the following additions to the free list (see page 30 of Mr. McKINLEY'S report):

REPUBLICAN REDUCTION OF REVENUE FROM TARIFF BY ADDITIONS TO FREE-LIST.

1. By free-list, act of July 14, 1870	$2,403,000
2. By free-list, act of May 1, 1872	15,893,847
3. By free-list, act of June 6, 1872	3,345,724
4. By free-list, act of March 3, 1883	1,365,999
Total free trade established by Republican bills	23,048,470

The Mills bill introduces $22,000,000 of free trade by putting on the free-list articles that now pay that amount of tariff taxes, and the plain question presents itself, if this makes Democracy a free-trade party and Cleveland a free-trade President, what kind of a party did the putting of twenty-three millions of taxed articles on the free-list make of the Republican? By a fair count it seems to me the Republicans would remain just a million dollars ahead on the line of free-trade reduction.

Nor is this all. We are now importing, under the Republican high tariff, some two hundred and thirty millions' worth of articles free of duty; and our tariff revenues amount to some two hundred and seventeen millions. With so large an element of free trade already injected in the tariff, and yet with so large an amount of protective duties remaining, it is beyond conception that the country can be damaged by an enlargement of the free-list to the extent of twenty-two millions—that free-list which was described as "the honest revenue reformer's hope" by Hon. JOHN D. LONG, late Republican governor and now Republican Representative from Massachusetts.

REPUBLICAN INDORSEMENT OF THE CLEVELAND POLICY BEFORE ITS ADVENT.

If its own record does not serve as a panacea to its apprehensions, its leaders should come with healing words to those who now stand aghast about free trade.

Let the free raw material in. Let us make blankets that will drive out the English blankets—said the Father of the House, WILLIAM D. KELLEY, twenty years ago, speaking for free wool. By what alchemy does that make him a British-hating protectionist, and at the same time how does the like utterance make Grover Cleveland a British-loving free-trader?

President Grant, in his message to Congress in 1874, instances fine wools, dyes, chemicals used as dyes, compounded in medicines, and used in various ways in manufactures, as proper subjects for the free-list, and insists that—

The introduction, free of duty, of such wools as we do not produce would stimulate the manufacture of goods requiring those we do produce, and therefore would be a benefit to home production.

He points out, too, that—

All the corrections in this regard are in the direction of bringing labor and capital in harmony with each other, and of supplying one of the elements of prosperity so much needed.

Henry Wilson, Vice-President with Grant, declared that—

American labor will be best protected by taxing all the necessaries of life lightly, placing the raw materials which enter into our manufactures in the free-list.

Hon. W. A. Wheeler, a little later Republican Vice-President, votes for free coal and free salt.

James A. Garfield advocated free salt, pointing out that salt of our own manufacture was sold in Canada at a dollar a barrel less than it was sold here in the United States where made, and was elected President.

Chester A. Arthur, who was upon the Presidential ticket with him, declared in his letter of acceptance that—

Such changes should be made in the present tariff system as shall relieve every burdened industry, and enable our artisans and manufacturers to compete successfully with those of other lands.

And when he became President he recommended, in 1882—

An enlargement of the free-list so as to include within it the numerous articles which yield inconsiderable revenue, a simplification of the complex and inconsistent schedules of duties upon certain manufactures, particularly those of cotton, iron, and steel, and a substantial reduction of the duties upon those articles, and upon sugar, molasses, silk, wool, and woolen goods.

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, President Arthur's Secretary of the Treasury, makes two recommendations in 1884:

First. That the existing duties upon raw materials which are to be used in manufacture should be removed. This can be done in the interest of our foreign trade.

Second. That the duties upon the articles used or consumed by those who are the least able to bear the burden of taxation should be reduced. This also can be effected without prejudice to our export trade.

Levi P. Morton votes for free salt and is now Vice-Presidential candidate upon the Republican ticket.

Messrs. Logan, ALLISON, HALE, HAWLEY, CULLOM, DAWES, vote for free coal. James G. Blaine advocates it with a solid Maine delegation. Two free-coal leaders, Blaine and Logan, are made to compose the Republican Presidential ticket and receive ovations as protectionists while the Mills bill, which keeps the tariff on coal, is denounced as free trade.

James G. Blaine, of Maine, declared against tariff on any breadstuffs whatsoever—those very breadstuffs which Republicans claim are now taxed for the farmers' benefit; and at the same time denounced the lumber tax, saying:

Now, as to the article of lumber, I again remind the House that there never has been a tax on this article. The gentleman from Ohio may talk of this question as he pleases; but I say that whenever the Western frontiersman undertakes to make for himself a home, to till the soil, to carry on the business of life, he needs lumber for his cabin; he needs lumber for his fence; he needs lumber for his wagon or cart; he needs lumber for his plow; he needs lumber for almost every purpose in his daily life.

This, indeed, was twenty years ago; and Blaine wears a coat of many colors.

This same Blaine the other day, in the Maine campaign, inveighed bitterly against free lumber—forgot the Western frontiersmen—and consigned the wicked Democracy to perdition for hearkening to the plea which he himself had made in their behalf.

It would seem that the first volume of his "Twenty Years in Congress" ought to be marked "Free Lumber," and the second volume "High Tax Lumber;" and at his diversified counter you could then select any kind of timber desired for the building purposes of Republican argument suitable to any clime.

But now, although the index fingers of the Republican chieftains have pointed out the path which Cleveland treads, we hear all along the Republican line that their utterances made them Simon Pure American protectionists, and that the like utterances now constitute Cleveland the champion of British free trade.

Monuments are proposed to the great Republican protectionists; but for uttering these sentiments the cry as to Cleveland is: "To the guillotine."

Well might that Republican Journal, the Chicago Tribune, exclaim:

The last Republican administration anticipated by four years the recommendation just made to Congress by Mr. Cleveland, and laid down the precise doctrine which, coming from a Democratic President, is not expected to excite the abhorrence of Republicans.

The people are taking notice of the Republican turnabout, and Republicans are moving to the support of that party which does not stop with phrases, but seeks practical and beneficent results. At a recent meeting of the Tariff-Reform Club, of Montclair, N. J., a club composed chiefly of former Republicans, an address was issued commending President Cleveland's course and declaring that the Republican party shows—

The insincerity of their promises in 1884, by their new party platform of 1888, which squarely turns its back upon the utterances of the party and its best men for twenty years.

It continues:

The Republican party is now faced to the rear. The great "party of moral ideas," which it was in its early days, now panders to the appetites of men and bids for the support of the vast money power of the monopolies. * * * If you think taxation in itself a blessing and a source of wealth, vote for the nominees of the Republican party. If, being Republicans, you wish to stand with Grant, Garfield, Arthur, Logan, Henry Wilson, Hugh McCulloch, and a host of Republican statesmen, as well as with the Republican Tariff Commission appointed by President Arthur in 1882, vote for Grover Cleveland and tariff reform.

DEMOCRACY AND CLEVELAND NOT FOR FREE TRADE—THEIR POSITIONS—FREE TRADE ABSOLUTELY IRRELEVANT.

But let Mr. Cleveland speak for himself as he is fully capable of doing. He declares in his message that "the issue of free trade is absolutely irrelevant." He says in his letter of acceptance:

We have entered upon no crusade of free trade. The reform we seek to inaugurate is predicated upon the utmost care for established industries and enterprises, a jealous regard for the interests of American labor, and a sincere desire to relieve the country from the injustice and danger of a condition which threatens evil to all the people of the land.

Again he says, showing his keen appreciation of American industries:

We fully appreciate the importance to the country of our domestic industrial enterprises. In the rectification of existing wrongs their maintenance and prosperity should be carefully and in a friendly spirit considered. Even such reliance upon present revenue arrangements as have been invited or encouraged should be fairly and justly regarded.

Confiding in the honest intelligence of the people to judge him rightly, he says also:

The people will hardly be deceived by their abandonment of the field of legislative action to meet in political convention and flippantly declare in their party platform that our conservative and careful effort to relieve the situation is destructive to the American system of protection. Nor will the people be misled by the appeal to prejudice contained in the absurd allegation that we serve the interests of Europe, while they will support the interests of America.

And the profoundly sympathetic interest with which he considers the question of wages and the zealous care which he has for the wage-workers is well displayed in these sentences.

True—

Says he—

True to the undeviating course of the Democratic party we will not neglect the interests of labor and our workingmen. In all efforts to remedy existing evils, we will furnish no excuse for the loss of employment or the reduction of the wage of honest toil. On the contrary, we propose in any adjustment of our revenue laws to concede such encouragement and advantage to the employers of domestic labor as will easily compensate for any difference that may exist between the standard of wages which should be paid to our laboring men and the rate allowed in other countries. We propose, too, by extending the markets for our manufacturers, to promote the steady employment of labor, while by cheapening the cost of the necessaries of life we increase the purchasing power of the workingman's wages and add to the comforts of his home.

Surely no American can justly ask more than the President thus holds out as his plan of operation. His opinions are clearly stated, his sentiments are exalted and patriotic, and his cogent reasoning carries conviction with it.

THE DEMOCRATIC POSITION.

When we look beyond the candidate to the platform upon which he stands we find them in conformity with each other. And gathering from the language for the most part of the two the Democratic doctrines we may summarize and postulate them as standing for—

1. Reduction of excessive taxation on the ground that all unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation.
2. Frugality in public expenses.
3. Encouragement to manufactures by supplying cheaper materials for manufacture.
4. Extending the market for our manufactued goods by enabling our manufacturers to compete successfully with foreign manufactures.
5. Cheapening the cost of the necessaries of life to every workman by lessening the tax upon them, and by lessening the cost of their manufacture.
6. Guarding the wages of workmen by due allowance in the tariff for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor.

These are the Democratic creeds, and by what are they antagonized?

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM—A CHINESE WALL.

The gist of Republican doctrine as now enunciated is contained in a single sentence of the Chicago platform upon which General Harrison was nominated. Therein they declare for—

Such revision of the tariff laws as will check importations of such articles as are produced by our labor, and release from import duties those articles of foreign production (except luxuries) the like of which can not be produced at home.

Even in the Republican party, and even with the most hide-bound of the admirers of the Chinese system of isolation and seclusion from the rest of mankind, this is novel teaching.

Grant, Garfield, and Arthur had taught differently. Wilson and Wheeler had taught differently. These official heads of the Republican party, who spoke with authority, had condemned the present teaching. Blaine, Logan, ALLISON, and the leading men who had held great places and aspired to the first place, never sanctioned this Chinese doctrine. Alexander Hamilton even, the high priest of protection, before whom the incense of panegyric is so often burned upon Republican altars, had taught differently, saying in the Federalist:

There are persons who imagine that import duties can never be extended to an injurious excess. Exorbitant duties on imported articles tend to render other classes of the community tributary in an improper degree to the manufacturing class, to which they give a premature monopoly of the markets.

The Republican party in its prior platforms had at least affected to believe differently.

And in 1884 their platform had declared that—

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax-payer without injuring the labor or the great productive interests of the country.

INEVITABLE RESULTS OF THE PROPOSED CHINESE POLICY.

Here was a holding out that the surplus and excessive taxation should be reduced and the tax-payers relieved; and now the proposition is to afford the relief by a higher rate of taxation and by extending that rate to a wider range of articles. Whatever may be produced at any cost here in America is hereafter, if this plan be adopted, to be kept from coming here from abroad by any tax, however high, to the end that importations may be "checked," that competition, the life of trade, may be destroyed and monopoly enthroned.

That "check" means as inevitable result that our farmers and our workmen who sell their products abroad will be unable to exchange them for cheap necessaries of life; the further result that the ships which carry outgoing cargoes shall come back empty bottomed; the further result that the markets of the world and the riches thereof shall be abandoned to English and European supremacy; the further result that the drooping flag of our merchant marine shall disappear from the seas where once under Democratic rule it floated proudly; the further result that our surplus productions of the field and the factory must decay in price and glut our home market; the still further result that labor must lose employment or submit to pauper wages in producing articles that can find no market, and that agriculture must become a fatality of ruin.

This is indeed "a dainty dish to set before a king"—a delicacy for the political board as rare and as costly as the "Chinese bird's nest" with which royal appetites are regaled. And it is notable that just as Democracy is closing the Golden Gate to the Chinese irruption upon the Pacific coast that Republican treaties invited and candidate Harrison defended, the party that loathfully bids adieu to its Chinese friends imports these antiquated Bourbon moss-back creeds. As Democracy is now putting the finishing touch upon an American wall to keep the Chinese out, Republicanism lays the foundation of a Chinese wall to pen America in.

AGRICULTURE, COMMERCE, MANUFACTURES, AND NAVIGATION.

Agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and navigation are the four graces of prosperity that go hand in hand. Amongst the counts in the indictment of the Continental Congress against the British Crown was this sentence of the Declaration of Independence:

"FOR CUTTING OFF OUR TRADE WITH ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD."

Democracy repeats that indictment now, and denounces it against the Republican platform of 1888 and those who stand upon it.

The Republicans propose deliberately, here in the high noon of the nineteenth century, to "cut off our trade with all parts of the world," to the end that a few bloated monopolists may make spoil of American industry and American labor, to the end that they may fry more fat out of the farmer and workingman, and that the Republican party may fry the fat out of the monopolistic manufacturers.

The fathers of the Republic who spoke for the encouragement of manufactures did not speak for them alone, nor for a monopoly in their behalf.

Jefferson fitly styled "agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and navigation" as "the four pillars of our prosperity;" and I propose to show that by the Chinese policy now enunciated by the Republican party, and by that Chinese policy which in a measure already exists, agriculture, commerce, and navigation are struck down, and manufactures also blighted and paralyzed with them. Man can not live unto himself alone. "The sciences," says Lord Bacon, "dwell sociably together," and so dwell all the enterprises of the land and the sea, each one supporting and assisting the other.

AGRICULTURE—ITS GREAT STAKE, ITS LARGE CONTRIBUTIONS TO OUR PROSPERITY, AND ITS SMALL RETURNS.

Let agriculture come first in the order of consideration, as it came first in the order of civilization. And let those who quote Andrew Jackson in their speeches in reference to manufactures ponder a little what he said in his first message as President (1829) upon the subject of agriculture. These are his words:

The agricultural interest of our country is so essentially connected with every other, and so superior in importance to them all, that it is scarcely necessary to invite to it your particular attention. It is principally as manufactures and commerce tend to increase the value of agricultural productions, and to extend their application to the wants and comforts of society, that they deserve the fostering care of Government.

When, therefore, the Republican party delivers its blow at the pillar of commerce, let it not be forgotten that the pillar of agriculture must fall with it. For no fact in reference to our present situation is more patent to those who have studied it, or is capable of clearer demonstration to those who have not, that when our foreign commerce is shut off by the high tax "check" on importations the farmer's work must perish. Certainly these farmers of ours are entitled to some consideration; but the Republican party does not even honor them by naming them amongst the workingmen of the country, albeit from "early morn to dewy eve" they toil to their uttermost for their scanty returns.

They are the most numerous of all our sons of toil. They constitute 7,670,493 of the 17,392,099 of those engaged in industrial occupations. They are over a third, nearly a half of all. They have a larger stake than the manufacturing class, having $12,104,081,440 invested in agriculture according to the census of 1880; whereas but $2,700,223,500 are invested in manufactures. The percentage of manufactures to the wealth of the whole country accumulated in thirty years is 6.18 per cent.; whereas the percentage of agricultural wealth is 25 per cent. They give more to the support of Government than any other class, and they receive less from it. These farmers of ours produce more than three-fourths of all our exports, while manufacturers do not produce one-fifth of them; and for the years 1866 and 1887 we have this statement of the exports and imports of agricultural produce:

	1886.	1887.
Value of exports of agricultural products	$483,834,128	$520,820,756
Value of imports of agricultural products	271,821,231	287,542,266
Balance of agricultural exports	212,012,897	233,278,490
Percentage of all our exports	73	74

Amongst these imports, coffee, tea, cocoa, etc., aggregating some $60,000,000 in value, are counted as agricultural products.

Here, then, is presented the momentous consideration that our farmers send to other lands 74 per cent. of all the produce that brings foreign wealth to our shores and that supports the navigation of the oceans that divide us.

Stop this commerce that derives its sustenance from agriculture, and agriculture and commerce will be drowned "full fathom five" together.

Stop this commerce based on agriculture that brings us from abroad two hundred and thirty-three millions of foreign gold, over and above what it brings in exchanges in kind, and the balance of trade turns against us in a deep current, gold goes from us instead of coming to us, our currency will be contracted, money will be dearer, trade will languish, prices go down still more, and national bankruptcy will stare us in the face.

It is rare that countries produce a surplus of agricultural produce. England can not do it; and it is a fact stated and shown by our Commissioner of Agriculture (Report of 1887, page 574) that there is no country in the world which furnishes an agricultural surplus at all comparable with that of the United States, and none with a surplus in such proportion to its production. After furnishing 60,000,000 of people with a profusion of supplies, not less than 10 per cent. of our immense agricultural produce is left over for sale to others; and in this surplus are much larger percentages of some articles.

We export two-thirds of our cotton, one-half of our tobacco, over a fourth of our wheat (27 per cent.), and these, with our pork products, cheese, and beef, constitute nearly all of our agricultural surplus.

We send abroad annually $107,000,000 worth of animal and meat products, $165,000,000 of breadstuffs, $207,000,000 of cotton and cotton-seed oil, $29,000,000 of rice, $7,000,110 of cheese and miscellaneous articles, rounding up the grand aggregate of $520,000,000.

Now, every one knows that the prices of these articles are fixed in the foreign market, and that if we are to be so cut off by "checking" importations, so that the vessels that bear these enormous burdens can bring no returning cargoes, it is wait and farewell to the remnant of agricultural prosperity that remains with us. The value of agricultural land must decline, and with it the value of agricultural produce, the wages of the 7,000,000 agricultural laborers, and also the wages of other laborers who depend upon agricultural wealth to purchase their wares. For a proposition so plain argument seems needless, and the Republican party, unable to answer the logic of fact, proposes to turn off the farmers from its door with the shinplaster promise that in return for the lost markets of the world it will some day or other build up for them a home market. He who is silly enough to accept such a promise might be happy to be paid off in the leaves that withered and fell last autumn.

THE HOME MARKET PROMISED IN THE FUTURE TO THE FARMERS.

This home-market promise has the charm of euphony. It has the aroma of home about it, and wears a smiling face.

No doubt it is an agreeable thought that a home market will be built and rolled up on wheels to every farmer's door; that a plenty of buyers will be paraded in the stalls thereof, and that the Republican party will furnish all of these buyers with rolls of fresh Treasury notes with explicit instructions from campaign headquarters to go in and pay the farmers big prices for all their surplus produce. The traditions of "40 acres and a mule" for the colored brother pale before the gorgeous scheme of the home market that is to be erected, transcending Solomon's temple or the crystal palace in its glory. This home-market plan is as yet a theory, not a condition; and the theory stalks upon the stage like Hamlet's father's ghost, "in such questionable shape that I must speak to it."

In the first place be it remembered that we have the home market of 60,000,000 of people here and now; that the Constitution of our country gave it to us; that there is free trade throughout all its borders; that the Republicans did not give it to us, and can not take it away from us, and that with all of its advantages the farmer has $520,000,000 of the fruits of his labor over and above all that this market can consume. Ten millions of immigrants have come into this market since 1860, and yet the five hundred millions and more of surplus produce has no buyers here. With the home market in full blast, and with ability to reach the foreign market on crutches, through all the impediments of heavy tariff exactions, the farmer finds that he is being protected into poverty with all the rapidity of a galloping consumption.

Twenty years of regimen with daily doses of home-market pills gilded over with so-called protection has brought the farmer to a condition that is not a theory, and that condition is laid bare in the following statement of the report of the Bureau of Statistics, showing the decline in value of the farmer's products. Read, farmer, and ponder:

Prices in three decades of agricultural products.

Prosperity means a surplus of products, and why not give producers the choice of markets?

The fact is, Mr. President, that 60,000,000 of energetic people in the most favored land of the world, operating every manner of improved machinery, can never have a home market for all that they produce. They will always make more than they can consume, and it is out of the overplus that they do not consume that they must find their profit. Hence they must look beyond their own borders for the market. You can not take from them their home market. It belongs to them. You may open to them an additional foreign market. Why not let them have both, and take their choice of the best? Steam and electricity are ready to be their servants, and to deny them their uses in sending their produce to market we but fly in the face of Providence.

It is said, however, that our home market consumes the greater part, say 90 per cent., of our produce, and that this market is more important than the foreign market. Very true, but let it not be forgotten that the consumption at home has always been greater under a low tariff than a high one. It is stated by a careful statistician that—

Under the low tariff of 1846, in the census year 1850, the total cereal production was 867,453,967 bushels, of which we consumed at home 851,502,312 bushels, and exported 15,951,655, or 1.9 per cent. In 1860, under the still lower tariff of 1857, the production was 1,239,039,945 bushels, of which the home market purchased 1,216,084,810 bushels, and 22,965,135 bushels, or 1.8 per cent., were exported. In 1870, under a high protective tariff, the total production was 1,629,027,600 bushels; 1,571,737,179 bushels were consumed in this country, and 57,290,521 bushels, or 3.50 per cent., were sent abroad. From 1850 to 1860 the production of grain increased 45.1 per cent., while the exports increased 43.9 per cent., while under a high tariff law, from 1860 to 1870, production increased 31.4 per cent., while the exports increased 149.50 per cent.

WHAT IS THE PLAN OF THE HOME MARKET?

And here let me press our Republican friends with a question. How, and out of what materials, do you propose to build this greater home market which is to consume $500,000,000 worth of our farmers' surplus? Somebody must build, and out of something it must be builded. It must consist of buyers as builders and of money as materials to build with. These buyers must be here in our own land already, or they must come here from other lands than ours. If they are here already, they can build a bigger market in one locality only by quitting another; and as one vacuum is filled another vacuum is created. If they simply huddle together around farmers' barns and factory doors, our population would in nowise be increased, but only congested. There will be no more mouths to feed, no more backs to clothe, no more buyers to bid, no more money to pay with, no more consumers to consume. The rural districts would be depopulated and the towns overflowed. The fields would flourish in weeds and the towns go to breeding anarchy.

There would still be at best the same surplus production of over five hundred millions, or at worst decreased production, decreased labor, decreased wages, decreased values, and increased poverty. That is the plain result of building the bigger home market out of home folks.

Obviously, then, your home-market theorist proposes, by "checking" the importations of all foreign products that are produceable here, to stimulate the importation of foreigners themselves in proper person. Foreign producers, foreign consumers, and foreign laborers are evidently in this scheme to be brought here as the cheap untaxed raw materials of humanity out of which to construct the home market, and are to be set to work by the Republican party to buy and eat the annual output of $500,000,000 worth of the farmer's productions.

If these foreigners come with capital to sit down with their hands in their laps and pay out their capital to our producers they will do a very curious and unprecedented thing; and certain it is they will not be induced to come by the high prices, so called, that the supposititious and phantom home market that is to be built upon the model of "a castle in Spain" is going to produce according to the theory.

Gentlemen of capital do not come here just to spend it, unless they are mere itinerants like Carnegie and Blaine, who blow their coach horns and their political horns in harmony, and who are bent on having a good time by disbursing their own surplus. And such gentlemen are not fascinated by high taxes, but generally prefer free-trade England as the theater of their recreations.

INCREASED SURPLUS PRODUCTION NEEDS A WIDER MARKET.

The moment your capitalist of leisure goes to work by investing his money in lands to cultivate or machinery to manufacture, the surplus product increases, unless he has been considerate enough to bring somebody along with him to consume and pay for it; and the moment your surplus increases there is at once demand for a bigger market. The producer and the consumer from abroad not being available for home-market building, there is but one other class of people that you must expect, if there be anything in your theory, to bring here to construct that market out of. He is the artisan and the laborer. Bring him along in crowds then, and the moment he gets here he is a competitor with your home-born artisan or laborer for wages. Wages being regulated by supply and demand, there being more applicants for work, wages go down, and your American workingman is "protected" into a leaner dinner and a thinner coat by his Italian, Bohemian, or Chinese rival who has rushed over here to build up your home market: and a moment later, if both the foreign and American workingman is accommodated by getting employment and drawing wages wherewithall he begins to buy your produce, he himself becomes a producer, your production increases, your surplus production enlarges, and a still wider market is needed.

If 60,000,000 of people to-day produce a surplus of goods to eat and wear, 120,000,000 of people ought to produce twice as much. And with a redoubled surplus of production we would still be standing wistfully looking at the Atlantic or Pacific wave and sighing for somebody to relieve our glutted and overstocked market and give us buyers for our handiwork.

A CONTRAST OF THREE DECADES UNDER DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN TARIFFS.

The Republican party is always taking the name of home in vain, but its policy has not increased the number of homes or their comforts. The tramp is its advertising agent, the tenement house its castle, the homeless its victims. Under the various tariffs the percentage of tax on the articles taxed has been as follows:

Average rate of duty under tariff of—

	Per cent.
1789	8½
1792	13½
1816	30
1824	37
1828	41
1832	33
1846 to 1861	19
1862	35
And under the Mills bill it will be, as estimated	42

The tariff of 1846, the Walker tariff, as it was called, with duties averaging 19 per cent., was declared by Hon. W. B. ALLISON, of Iowa, now chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, as "perfect a tariff as any we ever had," and under it the country flourished as never before and never since.

In 1850, 3,599,240 families had 3,362,337 homes; only 235,903 families were without them. In 1860, 5,210,934 had 4,969,692 homes and only 241,242 were without them; in 1870, 7,559,000 and 7,042,833 homes, an increase of over 120 per cent. of the homeless; and in 1880, 9,945,916 had but 8 955,*12 homes, over 100 per cent. increase of the homeless under the high tariff, only 3 per cent. increase of the homeless under the Democratic. These facts tell their own story.

Again, from the census of 1880 we gather also the following facts as to the increase of wealth in three decades:

Percentage of gain—	Under Democratic tariff from 1850 to 1860.	Under Republican tariff from 1860 to 1870.	Under Republican tariff from 1870 to 1880.
In manufactures	89.39	67.80	64.66
In farming lands and personal property	60.66	11.52	36.00

Thus we perceive that under the Democratic tariff manufactures gained 25 per cent. more than in these days of high taxes; and the gain in value of agricultural lands and personal property was 24 per cent. more than the best showing that high tax can make for any ten years' period. And when it is remembered that with the Mills bill passed the average tariff tax on taxed importations will be twice what it was under the Walker tariff, the place where ruin is to come in becomes invisible to the naked eye of common sense.

The farmer can not be deluded into the high-tax notion by the pretense that he shares in the so-called protection. That it is only pretense is transparent, and with trivial exception utterly baseless. For instance, there is a so-called protective tariff of 20 cents a bushel on wheat, 10 cents a bushel on corn, and 4 cents a pound on butter and cheese. But as after supplying our market he has over a hundred million bushels of wheat, about fifty million bushels of corn, $2,000,000 worth of butter, and over $7,000,000 worth of cheese which he sends abroad to sell, he sees the utter absurdity of the idea that he is protected by an import tax on articles with which the home market is overstocked, and readily recognizes the decoy duck fixed for his ensnaring. "In vain is the net spread in sight of any bird."

REPUBLICAN POLICY FATAL TO THE WORKING CLASSES—HOME MARKET TRANSLATED MEANS INTRODUCTION OF FOREIGN LABOR.

The result that has been depicted as the consequence of stopping importations is the result that the Republican party has knowingly encouraged. It is willing to circumscribe the farmers' market and to encourage cheap labor, because it takes its own nutriment from the greedy and remorseless monopolists who "damn the people," are without sympathy with "the common herd," and whose chief aim is to increase the purchasing power and the consequence of money.

It has attached the monopolists to it by faithful adherence to their interests.

It hopes to seduce labor to its standard by honeyed phrases.

Deeds for the benefit of the monopolistic class and promises to the laboring class—these are the hard-money and the soft-money currencies of its political banking operations. Its animus has been displayed by a serie- of measures which it has fathered and cherished, the effect and tendency whereof are unmistakable; but in nothing has it been so heartless and cruel as in importing to our shores the pauper labor of both Europe and Asia to underbid our native and resident workingmen in their wages; and this is the policy which it proposes to continue as long as public forbearance will permit, under the new guise and in the genial address of building up a home market.

CHINESE AND OTHER CHEAP LABOR INTRODUCED BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The Chinese have been pets of the Republican party, and if that party has slowly and reluctantly yielded to the idea of parting with them it has only been because Democracy has made the issue against them so strong and public opinion has so rallied around it that the Republicans have been forced to yield. But they have fought hard and died hard in defense of their Mongolian friends, and General Harrison acknowledges that he was slow to accept the idea of their exclusion. The Burlingame treaty between the United States and China, negotiated by the Republican party, started the Chinese column toward the United States, and soon thereafter the Chinese Six Companies of California was organized to speculate on the process of dumping upon us the cheap labor of the Asiatic races.

The Chinese are a race incompatible for assimilation with our own. Pagan in religion, unenlightened in the creeds of liberty, degraded in habits, alien in blood, it enters here only to remain an indigestible element. It lives upon what would be regarded as refuse at an American workingman's board. It sends its earnings back to the Flowery Kingdom, to which it preserves allegiance and love; and it works for a pittance upon which the American workingman would starve. Nine or ten dollars a month is looked upon as good compensation for a Chinese mechanic; and crowding together in tenements which generate disease and pollution, they have herded upon our shores with the sole object and with the sole effect of taking the places of our American workingmen.

To do this they were invited by the Republican party; in doing this they have been defended by the Republican party, and no hope of arresting the proceeding would ever have arisen had not Democracy come to the rescue.

LABOR MORTGAGED AND TRAFFIC IN HUMAN FLESH ESTABLISHED BY THE CONTRACT-LABOR BILL.

In 1864, when the workingmen of America, North and South, were carrying muskets and war was flagrant, the Republican party reached out to all quarters of the earth to bring here Chinese and other cheap labor. And while African slavery was as yet not completely abolished, a new variety of human slavery was introduced.

In that year was passed by the Republicans "the contract-labor bill," wherein it was provided as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all contracts that shall be made by emigrants to the United States in foreign countries, in conformity to regulations that may be establish d by the said commissioner, whereby emigrants shall pledge the wages of their labor, for a term not exceeding twelve months, to repay the expense of their emigration, shall be held to be valid in law, and may be enforced in the courts of the United States or of the several States and Territories; and such advances, if so stipulated in the contract, and the contract be recorded in the recorder's office in the county where the emigrant shall settle, shall operate as a lien upon any land thereafter acquired by the emigrant, whether under the homestead law when the title is consummated or on property otherwise acquired, until liquidated by the emigrant; but nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize any contract contravening the Constitution of the United States or creating in any way the relation of slavery or servitude. (United States Statutes at Large, volume 15, 1863-'65.)

Thus as African slavery was departing forever out of one door traffic in human flesh was brought in at another, and the pauper immigrant of Europe and Asia entered America a bonded slave.

THE SOLDIER AND THE FREEDMAN DESERTED BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Excuse is made that it was necessary to fill the places of soldiers in the field with laborers to do their work at home. Be it so; but if so, this occasion ended on April 9, 1865, in one year after the contract-labor bill went into effect. What then? Two millions of soldiers were going back to their homes to seek the employments of civil life and needing them to support their families, and the emancipated colored race were in utmost need of employment likewise. Did the Republican party repeal the contract-labor bill then to give the defenders and the wards of the nation a fair show? No! no! far from it. They preserved it in full force; at its bidding the pauper bondsmen poured in upon us, and stout and successful resistance met every effort to revoke the unjust and injurious law.

DEMOCRACY COMES TO THE RESCUE.

Not until twenty years after all excuse for its passage had disappeared, not until a Democratic President had been elected and a Democratic House of Representatives was in the Capitol did American labor find a helpful friend. Meantime six million five hundred thousand, nearly seven millions of immigrants, had come. Strikes and broils and anarchy broke the public peace. The tramp, a new character in our civilization, appeared, and in shop and field cheap labor had been installed. But then in February, 1885, a bill to repeal "the contract labor bill" passed the House of Representatives; an aggressive step to repel the invasions of cheap labor was taken, and the ægis of "protection that protects" was lifted over the American laborer by Democratic hands.

DEMOCRACY REPULSES CHEAP FOREIGN LABOR AGAINST REPUBLICAN EFFORTS AND VETOES IN ITS FAVOR.

But not yet was the battle fully won.

From 1869 to the incoming of Cleveland's administration other efforts than those described were made in Congress and out to repulse the introduction of Chinese and other cheap labor.

Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, opened his batteries upon it in 1870, quoting Buckle's saying that—

Low wages and despotism are inseparable.

Declaring that—

The freer the institutions of a country are the greater will be the tendency to fair wages for labor.

And observing:

The pyramids are striking monuments of the pride and ostentation of kings, but they are more striking evidences of a degraded condition of the laboring class.

Finally, in 1879, a Democratic House of Representatives, with a majority of the Republicans voting against the measure, passed a bill to restrict Chinese immigration; but President Hayes vetoed it, and his party sustained the veto. In 1881 another bill was introduced to restrict Chinese immigration and to exclude them for twenty years. A majority of the Republicans in the House voted against it; but the Democrats passed it.

In the Senate the vote stood:

	Yeas.	Nays.
Democrats	31	None.
Republican	6	28
Independent		1
Total	37	29

REPUBLICAN ENCOMIUMS UPON THE CHINESE WORKMEN.

This exclusion bill was vetoed by President Arthur, who pronounced a high encomium upon the Chinese, saying:

No one can say that the country has not profited by their work. They were largely instrumental in constructing the railways which connected the Atlantic and the Pacific. The States of the Pacific Slope are full of the evidences of their industry.

This veto the Republicans sustained.

GENERAL HARRISON THE FRIEND OF THE CHINESE.

Amongst those Republicans who voted against the exclusion bill and for the veto was Benjamin Harrison, then Senator from Indiana, now Republican candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and the favorite in the race of the Chinese, of all who yearn for Chinese cheap labor, and of all who clamor for a Chinese tariff.

We can not wonder that the Chinese in Philadelphia should raise a Harrison flag, and that wherever they are in the United States their voice and effort should be for him. He has been their faithful ally, voting fourteen times in the United States Senate in the direction of encouraging and sustaining the entry of the Chinese into this country. One of these amendments to the exclusion bill, offered by Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts, was as follows:

This bill shall not apply to any skilled laborer who shall establish that he comes to this country without any contract by which his labor is the property of any person other than himself.

Here was confession that as matters stood the imported contract labor was "the property" of its employers.

Here was effort to let in all "skilled" Chinese laborers, however others might be dealt with.

And here you can put your finger on the names of those who were for pushing out Americans with skilled Chinese and of those who were against it.

This is the vote:

Yeas—Aldrich, Allison, Brown, Conger, Davis of Illinois, Dawes. Edmunds, Frye, Hale, Harrison, Hoar, Ingalls, McDill, McMillin, Mahone, Mitchell, Morrill.

Sixteen Republicans and 1 Democrat.

Nays—Bayard, Beck, Call, Cockrell, Coke, Fair, Farley, George, Groome, Harris, Hampton, Jackson, Jonas, Jones of Nevada, Maxey, Miller of California, Miller of New York, Morgan, Plumb, Pugh, Ransom, Saunders, Slater, Teller, Vance, Vest, Walker.

Twenty-two Democrats and 6 Republicans. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 13, part 2, pages 1702 to 1717.)

Here the animus of the Republican party was disclosed, and true to its instincts and its traditional policy, it turned the cold shoulder to American labor, its candidate, General Harrison, cordially supporting its course.

FINAL REPULSE OF THE CHINESE IRRUPTION BY THE DEMOCRACY.

The protests of the good people of the Pacific Slope and of the workingmen in different parts of the country have continued to pour in against Chinese immigration. Filth, disease, crime, and misery have characterized their settlement; debauchery without a name has followed in their footsteps; indignant labor has risen, red-handed, to repel them. In the mines of Nevada and California and in the shops and factories of Eastern and Western cities they have continued to multiply. In various manufactures of boots, shoes, leather, cigars, and clothing, ladies' underwear and shirts, the Chinaman has continued to underbid and drive out the labor of American men and women; but at last the day of reckoning has come.

During the present session of Congress the President of the United States negotiated a treaty with China to prohibit Chinese immigration. The Senate adopted some amendments which the Chinese Government refused to ratify, and the treaty was rejected. But meantime a Democratic House of Representatives passed, and the Senate, coming to its reluctant task "like whining school-boy unwillingly to school," has yielded to the bill which finally dismisses from our shores the worst enemy that ever antagonized the American workingman. Thus was the victory won against the inveterate but finally-suppressed opposition of the Republican party, which now, contemplating the great Democratic achievement, will yet go forth to sing its threadbare song that the Republican party is the friend of American labor and the Democracy its foe!

OTHER CHEAP LABOR THAN THE CHINESE ENCOURAGED BY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

While the Asiatic hordes against whom Democracy has just closed the Golden Gate were inundating the land from the East through Republican invitation and encouragement, the pauper labor of Europe has been beckoned to our shores from the opposite direction by its Republican friends.

The lazzaroni of Italy, Hungarians, Bohemians, Poles, Russians, and the like, the refuse of Europe, have been hustled in upon us, coming like misfortune, "not single file but in battalions," crowding out Americans from mines and factories, roads and shops, congregating in the tenement houses of our great cities to breed disease, and now and then startling the law-abiding people by rabid outbreaks of anarchy.

The decent immigrant is ever welcome to America. And her hand has ever been stretched forth to greet him. But the idea of poisoning the streams of our civilization by pouring into them the castaways of Europe is abhorrent to every good citizen, and the idea of encouraging their coming has never found favor save amongst the Republican monopolists, who pose as the peculiar friends of American labor. Under the contract-labor system which has been described—under invitations and solicitations of the monopolists who have grown up on the Republican donations of public lands, and on Republican restrictive tariffs—they have been brought here; and whenever American labor has struggled to better its wages the rod of menace has been held over it and a cargo of imported hirelings marches to the front to rebuke their insubordination to their masters.

I saw the other day an account of a railroad accident which had killed or wounded eleven men working on the track. They were every one Italians with unpronounceable names.

Hungarians and Italians take the place of natives in the ore mines and furnaces of Pennsylvania at rates of wages ranging from 80 to 90 cents a day, and some of these are employed to supply Carnegie's steel works at Braddock. Mr. Carnegie is a private citizen who has the right to make all the money he can in a legitimate way and to do with it as he chooses; but when we see him and his ilk claiming to protect American labor and find that he is pocketing all of the so-called protection, while the laborer at his side is pushed off to make way for an alien and a stranger, we are apt to question the sincerity of his outcries and the soundness of his logic, and we are prepared to sympathize with the following reflections of the Philadelphia Record:

The disparity between the wages of an ore-digger, who gets 90 cents a day, and the profits of Mr. Carnegie, who makes $5,000 a day, staggers the mind. It would take the ore-digger more than fifteen years, working every day—Sundays and week days—to earn as much as one day's profit for Mr. Carnegie. An honest blacksmith or farmer who could save $500 a year, at the end of ten years' labor would find himself possessed of a sum equal to the Carnegie income for twenty-four hours. Mr. Carnegie is a clever fellow; but he is only a fellow-mortal, and there is something monstrously wrong in a tax system that so discriminates between man and man that one shall swim in affluence whilst the other barely lives upon his earnings.

It will be said that the Philadelphia Record is a Democratic paper. Very well; let me read from a Republican paper, the Pittsburgh Dispatch, which in a recent issue draws a picture of the Pennsylvania coke region which merits attention. The Dispatch says:

When the Congressional committee comes to Connellsville next month it will find that since the importation of foreign labor was commenced in the coke regions nearly ten thousand poverty-stricken foreigners have been dumped among the hills and mountains of Fayette and Westmoreland Counties. It will find that while thousands of these people have returned across the ocean year after year with little hoardings of American money in their pockets thousands more are sent here to take their places, thus keeping the coke-drawing industry in their possession to the utter exclusion of the American native born. It will find this feature as bad as the Chinese problem was a few years ago, for Hungarians have been actually known to return to points along the Mount Pleasant branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad three times to replenish purses filled on the banks of the Youghiogheny and emptied into the sewers of Austria-Hungary.

The committee will find that importations of Hungarians and Bohemians into the coke regions are still being made. The contract-labor law is being violated every month by somebody.

The committee to which the Dispatch refers is that appointed by the Democratic House of Representatives of which Mr. FORD, of Michigan, is chairman—a committee which is uncovering the evils which threaten and already afflict our workingmen, and which is opening the eyes of the country to the manner of love which the Republican party has displayed for them.

At a meeting before that committee in New York not long since Miss Mary Berg, a shirt-maker employed in the factory of Hermann Steen, was examined. She had just left the factory after a service of six years, and this testimony was given:

"Why did you leave?" asked Mr. FORD.

"Because of the introduction of Poles and Hungarians to a large extent—all men. Formerly 200 girls were employed in the factory and made $7 and $8 a week. They used foot power. Now the machines have steam power, and about 150 Russians and Poles have been put in in place of the girls.

"Q. What do the girls earn now?

"A. They get $5 a week, but the men get less—$4 a week. The last reduction in wages amounted to $2 a week. In 1884, when she first went to work, they got 60 cents for a shirt; now they get only 40 cents. Work they formerly received $3 for they now receive $2 for."

Miss Helen Anker, a maker of rubber and "white goods," testified she worked in a number of factories for the purpose of investigating the condition of the workwomen therein employed, as follows:

"Q. What do you know about prices?

"A. The reduction in prices began about ten years ago, and they have been constantly decreasing ever since. Ten years ago the women earned on an average $10 a week. Last winter an expert workwoman could only earn $5 and the majority of the girls only $4. The girls working in this industry number seven or eight thousand.

"Q. What is the reason of the reduction in the price of labor?

"A. In consequence of contractors taking the work from the factories to their homes and getting it done there.

"Q. Are there men who take large contracts and employ people to perform the work?

"Q. Yes, and they are principally Russians, Hebrews, and Slavs. Formerly those employed in the factories were bright American, German, and Irish girls. The owners of the factories find the contract arrangement more satisfactory. By giving out the work they reduce the rent on a few floors, do away with four or more women as overseers of the work, and the annoyance of having so many people in the building.

"Q. Has not the greater portion of the reduction in wages—60 or 70 per cent.—taken place since these Russian and Polish immigrants have come to this country?

"A. Yes; and previous to that wages were reduced through strikes and so forth.

"Q. With the increase of the importation of this particular form of labor from Poland and Russia did wages correspondingly decline?

"A. Yes; they did.

"Q. What do you know about those working for the contractors?

"A. I have never known a person working for them to earn as much as $4 a week; $3 a week is the average.

"Q. Because of this competition?

"A. Exactly."

Other witnesses corroborated these statements from their personal experience.

Let me read now from the New York Times in a review made by it of the testimony taken before this Ford committee. The Times says:

Last Tuesday night George H. Simmons, special agent of the Treasury Department, was introduced in this city to an Italian labor broker named Luigi Troja as the representative of a railroad company that desired to employ several hundred newly arrived immigrants in the construction of a branch road. He would not take Italians who were already in the city, but must have workmen brought over from Italy and delivered at Castle Garden. Troja and his partner agreed in writing last Friday night to furnish 300 or 400 Italians "at Castle Garden between the 1st of September and the 1st of October next at $1.20 per day of ten hours." The Italian importers were to board the men and furnish them with supplies. Mr. Simmons suggested that he ought to make a little money out of the transaction, and Troja agreed to give him "5 per cent. on each man's account for groceries and provisions for each month, to be deducted by the paymaster at each settlement." As the fictitious company was to pay only $1.20 per day for each man to Troja, it will be seen that the sum received by the workmen after all the deductions had been made would have been small.

This importer of laborers and his partner admitted that they had been in the business for years. They had secured 700 men for one firm of contractors and 1,500 for a railroad company. The workmen procured by them were heavily taxed in various ways for their benefit while employed.

Last year there came to this country more than 43,000 Italians. In the first six months of this year the number of those who came was 35,650. The testimony taken by the committee tends to show that a majority of these immigrants were brought here practically under contract to compete with American laborers at low wages. They are willing to work for low wages, because they require very little to support life. They are content to subsist on the coarsest food, or even on refuse, and to be lodged under conditions which are repulsive to the ordinary American workman. They do not intend to become citizens or to remain here. They propose to send out of the country the money which they can save in a term of three or four years. They are the Chinese of our Eastern States.

So it goes. The Republican party is blatant to defend American labor from the pauper labor of Europe, as if the American laborer would close his eyes to the fact that under its policies, its teachings, and its practices that self-same pauper labor is brought to his place of work, and he ejected to give way for it.

FOREIGN CONTRACT LABOR IN THE FISHERIES, AND CLEVELAND ON GUARD.

Even into the fisheries, so often before us as intensely American institutions, these foreigners are obtruded; but the following letter from the President of the United States, written in April last, abundantly attests that Democracy has its watchful eye upon and its energetic hand stretched forth to protect American labor, and that it does not content itself with mere periods of rhetoric in that behalf:

DEAR SIR: Information has reached the Treasury Department that a large number of foreigners have been brought into Massachusetts under violation of the contract-labor law for the purpose of manning American fishing vessels sent out from the ports of Gloucester, Boston, and Beverly for the purpose of taking fish along the Canadian coast. It seems to me quite certain that such foreigners, aliens, have been brought in by parties in direct violation of the statute covering such cases, and I believe that the importation of such foreigners tends to the displacement of American labor. I am aware that many of these persons have, through the care of the officials, been returned to the country from which they came. I therefore enjoin on you the duty of a prompt investigation of these cases, and request that you confer with the collectors of the ports of Boston and Gloucester that prompt and effective measures be taken. The Department has ordered that special agents be detailed, who will report directly to you, and if you require any further assistance it will be given you upon application.

Yours, truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND,

Hon. O. A. GALVIN,
United States District Attorney, Boston, Mass.

It can not be wondered that under the conditions thus represented strikes, mutterings, outbursts, and discontents have prevailed under the so-called protective system such as were never known before; and it is a noteworthy fact that 74 per cent. of all the strikes that have occurred in the last six years were in the States of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, where protection is alleged to have put in its finest work. In one of these Ohio strikes Allen G. Thurman was made arbiter. He decided that the strikers ought to have 10 per cent. more of wages. The employers submitted, and the next year were so prosperous that they added another 10 per cent. of their own accord.

Thus go Cleveland and Thurman, hand in hand, to protect American labor; and if the American workingmen do not stand by them in their noble efforts they might well say, "We came unto our own and our own received us not."

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY'S ANSWER TO THE ARRAIGNMENT OF ITS POLICY.

The Republicans answer in many specious ways the arraignment of their policy, and repulsed overwhelmingly at every other point they now contend that the high Chinese tariff on imported articles increases the wages of workingmen. Nothing could be more shallow and sophistical than this pretension.

HIGH TAXES ON IMPORTATIONS DO NOT FIX OR INCREASE WAGES.

In a speech made at Springfield, Ill., on June 1, 1887, in the gray dawn of this Presidential contest, Hon. JOHN SHERMAN declared as follows:

There are some things that laws can not do. They can not regulate the price of labor or anything else. This can only be done by the law of supply and demand.

This is tersely and truly said. The rate of wages can not be fixed either directly by the law or indirectly by operation of law. If labor is overabundant it will be cheap; if scarce it will be dear. If it is rude, unlettered, and unskilled it will command a low rate of wages; if it be skillful and energetic it will command a high rate. Quantity and quality, these are things that determine the price of labor just as they determine the prices of commodities upon the market to be hired or sold.

It is plainly shown in many different ways that the tariff tax on imported articles does not fix or increase wages. First, by the fact that wages differ in all sections of the United States, although throughout its territory the same high-tax protective laws are in uniform operation. If they be the scale by which wages are regulated, how is it that they fix different rates in different sections for the same work?

Why is it that average wages in Maine are $257 per annum, in Massachusetts $364, in Connecticut $385, and in Vermont $303?

Why is it that a grinder gets $2.03 a day in Illinois and $1.60 in New York, whereas a machinist gets $2.39 in Illinois and $3.00 in New York, while a molder gets $3.19 in Illinois, $2.00 in Kentucky, and but $1.80 in Pennsylvania, the Eden of protection?

Why is it that a carder of wool for carpetings gets but 88 cents in Massachusetts, and $1.54 in New York; a printer $1.08 in Massachusetts, and $1.72 in New York; a painter $2.11 in Connecticut, and $1.39 in Ohio; a boss of mines $2.88 in Missouri, $2.71 in West Virginia, and $2.25 in Pennsylvania; a blacksmith $1.95 in Virginia, $1.69 in Indiana; a bricklayer $3.60 in Virginia, $2.61 in New York, and $3.03 in Pennsylvania, and so on to the end of the chapter—a chapter of diversities, in which it appears that American wages differ as much in different localities as men differ in the features of their faces. What could more plainly show that protection, which is equal everywhere, is a force that has little if any effect in the matter of wages?

WAGES LOWEST WHERE TARIFF TAXES HIGHEST.

Second, by the fact that wages are higher in free-trade England than in some highly protected countries, whereas if free trade decreased wages they would be lower.

Germany has a higher protective tariff than the United States, and England has no protective tariff, and yet in Germany wages are lower than either in England or the United States; that is to say, that looking at these great nations—Great Britain, Germany, and the United States—we find the lowest wages under the highest protective tariff.

The commissioner of labor of Maine gives a tabulated statement of the wages per week in certain vocations in England and in Germany which would seem to clinch this argument.

Wages per week.

Occupations.	England.	Germany.
Bricklayers	$7.55	$4.21
Masons	7.68	4.07
Plasterers	6.80	4.43
Carpenters	7.26	4.11
Blacksmiths	7.37	4.00
Cabinet-makers	7.68	4.25
Cigar-makers	6.07	3.58
Coopers	7.50	3.07
Laborers	4.80	3.11
Saddle and harness makers	6.63	3.53
Tinsmiths	5.56	3.45

According to the theory that high tariff makes high wages workmen should get a good deal more in Germany than in England. But according to this table they get almost exactly 77 per cent. more in England than in Germany.

Third, by the fact that American wages are just as high in the unprotected as in the so-called protected industries, if not higher, and more stable. Notably is this the case amongst the worker in free rawhides. They get just double in this country what they get in England, and double what is paid the workers in many protected articles.

By the census of 1880 the number of persons engaged in gainful pursuits was as follows:

Agriculture	7,670,493
Professional and personal service	4,074,238
Manufacturing, mechanical, and mining	3,837,112
Trade and transportation	1,810,256
Total	17,392,099

Of these, those who are suppositiously protected are the following:

Sugar planters	1,400
Laborers employed	14,500
Rice planters (estimated)	1,500
Laborers employed (estimated)	5,000
Wool-growers owning flocks of over 100 head (estimated)	50,000
Manufacturers	52,127
Aggregate capitalists	105,027
Laborers employed in protected industries	1,500,000

Less, all told, than two millions of our people.

The unprotected workers, besides the farmers, have been enumerated as follows:

Architects	3,375
Artists and teachers of art	9,104
Auctioneers	2,331
Barbers and hair-dressers	44,851
Boarding-house keepers	19,058

Look upon this list, workingmen, and tell me where you come in for your part of the "protection."

WHY AMERICAN WAGES ARE HIGHER THAN THE WAGES IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

The reason why the wages of American workingmen are higher than they are in other lands is not difficult to perceive. The American workingman is a citizen and a suffragan and a sovereign. The European wage-worker is generally a subject. The American workingman has a larger share in public affairs; he is familar with the methods of organized and concentrative action; he lives under free institutions, in a land of boundless opportunities, and he is freer to dictate his own terms of labor. With free schools on all sides he is more intelligent. With the hope of ready preferment according to merit constantly before him he is more energetic. Without heavy standing armies to consume the substance of the people, he has no military class barracked upon him to divide without laboring the rewards of labor.

Under the low tariffs of former years he got higher wages than Europeans; and he will continue to get higher wages whether the tariff question be determined one way or the other.

He is not indebted to Congress or to any political party for the advantages he enjoys. They were not given to him by any Congressional enactment, and they can not be taken away. He is indebted in the first place to the bountiful Providence that has given him a land fair to behold and fruitful to enjoy; and in the second place to the strong intellect, the brave arm, and the independent spirit which are fully able to protect themselves and to work out his salvation.

"America," says Emerson, "is another name for opportunity." The American workingman has the intelligence to improve it; and that is the reason he commands wages more approximate to his merit than can be commanded in other climes.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN WAGES LARGELY NOMINAL AND UNREAL.

At the same time, Mr. President, the difference in American and European wages is not as great as the surface indications would tend to show. The same number of hours of the same quality of labor command in both continents an approximate equality of wages.

This is not a Democratic theory. It is a fact, an actual condition, attested by the highest Republican authority and recorded with the most solemn assurances of its truth.

Two distinguished Republicans, Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, of New York, and Hon. James G. Blaine, of Maine, have in recent years been Secretaries of State. In this capacity they received and examined the consular reports from foreign lands, digested and summed them up, and each of these public officers reached about the same conclusion when seated in the quietude of his office.

Mr. EVARTS, in May, 1879, reported as follows:

The average American workingman performs from one and one-half to twice as much work in a given time as the average European workman.

This is so important a point in connection with our ability to compete with the cheap-labor manufacturers of Europe.

Hon. James G. Blaine, the Secretary of State, reported in 1881, and I read from Document No. 12 of the State Department on the commercial relations of the United States, page 99, where Mr. Blaine says:

Undoubtedly the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor. If this should prove to be a fact in practice, as it seems to be proven from official statistics, it would be a very important element in the establishment of our ability to compete with England for our share of the cotton-goods trade of the world.

Thus we have it deliberately ascertained and stated that "the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor." And the question arises, Why is it that the Republican party holds out these gentlemen as worthy of credit who have so ascertained, and yet refuses itself to accept their testimony?

The American workingman is the superior of his foreign rival in skill and endurance and opportunity, and there is where his higher wages come in.

HOW CONSUMERS ARE BURDENED WITH TAXES, AND FOREIGN INSTEAD OF HOME MANUFACTURERS PROTECTED.

It is next claimed that the consumers of imported articles do not pay the high tariff taxes. But the fact that they do is scarce less than self-evident, and none have better shown it than some Republican leaders.

If you import for your own use any product of a foreign clime, be it food to eat or clothes to wear, you are required to pay the tariff tax at the custom-house when you receive it.

If you do not purchase it for your own use, but to sell, you must necessarily add the tax to the cost in the foreign market, and superadd to that the profit charged, or else your trade is a losing business; and at the end of the transaction the man who buys for use pays for all.

John Quincy Adams, chairman of the House Committee on Manufactures, punctured in 1832 the sham idea that any but the consumer pays the tariff tax, and said—

The doctrine that duties on imports seem to cheapen the price of articles on which they are levied seems to conflict with the first dictates of common sense. The duty constitutes part of the price of the whole mass of the article in the market. It is substantially paid upon the articles of domestic manufacture as well as upon that of foreign production. Upon one it is a bounty, upon the other a burden; and the repeal of the tax must operate as an equivalent reduction of the price of the article, whether foreign or domestic.

Republican Senators here can not well dispute what they themselves have said.

Senator SHERMAN has recorded his opinion, saying:

I said it, and I stand by it, that as a general rule the duties paid upon imports operate as a tax upon the consumer.

Senator PLUMB gave his on the 11th of January, 1883, saying:

Who pays these taxes? When the manufacturer * * * comes to the Senate and says, "I can live, or I can make a profit, if a certain duty is imposed," what is he saying? He is simply saying, "If you give me a certain duty you put it in my power to charge over that duty as an additional tax on the farmers of the United States."

And Senator EDMUNDS on January 4, 1883, uttered his, to this effect:

In the main all these taxes come out of the consumer, particularly internal-revenue taxes, perhaps all of them substantially.

General Grant thoroughly understood all this, and appreciated the further fact that the tariff tax operated in many cases as protection to the foreign and not the domestic manufacturer; that it was a kind of kicking protection that, like the gun in Hudibras—

Bore wide, and knocked the marksman over.

And speaking of the articles that enter as materials of manufacture, he said in his message of 1875:

All duty paid upon such articles goes directly to the cost of the article when manufactured, and must be paid for by the consumer. The duties not only come from the consumers at home, but act as a protection to foreign manufacturers of the same completed articles in our own and distant markets.

But now when President Cleveland enunciates similar principles, now that he enforces the teachings of Adams and Grant, and of a long line of distinguished men who came between them, he is plucked out as a free-trader and as an enemy of his country, while "all the gardens of Gul in their prime" yield not roses enough for the garlands with which the brows of his companions in opinion are bound. Yet I fancy the people will see the force of his logic and listen to him when he tells them:

These laws, as their primary and plain effect, raise the price to consumers of all articles imported and subject to duty by precisely the sum paid for such duties. Thus the amount of the duty measures the tax paid by those who purchase for use these imported articles.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE AND THE MILLS BILL.

The President justly says:

The taxation of luxuries presents no features of hardship; but the necessaries of life used and consumed by all the people, the duty upon which adds to the cost of living in every home, should be greatly cheapened.

Thus he points out the benefits of free raw materials to manufacturer, laborer, producer, and consumer. He further says:

It would not only relieve them (the manufacturers) from the increased cost caused by the tariff on such material, but the manufactured product being thus cheapened, that part of the tariff now laid upon such product, as a compensation to our manufacturers for the present price of raw material, could be accordingly modified. Such reduction, or free importation, would serve beside to largely reduce the revenue. It is not apparent how such a change can have any injurious effect upon our manufacturers. On the contrary, it would appear to give them a better chance in foreign markets with the manufacturers of other countries, who cheapen their wares by free material. Thus our people might have the opportunity of extending their sales beyond the limits of home consumption—saving them from the depression, interruption in business, and loss caused by a glutted domestic market, and affording their employés more certain and steady labor, with resulting quiet and contentment.

It was once said of an English statesman that he had found his adversaries in bathing and had run off with their clothes. If the Republican leaders who used to lead could rise from their graves they might say now with no little truth that Democracy found the present Republican party bathing in the China seas and ran off with their clothes, but I apprehend they would be compelled to add when they found their colleagues in September on the edge of adjournment without accomplishing anything, that they ran off without any clothes; or if they should yet propose a bill, that they had ordered a new suit at Chicago but were reluctant to try it on lest it should turn out to be a second-hand Chinese garment and a misfit.

These are wise words which I have quoted from the President, and now let us see how the Mills bill responds.

THE MILLS BILL, AND ITS AGGREGATE REDUCTION OF TAXES.

The Mills bill, entitled "A bill to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue," passed the House July 21, 1888. It has been before us over two months. It is not entirely based upon the lines of the President's recommendation; it does not entirely meet my views; and it might doubtless be said truly that it does not entirely reflect the views of any one individual. It is not, and is not claimed to be, a scientific measure; but it aims at, and if permitted to become a law it would achieve, practical and beneficent results. Its leading characteristics, considered generally, are these:

1. It reduces taxation annually to the extent of $78,000,000.

2. This reduction arises under three heads, that is, a reduction of $25,000,000 of internal taxes on tobacco, a reduction of $31,000,000 by diminution of tariff duties, and a reduction of $22,000,000 by placing on the free-list articles that now yield that amount of tariff taxes.

By its operation $78,000,000 that now are taken without necessity from the people would be left to fulfill the mission of currency, to stimulate business, to promote agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, to purchase in the marts of the world the subsistence and comforts of the people which to that extent they are now denied by a greedy and absorbing treasury.

More than one dollar a head would be in the hand of the people of the United States to perform the offices of money and to supply the wants for which money is needful. A refreshing rain in a dry summer, with crops drying up and man and beast longing for the water-brooks, would fully typify the release of seventy-eight millions of money into the workshops of industry and into the channels of trade.

THE MILLS BILL AS IT AFFECTS THE INTERNAL-REVENUE SYSTEM—THE TOBACCO TAX ABSOLUTELY ABOLISHED.

The Mills bill absolutely abolishes (1) all taxes on manufactured chewing tobacco, (2) all taxes on smoking tobacco, (3) all taxes on snuff, (4) all special taxes upon manufacturers of and dealers in said articles, and (5) all taxes upon wholesale and retail dealers in leaf-tobacco.

These taxes as they now exist, and as they will continue unless the Republican party as here represented will permit their repeal, are as follows:

Tobacco, all kinds, per pound	$0.08
Snuff, or snuff-flour, manufactured of tobacco or any substitute, per pound	.08
Tobacco, manufacturers of	6.00
Tobacco, dealers in manufactured	2.40
Tobacco, dealers in leaf, wholesale	12.00
Tobacco, dealers in leaf, retail, $250, and 30 cents per dollar on sales above $500 a year.
Tobacco, peddlers, with more than two horses	30.00
Tobacco, peddlers, with two horses	15.00
Tobacco, peddlers, with one horse	7.20
Tobacco, peddlers, on foot, etc	3.60

The only internal taxes in reference to tobacco which are retained are (1) a special tax of $3 annually on manufacturers of cigars, who now pay $6; and (2) a special tax of $1 annually on dealers in tobacco. I cite here the sections of the bill which effect these results:

SEC. 25. That on and after the 1st day of October, 1888, all taxes on manufactured chewing tobacco, smoking tobacco, and snuff, all special taxes upon manufacturers of and dealers in said articles, and all taxes upon wholesale and retail dealers in leaf-tobacco be, and are hereby, repealed: Provided, That there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of tax on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff held by manufacturers, factors, jobbers, or dealers on said 1st day of October, if claim therefor shall be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue prior to the 1st day of January, 1889, and otherwise. No claim shall be allowed and no drawbacks shall be paid for an amount less than $5, and all sums required to satisfy claims under this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

SEC. 26. [That on and after the 1st day of October, 1888, manufacturers of cigars shall each pay a special tax of $3 annually, and dealers in tobacco shall each pay a special tax of $1 annually. Every person whose business is to sell or offer for sale cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes shall, on and after the 1st day of October, 1888, be regarded as a dealer in tobacco, and the payment of any other special tax shall not relieve any person who sells cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes from the payment of this tax: Provided, That no manufacturer of cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes shall be required to pay a special tax as a dealer in tobacco, as above defined, for selling his own products at the place of manufacture.]

I rejoice, Mr. President, that this achievement of Democracy can be no longer disputed. The tobacco planters and tobacco dealers of the State whose representative I am have long desired this consummation, and a few have vainly believed that it would come through Republican agencies. It has come now through a Democratic House of Representatives where the Republican party stood in phalanx against it. I fear that it will soon be seen that the Republicans here will kill it, and then go before the people and read their platform adopted at Chicago in June last, wherein they say they are "for repealing the taxes on tobacco." If so, here and now is the place to show it.

I am glad that this promise has come at last. A few years ago, when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] made an effort to get off the tobacco tax, the Republican party, by its Senators here, resisted and defeated his effort, and Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, of Ohio, uttered his party creed when he said:

This tobacco tax, of all others, is the easiest collected, the most certain, increasing constantly from year to year, dependent upon an appetite that will be indulged no matter what may be the tax; a tax that has been more stable than any other. No amount of tax likely to be put upon tobacco will prevent its being chewed and smoked and snuffed. In all other countries where taxation prevails this is a favorite subject of taxation. * * * I say the tax on tobacco does not diminish the price to the farmer who raises it. * * * And I say we are throwing off a tax which, by the judgment of all nations, is the best source of taxation.

This is all changed now, and I am glad of it; and I only hope that the Republicans will not play fast and loose with this promise as they have done so egregiously with their former promises to "reduce the surplus" and their oft-repeated theories for free raw materials.

THE DEMOCRATIC POLICY NOW OUTLINED ALREADY INITIATED AND PARTIALLY PERFECTED BY THE REPUBLICANS.

The Democratic party can not claim originality for the policy inaugurated by Cleveland and the Mills bill. When the President's message was read to us last December, and when the press was teeming with the varied criticisms of public men upon it, I was struck and amused likewise with the animadversion of one Republican Congressman to the effect that there was not an original idea in it. True, there were some original and pungent observations, such as that "we confront a condition, not a theory," and that the discussion of protection and free trade was a mere "bandying of epithets," and that "free trade is absolutely irrelevant." But the Republican critic was right in the remark that it contained no original idea. Neither do I hope to invent an original idea in my remarks, nor have I seen an original idea as yet in any of the observations of the regiment of speakers who have delivered their views.

Napoleon did not have an original idea when he charged the enemy's center at Wagram, but he struck the right blow in an old-fashioned way at the right time, and proved himself master of the art of war in doing it. Cleveland's ideas are not original. They are those broad ideas which have been concurred in by the greatest statesmen of the old Whig party, of the modern Republican party, and of the Democratic party alike. The genius he has displayed is not that of the inventor, but that of the calm, contemplative, courageous statesman who gathers and groups great ideas, and hurls them like a battalion upon the center of opposition.

The Republican party has made a mistake in antagonizing them. It has liberally furnished Democracy with the free raw materials of argument. Why will it not unite with us in the manufacture of measures to enforce it? The grievance that they now suffer under is the fact that they have preached the President's doctrines and have commenced the inauguration of his policy, and, alas, have halted when they should have pressed forward; and that he has come and seized the field and is now advancing the Democratic flag to victory. Why, Mr. President, sixteen years ago the Republicans began what Cleveland is now completing and they retarding—for what reason? The Siamese, it is said, paint their teeth black because, as they allege, the devil has white ones. The Democratic teeth are very white and glistening just at present, and can be seen through their broad smiles, and this is the only reason discoverable why the black polish is being so diligently rubbed upon those of the Republicans. Let us look into this Republican free-trade business.

FREE HIDES.

In 1872, there being then a Republican Congress in both Houses and James G. Blaine being Speaker of the House, the Republican party introduced free trade in hides. Under the Walker tariff of 1846 hides had been taxed 5 per cent., and from 1861 to 1872, 10 per cent. When this great change occurred there was no outcry that the country would be ruined, and when General Grant signed the bill as President he was not denounced as conspiring to blow us up with British free trade.

The effect of free trade in hides for sixteen years has been fully tested. In no respect has the country received any injury from it; in many respects it has received benefits. Cattle have multiplied and increased in value. The number of oxen and other cattle furnishing hides has increased from 16,000,000 head to 34,000,000 head. That is more than doubled. Their value has increased from $321,000,000 to $611,000,000, nearly doubled. Evidently the cattle-owner greatly prospered with free hides.

The tanners who turn the hides into leather have prospered, and the manufacturers of leather into boots and shoes and other articles have prospered, the Treasury has been rid of an unnecessary tax, and the people have been furnished with cheaper articles of necessity. Cheaper harness, cheaper trunks, cheaper boots and shoes for the people, and prosperity to all connected with their production.

A certain Republican Representative in the House told a joke not long since the point of which turned out in the wrong direction. Said he:

I was making a speech to an immense crowd of farmers. I was making about the same sort of a speech that I am making to-day. I happened to refer, as I well remember, to the time when corn sold at 10 cents a bushel. At that point a prominent old farmer in the crowd whom I had known all my life—he was much older than myself, but we had been in the army together and I knew him very well—called out, "Hold on a moment! Under the Democratic tariff of 1846 I hauled 50 bushels of corn right across the river there and put it in Emmet Munday's corn-crib for one pair of boots, the price being $5 for the boots and 10 cents a bushel for the corn." I then said, "Jake"—for down in my country I call people by their first names—"how many people will 50 bushels of corn shoe now under this rascally Republican policy of protection?" "By George! it would shoe a family of a dozen for at least two years." [Laughter and applause.] That is a fair illustration.

I accept this, too, as a fair illustration, but let us see where "the laughter and applause" comes in.

It is the fact that under the Walker tariff of 1846 the hides, such as these boots costing 50 bushels of corn were made of, were subject to a tariff tax of 5 per cent., and that now, when a whole family can get shoes for two years for the old price of one pair of boots, we are operating under the policy of absolute free trade in the hides that make them. Is it wonderful that the farmers would like to have another dose of ruin of the same sort?

How manufacturing has prospered with free hides is testified from all sources. Hon. JOHN E. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, says of the operation of free trade in hides:

Hides were brought into this country in enormous quantities, and the result was that whereas in 1870 or 1871 we had exported less than 2,000,000 pounds of sole-leather, within two or three years from that time—I will not be exact in statement of time—the exports of sole-leather rose to 11,000,000 pounds, and in 1883 the tanners of this country were shipping abroad 34,000,000 pounds of sole-leather in one year. That is a raw material of the boot and shoe industry, and it is upon that raw material that that great industry, the second of the great industries of Massachusetts, stands to-day, and we want wool put in the same category.

A New England Republican, Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, speaking on the subject, points out how the boot and shoe industry has increased, and how this policy furnishes a market for Southern hides instead of injuring their value. He says:

In the manufacture of boots and shoes the entire country employs $!3,000,000 in capital; over $102,000,000 are expended for material, and from it products are manufactured to the extent of over $166,000,000. Of this industry, felt and known in every home of the nation, and marked in the foot-prints of the legislators from the Southern States, the six New England States employ nearly twenty-five millions of capital, considerably more than one-half of all; they pay $70,000,000 for material, about three-fourths of all, and yield a product of $112,000,000, slightly over two-thirds of the whole, and are the best customer for hides that the South has or will have in all time to come.

A recent writer in the Buffalo Courier says:

Our manufacturers of leather and of boots and shoes are prosperous, and, in spite of the fact that the duties on these articles are comparatively very low, our factories not only control the home market, but also have a large export trade. Our exports of leather, boots, and shoes, and other products of leather in 1887 were over $10,000,000, as against $500,000 of exports of woolen goods. Now, mark you the significance of the fact that in 1887 the importations of hides and other skins, free of duty, amounted to nearly $25,000,000. The prosperity of our leather industries depends in no small degree upon free raw materials. But is there not as good reason for putting a duty on raw hides as there is for retaining the high duties on raw wools? The Department of Agriculture estimated that on January 1, 1887, the value of the cattle of the United States was in round numbers $1,042,000,000, and the value of the sheep only $90,000,000, or but a little more than one-twelfth of the value of the cattle. The value of the raw-hide products of our cattle industries is nearly one-third greater than the value of raw-wool products of our sheep industries. We have free hides, and why should we not have free wool?

How about the wage-earner who works in free raw hides? Has he suffered? By no means. Far from it.

From a table compiled by A. R. Whitney, esq., which has been quoted in the press and by speakers, it appears that the average weekly wages of shoemakers is $6 in England, $12 in the United States. This item is of itself enough to show that the worker in unprotected articles is not dependent for his wages on high tax or tax of any kind; and that conditions as to raw materials being equal he can double the wages of his English competitor.

Honor to whom honor is due; and I give all due honor to our Republican friends who have so successfully initiated that policy of free raw materials which has been so beneficial. In the book of debits and credits let this big item go to the credit side.

FREE HIDES ARE SUPPLEMENTED BY FREE SALT, FREE WOOL, FREE LUMBER, AND FREE TIN-PLATE.

With this demonstrated beneficial effect of putting hides on the free-list before them, the Mills bill has extended the policy to other raw materials that stand in a similar category, and the leading free-list items are as follows:

Wool, now paying a tax of	$5,899,816.63
Lumber, now paying a tax of	1,039,207.35
Salt, now paying a tax of	676,865.50
Tin-plate, now paying a tax of	5,706,433.89
	13,322,323.37

These reductions are most vigorously assailed; but when the considerations for putting them on the free-list, like free hides, are adduced, it will be found that they are cogent and convincing.

FREE SALT.

Salt is the necessity of nature. The land is filled with it, the sea is seasoned with it, the quick rejoice in it, and the dead are preserved by it. The dumb beasts gather to the salt-licks, and all animated nature seeks it and needs it as they need light, heat, water, and air. It is the prime tonic of existence.

Sixty millions of people, 12,000,000 of horses, 2,000,000 of mules, 14,000,000 of milch-cows, 33,000,000 of other cattle, and 44,000,000 sheep all yearn for salt.

The farmer needs it for his stock, the dairyman for his butter, the meat-packer for his meat, the fisherman for his fish, the housewife for her pickle, the physician for his pharmacy, and everybody for his victuals.

Thomas Jefferson recommended free salt in his message of 1806, and Thomas Benton called the denial of it "impiety against nature." Republican statesmen have joined with Democrats in demanding it, and now Democracy in the Mills bill tenders free salt, and the abolition thereby of more than half a million of taxes which are now paid upon the importation of a million and a half dollars' worth of it—a tax of 33 per cent.

Duties are now remitted upon salt used in curing fish taken by licensed vessels or in curing fish on the shores of the navigable waters of the United States.

Why is it the fisherman has a privilege denied to the farmer, the dairyman, and the meat-packer? Upon what salt do these our fishermen feed, that they have grown so great? Is not this in contravention of the Constitution, that requires duties to be uniform throughout the United States, and why shall not all have free salt?

If free salt be not advantageous, why have the Republicans inflicted it upon our fishermen? If it be advantageous, why have they refused it to our farmers as well?

FREE LUMBER.

As soon as the savage begins civilized ways he wants a house to live in, a lot fenced in, a bedstead to sleep upon, a bench or chair to sit upon, and utensils to work with; and with the timber of the felled forest he makes them. Infancy is rocked in a cradle, old age totters upon a cane, and death reclines in a coffin; and the forest furnishes them.

The hut and the palace, the table, the wagon, the car, the ship, the bridge, the plow, the plane, all these spring from the same source; and the lumber tax fixes upon them—couches in the cradle, climbs into the pulpit, and dies not in the grave.

Free lumber is in the Mills bill, to release over a million of surplus taxes and to give to nature fair play.

Lumber is not an article that responds readily to supply and demand. It is limited in quantity, and he who plants can not live to reap. It is limited in locality, and distant transportation eats up its value as it goes.

It has been pointed out by Republican representatives, as well as Democratic, that the lumber kings have possessed themselves of four-fifths of the white-pine region east of the Rocky Mountains; that Canadian workmen cross the boundary line, take the places of Americans as hired timber-cutters, and carry home their wages; that a few hundred men monopolize the timber possessions; and that by the enforced destruction of our forests agriculture is being injured by changed climatic conditions, and our timber resources are being rapidly despoiled. Already the people of the North and West are seeking by timber-culture acts and arbor days to create or replenish their timber supplies; and if in 1869, when Blaine spoke so warmly in behalf of the frontiersmen, we needed free lumber, how much the more do we need it now!

FREE TIN-PLATE.

There is not a pound of tin-plate manufactured in the United States. There is not a tin mine open in the United States. The people need tin for the roofs over their heads, for the cups and buckets they drink out of, for the plates they eat out of, and for the cans in which they preserve their food. The rich may supply its place from roof and gutter to table and kitchen; but it is the poor man's metal, and the people of this country, without protecting a single miner or manufacturer of tin, pay a needless tax upon its importation of $5,000,700 a year.

An attempt was made in the House of Representatives to increase this tax, it being argued that some day or other somebody or other would find a tin mine and somebody else or other would manufacture tin; and it was urged that the broad doctrine of protection should anticipate the future and hold out its sheltering arms to enfold the infant industry that might possibly be born when the lucky star should arise in the now darkened heavens.

I have seen somewhere an account of a comic drama in which Adam passes across the stage going to Paradise to be created. The high-tariff tin-plate statesmen evidently caught their cue from some such inspiration; but I expect that the plain, common-sense people of the country will hardly be willing to pay over five millions of tax a year for a ticket to the great protection theater while waiting for the curtain to rise and disclose the play which some unborn dramatist is to write and some unborn actor is to play.

In one county in the district from which I come, the county of Botetourt, there are now twenty-three fruit and vegetable canneries. The thrifty people of that county, and indeed now of that entire section, are covering their fields with gardens and orchards, and the tin can is the conveyance that carries their produce to market. Two millions' worth of canned salmon, fourteen millions' worth of canned lard, four millions' worth of canned fruits and meats reach consumers from different parts of the country in the same way.

The tax on tin-plate is 33 per cent. of its cost, and the manufacture of tin cans is a large and growing industry in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, the latter city turning out annually 150,000,000 cans. Manufacturers, producers, and consumers have a common interest in free tin-plate, and Democracy tenders it in the Mills bill.

FREE WOOL.

Every human being needs a covering for his head, his body, his feet, his bed, and desires it for his floor. A cheap hat, a cheap suit of clothes, cheap stockings, a cheap blanket, and a cheap carpet will supply them. Cheap shoes have come with free hides to make them out of, and it is a little difficult to see why the freedom that we stand upon should not envelop our frames, cover our heads, and be vouchsafed to us in free wool. Sixty millions of free people stand in need of these necessities, the Northern people amidst the snows more than the Southern people under genial suns.

There are about forty-four millions of sheep and about one million of sheep-owners in the United States. Suppose it were true, which I deny, that a cheap protection to the human back would make cheap wool on the sheep's back, and that some profit would be lost to the one million of sheep-owners to give the gain to sixty millions of wool wearers, would not cheap clothes to the many be better than dear wool to the few?

The venerable and much respected Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who I regret has been called from his place, thinks that President Cleveland showed want of sympathy for the owners of small flocks of sheep in advocating free wool. I wonder that it did not occur to him that sympathy for the many who have no flocks and who want clothes was just as Christian a virtue, and more in accordance with the scriptural injunction to "remember the poor."

It is very unlikely that free wool would either diminish the number of sheep in the United States or depreciate the price of wool; for this reason, that the more goods a manufacturer can make and sell the more wool he will want and the cheaper he can sell, and that now the American manufacturer is restricted both in materials and market. A small profit on a large output is more remunerative than a large profit on a small output; and thus the seeming paradox is answered of cheaper clothes with a firm price for wool. The American manufacturer can not now compete with his British rival, because that rival gets free wool from all parts of the world; and he can not. Hence it is that we import forty-four millions worth of woolens a year and pay thereupon twenty-nine millions of tax.

We need annually over 600,000,000 pounds of wool to supply our market, an average of about 10 pounds to the man; and we produce, in round numbers, less than 300,000,000 of pounds, or about 4 pounds to the man. We have got to buy more than we produce, and no good reason can be assigned for taxing the people upon wool in order to force us to pay big prices to foreigners of $5,899,816.63, unless the Republican doctrine of taxing luxuries and not necessaries be interpreted to show that clothes are not included in their bill of fare amongst the necessaries of life.

The cattle from which free raw hides are taken are worth about twelve times as much as the sheep from which wool is taken. Why is the lesser "protected" and the larger left free?

Wool is now taxed an estimated average of about 26 per cent. and woolen goods 68 per cent. If the one million of sheep-owners lose the benefit of a 26 per cent. tariff, let it be remembered that at the same time fifty-nine millions of people who own no sheep will get the benefit of 30 per cent. reduction in the tariff on woolen goods effected by the Mills bill, and that our woolen manufacturers will at the same time be put in a position to compete with foreign manufacturers.

Experience has not shown that the high tariff increases either the number of sheep or the price of our domestic wool. There are half a million less sheep in Pennsylvania to-day under a high tariff on wool than in 1869 with a lower tariff, and a million less in New York. In Michigan under an increased tariff in 1867 sheep reduced in number from four to two millions. Under the existing high tariff the number of sheep decreased four millions from 1886 to 1887.

The labor cost in sheep-raising is less than in almost any industry. The sheep raise themselves in regions where population can not thrive and on what can neither be sold nor otherwise consumed. No plea for the protection of labor from the pauper labor of Europe can come in to defend the high tax, and it is a sheer attempt to delude and bribe one class of our citizens into a grand "combine" to keep high taxation for class benefit.

The sheep barons who have bought up vast tracts of land in the West and own sheep by tens of thousand may impede this reform. The farmers who own small flocks know full well that even if a trifling loss ensue in the price of wool they will be more than compensated in the cheaper clothes of themselves, their wives, and children, and that one or two cheaper coats or dresses will give them back far more than they can lose.

In my own State, Virginia, we have less than half a million of sheep and more than a million and a half of people, and the importance of the human and the sheep interests can be readily compared.

The experience of England on this question is worthy of notice. It was pointed out by Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, that under the admission of wool duty free the production of native wool increased 100 per cent., and no one has better explained the philosophy of the subject than another distinguished Republican, Hon. W. B. ALLISON of Iowa. Our Republican neighbors have supplied abundant information and advice on this subject. With them—

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers.

But let me quote from Mr. ALLISON, who has said:

I will say with regard to the duty on wool and woolens, that I regard it not as an intentional fraud, but as operating as though it were a fraud upon the great body of the people of the United States. I allude to the woolen tariff, a law the effect of which has been to materially injure the sheep husbandry of this country. In a single county in the State of Iowa, between 1867 and 1869, the number of sheep was reduced from 22,000 to about 18,000 in two years, and what is true of this county is true to a greater or less extent of other counties in Iowa, and during this time the price of wool has been constantly depreciated.

Here he was questioned, as follows:

Mr. LAWRENCE. I should like the gentleman to inform me how a reduction of the duties on wool and woolen goods would inure to the advantage of the wool-grower?

And he answered:

Mr. ALLISON. I will tell the gentleman how, in my judgment, the wool-grower will be benefited. As the law now is, the tariff upon the fine wools of a character not produced in this country is 100 per cent. upon their cost. The tariff upon woolens of the same class is only about 50 per cent., so that the finer woolen goods are imported, and not the coarser fabrics. Before the tariff of 1867 our manufacturers of fine goods mixed foreign fine wools with our domestic product, and were thus able to compete successfully with the foreign manufacturer of similar wools. But being prohibited from importing this class of wools, these fine goods can not now be produced in this country as cheaply as they can be imported. Consequently mills that were formerly engaged in producing these goods have been compelled to abandon business or manufacture the coarser fabrics. If they could afford to manufacture those fine goods they would make a market which we do not now have for our fine wools to be mixed with other fine wools of a different character from abroad. This want of a market, as I understand it, is the reason why our fine wools now command so low a price. There is no demand for them at home, and we can not export them in competition with fine wools grown in other countries.

Thus it is plainly shown that the Democratic scheme is for the universal good.

THE SURPLUS CONTINUES IN THE TREASURY AND EXCESSIVE TAXATION GOES ON.

And now, Mr. President, I shall leave to other persons or to other occasions the further discussion of the manifold phases that the tariff question presents, conscious that I have touched in many respects only the surface of a vast subject whose depths are not easily fathomed. But meanwhile the surplus of one hundred and thirty millions of the people's money remains in the Treasury and excessive taxation goes on. That surplus is the exact measure of the deficit in the people's pockets, and, like the unjust steward in Scripture, the Republican party can only say of it, "We have buried it in a napkin."

The Treasury of the United States is to-day the mausoleum of the people's wealth, and the Republican party is sitting on the coffin-lid, bafiling and rebutting every attempt of Democracy to knock the nails out of the coffin, and to let that wealth rise in resurrection and go forth to discharge indebtedness, enhance prices, employ labor, quicken industry, to fill the sail, turn the mill, enliven the workshop, and speed the plow. The stupendous fact remains with us that annually one-fourth of all our currency, twenty-five cents in every man's dollar, is consumed in Federal taxation.

The shameful spectacle abides that our miners dig out of the earth annually fifty millions of gold and thirty millions of silver, but that toil only brings this precious fruit to the light to witness its seizure by tax-gatherers and its disappearance into the darkness of a Treasury vault, which, like the sea, refuses to give back its dead. No nation in Europe or Asia or Africa could rest easy under such conditions, for the mine beneath it would scatter it to atoms. And that the people of America bear and forbear is only because they are the grandest in the world, with faith that time and patience will work out their redemption, and that Democracy will ere long complete that mission which Providence has assigned and to the fulfillment whereof its leader has led the way.

The people of this country can not be cajoled by Republican boasts that they have heretofore abolished hundreds of millions of war taxes. They are well aware of the character of these taxes, and of the Republican policy in regard to them. They know full well that the vast wealth represented by United States bonds was never taxed at all, and that a Vanderbilt with his sixty millions of bonds never paid as much upon them to support the Government that protected them, and the people burdened to pay them, as the poor man who bought a blanket, a carpenter who bought a handsaw, or a laborer who smoked a pipeful of tobacco.

They saw the Republican party go forward and repeal seventy-two millions of tax on incomes; seven millions of tax on railroads; and vast sums of taxes on corporate receipts, bank deposits, and bank capital, aggregating in all $205,000,000. They have waited patiently for their turn to come; and now when a reduction of seventy-eight millions of unneeded taxes is asked upon internal agricultural products, and upon the necessaries of life, they will not be put off by being told that the Republicans a long time ago took the taxes off of those most able to pay them. All through the year 1888 Democracy has toiled to fulfill its pledges to the people, and to render them trusty service.

Congress assembled in December, 1887, and that it has been in session over nine months, and is still sitting in September, 1888, is a fact that pays silent but impressive tribute to the efforts of the Democratic party, its President, and its leaders to release the surplus, to diminish taxes, and to relieve the people's burdens.

That the Republicans in the House of Representatives, the popular branch of Congress, and the only branch empowered by the Constitution to originate a bill for raising revenue, have utterly failed at this session to propose a bill, is a confession of party failure, of incapacity, and of thriftless, contumacious policy the most conspicuous in our political history.

And that the Republican Senate at this late day is wrestling to formulate a proposition to supply the deficiencies of their party companions is a rebuke to them more withering than any sarcasm that could be put in phrases, and is a joinder in their plea of confession without avoidance, mingled with a tincture of eleventh-hour repentance. The time was when the Republican party was the leader of public opinion. That time is passed. Like an old man to whom it is always afternoon it muses with half-shut eye, tells tales of its agility when it was young, and talks of days that have long since seen their sunsets. To the living it feebly breathes a belated hope which wears the countenance of despair.

With a congested Treasury—with a crushing tax-system—a tax system under which you can hear the very grinding of the people's bones—with a monopoly-ridden public clamoring for reformation, and labor pleading to be unburdened—it propounds to the country a Chinese platform, nominates a Presidential candidate with Chinese proclivities, relegates that candidate to the chimney-corner, recalls a luxuriating tourist, who has been sunning himself in the smiles of an itinerant millionaire, to make speeches in favor of "trusts," and proses through the dog days over a tariff bill which it is afraid to suppress, and is only willing to divulge when there is just time enough left for its hasty burial.

The Greek came into the world and filled it with images of beauty. The Roman came, and there arose before mankind the majesty of law; but the people were the second thought when he blazoned upon the standard of his legions, "Senatus Populusque Romanus."

The Anglo-Norman-Saxon came; he gathered the treasures of art, literature, and law from all lands and ages, and scattered them broadcast over the earth under conquest's crimson wing.

Last and best the American came; liberty was revealed, and law bowed at its footstool.

Democracy writes the name of the people before that of Senate or Assembly. It stands for their liberty now—the liberty of the people to be taxed only to the measure of their will and their need. It writes upon its banner—

Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation—and in that sign it will conquer or fall.

APPENDIX.

ARTICLES IN WHICH NO CHANGE IS MADE.

The following list is given in order that there may be no excuse for misapprehension on the part of anybody as to those articles the duty on which remains unchanged under the present law. This list has been prepared with equal care and shows that the rates on a large number of articles are not changed under the proposed bill.

A large number of articles in which no change of rate is made between the present and the proposed tariff.

[n. o. p., i. e., not otherwise provided for.]

Articles.	Tariff tax on each $100 worth under the present law and the Mills bill.
SCHEDULE A.
Glue	$20.00
Gelatine and all similar preparations	30.00
Fish glue or isinglass	25.00

A large number of articles in which no change of rate is made between the present and the proposed tariff—Continued.

Articles.	Tariff tax on each $100 worth under the present law and the Mills bill.

Castile	$20.00
Fancy, perfumed, and all descriptions of toilet	35.20
Sponges	20.00
Sumac:
Ground	12.46
Extract	20.00
Acid:
Acetic, acetous, or pyroligneous not exceeding the specific gravity of 1.047	17.73
Citric	23.43
Tartaric	28.39
Camphor, refined	34.11
Cream of tartar	22.85
Dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute or British gum	31.59
Glucose or grape sugar	20.00
Oil of bay leaves, essential, or bay rum essence or oil	58.97
Soda and potassa, tartrate of Rochelle salt	14.28
Strychnia or strychnine and all salts thereof	30.54
Tartars, partly refined, including less crystals	19.77
Ammonia:
Anhydrous, liquefied by pressure	20.00
Aqua, or water of	20.00
Muriate of, or sal-ammoniac	10.00
Carbonate of	20.00
Sulphate of	20.00
Asbestos, manufactured	25.00
Cement, Roman, Portland, and all others	20.00
Whiting and Paris white:
Dry	134.00
Ground in oil or putty	12.04
Prepared chalk, precipitated chalk, French chalk, red chalk, and all other chalk preparations which are not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	20.00
Chromic acid	15.00
Cobalt, oxide of	20.00
Potash, hydriodate, iodide, and iodate of	16.18
Soda ash	23.03
All coal-tar colors or dyes by whatever name known and not specifically enumerated or provided for in this act	35.00
The pigment known as bone black, and ivory drop black, and bone char	25.00
Ocher ochery earths, umber and umber earths, and sienna and sienna earths when ground in oil	10.65
All preparations known as essential oils, expressed oils, distilled oils, rendered oils (except olive oil, salad oil, whale oil, seal oil, and neat's-foot oil) alkalies, alkaloids, and all combinations of any of the foregoing and all chemical compounds and salts, by whatever name known, n. o. p.	25.00
All earths or clays, wrought or manufactured, n. o. p.	24.29
Alcoholic preparations:
Alcoholic perfumery, including cologne water	63.25
Distilled spirits, containing 50 per cent. of anhydrous alcohol	$64.61
Alcohol, containing 94 per cent. of anhydrous alcohol	171.85
Alcoholic compounds, n. o. p.	61.89
Chloroform	41.67
Collodion, and all compounds of pyroxyline, by whatever name known	5.17
Rolled or in sheets, but not made up into articles	11.43
When in finished or partly finished articles	31.54
Ether, sulphuric	47.50
Hoffman's anodyne
Iodoform	57.32
Ether, nitrous, spirits of	60.00
Santonine	174.36
Amylic acohol, or fusel oil	10.00
Oil of cognac, or œnanthic ether	533.33
Fruit ethers, oils, or essences	229.40
Oil or essence of rum	400.00
Ethers of all kinds, n. o. p.	61.62
Coloring for brandy	50.00
Preparations:
All medicinal preparations, known as essences, ethers, extracts, mixtures, spirits, tinctures and medicated wines, of which alcohol is a component part, n. o. p.	207.12
Varnishes of all kinds	40.00
Spirit varnishes	95.30
Opium, prepared for smoking and all other preparations of opium not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	110.92
Opium, aqueous extract of, for medicinal uses, and tincture of, as laudanum and all liquid preparations of opium not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	40.00
SCHEDULE B.—EARTHENWARE AND GLASSWARE.
Stoneware, above the capacity of ten gallons	20.00
Fire-brick, and roofing and paving tile, n. o. p.	20.00
Roofing slates	25.00
Green and colored glass bottles, vials, demijohns, and carboys covered or uncovered, pickle or preserve jars, and other plain, molded, or pressed green and colored bottled glass, not cut, engraved, or painted, n. o. p.	56.54
If filled, and not otherwise in this act provided for	56.54
Flint and lime glass bottles and vials and other plain, molded, or pressed flint or lime glassware, n. o. p.	40.00
If filled, and not otherwise in this act provided for, said articles shall pay exclusive of contents, in addition to the duty on the articles	40.00
Articles of glass, cut, engraved, painted, colored, printed, stained, silvered, or gilded, not including plate-glass (except German looking-glass plates made of blown glass and silvered)	45.00

A large number of articles in which no change of rate is made between the present and the proposed tariff—Continued.

Articles.	Tariff tax on each $100 worth under the present law and the Mills bill.
SCHEDULE B.—EARTHENWARE AND GLASSWARE—continued.
All glass bottles and decanters, and other like vessels of glass shall, if filled, pay the same rates of duty in addition to any duty chargeable on the contents, as if not filled, except as in this act otherwise specially provided for.
Cylinder and crown glass, polished, not exceeding 10x15 inches square	$7.28
Above that and not exceeding 16x24 inches square	16.79
Above that and not exceeding 24x30 inches square	18.90
Above that and not exceeding 24x60 inches square	61.59
Unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window glass not exceeding 10x15 inches square	60.71
Fluted, rolled, or rough plate glass, not exceeding 10x15 inches square	14.16
Above that and not exceeding 16x24 inches square	23.88
Above that and not exceeding 24x30 inches square	27.63
All above that	49.45
Cast polished plate glass, unsilvered, not exceeding 10x15 inches square	17.30
Above that and not exceeding 16x24 inches square	20.15
Above that and not exceeding 24x30 inches square	31.56
Above that and not exceeding 24x60 inches square	78.40
All above that	152.91
Cast polished plate glass, silvered or looking-glass plates, not exceeding 10x15 inches square	10.85
Above that and not exceeding 16x24 inches square	18.44
Above that and not exceeding 24x30 inches square	27.57
But no looking-glass plates or plate glass silvered, when framed, shall pay a less rate of duty than that imposed upon similar glass of like description not framed, but shall be liable to pay in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem.
SCHEDULE C.—METALS.
Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites	41.16
Sulphur ore, as pyrites or sulphuret of iron in its natural state containing not more than 3½ per cent. of copper	25.04
Provided, That ore containing more than 2 per cent. of copper shall pay in addition thereto 2½ cents per pound for the copper contained therein,
Spiegel-eisen, wrought and cast scrap iron, and scrap steel	30.34
But nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel that has been in actual use and is fit only to be manufactured.
Bar iron, rolled or hammered, comprising round iron not less than three-fourths of one inch in diameter, and square iron not less than three-fourths of one inch square	48.16
Provided, That all iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars and more advanced than pig-iron, except castings, shall be rated as iron in bars, and pay a duty accordingly; and none of the above iron shall pay a less rate of duty than 35 per cent. ad valorem.
Boiler or other iron, sheared or unsheared, skelp iron, sheared or rolled in grooves	31.01
Sheet iron thinner than No. 29 wire gauge	30.00
Sheet iron or steel, galvanized or coated with zinc or spelter, { thinner than 25 wire gauge	{ 78.55 / 41.60
Polished, planished or glanced sheet iron, or sheet steel by whatever name designated	36.09
Provided, That plate or sheet or taggers iron by whatever name designated, other than the polished, planished, or glanced herein provided for, which has been pickled or cleaned by acid or by any other material or process and which is cold rolled, shall pay one-quarter cent per pound more duty than the corresponding gauges of common or black sheet or taggers iron.
Corrugated or crimped sheet iron or steel	25.00
Hoop, or band or scroll, or other iron, 8 inches or less in width and not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge	39.00
Provided, That all articles not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, whether wholly or partly manufactured, made from sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron herein provided for, or of which such sheet, plate, band, or scroll iron shall be the material of chief value, shall pay one-fourth of one cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the iron from which they are made or which shall be such material of chief value.
Cast-iron vessels, plates, stove-plates, and irons, sadirons, tailors' irons, hatters' irons, and castings of iron n. o. p.	80.78
Malleable iron castings not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	25.04
Forgings of iron and steel or forged iron, of whatever shape or in whatever stage of manufacture not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	62.29
Wrought-iron or steel tubes or pipes, other than boiler	20.12
Crosscut-saws	12.86
Mill-pit and drag saws not over 9 inches wide	22.50
Over 9 inches wide (none imported in 1886 or 1887).
Circular saws	30.00
Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, by whatever process made, dye-blocks or blanks, billets and bars and tapered or beveled bars, bands, hoops, strips and sheets of all gauges and widths, plates of all thicknesses and widths, steamer cranks and other shafts, wrist or crank pins, connecting-rods and piston-rods, pressed, sheared, or stamped shapes, or blanks of sheet or plate steel or combination of steel and iron punched or not punched, hammer molds or swaged steel, gun molds, not in bars, alloys used as substitutes for steel tools; all descriptions and shapes of drys and loam or iron molded steel castings; all of the above classes of steel not specially provided for in this act, valued at 4 cents a pound or less	45.00

A large number of articles in which no change of rate is made between the present and the proposed tariff—Continued.

Articles.	Tariff tax on each $100 worth under the present law and the Mills bill.
SCHEDULE C.—METALS—continued.
Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, etc.—continued:
Valued above 7 cents a pound and not above 10 cents per pound	$29.96
Above 10 cents per pound	3½ per pound... 18.30
Provided, That on all iron or steel bars, rods, strips, or steel sheets of whatever shape, and on all iron or steel bars of irregular shape or section, cold rolled, cold hammered, or polished in any way in addition to the ordinary process of hot rolling or hammering, there shall be paid one-fourth of a cent per pound in addition to the rates provided in this act; and on steel circular saw plates there shall be paid 1 cent per pound in addition to the rate provided in this act.
Iron or steel rivet, screw, nail, and fence wire, rods, round in coils and loops not lighter than No. 5 wire gauge, valued at 3½ cents or less per pound	31.47
Screws, commonly called wood-screws, 2 inches or over in length.	26.17
One inch and less than 2 inches in length	61.17
Over one-half inch and less than 1 inch in length	54.05
One-half inch and less in length	44.59
Iron or steel wire smaller than No. 5 and not smaller than No. 10 wire gauge	26.34
Smaller than No. 10 and not smaller than No. 16 wire gauge	45.04
Smaller than No. 16 and not smaller than No. 26 wire gauge	38.26
Smaller than No. 26 wire gauge	6.80
Provided, That iron or steel wire, covered with cotton, silk, or other material, and wire commonly known as crinoline, corset, and hat wire, shall pay 4 cents per pound in addition to the foregoing rates: And provided further, That no article made from iron or steel wire, or of which steel or iron is a component part of chief value, shall pay a less rate of duty than the iron or steel wire from which it is made, wholly or in part: And provided further, That iron or steel wire cloths and iron or steel wire nettings, made in meshes of any form, shall pay a duty equal in amount to that imposed on iron or steel wire of the same gauge, and 2 cents a pound in addition thereto. There shall be paid on galvanized iron or steel wire (except fence wire) one-half of 1 cent per pound in addition to the rate imposed on the wire of which it is made. On iron wire rope and iron wire strand, 1 cent per pound in addition to the rates imposed on the wire of which it is made. On steel wire rope and wire strand, 2 cents per pound in addition to the rates imposed on the wire of which it is made.
The Mills bill adds the following provision:
Iron and steel wire and iron and steel wire galvanized, and all manufacture of iron and steel wire and of iron and steel wire galvanized, shall pay the duties now provided by law: Provided, That no such duty shall be in excess of 60 per cent. ad valorem. Steel not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	45.00
Argentine Albata, or German silver unmanufactured	25.00
All composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value n. o. p	13.83
All manufactures of copper or of which copper shall be a component of chief value not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	35.00
Brass, in bars or pig, old brass, and clippings from brass or Dutch metal	13.90 / 8.76
Nickel, nickel oxide alloy of any kind in which nickel is the element of chief value	30.73
Bronze powder	15.00
Cutlery, n. o. p	35.00
Dutch or bronze metal in leaf	10.00
Steel plates, engraved, stereotype plates	25.00
Gold leaf	28.17
Muskets, rifles, and other fire-arms, n. o. p	25.00
All sporting breech-loading shotguns, and pistols of all kinds	35.00
Forged shotgun-barrels, rough-bored	10.00
Pen-knives, pocket-knives of all kinds, and razors	50.00
Swords, sword-blades, and side-arms	35.00
Pen-holders' tips and pen-holders or parts thereof	30.00
Pins, solid head or other	30.00
Britannia-ware and plaited and gilt articles and wares of all kinds	35.00
Silver leaf	19.57
SCHEDULE D.—WOOD AND WOODEN-WARES.
When lumber of any sort is planed or finished in addition to the rates herein provided there shall be levied and paid for each side so planed or finished 50 cents per 1,000 feet, board measure	7.00
And if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, $1 per 1,000 feet, board measure	7.00
And if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per 1,000 feet, board measure	7.00
The Mills bill adds the following provisions:
That if any export duty is laid upon the above-mentioned articles or either of them by any country whence imported, all said articles imported from said country shall be subject to duty as now provided by law.
House and cabinet furniture in piece or rough and not finished	30.00
Casks and barrels, empty, sugar-boxes, shooks and packing-boxes, and packing-box shooks of wood, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	30.00
SCHEDULE E.—SUGAR.
The Mills bill adds the following provisions:
Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act.
Sugar candy, not colored	59.29

A large number of articles in which no change of rate is made between the present and the proposed tariff—Continued.

Articles.	Tariff tax on each $100 worth under the present law and the Mills bill.
SCHEDULE F.—TOBACCO.
Cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots of all kinds, paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers	$107.94 / 134.87
Leaf-tobacco, of which 85 per cent. is of the requisite size and of the necessary fineness of texture to be suitable for wrappers and of which more than one hundred leaves are required to weigh a pound, if not stemmed	81.57
If stemmed. None imported in 1887.
All tobacco in leaf, unmanufactured and not stemmed	71.17
Tobacco stems	113.23
Tobacco, manufactured, of all descriptions, and stemmed tobacco not specially enumerated or provided for in this act	30.00
Snuff or snuff-flour, manufactured of tobacco ground, dry or damp and pickled, scented and otherwise, of all descriptions	150.04
Tobacco, unmanufactured, n. o. p	30.00
SCHEDULE G.—PROVISIONS.
Animals, live	20.00
Meat, extract of	20.00
Cheese	30.14
Butter and substitutes therefor	24.78
Lard	18.91
Wheat	17.16
Rye and barley	16.80

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 27, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 26, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. A. PRICE, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GENERAL WILLIAM F. SMITH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House the bill H. R. 9396 with a Senate amendment, for the relief of General William F. Smith.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask non-concurrence in the Senate amendment, and that a conference be asked.

Mr. ROGERS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again reported.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What rank does the bill give?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It gives him the rank of major; and we will agree upon that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is one of those cases where they take a man from private life and promote him.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. What is the amendment?

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 2 strike out "colonel" and insert "major of Engineers."

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If that course is to be taken, I will object to the present consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It simply reduces the rank.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I ask that it go to conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request to non-concur in the Senate amendment, and that a conference be asked?

Mr. CARLTON. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I ask that the bill be retained on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FRENCH, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PUGSLEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ATKINSON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, on account of important business.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to present the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 110 to the bill (H. R. 10540) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"For the building for the Library of Congress as herein provided for, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the cost of all professional and other personal services that the Chief of Engineers of the Army may deem necessary for the work and shall specially order, $500,000. This appropriation, and all appropriations hereafter made, and all sums available from appropriations heretofore made for this purpose, shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall have the control and management of all of said work and the employment of all persons connected therewith. And all contracts for the construction of said building, or any part thereof, shall be made by the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and so much of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library,' approved April 15, 1886, as requires the construction of said building substantially according to the plan submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer, and so much of the first section as provides for a commission, together with the eighth section of said act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and the duties of said commission under said act are hereby devolved upon the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall annually report to Congress, at the commencement of each session, a detailed statement of all the proceedings under the provisions of this act, and hereafter, until otherwise ordered by Congress, no work shall be done in the construction of said Library except such as is herein provided for, and all contracts for work or materials not necessary for the execution of the work contemplated herein are hereby rescinded. And all loss or damage occasioned thereby, or arising under said contracts, together with the value of the plan for a Library building submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, may be adjusted and determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to be paid out of the sums heretofore or hereby appropriated: Provided, That before any further contracts are let for the construction of said building, general plans for the entire construction thereof shall be prepared by or under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, which plans shall be subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the total cost of said building shall not exceed $4,000,000 exclusive of appropriations heretofore made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. H. FORNEY,
JAMES N. BURNES,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 110 to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1889, in explanation of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report, respectfully state:

That the agreement reached by the conferees is set forth in full in the conference report.

WM. H. FORNEY,
JAS. N. BURNES,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FORNEY was recognized.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a request in reference to the consideration of this report.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask the gentleman in charge of this report to let its consideration go over until to-morrow morning. I am informed by a friend of the senior Senator from the State of Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is absent from the city, that he will arrive here to-day. From the inception of this whole matter he has been chairman of the committee at the other end of the Capitol that has had it in charge, and has been very much interested in the subject, and he desires to be heard before a final conference report is agreed upon. I understand that if the House now agrees to this report the same report will be made in the Senate, and in view of what I have stated I ask that the consideration of the report be postponed until to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FORNEY. The Senate has not agreed to this report. It must be acted upon here first.

Mr. CHEADLE. Of course the Senate as a body has not agreed to it, but the Senate conference committee has.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. FORNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, this report is not in print, and it occurs to me that a matter of such grave importance ought to be considered with the report in print before the eyes of members. I have only heard it casually read, but there are serious objections to it, so far as I am concerned, which I would be unable to present with any degree of perspicuity or force without having an opportunity to analyze the report and compare it with the provisions of the statute now in force. Therefore I think that as a matter of justice, as a matter of right, as a matter of intelligent legislation, this report ought to be printed in the RECORD and permitted to lie over for one day, so that members may have an opportunity to examine it. There is no pressure upon us now, and I hope the gentleman from Alabama will consent to let the consideration of the report lie over until to-morrow, having it printed in the RECORD in the mean time.

Mr. FORNEY. I have no objection to its going over until to-morrow, but I trust that we shall get through with this matter some time or other. I know that we are not in a condition now to force it through, so I am willing to consent that it shall go over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the sundry civil is one of the most important of our appropriation bills, and I think it is quite time for some member of the House to express his most emphatic disapproval of the action of those who have delayed its passage to this late period of the session. The committee who have had the bill in charge have certainly done their duty, but they have met with hinderances and delays at every step.

I can not concur with the gentlemen who think the postponement of the proposed amendment is at all necessary to its intelligent consideration. The matter has been discussed over and over again for months, and the amendment has been printed in nearly all to-day's papers of this and other cities, and has certainly been read by every one anxious to inform himself upon the subject.

Notwithstanding my conviction that further delay is unnecessary, I shall not object to granting the indulgence requested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. I shall not, therefore, oppose the suggestion that action be deferred until to-morrow, but I take this opportunity to state that I shall then insist upon the consideration of this question without interruption until it is finally disposed of. I am not willing that it be carried over from day to day so as to jeopardize the continued prosecution of the work.

Every one who has had anything to do with public works will admit that temporary stoppages or delays consequent upon the failure of Congress to make appropriations is invariably followed by loss. The trained workmen who understand the work are scattered, and the unfinished portion of the work deteriorates.

Congress has started to build a Library, and must eventually push it to completion. No one in the House has yet suggested, or will now suggest, the abandonment of the undertaking, and all practical men will agree that the most economical course to pursue is to finish it with the least avoidable delay.

I believe we paid about $580,000 for the site. We then appropriated $500,000 with which to lay the foundation and commence the erection of the building.

I have examined into the matter, and find that the expenditures up to this time have been as I will read:

EXPENDED.

Clearing grounds, removing buildings, etc.:
Contracts	$2,717.50
Labor on rolls	10,567.43
		$13,284.93
Grading and terracing		8,533.98

Watchmen		5,369.49
Superintendence on outside work		7,155.01
		195,365.86

This leaves the sum of $304,635 still unexpended, but every dollar of this amount is bound up in contracts which are now being executed. These contracts can not be interfered with, and if Congress, by either its action or inaction, should suspend further work, necessitate the discharge of employés, and leave the undertaking or its supervision in doubt or uncertainty, it is very clear these contracts will be freed from needed scrutiny. I am therefore heartily in favor of continuing the work under the vigilant supervision of General Casey, the present able Chief Engineer of the Army.

The country will certainly rest satisfied that, under his direction, every dollar we appropriate will be expended honestly, judiciously, and to the best possible advantage.

I am as zealous for economy as any member of this House, but I think all practical business men will agree that the important question for us to decide is, not what kind of a building we shall erect, but that we shall so prosecute the business as to secure the full equivalent of every dollar we expend; and there can be no equivalent for the losses which must result from even the briefest suspension of the work upon this important and necessary structure.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not wish to interfere with the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]; but I want to ask his colleague [Mr. FORNEY] whether he intends to proceed with the consideration of the report this morning?

Mr. WHEELER. I had about completed what I wanted to say. I will only repeat that I shall to-morrow insist upon having this matter settled without further delay. If we stop work to discuss among ourselves whether we shall have a building limited in its cost to one amount or another, the result will be that we will finally expend the larger sum and discover that we have a building which should have cost less than the smallest sum which has been suggested.

I therefore desire to impress upon the House the importance of making an appropriation sufficient to continue the work uninterruptedly, and, in conclusion, to say that a failure to do this will certainly entail losses which would far exceed any amount we might hope to save by injudicious efforts to limit expenditure, no matter how excellent the intentions of those who advocate such a course.

Mr. FORNEY. I am perfectly willing to go on with the consideration of the report now, and would prefer to do so; but I am willing to be guided by the wishes of the House in the matter.

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest that the report, with the accompanying explanatory statement, be printed in the RECORD, and that the gentleman let the matter go over until to-morrow. I can not tell with certainty from the mere reading of the report whether or not my objections will be so serious as they appear to me now. I want to avoid, if possible, antagonizing the committee, but I can not tell whether I shall be able to do so until I see the report in print. Therefore I trust that we shall not consume any time upon this subject to-day, but that the gentleman in charge of it will consent that the report be printed and that its consideration shall go over for one day, so that we may see whether we can proceed in the manner proposed without running ourselves into another blunder and raising another public scandal in connection with this matter in the next Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore It is in the power of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] to call up the report at any time.

Mr. FORNEY. Then I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD, and that its consideration go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a request in connection with this subject. I have not been able to report to the House the conclusions reached by the committee appointed some time ago to investigate this matter of the Library building on account of not having a quorum of the committee present at the Capitol.

I hope that during the day there will be a quorum of the committee here. The report has been ready for some time. I ask unanimous consent that if during to-day the report can be signed by a majority of the committee it may be printed in the RECORD, so that its contents may be before the House to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that if the report from the committee charged with the investigation concerning the erection of the Congressional Library shall be ready for presentation during to-day, it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FORFEITURE OF NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

Mr. MCRAE. I rise to make a privileged report. I report back from the Committee on Public Lands the bill which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That all the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act approved July 2, A. D. 1864, except such as are adjacent to and coterminous with road constructed prior to July 4, A. D. 1879, with the right of way through the remainder of the route, including all necessary grounds for station buildings, shops, depots, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and excepting also all lands included within the limits of any village, town, or city, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited and restored to the public domain, because of the failure of said company to perform the conditions on which the grant was made.

SEC. 2. That the forfeiture herein declared shall not extend to lands adjacent to and coterminous with completed road sold by said company prior to January 1, 1888, to bona fide purchasers for value, but the title to such lands are hereby confirmed to such purchasers, their heirs, or assigns, upon condition that all persons claiming the benefit of this section shall, within one year after the passage of this act, make and file before the register and receiver of the proper land office, subject to an appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, proof of the good faith, consideration, date, and extent of his or her purchase; and after hearing such proofs and investigating each case the register and receiver shall determine whether any alleged purchase was in fact made in good faith, for a good and valuable consideration, prior to January 1, 1888, and shall note the finding in each case on the records of the local land office, and shall thereafter certify the same to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 3. That all settlers upon any of the lands forfeited by this act are hereby permitted and authorized to acquire title to not exceeding 160 acres in each case, as a homestead under and pursuant to the laws relating thereto, and in making final proof of such homestead the settler shall be allowed for the time he has already resided upon and cultivated the same.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House to discuss this bill unless there is some necessity for it. It is a very important measure, and involves more than 30,000,000 acres of land. I am ready to answer any questions that may be asked touching the bill. The principles involved were very thoroughly discussed during the consideration of the general forfeiture bill that passed some time since, and that I hoped would have become a law before this, but it is now apparent that the conferees on the part of the two Houses will not be able to agree on the general bill, and as the Senate appears disposed to consider each grant separately, the Committee on Public Lands think proper to present this measure, involving the forfeiture of the largest grant ever made in the United States, to be considered independent of any other grants. The bill is just to all concerned. It gives the company all the lands earned in the time fixed in the granting act. It protects fully and completely all bona fide purchasers as well as settlers, and simply takes so much of the grant as is now claimed by the company coterminus with unconstructed road or road built out of time. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HIGHWAY BRIDGE, LAKE CHAMPLAIN, VERMONT.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 544, and that the same be now considered in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 544) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the county of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont.

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper authorities of the towns of North Hero and Grand Isle, in the county of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and use a highway bridge at a suitable point across the channel which lies between the islands of North Hero and South Hero and between the two towns aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the structure authorized by the preceding section shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of such waters as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and shall be provided with such suitable and convenient draw as the said Secretary shall deem needful for the proper purposes of navigation, of width not less than that of the draw in the bridge between the towns of Alburgh, and North Hero, Vt.; and the maintenance and management of said structure shall be subject to such of the provisions of section 6 of chapter 52 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress as the Secretary of War may, from time to time, deem needful; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law whenever the public good shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOURTH COLLECTION DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (S. 2613) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to amend section 2552 of the Revised Statutes, and to change the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia," approved June 15, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, further amended so that it shall read:

"That the district of Newport News shall comprise all the waters and shores from the point forming the south shore of the mouth of the Rappahannock River, along the coast of the Chesapeake Bay, to Back River light-house; thence to a point south of Old Point Comfort midway in the channel of Hampton Roads; thence in a southwesterly direction to Pig Point light-house; thence along the south shore of the James River to a point on the peninsula formed by the James and York Rivers opposite Williamsburgh, and thence across said peninsula to the south bank of the York River, so as to embrace in said district, in addition to the ports heretofore included, Hampton and Newport News; in which Newport News shall be the port of entry, and Yorktown a port of delivery."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of the said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read:

"SEC. 2. The district of Norfolk and Portsmouth to comprise all the waters and shores within the State of Virginia southward of the district of Newport News, as above described, and not included in the districts of Petersburgh and Richmond; in which Norfolk and Portsmouth shall be the sole ports of entry, and Suffolk and Smithfield the ports of delivery."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will ask whether there is a report on this bill from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DUNN. There is. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury; it has been passed by the Senate, and reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce of the House. It creates no new office, and provides for the expenditure of no additional money. Its object is simply to facilitate business in this collection district.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, House bill No. 1890, similar in purport to the Senate bill just passed, will lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 599.

Mr. ABBOTT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a privileged question. At the adjournment of the House on the day before yesterday there was pending a bill of which I hope the title will be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend a moment while a message from the Senate is received.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate has concurred in the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1500) granting a pension to Margaret M. Miller; and

A bill (S. 2346) granting increase of pension to Jennie Hart Mullany.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to Lieut. Starkey R. Powell, of the Black Hawk war;

A bill (H. R. 10934) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell town-site maps or plats remaining on hand in his office;

A bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district of the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to continue the provisions of existing law providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond Du Lac military reservation in the State of Minnesota; and

A bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3460) to appropriate $10,000 for the completion of the monument commemorating the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga; and

A bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House the following appropriation bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, and hope it will meet with the approval of the judgment of the House, to immediately non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Missouri, in the first place, how many of these amendments there are, and in the second place, whether any of them involve large sums of money?

Mr. BURNES. There are two items, I believe, which involve two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BLOUNT. Are they strictly deficiencies?

Mr. BURNES. I think the conferees can act on them as well as the committee itself, and particularly as it is difficult to get a quorum of the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri will be carried out, as it will have the effect to expedite our business.

Mr. DUNN. I shall not object, but rise to ask a question. As I have not had an opportunity to examine the Senate amendments which have just been received by the House, I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether they include an amendment creating a land office in what is known as the Public Land Strip, or No Man's Land?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, I think they do. I understand there is a provision attaching No Man's Land to the State of Kansas.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to say here and now that the friends of the Oklahoma bill understand very well the policy of trying to enforce that provision, both in a separate bill and upon appropriation bills. I want to give notice now that I will not consent to the passage of this bill with such an amendment. It is well understood that the whole purpose and object is to defeat the Oklahoma bill, as well perhaps as to boom a town site in the State of Kansas.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask, by unanimous consent, that the amendments of the Senate be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

1. Strike out "To pay J. R. Young, late minister to China, salary from July 1, to September 4. 1885, $2,152.17" and insert: "To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of salaries of ministers, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1886, $5,661.04."

2. Insert: "Salaries chargés d'affaires ad interim: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of salaries of chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1887, $2,053.29."

11. Strike out "$500" and insert "$1,426.89;" so it will read: "$1,426.89."

12. Insert: "Expenses of international monetary conferences: To pay S. Dana Horton for additional services as delegate of the United States to the international monetary conference of 1878, and secretary to the commission in and about the preparation of the document of said conference known as Senate Executive Document No. 58, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, and for additional services as delegate and secretary to the monetary conference of 1881, in and about the preparation of reports of said conference, and for services in said year relating to the proposed monetary conference of 1882, $10,000."

13. Insert: "Salaries, office of depositary at Tucson: For depositary, in addition to his pay as postmaster, $700, being the difference between the amount of salary per annum of this officer, $1,500, under the act of May 8, 1872, creating the office, and the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, $700."

14. Insert: "Wages and contingent expenses, assay office at Boisé City: To reimburse Henry F. Weld, assayer in charge, for amount paid to Kelly & Krebs for subscription to Idaho Statesman one year from December, 1885, $12.

"To reimburse same for amount paid to P. H. Lannan for Daily Tribune from November, 1885, $12.

"To pay Milton Kelly, publisher of Idaho Statesman, for advertising for supplies at Boisé City, May, 1886, $12."

15. Insert: "Government in the Territories."

16. Insert: "Territory of Dakota: For salaries of two additional associate justices of the supreme court of said Territory, provided for by the act approved August 9, 1888, from date of qualification in office, at the rate of $3,000 each per year, being for the service of the fiscal year 1889, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

17. Insert: "Territory of New Mexico: For salary of the additional associate justice of the supreme court of said Territory, provided for by the act approved February 28, 1887, from date of qualification in office to June 30, 1887, $841.67."

18. Strike out: "Relief of William Caldwell: To reimburse William Caldwell, as custodian of the custom-house at Cincinnati, Ohio, the amount of a certified check, drawn by Sol. P. Kineon in his favor on the Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati, which failed before the presentation of said check, for payment as a guaranty for the faithful performance of Kineon of his contracts for furnishing coal to the Government: Provided, That any dividends that have been or may be declared on this account shall be covered into the Treasury, $1,811."

19. Insert: "Punishment for violation of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1887, $2,500."

29. Insert: "Refund to Iselin, Neeser & Co.: To repay to Messrs. Iselin, Neeser & Co. amount of excessive interest collected in error by the United States district attorney at New York in the settlement (without suit) of a claim against said firm for duties on merchandise imported by them, the amount having been covered into the Treasury, $80.96."

30. Insert: "Light-stations."

31. Insert: "Castle Hill light-station, Rhode Island: That the appropriations made for the establishment and completion of a light-house and fog-signal at Castle Hill, entrance to Newport Harbor, Rhode Island, by the acts of August 4, 1886, and March 30, 1888, are hereby made available without condition for the purchase of a suitable site at the entrance of said harbor, and for the erection and completion of the light-house and fog-signal."

32. Insert: "Reimbursement of keepers of light-stations for personal losses: To reimburse the keepers of light-stations at Matagorda, Tex., and Sabine Pass, La., for personal losses incurred by them during the storms of August and October, 1886, $582.75."

33. Insert: "Relief of Maj. Jared A. Smith, United States Army: To enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Maj. Jared A. Smith, United States Army, late engineer of the fifth and sixth light-house districts, for Mosquito Inlet light-station, Florida, third quarter of 1884, authority is hereby granted for the allowance of the sum of $235.25, being the balance of a payment made by him under authority of the Secretary of the Treasury for expenses incurred in connection with the transportation and interment of the remains of Maj. O. E. Babcock, United States Army, formerly engineer of said districts, and burial of the remains of L. P. Luckey, his clerk, who were drowned while attempting to land on the coast of Florida for the purpose of inspecting the work of constructing the light-house at Mosquito Inlet, Florida."

34. Insert: "Territorial governments."

35. Insert: "Contingent expenses, Territory of Washington."

36. Insert: "To reimburse Eugene Semple, governor of Washington Territory, amount expended by him, as per vouchers submitted, on account of contingent expenses of Territory of Washington for the fiscal year 1887, $64."

37. Under heading "District of Columbia," strike out: "For the redemption of one certificate of indebtedness issued by authority of section 7 of the act of Legislative Assembly, approved June 25, 1873, dated July 1, 1873, of the denomination of $50, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, numbered 1371, payable July 1, 1874, $110."

38. Insert: "The average annual salary of teachers in the public schools of the District of Columbia provided for in 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes,' approved July 18, 1888, shall be not to exceed $673.60."

39. Newman, $18,430.56, certified to Congress as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session."

52. Insert: "For transportation of the Army and its supplies: To pay the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and other claimants enumerated in Schedule

C, House Executive Document No. 210, pages 23 and 24, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, the sums severally reported therein, $97,704.57; said sums having heretofore been reported by the Secretary of the Treasury as audited claims, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, and enumerated in House Executive Documents Nos. 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, under 'Transportation of the Army and its supplies.'"

53. Insert: "That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit and allow to Lieut. Col. R. N. Batchelder, deputy quartermaster-general, the voucher for $850 for horses purchased for the use of the War Department on May 15, 1885, and the voucher for $500 for a similar purchase made March 22, 1886, and to charge the same, respectively, to the appropriations for contingencies of the Army for the years 1885 and 1886."

54. Insert: "Rent, etc., Citadel Academy, South Carolina: To pay the amount reported as due by the Secretary of War in pursuance of the joint resolution approved August 14, 1888, to the State of South Carolina for rent of the Citadel Academy at Charleston, S. C., from August 20, 1867, to February 2, 1882, including the sum equitably due to the said State for the loss by fire of the west wing of said building while in the occupation of the United States, $77,250: Provided, That this sum shall be accepted in full payment of all claims for rent, wear and tear, and injury to the property by fire, or from any other cause whatever due to the said occupancy by the United States."

55. Insert: "Reimbursement to certain States and Territories for expenses incurred in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities, act June 27, 1882, $11,723.64."

56. Insert: "Contingent expenses, Navy Department: To pay to John Wanamaker for stationery furnished the Navy Department and offices for the fiscal year 1887, $219.58."

57. Insert: "To reimburse the appropriations 'Ordnance and ordnance stores, Bureau of Ordnance, 1886,' $36, and 'contingent, Bureau of Ordnance, 1886,' $3, for amounts erroneously paid therefrom; in all, $39."

58. Insert: "To reimburse the following appropriations for amounts erroneously paid therefrom:

"Construction and repair, Bureau Construction and Repair, 1886, $12.50."

59. Insert: "Contingent, Bureau Equipment and Recruiting, 18 6, $9.50."

60. Insert: "Contingent, Bureau of Navigation, 1886, $3; in all, $25."

61. Insert: "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses Hydrographic Office: To reimburse Pay-Director T. H. Looker, United States Navy, for amounts paid the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company for exchange rental for the branch Hydrographic Office, Washington, D. C., from the appropriation 'pay, miscellaneous, 1887,' the accounting officers claiming that these expenditures should have been paid from the appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $23.33."

62. Insert: "Naval establishment."

63. Insert: "Pay, miscellaneous: To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers for actual expenses while traveling under orders, $787.12."

64. Insert: "That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to settle the accounts of the cadet-engineer graduates who are affected by the act of July 9, 1888, fixing their status in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to allow them the difference between the pay they have already received as cadets and that of assistant engineers from July 1, 1883, to July 1, 1884, respectively; and a sum sufficient to pay the amount found due is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

65. Insert: "To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of advertising, being for the service of the fiscal year 1887, $14."

66. Insert: "For amount paid by Pay-Director A. W. Russell, United States Navy, to Matthew Wilson, for painting portrait of ex-Secretary Chandler, on bills approved by Hon. William C. Whitney, Secretary of the Navy, being for the service of the fiscal year 1886, $331.50."

67. Insert: "Contingent, Navy: For amount paid by Pay-Director Thomas H. Looker, United States Navy, to E. F. Mr. SPINOLA. I rise for the purpose of making a suggestion, and I reserve the right to object until I can ask a question. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether it is not customary, on a proposition involving so many items as are included in the amendments of the Senate, to have those amendments printed and let them go over instead of referring them at once to a conference committee to be reported back in gross and then voted upon as a whole. Ought they not go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and be there considered one by one? Ought they not to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and reported back with the recommendations of that committee before we are asked to act on them?

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from New York: Suppose there is no quorum of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SPINOLA. Very well; there is no quorum here in the House; and I will say to my friend from Georgia that if there is no quorum present in the Committee on Appropriations let the Sergeant-at-Arms be ordered to bring in the absentees.

Mr. BLOUNT. The subcommittee always has charge of such a bill.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to say to my friend from New York, as one of the probable conferees on this bill, that I think I understand the wishes and temper of the House in regard to all these amendments. I think I understand the objection the gentleman from New York has to one of these propositions, and I assure him, so far as I am concerned, the matter shall have full and fair consideration. If any gentleman wishes to appeal to the House in reference to any matter, I think I can assure the House it will go to the House for consideration. Therefore the gentleman from New York will see that no possible injury can be done to any member.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I made the motion to print the amendments in the RECORD so that members might have an opportunity to examine them before the committee of conference could make any report upon them.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the amendments be numbered, and that the bill and amendments be printed for the use of the House. That can be done by this evening or to-morrow morning, and every member can have a copy before him. I can assure the gentleman from New York, and all others, that they shall have opportunity for a fair hearing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add to what was stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], and in view of the fact that my distinguished colleague [Mr. BURNES] will probably be a member of the conference committee, that understanding the amendment (being section 7 of the bill) incorporated by the Senate to be antagonistic to the bill now pending before the House known as the Oklahoma bill, and to prevent him from misunderstanding my action hereafter, I shall for one insist upon the presence of a quorum before that amendment shall be adopted by the House.

Mr. BURNES. All gentlemen will have an opportunity of presenting their views on the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to add a word. That so much of the amendment as proposes to attach the Public Land Strip to any portion of the State of Kansas will be as strenuously objected to by myself as by any other member on the floor. If the Land Strip is to be organized into a land district at all it should be a separate district. It contains three and a half millions of acres, and I am confident when the subject is carefully considered the House will not consent to add it to any of the adjacent territory. I shall object to any other arrangement than that I have indicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BURNES. I have also requested that the bill be printed and the amendments numbered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that request to have been also granted.

The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SAYERS, and the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. RYAN.

Mr. PAYSON. I understood when the request was made that this matter was to lie over until the bill was printed and the amendments numbered, so that they might be considered by the members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand. The request of the gentleman from Missouri was to non-concur in all of the Senate amendments and agree to the conference.

Mr. PAYSON. Of course, then, the House should understand that the question will be presented directly upon the acceptance or rejection of the conference report as an entirety.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will state the request again.

Mr. BURNES. I suppose that has been already settled.

Mr. BLOUNT. It seems not.

Mr. PAYSON. After hearing an explanation from the gentleman from Missouri, I shall not make any objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that, and let us have the morning hour.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana calls up a privileged report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

RELIEF FOR YELLOW-FEVER INFECTED DISTRICTS.

Mr. BURNES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the Senate joint resolution No. 110 with an amendment thereof in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will state to the House that the resolution presented by the gentleman from Missouri refers to the yellow-fever sufferers in the South, and I ask unanimous consent that it be read and considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be read subject to the right of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 110, in aid of the sufferers from the yellow fever.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another, or in the suppression of or preventing the spread of said diseases, or either of them, in infected districts."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was adopted.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOUGHERTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

FILING OF REPORTS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees for reports be dispensed with, and also that gentlemen be allowed to file their reports with the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

MILES F. WEST.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1156) for the relief of Miles F. West; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE H. OWEN.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11495) for the relief of George H. Owen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour for the consideration of bills begins at eight minutes before 1 o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I believe the Military Committee has the call in this hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Naval Committee was called yesterday.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think they have concluded their business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Military Committee was passed on the call, but afterwards upon the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] they were allowed to occupy the hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was not aware of that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary question before proceeding with the consideration of bills reported from the committee: whether it will be in order to take up for consideration a bill which has passed the House and been amended by the Senate, and is now on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the committee could call up any bill that may have been reported from the committee on a previous day, except private bills.

The Chair is informed, however, that the bill to which the gentleman refers is a private bill, and would not be in order on this call.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I call up the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9409) for the erection of an academic building and gymnasium at West Point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider that bill, and others that may be called up by the committee.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to continue the provisions of existing law providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government; when the Speaker signed the same.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

NEW BUILDINGS AT WEST POINT.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9409) for the erection of an academic building and gymnasium at West Point.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for public buildings at the Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.:

For the erection of a fire-proof building, on such site of the public grounds at West Point, N. Y., as may be designated by the Secretary of War, to accommodate all the departments of instruction of the Military Academy, to be constructed according to the plans recommended by the Academic Board and approved by the Secretary of War, $490,000: Provided, That the building, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Academic Board, shall not exceed in cost the sum herein stated.

For the erection of a fire-proof building, on such site of the public grounds at West Point, N. Y., as may be designated by the Secretary of War, to be used as a gymnasium and fencing academy for the cadets of the United States Military Academy, to be constructed according to the plans recommended by the Academic Board and approved by the Secretary of War, $100,000: Provided, That the building, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Academic Board, shall not exceed in cost the sum herein stated.

Mr. SPINOLA. What is the amount carried by the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Four hundred and ninety thousand dollars. I ask action on the bill.

Mr. OATES. I would like to hear some explanation of the necessity for this building.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will explain the necessity for the building. The report on this matter is quite lengthy, and therefore I will not ask that it be read. I will state, however, that the object of the bill is to erect an academic building and gymnasium at West Point for use in the instruction of the cadets. Having been a visitor at the last examination at West Point, I investigated the condition of the buildings, and can speak on that point from my own knowledge.

I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that upon examination of the buildings I was satisfied that the health, safety, and proper instruction of the cadets at West Point absolutely depend upon the construction of this building. The building now used for that purpose is a very ancient one, which is in a very unhealthy condition. The last Congress appropriated an amount to construct a new building, but upon investigation by the Academic Board it was found that the sum was not large enough to construct such a building as was necessary, and therefore not a dollar of that money has been used. It has been left in the Treasury. Plans and designs have been draughted and submitted to the Secretary of War and the Academic Board and the Board of Visitors; and these have come to but one conclusion, and that is that they are such as ought to be adopted, and that just such a building as is suggested should be constructed. Upon the Board of Visitors were my friend from New York [Mr. BACON], Judge REAGAN, of Texas, and Senator CULLOM, of Illinois. Upon a careful examination we were unanimously of opinion that the building ought to be constructed, not only for the health of the students, but for their proper instruction, and also for their very safety.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend from Illinois state the amount to be appropriated for this building?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the amount of the bill is about half a million dollars for the Academy. That, however, provides for a gymnasium.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would request my friend to let this matter go over; it is so late in the session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of course, if the gentleman from Indiana shall object to the consideration of this bill, he or any other member on this floor has it in his power to prevent its passage; but in my honest judgment if he were on the ground or had examined the condition of things there he would be the first gentleman in this House to demand that we should construct such a building. Of course the gentleman has not been there, and he is not willing to take my testimony, nor the testimony of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], nor the testimony of the officers of the War Department, and if he decides to object to the bill he has the right to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we ought to let it go over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If you let it go over, you are endangering the health and the proper instruction of the boys that you and I and other members are sending to West Point to be instructed.

Mr. HOLMAN. When did this project first spring up?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They have been asking for it for years; but I believe that it has been denied on account of some sort of narrow-minded views in regard to economy. But, sir, when I went with Judge REAGAN, who is as great an economist as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], he was of the opinion that it was an outrage and no one could tolerate such a condition of affairs as existed at West Point, and every one at once signed the report which asks for the passage of this bill. I know the gentleman from Indiana would agree to this matter if he could only go and see for himself the exact condition of affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was that measure passed by the House in the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the last Congress an appropriation was made, but it was not large enough.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer another question? What he has answered is in regard to the academic building?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. The appropriation for that is $490,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes. I forget the amount for the gymnasium, but I think it is $100,000. The gynasium, as my friend knows, is about as necessary for the proper instruction of the cadets as any other educational feature.

Mr. OATES. I want to know how it happens that $100,000 is necessary to erect a gymnasium for the boys there.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, that question has been thoroughly gone into by the officers of the War Department and by the officers at West Point, and their conclusion is that that is as small a sum as can be wisely used for the purpose. I am not an architect and therefore I can not say anything further about it, except that I believe the gentlemen who have investigated and reported upon the question understand it and are entitled to credit.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this is of such great importance and urgency, how does it happen that it did not go into the general appropriation bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Because notice was not given to the committee until after the bill had been reported and had passed the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the necessity was not so pressing after all.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken about that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, in the distribution of duties imposed upon the Board of Visitors the examination of public buildings at West Point was assigned to a committee of which I was chairman. The present academic building was constructed, I believe, more than fifty years ago. The basement of it was a cellar which was used for storage purposes, but in the course of time they modified it and it is now used in part for a gymnasium. In the Forty-ninth Congress the insufficiency and insecurity of the present buildings at West Point was brought to the attention of Congress, and an appropriation was made for the reconstruction of the academic building.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much?

Mr. BACON. The amount I do not remember.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was supposed to be sufficient, though?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir. When that appropriation had been made, the matter was referred to the Academic Board for the purpose of having plans prepared for the changes necessary to be made. The building was then examined, and it was found that the timbers were rotten, that the walls were weak, and that the only way to repair it satisfactorily would be to substantially reconstruct it. Therefore, under the circumstances, the officers in charge at West Point very properly deferred any reconstruction of the building because it could not be done satisfactorily within the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, it is too late in the season to do much in that way now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. No, sir; the building can be taken down and preparations can be made. A plan has been prepared by the Academic Board, without cost, which will furnish adequate provision for the work of the Academy. At the present time the library building is occupied by the professors in the scientific branches of instruction, and their instruments are clustered together in a way which makes it impossible to use them satisfactorily. Some building has got to be constructed, and the one proposed is simply sufficient for the purpose. A gymnasium building in addition to that is necessary for the education of the cadets, for this reason: Everybody who knows anything about the climate there knows that for about five months in the year it is impossible to drill the boys outdoors, or give them the necessary exercise, and the plan proposes a gymnasium which will furnish not only a place for gymnastic exercises, but also a place where the boys can be drilled and given the necessary instruction in the manual of arms and tactical movements at all seasons of the year. In the judgment of all the gentlemen in charge at West Point both these buildings are essential to the successful carrying on of the work of the institution. I am not favoring unnecessarily large expenditures there or anywhere else, but it is simply a question of whether we shall save time by giving this authority now and getting this work under way. During the fall and winter the stone can be gotten out and when the spring comes the actual construction of the buildings can begin. If the matter is deferred until the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, the result will be that no work can be done until after the 1st of July, 1889, and in that way four or five of the best months in the year will be lost.

Mr. SPINOLA was recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to my colleague on the committee [Mr. SPINOLA] that I think it best under the circumstances to withdraw the bill for the present.

Mr. SPINOLA. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced from the information I have received that there will be opposition to the passage of this bill, and as I do not desire to waste the time allotted to our committee, I will withdraw the bill, as we can bring it up again in December next.

I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

APPROACHES TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, SALISBURY, N. C.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 10187) to provide for grading and paving the approaches to the national cemetery near Salisbury, N. C.

The bill was read.

Mr. TILLMAN. In order to save time, I ask to dispense with the reading of the report, and will state to the House that by instruction of the committee I desire to offer two short amendments.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him one moment?

Mr. TILLMAN. I would be glad if the gentleman would let me make a brief statement.

Mr. KILGORE. I can save time by saying that I will not consent to the passage of this bill unless there is a quorum present.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill.

BATTLE-FIELD OF GETTYSBURGH.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

Mr. MAISH. I desire to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 10) relating to the inclosure of certain points of especial interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That whenever the fence which now incloses Lafayette Square in the city of Washington is removed, the Secretary of War is hereby directed to deliver the same to the Gettysburgh Battle-field Memorial Association, at Gettysburgh, Pa., for the purpose of inclosing points of especial interest on the Gettysburgh battle-field.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, in the sundry civil bill about to become a law, provision is made for the removal of the iron fence now inclosing Lafayette Square in this city; and unless otherwise provided, that fence will be sold for old iron. This bill proposes to utilize the fence for the purpose of inclosing points of interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What appropriation does the joint resolution carry?

Mr. MAISH. It makes no appropriation; it simply proposes to utilize in the manner I have stated a fence which would otherwise be sold as old iron. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The joint resolution was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

ARMS, ETC., FOR OREGON MILITIA.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms, ammunition, and equipage to the State of Oregon for the militia thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the militia organizations of the State of Oregon, already perfected now embrace three regiments of infantry, with one unattached battery of light artillery and one troop of cavalry, and these are in urgent need of arms and equipments by reason of the inadequate supply due the State through its regular annual quota provided by law; and

Whereas the population of Oregon, in view of its recent rapid growth, is now double that number required as the basis for representation in Congress, and therefore justly entitled to twice its present annual quota of arms and equipments; and

Whereas Oregon contains within its limits five Indian reservations, aggregating within them about 4,000 Indians, and these reservations are located in widely variant sections of the State, throughout which there is but one United States military post, with but one company of infantry; and that along the 300 miles of unguarded seacoast, as well as frontier of the State, there are many exposed localities which may at any time experience the necessity of home defense against sudden raids; and

Whereas several Territories, including Alaska, are without militia organizations, and their quotas remain uncalled for, and the amounts are annually covered back into the Treasury, instead of being apportioned to those States having a deficiency of arms and equipments: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause 1,000 stand of improved Springfield rifles, caliber .45, model 1884; 60 Springfield cadet rifles, caliber .45; 660 shell extractors; 660 screw-drivers; 660 wiping-rods; 132 tumbler punches; 33 spring-vises; 33 arm-chests; 660 bayonet-scabbards; 660 cartridge-boxes; 660 wrist-belts and plates; 2,000 rifle ball-cartridges; 4,000 rifle blank cartridges; 2 Gatling guns, caliber .45; 2 carriages and timbers for Gatling guns (wood); 2 gun-covers; 4 handspikes; 2 sight-cases; 2 oilers; 2 hammers; 2 wrenches, to be forwarded to and placed at the disposal of the governor of the State of Oregon, at Salem, in said State, for distribution among the militia organizations of the State which may be deficient in the material herein provided for, and said property shall be receipted and accounted for the same as that embraced in all requisitions on the regular annual quotas provided for by law; and when the regular quotas annually due said State shall be sufficient to cover the requirements of the militia thereof, and the arms and camp equipage herein provided for shall be no longer necessary for the use of said militia, the same, where practicable, shall be accounted for and returned to the United States.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I have called up this bill for the accommodation of an absent colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], and also for the accommodation of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], to whom I now yield for any explanation he may desire to make.

Mr. HERMANN. I will merely state that this bill has been introduced in pursuance of the request of the State authorities of Oregon.

A requisition was made by that State upon the Secretary of War for arms, ammunition, etc., as specified in the bill; but in response to the application it was stated by the War Department that it would be necessary for Congress to authorize the Department specifically to distribute these arms, etc., to the State of Oregon, subject to the order of the governor thereof. The facts are set forth in the preamble of the bill; and I presume it is not necessary to go into any further explanation. I therefore call for a vote.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

On line 21 of the bill, after the word "for," insert "the same;" and on said line strike out the word "all;" and on line 23 strike out all of the bill after the word "sufficient" and insert the following: "therefor the said annual quotas shall be credited to the said State until the advance of arms, ordnance, and stores hereby made shall be offset and balanced by said annual quotas."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ENLISTED MEN OF SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up the bill (H. R. 9907) to make enlisted men of the Signal Corps responsible for public property.

The bill was read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 2519 be substituted for the bill just read.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done, because the Senate bill referred to is not in the Committee of the Whole, but on the House Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the bill for the present.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up the bill (H. R. 10190) providing for an Assistant Secretary of War.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an officer to be called the Assistant Secretary of War, whose salary shall be $5,000 per annum, and who shall perform all such duties in the War Department as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War or as may be required by law, and who shall act as Secretary of War in the absence of that officer.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that this bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] now has the floor, and until his time has expired the report can not be read except with his consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to my friend from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], whom I wish to accommodate, especially on this occasion, that the report on this bill is rather lengthy, and I do not wish to consume the time of the House in having it read if the gentleman is going to persist in objecting to the bill.

The bill needs no explanation. There is now no assistant secretary of war, and when the Secretary is absent he has to detail the head of some bureau—the Adjutant-General, or the Commissary-General, or the Quartermaster-General—to take charge of the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. What salary is proposed for this officer?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He is to receive the ordinary salary paid to other assistant secretaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much?

Mr. SPINOLA. Five thousand dollars, I believe.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is a matter of pressing importance to the business of the Department that this officer should be provided for. There are three Assistant Postmasters-General and two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. There is absolute necessity for an assistant secretary of war.

But I do not intend to consume time in pressing this or any other bill, if it is going to lead to debate or contention. If the gentleman from Texas can not see upon the face of the measure its importance and necessity, I will withdraw it, trusting to bring it again to the attention of the House at the next session.

Mr. KILGORE. I could not agree to allow this bill to pass under the present circumstances.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I withdraw the bill.

NATIONAL MILITARY CEMETERY, ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I ask, by unanimous consent, this bill be allowed to pass. We can not pass bills any other way. How much time is left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up the bill (H. R. 5691) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the city of Alexandria, Va., to the National military cemetery at that city.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a road and approaches from the city of Alexandria, State of Virginia, to the National military cemetery near that city.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the sixth line insert the word "gravel" before the word "road," and in the eighth line add after the word "city" the following proviso:

"Provided, That a right of way at least 50 feet wide or the full width of Wilkes street, east of Alfred street, in said city of Alexandria, should first be obtained before any money is spent under the appropriation."

Mr. KILGORE. I made a row about a similar bill for North Carolina, and it would not be fair to allow this to go through.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Would it not be better to give up on North Carolina as well as on this one for Virginia?

Mr. KILGORE. I could not do that to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will state that this bill was introduced by General LEE, of Virginia, and as he is not present I can do nothing more than withdraw the bill. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, had directed him to report back a bill and joint resolution with the recommendation that they do pass.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED.

Joint resolution (S. R. 10) relating to the inclosure of certain points of especial interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with a favorable recommendation was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

A bill (H. R. 5009) to provide certain arms and ammunition and equipage to the State of Oregon for the militia thereof, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with a favorable recommendation, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bill and joint resolution were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT LOWELL MILITARY RESERVATION, ARIZONA.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] to call up a bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 1938) to reduce the Fort Lowell military reservation in Arizona, and will yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Fort Lowell military reservation, in Pima County, Arizona, as established by the President of the United States, by order of date the 26th of October, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, reduced in dimensions as follows, to wit: Said reservation shall consist of a tract of land 5 miles in length by 4 miles in width, and bounded as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of said reservation, as now established by Executive order, and running thence east 4 miles, thence south 5 miles, thence west 4 miles, thence north 5 miles to place of beginning.

SEC. 2. That the remainder of said reservation, as established by said Executive order, is hereby restored to the public domain.

The report (by Mr. MAISH) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred H. R. 1938, respectfully report an amendment to said bill, as follows: Strike out the word "four," in lines 8, 11, and 12, and insert in lieu thereof the word "five" in each of said lines, and that when so amended, the bill do pass.

Such reduction of that reservation will be of no detriment to the service, as shown by the accompanying letter of the Secretary of War, which is made a part of this report.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, March 2, 1888.

SIR: In reply to the request of your committee, dated the 7th ultimo, for the views of the Department upon House bill No. 1938, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to reduce the Fort Lowell military reservation in Arizona, I have the honor to invite attention to the accompanying report upon the subject, dated the 29th ultimo, by the Lieutenant-General of the Army, who states that with the words "four miles," in lines 8, 11, and 12 of section 1, amended to "five miles," the passage of the bill would be of no detriment to the service.

I concur in this opinion of the Lieutenant-General.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SPINOLA. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. That has been recommended by the Secretary of War and by General Sheridan, and I do not see how there can be any objection to it. It will have the effect to give a title to men who settled there before the reservation was created.

Mr. HOLMAN. That land, I understand, is in a valley.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Oh, no; there is a settlement of half a dozen men along a little creek.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ought not homestead entry to apply to those lands?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. There is not a foot of that land which I know of that can be brought into cultivation without water.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPINOLA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up from the House Calendar a bill (S. 2519) to make enlisted men of the Signal Corps responsible for public property.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, from and after the passage of this act, every officer of the Signal Corps, every non-commissioned officer or private of the Signal Corps, and all other officers, agents, or persons, who now have in possession, or may hereafter receive or may be intrusted with any stores or supplies, shall quarterly or more often, if so directed, and in such manner and on such forms as may be prescribed by the Chief Signal Officer, make true and correct returns to the Chief Signal Officer of all Signal Service property and all other supplies and stores of every kind received by or intrusted to them and each of them, or which may, in any manner, come into their and each of their possession or charge. The Chief Signal Officer, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized and directed to draw up and enforce in his bureau a system of rules and regulations for the government of the Signal Bureau, and of all persons in said bureau, and for the safe-keeping and preservation of all Signal Service property of every kind, and to direct and prescribe the kind, number, and form of all returns and reports, and to enforce compliance therewith.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I suppose there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. It simply provides that officers of the Signal Corps shall be responsible for property intrusted to them. As it is now the Chief Signal Officer is held responsible for all property, no matter where it may be. I ask the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 9907) on the same subject will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FRESH AIR IN ENGINE-ROOMS OF STEAMERS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] to introduce a bill.

Mr. CRAIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11510) to compel owners of steamers to supply fresh air to the engine-rooms; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

MILITARY RESERVATION, PLATTSBURGH, N. Y.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11252) to construct a road from the village of Plattsburgh, N. Y., through and along the Government military reservation in said village.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the bill be laid aside——

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think I would be in a condition to agree to that to-day unless there is a quorum present. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of course, if the gentleman insists upon a quorum, although I think it a meritorious bill, and if my friend would examine it he would reach the same conclusion; but I understand the situation, and withdraw the bill.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

NATIONAL CEMETERY, FREDERICKSBURGH, VA.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1907) to provide for macadamizing the road from the railroad to the national cemetery in the city of Fredericksburgh, Va.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MAISH. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to having the sense of the House taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to lay this bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

If everybody votes for it and I against it, I will have to call a quorum. If you want to go that far I have no objection.

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman from Texas will not call a quorum, I understand.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, yes, I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRUBLE. That is quite a difference of opinion.

Mr. MAISH. Then I withdraw the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. All right.

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman says he has no objection to my withdrawing it.

Mr. KILGORE. None whatever.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the bills we have marked for consideration to-day are of such a character as perhaps would be objected to by the gentleman from Texas or other gentlemen, who have declared that they do not wish bills of this class to be passed without a quorum. I will therefore move that the committee now rise. It is useless to present bills and have to withdraw them because of the question of no quorum being raised.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration sundry bills, had come to no resolution thereon.

BONDS OF DISBURSING AND OTHER OFFICERS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill H. R. 8873, with Senate amendment, a bill in relation to bonds of disbursing or other officers, and to monthly payments of the Army.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This bill is one that will probably provoke some considerable discussion, and as there is but little time now remaining of the hour, not enough to consider the bill, I ask unanimous consent that it may go over until the next hour, and that the morning hour of to-day may be considered as having expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 16.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. HOLMAN: A bill (H. R. 11511) granting a pension to George Pulskamp—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFOON: A bill (H. R. 11512) for the relief of W. M. Rhea—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11513) for the relief of William McGriyer—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: A bill (H. R. 11514) granting a pension to Fredericka Werheide—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11515) granting a pension to Charles G. Sanders—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11516) granting a pension to Julius Sauer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O. B. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11517) for the relief of William Miller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ATKINSON: A bill (H. R. 11518) granting a pension to George Chappel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 27, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. MANDERSON called the Senate to order and said: The Secretary will read a communication from the President pro tempore of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate [Mr. ANSON G. MCCOOK] read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., September 27, 1888.

I name the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. MANDERSON, to perform the duties of the Chair to-day.

JOHN J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore.

Thereupon Mr. MANDERSON took the chair as Presiding Officer for to-day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

YELLOW-FEVER SUFFERERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON). The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States in aid of State or municipal boards of health, or otherwise, to prevent the introduction of cholera or yellow fever into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory from another, or in the suppression of or preventing the spread of said diseases, or either of them, in infected districts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I examined the amendment yesterday. I very much fear that it misses the most urgent point where aid is required, and that is the capacity to use any of this money in aid of those who are sick or are in distress and starvation, as the newspapers report to us from day to day so many are. In the hope, therefore, that something better may be done, I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment, and ask for a conference thereon with the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate non-concur in the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a memorial of stone-cutters of the United States, remonstrating against the passage of the Mills tariff bill. The remonstrants are practical stone-cutters, and the original signatures of the men are appended. I find them located in Dallas, Tex.; Denver, Colo.; Memphis Junction, Ky.; Hallowell, Augusta, Clark's Island, South Thomaston, St. George, Rockland, Round Point, Long Cove, and Tenant's Harbor, in the State of Maine; Worcester and Milford, Mass.; South Ryegate, Rutland, and several other places in Vermont; Niantic, R. I.; Roxbury, Bridgeport, New London, and other places in the State of Connecticut; a large number of places in the State of New York, in the city of New York and vicinity, Long Island, Brooklyn; many places in the State of Minnesota; Washington, D. C.; Kansas City, Mo.; the city of Topeka, Kans.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Rock Island, Ill.; St. Louis and St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri; Indianapolis, Ind.; Riverdale, Cal.; and many other places. The memorialists, addressing the Senate of the United States, state:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition your honorable body not to pass the so-called Mills bill without striking the item of "Stones, unmanufactured or undressed, freestone, granite, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone" from the free-list, as we believe the importation of rough stone into this country free of duty will be an injury to us and those who quarry stone in this country and benefit no one but the importers and foreign quarry-owners and quarrymen, who do not contribute to the support of this Government. We will not enter into a long argument on this question, but petition for the right to be heard in protest against this attempt to injure quarrymen and stone-cutters through placing stone on the free-list while marble is dutiable; the same reasons for striking marble from the free-list applying to all other stone.

This interest is very large in my own State, and it is also represented among the memorialists.

The memorial was transmitted to me officially by Joseph B. Dyer, secretary of the Granite-Cutters' National Union of America, in the city of New York. I found the number of signatures too large to conveniently count, but there must be some four or five hundred, and perhaps more.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Johnston Palmer and 129 other citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania; the petition of William J. Work and 67 other citizens of Crawford County, Pennsylvania; and the petition of H. White and 28 other citizens of McKean County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PASCO. I present a petition of between five and six hundred citizens of Key West, Fla., very largely interested in the manufacture of cigars, calling the attention of Congress to a deficiency in the revenue laws which operates very disadvantageously to the manufacturers of cigars, owing to the slight difference between duties upon stripped and unstripped tobacco. The facts are fully set forth in the petition, and as it is short I ask leave that it be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida presents a petition and asks that it be printed in the RECORD without the names. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioners would most respectfully represent that they are citizens of the United States and of the State of Florida, and residents of the city and island of Key West.

That the principal business of the island of Key West is that of the manufacture of cigars, which gives employment to more than one-half of the population, which is over 20,000.

That the number of cigars manufactured on the island of Key West during the past year was 95,000,000, and the greater part of this quantity was made of imported tobacco from the Island of Cuba.

That among the various processes of preparing this tobacco in the factories previous to its being made into cigars is that of stemming the tobacco, or, as it is generally termed in the factories, "stripping" the tobacco, taking the center stem from the leaf, and this work is done here chiefly by women and children, several thousands of whom depend alone on this particular labor for a livelihood.

That by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, chapter 121, the duties on tobacco in leaf unmanufactured and not stemmed are 35 cents, and on stemmed tobacco 40 cents per pound.

That the duties on the stemmed tobacco being only 5 cents per pound more than the unstemmed tobacco, the manufacturers are thus enabled to get their tobacco from Cuba already stemmed and at a slight excess in cost over the unstemmed tobacco, and the manufacturers here are availing themselves of this privilege and employing or giving employment to laborers in Cuba.

That the result is that gradually but surely the laborers here who are employed in this special branch of the cigar industry are being discharged and deprived of this mode of obtaining a living, and one-half or more of the laboring population of this island are being driven from their legitimate field of labor by being thus brought into competition with the cheap labor of Cuba.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that the duties on tobacco in leaf unmanufactured and stemmed be increased, or that the act of Congress above mentioned be otherwise amended so as to prevent them from being brought into competition with the aforementioned cheap labor in the island of Cuba.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3578) to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3593) granting a pension to Franklin B. Dorothy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 111) relating to yellow fever and epidemic diseases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3594) granting a pension to Robert Steward; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3595) making an appropriation to aid in the erection of a monument to the members of the First and Second Regiments United States Sharpshooters who fell in the battle of Gettysburgh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3596) for the relief of the estate of the late James B. Sinclair; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

VIANCEY TAGGART—CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill (S. 3585) for the relief of Viancey Taggart was erroneously referred to the Committee on Pensions instead of the Committee on Military Affairs. I move that the former committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ISAAC DAVENPORT AND OTHERS.

Mr. STEWART. I offer a resolution to correct a mistake in a former reference to the Court of Claims, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1808) entitled "A bill for the relief of Isaac Davenport and others, citizens of Virginia," referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate on June 13, 1888, together with all the accompanying papers, in pursuance of the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1883, be also referred to said court under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the Senate the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim and all the facts contemplated by the provisions of said acts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that come from a committee? If not, it ought to be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEWART. It comes from the Committee on Claims. It is the correction of a mistake in a former reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. STEWART. I will explain it to the Senator from Vermont. The committee ordered the case to be referred under the two acts, and by mistake the resolution simply made the reference under the act of 1883, and it should be under both the act of 1883 and that of 1887. This simply corrects the mistake.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the right to object for a moment, I wish to say that the ordinary form of these resolutions has been simply to make the reference to the Court of Claims and cite the statutes. I observe that this resolution goes on and proceeds to declare what the court shall do. That may be precisely what the statute requires it to do. If it be, of course it does no harm. If it be not, then it is outside of the statute and of our authority and propriety.

Therefore I ask that the matter may be laid aside in order that I may compare the resolution with the statute and see how it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. STEWART. I will state that the last part of it is in the usual form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be.

Mr. SPOONER subsequently said: Before the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] left the Chamber he requested me to say that after having examined the resolution introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] he is satisfied with it, and interposes no objection to its passage. Therefore, if there is no objection, I ask that the resolution be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection being withdrawn to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Nevada, the question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF CONTAGION OR INFECTION.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Epidemic Diseases are hereby instructed to consider and report before the adjournment of this session of Congress, by bill or otherwise, such additional legislation as may be necessary or useful to prevent the importation of contagious or infectious diseases from foreign countries on the coasts or boundaries of the United States, and to prevent and suppress it in the interstate commerce, and from passing from one State to another, and for the subsistence of such persons as may be detained by public authority from places where there is danger of infection or contagion to other States.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HALE. The chairman of the committee [Mr. HARRIS] is absent at present. The committee referred to in the resolution has other matters touching this same subject which it is now considering. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CALL. Before any action is taken on the motion of the Senator from Maine, I desire to read the following letter from the mayor of the city of New York addressed to me:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, September 25, 1888.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The inclosed letter seems to contain suggestions worthy of attention. I suppose that legislation would be required to give them effect, although it is possible that under the law as it stands in reference to the National Board of Health, the President would have power to establish a system of national quarantine if he should think the emergency required it. It seems to me that we ought to take the matter in hand now in order to guard against the possible evils of a general outbreak of yellow fever next year. I wish you would consider the subject carefully, and, if you think well of it, introduce some resolutions which would lead to action before Congress adjourns. The subject is one which interests every part of the United States, and particularly the city of New York. As you know, we are subscribing liberally for the relief of the Florida sufferers, and we can well afford to do this as a matter of self-interest as well as of Christian sympathy; but we are powerless, except by our local quarantine, to prevent the spread of contagion. The remedy ought to be applied in the places where the fever exists and on a system so comprehensive as to assure the country that every precaution has been taken to stamp out this disease which produces such havoc in human life and such destruction of property. Asking your early attention to this important subject, I am,

Yours, sincerely,

ABRAM S. HEWITT, Mayor.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

The letter to which the mayor of New York refers, and which he incloses to me, is from James M. Van Hook, a citizen of Fort Meade, Polk County, South Florida, and is as follows:

CHARLESTOWN, IND., September 22, 1888.

HONORABLE SIR: I am a native of this State. I entered the Union Army, served through the war, and came home broken in health. About seven or eight years ago I moved to Fort Meade, Polk County, South Florida. I love my adopted State and hope to live there until the end.

On the day that yellow fever was discovered in Jacksonville I was in the city on my way north to consult my old family physician and then return to my Southern home. Although the roads are obstructed down there, and there is great danger of taking the disease, I intend to get to my home. I may have to go first to Key West and then come up the road from Punta Gorda to my home. There are thousands of New Yorkers in Florida, and they are deserving of help. The citizens there are from every State of the Union. The old citizens are mostly from the Southern States. I assure you that these people are a unit in their desire to have the Government take charge of the coast (and interior) regulations regarding health, etc. You will find that there is no regular quarantine law in force between Florida and the southern ports, or was not a few weeks ago, and the customs office was merely a formal office. People could leave any of the southern ports and land on our coast and carry death and disease all over the United States without a question being asked them by any one in authority. Your cities will be desolated next summer by fever, cholera, and other diseases if our 1,000 miles of seacoast is not guarded.

A man of ordinary ability, with a little authority, could have checked the fever at Key West. * * * You doubtless remember the messages sent to the Surgeon-General from these places. The fever was kept alive all winter at Plant City. The Surgeon-General did all he could, but he was not allowed to do any real work. Of course we (of Florida) expected Jacksonville to be desolated after the one case appeared there. I can not write the particulars, for it would take up too much of your valuable time. In our locality there will not likely be a fever-killing frost in the next ten years, and if the proper work is not done the fever will get a good start next spring and sweep over the whole country. The whole people of Florida * * * are praying and hoping for help. Those who were in charge have had two years of failure. The State of Florida can no longer hope to conquer the fever, and the other States demand protection. One-fifth of the money already donated by the noble people of New York City, placed in proper hands, would have saved Key West, and all other United States towns—for the fever can be surely trailed from Key West to every fever-stricken point.

Personally I am not afraid of the fever. I think as I am an invalid I would not recover from an attack of it, but I am not afraid, and expect to face it in a few days.

Now, there is only one way to save our country from a horrible season next year. If the work is not done I believe all the cities of the South and many in the North will get used to the terrible cry, "Bring out your dead." The people of Cuba are already entering Florida, and so soon as the "scum" of Europe ascertain the fact that they can enter Florida from Cuba there will be cases of cholera and fever enter this "open back door." (Coasting schooners often pass from Cuba to the Florida coasts without permits.) All vessels should be compelled to touch at Key West if they are bound for Florida, and a first-class quarantine station should be established there.

The only hope we have is that some great and noble citizen will start this work. "You are the man" who can do this. You are known and respected all over the land. You are recognized as a pure man, a leader. Your city is our great city. Your people give their wealth freely. The governors and officers of the cotton States will listen to you. They will not distrust the President and his soldiers if the latter are necessary. The people will hail the United States officers and managers as heavenly ministers. You can accomplish this work, and I know of no one else who can.

The Government I know is now helping, but they are not permitted to control affairs. The whole thing should be in Government hands. It is the only hope. I know that politics can not get mixed up with it. I am a Republican (usually), my neighbors are men of both armies—nearly all are Democrats—and for two years we have been hoping and praying that the United States would take charge. The protection of the Florida coast is no longer a State question; it is now of more importance than the Indian frontier, and the prosperity of the whole nation is at stake. Will you not speak out and save us?

I hope I am not uselessly wasting your time, and I believe I am doing my duty to my country and my State by writing this. I do honestly believe I am only writing that which every citizen of Florida has in his heart.

I am, very respectfully,

JAMES M. VAN HOOK,
A Citizen of Fort Meade, Polk County, South Florida.

In conformity with the request of the mayor of the city of New York, I present the resolution and this letter. I would prefer, as the resolution merely instructs the committee in their discretion to consider the subject and report at this session of Congress, that it should be adopted. There is nothing in it which can be objected to by any member of the committee, as it does not prescribe any form of action or any special method of treating the subject, but simply requires the committee to consider and report during the present session in conformity with the request of the mayor of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. I merely ask that action be taken directing the committee to report, and I make the request upon the letter of the mayor of New York as being a matter of immediate and urgent necessity.

Mr. HALE. I made the suggestion because the committee is considering all of these subjects, and I think it is better that it should be unembarrassed by any instructions. The chairman of the committee is not present, and unless the Senator from Florida agrees that the resolution shall be referred to the committee I shall ask that the matter lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. CALL. I shall have to submit to that course, but it seems to me that a reference is very immaterial. There is nothing in the resolution to which the committee can object. It simply requires them to report at this session, and certainly in the face of a request of the mayor of the greatest city in population and in commerce in the United States, simply to take action, not saying what action, but that some efficient action should be taken, with the existence of this epidemic, already threatening to spread over a large portion of the country, there can be no objection to the Senate acting immediately upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over with the motion to refer it to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back to the Senate the resolution directing that committee to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada. We report back the resolution without recommendation, with a view that it may be placed upon the Calendar to be the subject of debate in the Senate. It is the desire of the committee to get all the information and all the light upon the subject before its final reference to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reports back a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN September 17, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into and report at the next session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between these countries and the United States, and for that purpose have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio reports the resolution without recommendation, and asks that it be placed on the Calendar. It will be so ordered, unless there be objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether the resolution which he has just reported back and had placed upon the Calendar is likely to be early called up for the consideration of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not authorized to say. The Committee on Foreign Relations conceive the subject to be of very great importance and do not desire to rush to its consideration until they have full information.

Mr. BLAIR. So that if any Senator desires to make remarks on the subject, he can do so immediately?

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution is on the Calendar and can be called up at any time to make observations upon it. So far as the committee are concerned, I am inclined to think that they would not desire to press a final vote upon any measure on this subject until the next session of Congress, but I am not authorized to say even that.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the one hundred and tenth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. A bill (S. 2836) granting a pension to William E. Taylor;

A bill (S. 2838) granting an increase of pension to Betsey A. Mower;

A bill (S. 2887) granting a pension to George H. Johnson;

A bill (S. 3125) restoring the right of pre-emption to Alfonso Roberts;

A bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge;

A bill (S. 3471) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River and its tributaries by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company;

A bill (H. R. 10934) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell township maps or plats remaining on hand in his office;

A bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis., and at other places herein named; and

A bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to Lieut. Starkey R. Powell.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the resolution of the House; which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 27, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the one hundred and tenth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 110 to the bill (H. R. 10540) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

"For the building for the Library of Congress as herein provided for, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the cost of all professional and other personal services that the Chief of Engineers of the Army may deem necessary for the work and shall specially order, $500,000. This appropriation and all appropriations hereafter made, and all sums available from appropriations heretofore made for this purpose, shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall have the control and management of all of said work and the employment of all persons connected therewith. And all contracts for the construction of said building, or any part thereof, shall be made by the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and so much of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library,' approved April 15, 1886, as requires the construction of said building substantially according to the plan submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smythmeyer, and so much of the first section as provides for a commission, together with the eighth section of said act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and the duties of said commission under said act are hereby devolved upon the Chief of Engineers of the Army, who shall annually report to Congress, at the commencement of each session, a detailed statement of all the proceedings under the provisions of this act, and hereafter, until otherwise ordered by Congress, no work shall be done in the construction of said Library except such as is herein provided for, and all contracts for work or materials not necessary for the execution of the work contemplated herein are hereby rescinded. And all loss or damage occasioned thereby, or arising under said contracts, together with the value of the plan for a Library building submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, may be adjusted and determined by the Secretary of the Interior, to be paid out of the sums heretofore or hereby appropriated: Provided, That before any further contracts are let for the construction of said building, general plans for the entire construction thereof shall be prepared by or under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, which plans shall be subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the total cost of said building shall not exceed $4,000,000 exclusive of appropriations heretofore made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. H. FORNEY,
JAMES N. BURNES,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

Joint resolution (S. R. 102) appropriating $200,000 to suppress infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the resolution in relation to the Louisiana election.

Mr. GIBSON. I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether he proposes to take a vote on the resolution this morning.

Mr. CHANDLER. My purpose in calling up the resolution is to ascertain whether any Senator desires to make remarks thereon. If so, I propose that debate shall proceed.

Mr. GIBSON. I propose to make a few remarks on the resolution whenever the Senator desires to have a vote on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. After the Senator has concluded his remarks I desire that the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the resolution until a vote is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER July 19, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire—

1. Into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there were chosen State officers and also a Legislature, which has since elected two United States Senators; and especially to ascertain and report whether the 136,746 votes returned for the candidate of the dominant party for governor were actually cast, in view of the fact that at no previous election had the votes for such candidate of such party exceeded 88,794; and also why in the parish of Madison there were returned 3,530 votes for one party and none for the other; in East Feliciana Parish, 2,276 for one party and only 5 for the other; in Morehouse Parish, 1,584 for one party and only 14 for the other; in Ouachita Parish, 2,994 for one party and only 5 for the other; in Sabine Parish, 1,441 for one party and only 2 for the other; in Tensas Parish, 4,627 for one party and only 113 for the other; and why there were similar returns from other parishes; and also to ascertain and report whether or not at said State election there was any violence, intimidation, or fraud which prevented a fair election, and particularly whether or not there were any false canvasses or false returns made by the local election officers or included in the final canvass of the votes. And in case said committee shall find that such illegalities as violence, intimidation, or fraud, false canvasses or false returns prevailed in connection with such election, then said committee shall further inquire—

2. Whether any of the acts or omissions of the officials or other persons responsible for or connected with such illegalities were contrary to the Constitution of the United States or the amendments thereof, or were violations of any of the statutes of the United States, especially the provisions of chapter 7, Title LXX, of the Revised Statutes, punishing crimes against the elective franchise and civil rights of citizens, and, if so, whether any prosecutions have been or ought to be commenced in the United States courts for such offenses.

3. Whether such illegalities are likely to be repeated in connection with the election to be held in said State on the 6th of November next for Representatives in Congress; and if so, whether there is occasion for the alteration by Congress of any of the regulations prescribed by said State for holding elections for such Representatives in Congress.

4. And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid State election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns so extensive and systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said election without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana, or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators, and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I am under the impression that the people of this country in all parts of it, whether Republican or Democratic in politics, and especially that the business men of the country, are weary of these unconstitutional and revolutionary methods of investigation that tend only to disturb the relations of the States to the Union, and to excite ill-will and distrust between the sections, and the white people and their former negro slaves in the Southern country. They may serve temporary partisan purposes; they can bear no good fruit.

When I see the thin attendance in the Senate on this occasion, when it was proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to ask for a vote upon his resolution, I am persuaded that the thoughtful members of the Senate in the Republican party can not, and do not, sympathize with the purposes of the resolutions. I can not but remark upon the lack of interest in these proceedings which twenty years ago engaged the public attention, and constituted the instrumentality by which turmoil, and confusion, and tumult and disorders, and race collisions, were promoted in the South, and governments of misrule and confiscation were upheld, and even justified, by many uninformed people of the North. We have, I hope, passed beyond that epoch.

But what are these resolutions that arraign, if not the sovereign State of Louisiana (for that term appears to have become offensive to some persons in these modern times), certainly the "indestructible State," for the States have been characterized as such by the Supreme Court of the United States. They instruct a standing committee of the Senate, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to ascertain whether there be a republican form of government in the State of Louisiana; whether the members of the General Assembly were duly elected under the constitution and laws of the State, and whether or not they were competent to elect Senators and to make laws; whether the governor was duly elected; and whether, finally, the people of the State should exercise their constitutional rights to choose Presidential electors, and to have their votes counted in the electoral college.

Resolutions so formidable in their scope, so comprehensive, and so sweeping, and fatal to one of the commonwealths of this Union, should neither be introduced, nor considered, by the Senate, unless supported by a state of facts, certified to the Senate by the most solemn and weighty evidence. But under what circumstances have they been brought to our attention? There has not been from the State of Louisiana a single petition presented to this body from any citizen in that State informing the Senate that he had a grievance of any kind in the wide world that the Senate might redress. There has not been a complaint from any body of the people of that State to the Senate asking for any legislation to protect them in their rights, political or civil.

We know, because the Senate of the United States must take cognizance of public facts, that there is but one government in the State of Louisiana, but one person claiming to be governor, but one body claiming to be the Legislature of the State, but one supreme court in the State. We have before us the constitution and laws of the State, observing and maintaining the Constitution and laws of the United States, and all the rights and privileges of the citizens of the United States and of the State, and radically republican in form. We know that State to-day is in satisfactory relations with the other States and with the Government of the United States in all its branches, the Congress, the executive, and the judiciary.

It is represented in the House of Representatives; it is represented here in the Senate. We know that law and order prevail in the State of Louisiana. We have no knowledge of any tumult, of any insurrection, of any disorders in that State but in the individual instances that occur, more or less, in every community, of misdemeanors and crimes aggravated, perhaps, by the fact that the negroes, who were recently, and from time immemorial the slaves of the white people, have been suddenly made free, and elevated without any education or training, except such as the institution of slavery afforded, to participate in the conduct of the Government; and it can not be disguised that the race problem, sometimes on account of politics, but more frequently without reference to politics, creates friction and difficulties greater than in the States where no such revolution has been wrought, and where the same race problem does not exist under such embarrassing conditions, or in such an intense form. A state of society like this must appeal to every thoughtful man's patience and sense of justice, if not to his generous sympathy.

I do not propose at this time to argue the constitutional questions raised necessarily by these resolutions.

They involve the proposition that under the Constitution of the United States a single Senator may, on his own motion, in the absence of a petition or memorial from a single citizen of the State, when it is known to the Senate that there is but one government in the State, and no insurrection, or tumult, or disorder, challenge the legality of the government of the people of the State and put them on trial to show whether their government is republican in form, a government whose constitution and laws show it to be such, and which is satisfactory to the whole people of the State and is in constitutional and harmonious and satisfactory relations to the Government of the United States.

They involve the proposition that the Senators are not to be chosen by the Legislature of the States as constituted by the people of the States in accordance with their constitution and laws, but that the Senate, in the absence of any protest or complaint from any member of the Legislature, or from any citizen, or of any contest or contestant against the election of the Senators, may put on trial the Legislature itself of the State and usurp its functions "to determine the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

They involve the proposition that in advance of a Presidential election this Senate, on the motion of a single Senator, without even a reference to the appropriate committee, shall convert itself into a court or political caucus and institute an inquiry to determine whether one of the States in this Union, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate and of its right to choose electors to participate in the election of the Chief Magistrate of the country.

These and other propositions not less revolting the Senate is requested, by the Senator from New Hampshire, to indorse as resting upon sound constitutional grounds.

I admit that the States can not place a limit upon the powers of the Federal Government; that they can not either nullify a law or secede from the Union, and that there is no way by which a boundary may be fixed to the Federal power except by appealing to the people against the party that shall attempt usurpation, and by the action of the Government itself, its Congress, its Executive, and its courts.

And I submit to Senators that where this has become the settled construction, that State interposition can not set limits to the central authority, but that the Federal Government must, by its Congress, President, and Supreme Court, and the Constitution, determine the measure to its own jurisdiction, the safety of our institutional and municipal liberties demands that the functions and powers of the Senate should be employed rather to uphold the checks and balances of our complex system, and to curb usurpations, than to respond to the behests of party exigencies to overturn and tread upon all precedents and every principle of constitutional law in the midst of a heated Presidential campaign.

If these resolutions provided that this investigation should be conducted in the parishes where the Senator from New Hampshire alleges irregularities and outrages have been committed, finding his foundation for such charges in anonymous letters and newspaper clippings, and if the character and standing of the persons making these charges could be known to the Senators, and if the persons accused could have a fair hearing, I do not know that I should object seriously to the adoption of the resolution. It is a fundamental principle that every person accused should have the opportunity to know precisely what the charges against him may be, and to be confronted by the witnesses, and that the cause should be submitted to a jury of the vicinage; and in no case, in any country enjoying constitutional liberty, will an indictment be sustained on mere hearsay or anonymous communications; it must be supported by affidavits or sufficient evidence. But here is a proposition that indicts a whole State 1,200 miles away, puts the liberties and institutions of a million and a quarter of people on trial, in violation of every principle of right and justice.

If a committee of the Senate were to visit my State they would not find the people there living in a Utopian condition; they would not find them, possibly, realizing the dreams of Jean Jacques Rousseau, or living in such a commonwealth as the honest old counsellor Gonzalo, in the Tempest, would establish; but they would find an industrious, sober-minded, kind-hearted, generous, and brave people, who in the midst of great disasters and misfortunes have re-established their industries, their schools, their churches, and the supremacy of law, giving protection to life and property. They would find a people not only building up their material fortunes, but also building up institutions of learning, universities and colleges of a high order; they would find the relations between the races peaceable and kind; they might also ascertain that occasional outbreaks occur, owing to diversity of race and condition; but they would find a people like the people of other States of this Union in the North and in the South, except that the difficulties and responsibilities of adapting our institutions to self-government are greater than in States where sudden and violent changes in the social order have not taken place.

Now, these resolutions propose no such inquiry, but they propose that a committee of this Senate shall be constituted a political court in this city, and that summons shall be sent out to every person in the State of Louisiana who may have a complaint or grievance against his neighbor, or who, feeling that if he can convince this committee that he has made sacrifices or suffered any wrong on account of his political opinions, in the event of the election of Mr. Harrison he may be rewarded in proportion to the gravity of the offense that he should allege has been committed against him. This prosecution will be conducted by pettifogging politicians, some of whom are already in this city cutting and drying the programme in advance for the working of the committee. The offer of a visit to the Federal capital, with all expenses paid, the expectation of forming the personal acquaintance of leading Republican Senators, the hope that their services to the Republican party amid the dreadful condition of society in which they live, according to their own accounts, will be recognized, will induce many a man to sacrifice truth and the friendship of his neighbors in order to merit reward at the hands of political leaders. Every neighborhood scandal, every old feud, every grievance, will be retailed to this committee, and these stories in daily bulletins will be disseminated throughout the North to poison the minds of our fellow-countrymen against their countrymen in the Southern States. Thus the seeds of sectional ill-will and animosity will be sown and a harvest in due time may be gathered. You will not hear by this mode of investigation the substantial people of the State, for they are busy in their homes; they have their farms and private business to look after and their daily round of occupations. At this season the farmers are gathering in their crops; they are taxed to make both ends meet at the close of the year; but the unscrupulous politicians in every neighborhood, who fatten on local disorders that they breed, and are looked upon with contempt as Ishmaelites, and who are without any stake in the community, will hasten to regale this committee with their fictions. It will be simply impossible to induce the best element of citizens, who are, as I said, occupied at this time, to leave their homes and come before a committee in Washington which they believe is organized simply for political purposes. Hence an inquiry like this should have and can have no weight with the country; in fact, it will have no more weight than the anonymous and slanderous letters which the Senator from New Hampshire has read to the Senate, or the clippings from newspapers which assert one thing to-day to attract attention and deny it to-morrow.

But the Senator from New Hampshire did not rest, I am frank to say, his demand for this investigation solely upon anonymous letters and newspaper clippings. He refers to tables showing the vote at the election on the 17th of April, 1888, in Louisiana, and he exhibits to the country the fact that in many of the parishes, a long list of which he publishes, the vote actually cast exceeds the number of persons duly qualified by registration to vote. He cries out "here is evidence of fraud." He next shows that there was a total vote in the State of Louisiana of 188,739, while at the election of 1884 there was a total vote of only 132,296, and at the election of 1876 a vote of 160,964. Upon these statements the Senator insists that his claim for an investigation chiefly rests, because he himself can not expect that the Senate should take any action upon mere anonymous communications and extracts which he has read to the Senate. He himself will admit that this would be trifling with the Senate, as well as with the people of one of the Commonwealths of the American Union, and therefore it is that he bases his demand for investigation chiefly upon an official statement of the vote and registration in the State of Louisiana. Now, let us look at those statements.

I will demonstrate that the Senator has been entirely mistaken in his figures; that his premises rest upon an error of his own; and that therefore the very ground-work upon which he is asking for this inquest falls from under his feet, and this resolution should fall with it. The Senator furnishes us with the official vote on April 17, 1888, but he does not exhibit the official statement of the registration taken in accordance with law ten days before the election. He refers us to the registration of 1884, and other speeches have been made here referring us to the registration of 1880. I append to these remarks an official statement of the registration in 1888 and the official vote at the election in 1888, and it will be seen that the statement of the Senator that the vote exceeded the registration is a mistake.

It does often happen in elections, where persons are careless about qualifying to vote, that they are permitted to vote on affidavits upon being identified, and it is possible that this may have occurred in some places, and, in fact, did occur in Concordia Parish. Now, these tables show that there were registered previous to the election of 1888, 253,557 persons, of whom there were whites 125,407, and colored 128,150. The total vote cast at that election on the 17th of April was 188,739, showing that there were 65,821 persons duly qualified to vote who did not vote. There was no complaint against the registration. I use statements taken from the same sources as the Senator himself draws from, except that my statements, both of the registration and of the vote cast, relate to the election of April 17, 1888, while his statement of registration relates to the previous elections.

This fundamental error must be fatal to the whole argument of the Senator. It is very natural that he should have made such a mistake, because being 1,500 miles away and having probably never put his foot within the State of Louisiana, and his acquaintance being limited in that State, possibly, to the class of pettifogging politicians, it is easily comprehended that he should have been led into just such mistakes by them. Here, then, we have the fact that there were over 65,000 persons qualified by registration to vote who did not vote in the recent election in Louisiana; and the vote cast in the State at the recent election bears the like proportion to the total male population of over twenty-one years of age as exists between that population and the vote in the majority of the States. On the average only about 80 per cent. of persons entitled under the laws to vote usually cast their votes, as will be seen from these figures which I have taken at random from Spofford's Almanac:

PERCENTAGE OF VOTE IN 1884 TO NUMBER OF VOTERS IN 1880.

	Per cent.
Connecticut	71
Illinois	84
Kentucky	73
Maryland	80
Michigan	85
Missouri	81
New Hampshire	80
New York	83
New Jersey	87

In 1884 in Louisiana there were 86,610 persons registered who did not vote; in 1876 there were 46,658 registered voters who did not exercise the franchise. So that I submit there is nothing phenomenal or extraordinary in the vote of the recent election in Louisiana. But the Senator says it is not the total number of votes cast that is surprising, but it is the very large majority that Nicholls received over Warmoth. I freely admit that the majority was large, and that perhaps it would excite suspicion in the minds of persons unacquainted with the state of popular feeling in Louisiana, or with the conditions of the Democratic as well as the Republican party in that State. But these fluctuations of majorities are not confined to the State of Louisiana, and I think that the large majority obtained by Governor Nicholls could be more easily and satisfactorily explained than the phenomenal majorities which have marked the elections in other States of the Union.

Here, for instance, is the State of New York. In 1879 Cornell (Republican) received 418,567 votes, Robinson (Democrat) received 375,799 votes; Cornell's plurality was 42,777 votes; and in 1882, only three years afterward, Cleveland (Democrat) reversed this plurality of 42,777 for the Republican party and was elected by a plurality of 192,854.

Take, again, the State of Massachusetts. In 1879 Long (Republican) was elected by a plurality of 13,602 votes; the very next year his plurality was 53,245, and the year after, General Butler reversed this plurality for the Republican candidate and was himself elected governor by a plurality of 13,949 votes.

Not only are these oscillations of majorities in these two States greater than in the State of Louisiana, but the fluctuations in the total vote, when you consider the political conditions, the steadfast opinions of the people, the thorough organization of the parties, and the facilities for intercommunication, are indeed extraordinary, and more difficult to be accounted for than in a State like Louisiana, where there has been in times past so much race antagonism, so much political commotion, and where for years the working people of the State were subjected to a government composed chiefly of their former slaves, which every year consumed the entire surplus of their earnings and mortgaged, by a public debt, one-fourth of the assessed valuation of their property, while nearly every guaranty for life as well as property was destroyed.

I am sorry to say, but truth compels me to do so, that at that time, while the white people in that State were subjected to such ignorant and degraded tyranny, despoiled of their property and their rights, the demagogues in the Republican party of the North did not extend to them any generous sympathy, nor was any committee sent to inquire into their sufferings and wrongs, which had been proclaimed throughout the whole land. I know that at that time thoughtful and conservative members of the Republican party condemned those spoliating governments just as they condemn these resolutions, the effect of which and the intention of which are to restore such governments to power over the white people and property-owners in a Southern State.

I was speaking of the oscillations of the popular vote in some of the Northern States, and I observe that in the State of Massachusetts there was a change of 68,715 votes from 1879 to 1883, and of 56,079 votes from 1882 to 1883, and of 94,445 votes from 1884 to 1885, whereas in the State of Louisiana there was an increase in the total vote from 1879 to 1888 of only 27,000, and a fluctuation from 1884 to 1888 of 56,000. It appears that there is nothing on the face of the papers more extraordinary in the official statement of the recent election in Louisiana than in the official statements of election in other States. Doubtless Senators from New York and Massachusetts and other States where these oscillations have taken place could very readily explain the causes of them; and I can in a few words relate to the entire satisfaction of the Senate the reasons why such a large vote was cast and such a large majority obtained by Governor Nicholls.

It is always an unpleasant task to discuss persons living in your own State, as was observed by the Senator from Massachussetts [Mr. HOAR] the other day, when he said he did not think it exactly right for any one to ask him about the standing of particular individuals and particular newspapers in his own State; that he did not think it proper to discuss the personal character and the standing of its citizens.

There had been a wide breach in the Democratic as well as in the Republican party in Louisiana. The two wings of the Democratic party were led by Governor Wiltz, and afterwards by Governor McEnery on the one hand, and by General Ogden and Governor Nicholls on the other; the two wings of the Republican party were led by Governor Warmoth on the one side and Governor Kellogg on the other.

In consequence of the differences between the leaders of the Republican party, and owing to the disrepute which the Republican administrations in the State had fastened upon the party, its organization fell to pieces and it despaired of carrying any State election. Every one felt that the contest to be decided at the recent election in the State was an issue between the two wings of the Democratic party. This was the opinion generally of Republicans as well as Democrats. The canvass between the Democratic wings was inaugurated almost a year in advance of the election. There never was in the State of Louisiana such a warm, protracted campaign, and, if I may be pardoned for saying it, such a forcible appeal to the people of the State. From the middle of August until the middle of January, when the State nominating convention was assembled, the leading men of the State were engaged daily in making speeches, going from parish to parish, and the newspapers of the State were all enlisted on the one side or the other. Indeed, having participated myself in the canvass and being well acquainted with the people of the State, I think I am safe in saying that all there was of political vitality, of political interest in my State was divided between those two wings of the Democratic party. The wing represented by Governor Nicholls gained a great triumph, but no sooner was its supremacy assured by the action of the Democratic convention, than a policy of reconciliation and of healing of differences was adopted.

The wing represented by Governor McEnery was given recognition on the State ticket by the nomination for important places of two gentlemen associated with that wing, and when that great convention dispersed the Democrats who had espoused the cause of McEnery became for the most part the eager champions of Governor Nicholls's election. The Nicholls division of the party has been assailed by the Senator from New Hampshire because it acted with generosity towards the defeated McEnery wing of the party. This is unjust, and I submit to Senators from the North, if it has not happened to them that when one wing of their party was defeated they have sought and generally succeeded, when the convention assembled, in composing all differences by recognizing the factions or divided elements in their own party; they not only do this in their State conventions, but in national conventions. This was notably the case when Garfield and Arthur were nominated.

Returning to the State election—no one supposed that the Republican party would put a candidate in the field, as there was no organization, and no expectation that they would do otherwise than organize for the national contest in 1888. But to the surprise of nearly every one a convention was called and the nomination offered to Governor Warmoth. He hesitated to accept it, but did so at the last moment, believing, I presume, that the differences between the McEnery and Nicholls elements of the Democratic party might be made available. He consented reluctantly to become a candidate, and in a few short weeks before the election made a rapid canvass of the State. I believe he was received everywhere with consideration, because there were many people in the State who had come to believe that some of the most outrageous acts committed during the Warmoth administration were carried over his vetoes and against his influence. During his canvass he declared that if elected he would endeavor to see to it that the intelligent and property-holding classes should control the State, that he would not raise the race issue, and would continue in office the officials whom Governor McEnery had appointed. He also did not hesitate to declare that he was and had been opposed to Federal intervention in affairs of the State, that he disapproved of and discountenanced Governor Kellogg's methods and policy, that Kellogg never was elected Senator of the United States, that he was a "political phenomenon," a man who had held his seat in the Senate without having been elected by any sort of Legislature. Governor Warmoth declared that he had had a breach with President Grant during his administration and that he had thrown up his hat with joy, like all the citizens of the State, when Kellogg's administration was overthrown on the 14th of September, 1874, and that he himself had canvassed the State for the election of Governor John McEnery.

Now, these sentiments were addressed to the white people, who were all thoroughly aroused by the long canvass of which I have spoken. Every one will admit that they did not tend to awaken the hopes of the old Republican leaders, but to alienate Governor Kellogg and his friends, who constituted, perhaps, the majority of the active element in the Republican party. The fact was frequently commented upon that Governor Kellogg, though in the State, took no part in the canvass. Under these circumstances is it extraordinary that Governor Warmoth should have received a small vote and Governor Nicholls a large vote? Nicholls possessed certain attractions for the people of the State, both white and colored, which excited their interest, respect, and sympathy. He had been one of their heroes in the great civil war, and had lost an arm at Winchester, and a leg, when side by side with Stonewall Jackson, at Chancellorsville. He had always exhibited in his official relations great fairness in the execution of the law and the punishment of crime, and much kindness towards the colored people. These considerations are sufficient to account for the large vote indicative of the confidence that the whole people of Louisiana had in this gentleman.

Now, in certain parishes enumerated by the Senator from New Hampshire, parishes on the Mississippi River, where the negroes outnumbered the whites, say as ten to one, it appears that the election went all one way. The conditions of society in those parishes present the race problem in a more intense and difficult form than in other parishes of the State where the whites constitute a majority, or where the two races are more equally divided, and where the white people have always made their permanent homes. In the delta, or riparian parishes, many of the white people formerly, as they do now to some extent, resided in the highlands or in Mississippi with their families. The negroes were concentrated in great numbers on vast cotton plantations where there were but few white people. Consequently they did not come in contact with the white race in any large degree. It was rural and not domestic slavery; hence, the negroes in those parishes were extremely ignorant and wholly unfit for self-government or the government of others, and even under the reconstruction régime they were brought to rely upon their white leaders in the Republican party and voted mainly in accordance with the wishes of those leaders. When that party was overthrown, some of its leaders became Democrats. Nearly all the land-holding Republicans, and specially the settlers in those parishes who had been officers in the Federal Army, became Democrats, or voted with the Democratic party upon local issues, if not on the national ticket. It has been customary in the State and local elections for the white Republicans of this class, that is, the substantial, property-holding Republican and Democratic leaders, to come together and agree upon a ticket, and the negroes for the most part voted for this ticket, parish officers and State officers. I have been told by leading Republicans from those parishes that they could not afford to see their property pass under a government controlled by negroes; in other words, they united with the Democrats in using every resource and every influence against the establishment of local government under the control of the non-property holding and ignorant classes.

Such of the negroes as have become educated have also, I understand, joined the Republican and Democratic leaders in this policy, who feel that they can not live under a negro government; and I expect this would be the feeling of the Senator from New Hampshire, himself, if he lived in one of those parishes where the negroes, owing to the circumstances I have related, are so entirely ignorant and unfit to levy taxes, to enforce law and order, or perform other governmental functions; and yet in those parishes there are some intelligent negroes elected justices of the peace and to other parochial offices. In some cases they have been elected to the State Legislature. I found in the parish of Madison the very general officer who was appointed by General Canby to receive the surrender of the Confederate army to which I had been attached. He was present at the Democratic meeting which I had the honor to address in that parish, and I understood that he and all the ex-Union officers there were supporting the State ticket and the ticket for the Legislature which was elected, and such, I believe, was the case in the parishes above and below Madison on the Mississippi River from the Arkansas line to the mouth of Red River. I myself have old friends in those parishes, who when the Republican party was in power found it necessary to become Republicans in order to protect their property. Some of them had inherited large estates, and they were gentlemen who would adorn any community by their intelligence and their character. They became, I repeat, Republicans in order to save their property, but they did not succeed in preventing ruinous and confiscating taxation. I heard a leading Republican say once that when some one asked what the debt of the parish in which he resided was, he replied that it depended entirely upon the necessities of two or three white Republicans in that parish, who, whenever they were hard pressed, issued enough scrip to satisfy their wants. These parishes are now out of debt; they have expended thousands and thousands of dollars in building levees on the Mississippi River; some of them have a surplus in their treasuries; the white people and colored people are working together satisfactorily; property is improving in value, and schools are rapidly increasing in number. I understand and I believe, for I desire to speak with perfect frankness to the Senate, that there are certain political tricksters in those parishes who have sought, not so much to promote the interests of the Republican party, as to promote their own selfish interest at the expense of the community, and that they have, many of them, rendered themselves odious both to the Republicans and Democrats, and that in some instances these evil-doers have been warned to desist from their bad work.

They hold about the same relation to society there that the anarchists do to the people of Chicago, or any other agitators and peace-disturbers to the communities in which they reside. Some of these men propose to enlist the ignorant negroes under their banners, and to fight, not for the Republican party, but for themselves, at the expense of the good order and the security of the lives and property of the substantial citizens, Republicans and Democrats alike, and to destroy every educational and religious interest and institution, as well as the peace of society, in order that they may appear in some quarters as zealous Republicans, or as martyrs for principle. In a few instances I understand that such men have been requested to leave the community.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator to what case he refers?

Mr. GIBSON. I am not referring to any particular case. I am speaking generally, and not of a particular case.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to refer to some particular man. What is his name?

Mr. GIBSON. I do not know what the man's name is. I am speaking now of the general condition in regard to these parishes on the river.

Mr. CHANDLER. There were numerous cases of this kind where men were notified to leave?

Mr. GIBSON. I do not know that there were numerous cases.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator any in mind?

Mr. GIBSON. I have in mind Mr. Holmes, an old Confederate soldier and a gentleman for whom I have always entertained high regard, and whose hospitality I have enjoyed; but I do not think he went to any excess. I had the parishes of Tensas and East Carroll in my mind; I had the parishes enumerated in the Senator's resolutions in my mind.

But this condition of things is confined to a few parishes of the State of Louisiana. I believe that wherever and whenever such conditions prevail men of property and intelligence will combine together to exert all their influence, without respect of party, to prevent the interests of the community from falling under the control of the ignorant and those wholly unfit for exercising the powers of government, and who become the willing dupes of political adventurers or designing communists. We have an example of this state of things on the Pacific coast, where the Chinese, claiming the oldest civilization in the world and representing a race endowed with extraordinary skill and power, have been excluded from our Pacific States, because they were not only different from those communities in race, but their standard of morals was also different, and because they were utterly ignorant of our institutions, and were content, in order to accumulate a competency, to work for wages much lower than our own people could live and prosper on. They were in fact as much alien to the prevailing sentiments and moral qualities of the population of the Pacific coast as if their only training had been found in the institution of slavery itself. The ruthless massacres of the Chinese in Wyoming Territory and Colorado exhibit a phase of race conflicts and indicate the limitations upon the Federal power to afford adequate remedy, as held by Mr. EVARTS himself when Secretary of State. No sooner had these conditions presented themselves, this menace to free institutions been offered, this array of ignorance appeared, than Senators from that coast raised a cry which has resounded throughout the Union, and which has been responded to with alacrity by Senators from all parts of our common country. They have, in effect, invoked the Senate to re-enact the Dred Scott decision, and to take the ground with respect to the Chinese race upon which that famous decision rested in respect to the colored people in this country. They who hold with the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created free and equal, find themselves under an imperious necessity, political and social, of their people to adapt their doctrine to the exclusion of the Chinese race. Now, when these wants and conditions are brought home to Senators from States on the Pacific coast, they ought to appreciate and I believe they do appreciate the embarrassing and almost insurmountable difficulties that the Southern people have to contend against when dealing with the race problem in their midst, when dealing with the negro born in slavery, and who by reason of his historical condition remains for the most part in subordination, a result which nearly always follows when an inferior is placed in juxtaposition with a superior race in the same territory.

These conditions which exist in the South, as they prevailed throughout a portion of the Union in earlier times, were aggravated in the southern section by the fact that they came upon the white people there, not as they did upon the white people in the Northern States by a gradual process of emancipation and a steady readjustment of relations, but they came upon the Southern people at the end of the most destructive war in respect of men and property that any civilized people ever encountered. The settlement of the question in the Southern States has unfortunately been complicated with the contests of the two great political parties of the country, but I think every one who surveys with a calm eye society in the South will admit that, under the circumstances, the preservation of peace, the recognition of civil and political liberty, the guaranties for life and property, the advancement in education and material resources have been wonderful, if not miraculous. I append some data showing the progress in the South generally, and in Louisiana in particular.

I repeat that the state of things which I have described was confined mainly to certain riparian parishes that were enumerated by the Senator from New Hampshire, but in other parishes, where the Republican party was organized and where the same conditions did not prevail as in the riparian parishes alluded to, the vote may not appear any less remarkable to the Senator from New Hampshire. For instance, in the city of New Orleans, where there was not the slightest dispute about the fairness of the election in April last, there were polled 38,966 votes, and out of that number Governor Nicholls received 27,824 and Governor Warmoth 11,142—Nicholls's majority being 16,682. At the previous election, in 1884, there were over 24,000 votes polled, and in 1879, 19,000.

If any one will take the white parishes of the State, that is, the parishes in which the white voters exceed the colored voters, including the city of New Orleans, and then the parishes which are represented in the General Assembly by Republicans, they will find they constitute a majority of the whole Legislature. In many of the parishes the Republicans indorsed the Democratic ticket for the Legislature, and the senators and representatives from those parishes may be added to those I have referred to, and it will be found that they in the aggregate constitute a large majority of the members of the General Assembly who participated in the election of the United States Senators. Moreover, in several instances, Republican contestants were admitted to their seats in the house of representatives, over which a gentleman presides who has become a resident of that State since the close of the war, and is a Northern man by birth.

Now, under these circumstances, the Senator from New Hampshire comes forward with his series of resolutions that no constitutional lawyer in this Senate can approve, but which he hopes may be adopted as part of the political programme. He would have one of the committees of this Senate constituted a sort of political mint in which shall be assayed and coined every calumny, every scandal, and, as I said before, every neighborhood feud, every grievance that any man imagines he has suffered, any grievance that any man may be persuaded he has suffered by pettifogging politicians who will be brought here at the expense of the Government. It is proposed that this currency shall find circulation among the good and philanthropic people of the North, who, when the excitement of the campaign shall have passed away and they have made inquiries into the true facts for themselves, shall find it to be base and fraudulent coinage.

Sir, I would rather resign my seat in this Senate than to become the medium by which such vile accusations are to be conveyed to the Senate, the scavenger by whom all the ill-will of the community is to be gathered up and presented to the Senate, or one of its committees. "I had rather be a dog and bay the moon, than such a Roman." I have here newspaper slips from leading newspapers in Rhode Island, and I saw a few days ago a letter from a distinguished citizen of that State, Mr. George S. Waring, declaring that the recent election in Rhode Island was carried by corrupt use of money, and that votes were sold as if in the public market. I have these papers and others at the service of the gentleman from New Hampshire if he desires to extend his inquiry into the legality or fairness of the recent election in the State of Rhode Island. They make out quite a strong case—stronger, I think, than the Senator has made out with his newspaper extracts and anonymous letters against the people and government of Louisiana. Will he accept them?

I am glad to know that there are Senators in this body who have adopted a different policy from that marked out by the Senator from New Hampshire; there are Senators here on the Republican side who by a broad, liberal, I will say magnanimous policy, have won a place in the hearts of the people I represent here to-day, and whose commission I hold by a unanimous vote, both black and white, of the general assembly of that State; there are Senators here who, instead of offering pains and chains and penalties and insults, holding up the people of a Southern commonwealth to the scorn of the public, have come forward with balm for the wounds of the great civil struggle and who have devised beneficent measures of legislation. I need not go beyond the limits of the State of New Hampshire to find such a man, and in years to come, though the Blair bill may be defeated, there will be found in many a hamlet in my State a warm welcome for the name of the statesman who had the sagacity and courage to bring forward that wise legislation intended to educate and enlighten the people of our country.

But the junior Senator from New Hampshire prefers to follow a different course. Without referring his resolutions to the consideration of the committee, but picking up here and there a scandal of the community from anonymous letters and newspaper clippings, often erroneous, he hopes to constitute a political machine to operate during the Presidential campaign, to catch, like the ear of Dionysius the Tyrant, the slightest whispers of political parasites or schemers, and proceed on such testimony to convict his countrymen, living in a distant State, of crimes and misdemeanors. Thus he would attempt to brand with the "Scarlet Letter" one of the fairest and noblest Commonwealths in this Union.

Sir, if this method of procedure can find justification in the minds of the constitutional lawyers in this Senate, or can bring gratification to the heart of any Senator on this floor, or if the author of these resolutions feels that they will gratify his constituents, or that they may be necessary to the success of his political party, he is welcome to such honor as they may bring him. If such charges, based on such flimsy grounds, were made, and if the indictment were laid against the decency and civilization and good character of my fellow-countrymen in New Hampshire, and had no other foundation than the Senator from New Hampshire himself offers to the Senate, I should feel impelled by every sense of public duty and public honor, as a Senator and a gentleman, to interpose my arm and my voice in their defense; I should feel that I ought to lift my voice, as I do now, against such revolutionary, violent, heartless, reckless, and unscrupulous charges as have been laid against the generous, industrious, and enlightened people from whom I hold a commission on this floor.

Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong this debate, but I was struck, as the Senator from New Hampshire proceeded, with the inconsistency in which he indulged. In the first place, he appealed to the record, to the official table promulgated by the secretary of state of Louisiana to show that the vote of that State exceeded the registration of the State.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to say that I have never done that.

Mr. GIBSON. I found in looking over the former speech of the Senator from New Hampshire on yesterday that he furnished a table which has gone before the country showing that the vote in certain parishes of the State of Louisiana exceeded the qualified voters in the parish.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now the Senator makes the statement accurately.

Mr. GIBSON. In order to do that he takes the election of 1888 and the registration of 1884.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator right there whether there has been any registration since 1884?

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be obliged to the Senator if he would put it in the RECORD.

Mr. GIBSON. I will furnish the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be obliged to the Senator if he would, because I have been unable to find any registration since 1884.

Mr. GIBSON. What a commentary is that upon the position the Senator from New Hampshire assumes! He would arraign the people of Louisiana when he himself declares that he is in perfect ignorance of the fact that there is required by law, ten days in advance of every general election in that State, a registration of the citizens in the State in order that they may be qualified to vote. That is a public fact which no one would overlook who desired to investigate and to ascertain how elections are conducted in the State of Louisiana. When, in ignorance of this fact, he displays to the people of the country the registration of 1884 coupled with the vote of 1888, showing thereby that the vote exceeded the registration, that Commonwealth stands here accused and convicted of the very fraud which he alleges against her. Yet the frail and uncertain groundwork of the prima facie case upon which this allegation rests is dissipated and disappears the very moment the official facts are presented to the Senate.

Not only that, but I show that in a period of twelve years there was a fluctuation in the total vote of only 27,000 in the State of Louisiana during the last election, whereas in the State of Massachusetts there was within one year a fluctuation in the total vote of 95,000. I submit the circumstances which led to the election of General Butler in Massachusetts to the governorship of that State, the influences that were behind him, the peculiar conditions of society in the State of Massachusetts, a State as much honored by myself and by the people of this country as any one in it, perhaps, except the State of Virginia, as the leading State of the Revolution, and in all the great occurrences which have taken place upon the arena of American politics in this country—a State with fixed institutions, with fixed opinions, whose society has never been subverted or revolutionized by force and war.

But when the Senator is confronted by these fluctuations of the votes in New York and in Massachusetts, and when the offer is made to him to take up these newspaper clippings concerning the election in the State of Rhode Island, he declines the offer. However, he occupies himself as a Senator on this floor by clipping from day to day the newspaper accounts of one occurrence after another in the State of Louisiana. Yet at the outset he declares that the press was muzzled in the State of Louisiana, and that therefore it was impossible from the newspapers of that State to ascertain what the condition of society was in it. So the propositions upon which his prima facie case rests—first, the official returns of the registration and the election; and secondly, the fluctuation of the vote in the State of Louisiana; and thirdly, the newspaper clippings, which he declares himself are untrustworthy, as we all know they are—have no foundation in fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I have made no such declaration. I said that accounts of these transactions rarely found their way into the local papers, and that in order to ascertain them we must glean them either from the Northern press or the metropolitan press. I did not make the statement——

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator declared in his speech which I had the honor of reading yesterday or the day before that the false countings and killing of voters are seldom found recorded in Democratic newspapers, and never in local newspapers of Louisiana; and yet he has not quoted from a single paper outside of the State of Louisiana to maintain his allegations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I expressly excepted, if the Senator will allow me, the metropolitan journals. He will find the statement in my speech which he says he did me the honor to read.

Mr. GIBSON. The first proposition upon which the Senator proceeds to arraign the State of Louisiana was based upon the registration and the vote in that State. He finds by his own admission that that falls from under his feet. The third proposition rests entirely upon the newspaper clippings.

The Senator says also that the negroes are being disarmed in the State of Louisiana. His information on the subject is as unreliable as it was with respect to the registration and the vote cast in the State. When I go to my old home in the parish of Terre Bonne, where the colored people still live, occupying their homes and cultivating their farms, without even paying rent to me or any taxes, I send over to them and borrow guns when I desire to go hunting. I have no gun in my own house. I know something of the people of Louisiana. I have traveled through nearly every parish in it. I believe I know as many of my fellow-citizens personally as any living man, and I can venture to state from my personal knowledge that the idea that the white people are disarming the colored people is simply absurd. The Senator would be laughed at if he would go in any neighborhood in the State and make such a declaration.

The Senator alludes to some occurrence in which he said my brother was engaged in Terre Bonne Parish. What does that rest on? It rests upon the irresponsible declaration of some private letters written to the Senator by a single man in the parish, of whom I never heard, and I doubt if the man ever lived there. The parish in which I reside went for the Republican party in the last election and Republican members were elected to the Legislature, and my impression is they voted for me; certainly they did not vote against me for the Senate.

So the Senator's arraignment stands upon inadequate premises. He has been carried away by his zeal for his party. He has been carried away by his desire that certain political workers who claim citizenship in Louisiana shall visit Washington and retail to him and to the political managers of the Republican party stirring tales of their grievances and their wrongs—grievances and wrongs that exist in every large and populous community; grievances and wrongs that ought to be punished in my State, and many of which are not punished in my State; grievances and wrongs that exist perhaps in the Senator's own State and in the State of every Senator who has a seat on this floor. We can not remedy all wrongs by legislation. We can not hope to stretch out our arms from the Senate Chamber to give quiet and peace and protection to every individual in this country. We must hope that the desire of self-government, of amendment on the part of the people themselves where these wrongs occur, will lead them to seek redress of them, because the wrong against one man to-day may become a wrong against another man to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it disturb the Senator or interrupt him if I should ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Louisiana (for I have tried to understand the point of the debate on both sides, although I have not been in the Senate Chamber all the time) what is the objection to an inquiry by the Senate of the United States to ascertain what the truth is? If there be any considerable number of people in the State of Louisiana or Vermont who are deprived of rights which enter into the composition of the Government of the United States and they appeal for redress, what is the ground and reason why the Senate should not inquire?

I remember, if my friend will permit me for a moment, that in 1879 or 1880, when a political party of which I am not usually a member was in the majority here and had sway, an inquiry was instituted by that majority, and without any opposition on this side, into wrongs concerning the suffrage, etc., I think in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, and there was one allegation touching some wrongs in one county in the State of Vermont. As I remember, all the Senators on this side said, "By all means; make every inquiry; let us develop the truth and see how far the right of rights," as platforms have justly called it, "has been evaded; and then we can consider whether within our competence and scope there is any redress." I should like to understand the precise reason why it is not thought fit that we should find out what the truth really is.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Senator from Vermont had done me the honor to listen to my previous remarks he would have ascertained my objections to this particular resolution and this particular mode of redress and inquiry. There has been no memorial here from any man in the State of Louisiana stating that he had suffered any grievance. There has been no complaint addressed to the Senate of the United States. There is no tumult, no "buck-shot war," no insurrection. It is one government, and all is quiet and peaceable. There are no complaints from disappointed candidates, no memorials from the citizens; but a Senator from a distant State, 1,500 miles away, rises in the Senate and offers the registration and the vote of the State, which he now confesses he did in error, and reads anonymous letters——

Mr. CHANDLER. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I have made no such confession of an error, Mr. President.

Mr. GIBSON. The record will show and does show his own confession of his ignorance of the registration. He reads anonymous letters to the President of the Senate, he reads newspaper slips. On these absurd evidences he alleges that there is a conspiracy in the State against self-government, and he asks that one of the standing committees of the Senate, on this inadequate showing, shall be instructed to make an inquiry to ascertain whether there be a republican form of government in the State of Louisiana; whether there be a Legislature; whether there be a governor; whether there be a supreme court, and whether there be a people in the enjoyment of self-government in that State. He is not willing to refer the resolutions and charges and testimony to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for their consideration and report, but wishes to instruct the committee, whether they approve of the investigation or not, to proceed with it.

I submit to the veteran Senator from Vermont whether, on such a showing and in the midst of a Presidential election, this committee should be instructed now to proceed with such an examination and inquiry, to be conducted, perhaps, against their own sense of propriety and judgment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask my honorable friend from Louisiana what the Presidential election has to do with it? I confess I do not understand.

Mr. GIBSON. I fear that the Senator is so fertile in questions that I shall exhaust the patience of the Senate if I attempt to answer them one after the other. If the Senator himself can not perceive some relation between this investigation and the Presidential election, when the resolution itself declares that the inquiry is to be made in order to ascertain in advance whether the people of Louisiana ought to be permitted to vote for Presidential electors, I think I may conclude that the Senator is asking his questions without having deigned even to read the resolution itself. One less experienced in public affairs than the Senator from Vermont would find, if he looked into the history of this body, that these investigations, these inquiries, these inquisitions, always accompany a Presidential election. No such resolutions are offered, no such inquiries are instituted by enterprising political Senators except in view of elections for the Presidency in which the fortunes of their party are concerned; and this shall be my brief answer to the Senator from Vermont.

[The New Orleans Times-Democrat.]

THE GREAT SOUTH.

The Times-Democrat presents elsewhere this morning, as it has for five years, a review of the condition of the Southern States to-day and the progress they have made in the past twelve months. When we first told this story but little was known of the wealth and advantages of the South. To-day the whole world recognizes them, and there is scarcely a paper in the North but publishes columns each year about Southern progress and development, while scores of industrial papers have sprung into existence here to chronicle the advance made in each line of mining or manufactures. Moreover, the Southern States no longer "hide their lights under a bushel." They recognize the benefits to accrue to them from making known their wealth, their resources, and their progress. Nearly all of them have statistical bureaus and publish from time to time interesting reports of their condition.

From these and other reports it is an easier matter to-day to give, as we do elsewhere, the progress of the South during the year, and to find how far it has moved forward since 1880.

The doubter who may regard what the papers have had to say about the South as due to a disposition to "boom" things must be convinced by the official figures of the assessments. No one can imagine for a second that these exaggerate the value of property. On the contrary, there is a strong disposition to undervalue it. When, therefore, the assessments show that the wealth of the South is increasing at a rate nearly twice as great as the population, it is evidence of prosperity which none can deny or dispute. The following is the assessment of the several Southern States during the census year and for 1887–'88. The assessments now being made will show a still larger increase.

States.	1887–'88.	1879–'80.
Alabama	$214,925,869	$117,486,181
Arkansas	148,868,206	86,409,364
Florida	84,860,534	29,471,618
Georgia	341,504,921	235,650,530
Kentucky	483,491,690	318,037,875
Louisiana	221,500,000	158,587,495
Mississippi	129,887,254	106,594,708
North Carolina	210,035,453	156,100,202
South Carolina	141,495,056	132,037,986
Tennessee	239,750,000	211,768,538
Texas	650,412,401	304,493,163
Virginia	374,043,338	308,455,135
Total	3,240,774,722	2,164,792,795

In the census report on valuations, the Census Bureau in 1880 estimated that the true value of property of all kinds in the South was much greater than the assessments—57 per cent. greater in Texas and Virginia, 43 per cent. in Georgia—the total being $5,725,000,000 as against an assessment of $2,164,792,795. On this basis the true valuation of the South to-day is $8,570,829,140, showing an increase during the past eight years of $2,845,829,140, with an improvement in the assessment of $1,075,981,927.

The wealth to each inhabitant is:

Assessed wealth per capita, 1880	$148.42
Assessed wealth per capita, 1888	171.11
Actual wealth per capita, 1888	452.43

This improvement has kept on steadily from year to year, as the following figures from the Times-Democrat's reports will show:

1879	$2,164,792,795	1884	$2,887,834,861
1880	2,388,642,420	1885	2,996,514,535
1881	2,473,620,423	1886	3,028,536,879
1882	2,565,903,787	1887	3,064,800,443
1883	2,782,115,803	1888	3,240,774,722

It will be noted that last year's improvement was considerably above the average.

We have elsewhere given so full a review and such ample statistics on this subject that we will but present the following figures, making a comparison between the South to-day and what it was in 1880. Nothing better illustrates the progress made during that period.

	1888.	1880.	Increse.
			Per cent.
Population	18,942,858	14,639,714	29.4
Assessment	$3,240,774,722	$2,164,792,795	49.8
Railroads, miles	35,679	17,808	100.0
Hands employed in factories	440,253	215,245	141.0
Capital	$426,597,000	$179,366,230	143.5
Production	$585,088,103	$315,924,794	85.4
Pig-iron produced, tons	845,920	212,022	397.8
Mineral output	$25,482,600	$3,347,445	760.6
Farm products	$793,098,293	$611,679,048	29.7
Farm animals	44,830,972	20,754,243	55.8
Fruit, value	19,421,380	9,103,113	113.4
Total production of all kinds, agriculture, mining, manufacturing, fisheries, etc	$1,353,342,620	$949,814,720	42.5
Schools	62,038	45,031	37.8
Children attending	2,402,117	1,832,620	36.7
School expenditures	$11,742,702	$6,415,706	83.2

It will be seen that in every respect the South has moved forward more rapidly in wealth than in population; that it produces more and is richer and more prosperous in every way. These statistics draw a better picture than any words can of the advance of the South since 1880.

[The New Orleans Times-Democrat.]

NEW ORLEANS.

These advantages, cheap raw materials, cheap transportation, and the best markets were in th mselves enough to build up manufactures here. Another advantage that might be mentioned is the variety of industries concentrated here which must help each other. The presence of the great foundries of New Orleans, of the saw-mills, will of necessity aid other establishments which may need lumber or machinery of a peculiar kind. In New Orleans they can get everything they want and will not be required to send elsewhere for it.

And, finally, it was discovered that New Orleans possessed an abundance of labor, excellent in character, intelligent, capable, endowed with much of that taste to be found in France, tractable, and free from that unfriendly feeling toward capital which creates a friction in New England and other industrial sections, and which has so injured manufacturing there.

The result of these discoveries has been to bring about a rapid advance in manufactures here, the details of which are given elsewhere. The manufactures of New Orleans have more than doubled in the past eight years, as follows:

Year.	Establishments.	Capital.	Hands.	Wages.	Products.
1888	2,185	$21,677,670	23,865	$8,242,599	$41,508,000
1880	915	8,565,303	8,404	3,717,557	18,808,000
Increase	1,270	13,102,367	15,461	4,525,042	22,700,000

Capital no longer hesitates over these investments and more has found its way into manufacturing industries during the past year than during the entire decade between 1870 and 1880.

Mr. TELLER. I do not rise to discuss the resolution before the Senate nor the conduct of the people of Louisiana, either in this election or any other. I have had some experience of these matters in the way of investigation, and I sympathize very much with what was stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] the other day when he said it was useless, perhaps, to discuss this question because we were powerless to redress the wrongs that by general admission are perpetrated. What I desire now is to correct a statement made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] as to the opinion of Republican Senators in regard to the rights of the Chinese under the Declaration of Independence. I suppose he meant to say that they hold on their side that the Declaration of Independence was not intended to cover any but white men, and did not intend to cover and did not cover Chinese.

Mr. President, for one, I desire to enter my dissent from that doctrine. The Declaration of Independence, in my judgment, covers all mankind, white and black and red, and I do not find anything inconsistent with that declaration in my attitude toward the Chinese.

I do not understand that the Declaration of Independence declares that every man is the social equal of every other man. I do not understand that the Declaration of Independence declares that every man has the same rights that every other man has all over the world. I understand it to mean simply that when the people are grouped in one community under one government every man is equal before the law. That is all it asserted. It did not assert that the Englishman who comes to America is the equal before the law of the American citizen, nor did it assert that the Chinaman coming here is equal to the American citizen before the law. If that was so, by what right do we say that the foreigner who comes here shall not participate in the affairs of government until he has passed a certain probationary period and his qualifications have been determined by a proper court? The right, entirely consistent with the Declaration of Independence, to say that any man who comes here from another country, not being a citizen of this, comes here subject to just such laws as we make for him, has never been denied that I know of in the history of the Government; and when I vote to say that a Chinaman shall not come here and vote, or that he shall not come here even when he does not vote, I do not run counter to anything in the Declaration of Independence.

We have the same right to say that the white man of Great Britain or France or any other portion of the world shall not come here that we have to say that the Chinaman shall not come here. We say the Chinaman shall not come here because his presence is injurious to the interests of the American people. Whenever the American people believe that the presence of the white man from Great Britain or any other country in the world will be injurious to our people, it will not only be our right but it will be our duty to say that that man shall not come, or if he comes shall not remain.

I have never put my opposition to the admission of the Chinaman upon any other ground than I would put my opposition to the admission of an Englishman or a Frenchman or a German; not upon the color of his skin; not upon the inferiority of his intelligence, which I claim exists; not because he is incapable of taking on the highest civilization that belongs to the Caucasian race; but because his presence here is injurious to the people who are here and who compose this Government and have a right to legislate for themselves in their interests, however injurious that legislation may be to those who are not a part and parcel of this Government; and I adhere to every word that was uttered in the Declaration of Independence in its highest and noblest sense. It means that if a Chinaman is made a fellow-citizen by your consent, you must treat him as you treat your white brother. It means that though the African is dark, thick-lipped, curly haired, and ignorant, if he is your fellow-citizen you must mete out to him the same political rights as you mete out to the most intelligent and the wealthiest white man in your community. That is what the Declaration of Independence means, and that is what, so far as I can, I intend in my legislative career to insist shall be its construction, and that the Government shall be administered upon that theory so far as it is possible.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] says that the conservative people of this country are weary of these inquiries into the affairs of the Southern States. I do not so understand the temper of the American people. I believe that what they are weary of are the frauds, false countings, and murders of legal voters which are going on in the South in order to make that section solid and enable it to govern the North and the country.

The Senator says that if an inquiry of this kind was suggested in reference to New Hampshire, he would lift his arm and his voice in this Senate to prevent such an investigation. Mr. President, when such evidence is presented to the Senate of the United States of wholesale fraud and of widespread murder resorted to in the State of New Hampshire to prevent the Democrats of that State from voting at any election, the Senator from Louisiana may interpose to prevent an investigation, but there will be no such interposition on the part of either Senator from New Hampshire or any Republican Senator upon this floor.

The Senator likens the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when charged with an investigation of this kind, to the ear of the tyrant Dionysius. The comparison is inapt. Committees of this body are the ears of no tyrant. They are the ears, the eyes, and the limbs of the legislature of a republic, and I trust that the time will never come when the ears of the American Senate will not be open to frauds, outrages, and murders committed anywhere in this country for political reasons. I trust that when the humblest citizen, wronged in property or in personal liberty, comes to the American Senate and asks an investigation a hearing will be accorded to him, the facts ascertained and proclaimed to the American people.

Mr. President, the Senator has carefully refrained from alluding, as have all the Senators who have discussed this general question at this session, to the facts of which complaint is made. They refuse to enter into them. They say there is no constitutional authority to investigate them. They deal in generalities entirely, and they dislike to face and they do not face the specific facts which make this outcry before the American people.

The charge is that these outrages, that these murders of colored people in Louisiana and in other Southern States, are committed for political reasons. They are not murders of mere brutality; they are not isolated in their character, perpetrated in pursuance of no deliberate purpose; they are not, as Democrats are fond of calling them, sporadic in their nature; but they are part of a widespread, deliberate system of politics and political action on the part of the Democratic party, established in order that the control of the Congress and the Presidency of the United States may be wrongfully and criminally transferred from the party to which a free and fair and honest election would give it to another party, which can only obtain that control by such frauds and by such violence as are now exhibited to the whole nation.

I stated when this resolution was before the Senate on a former occasion that these methods of politics which were resorted to in order to secure a return of 136,746 votes and a majority of 84,753 for Nicholls in Louisiana on the 7th of April were a continuing system; that the same species of intimidation, violence, and murder was being continued in the State of Louisiana as a preparation for the election which is to give the electoral votes of the State of Louisiana to Grover Cleveland.

Recent facts justify the assertion which I then made, and disagreeable as I know it is, painful as I know it is, harshly as I know it grates upon the sensitive and patriotic nerves of the Senator from Louisiana to contemplate the fact that in his State to-day black men, Republicans, are being butchered in order that the Presidential electoral vote of that State may be cast for Grover Cleveland, yet I conceive it to be my privilege and my duty to bring these facts to the attention of the American Senate, to the attention of the people of New Hampshire, if the Senator will have it so, and to the attention of the American people, in order that possibly they may be aroused to the enormity of the wrongs that are being perpetrated upon the humble colored voters in this State of Louisiana upon which the Senator has passed such a eulogy.

I find in the New Orleans Daily Picayune of Monday morning, September 17, 1888, the following account:

LOUISIANA—BREAUX BRIDGE—CRIME COMMITTED ON NEGRO WOMEN—THE WHITE PEOPLE IN MASS MEETING DECLARE SUCH PROCEEDINGS SHALL STOP.

BREAUX BRIDGE, LA., ST. MARTIN'S PARISH, September 16.

An awful crime was perpetrated in this vicinity Friday night. A gang supposed to be composed of five thus far unknown parties assaulted a negro cabin, and shooting through the walls mortally wounded a black woman, who died a few hours afterwards. From this place they went to another cabin, outraged a black woman, and then whipped a black man.

The negroes have made no affidavits yet. The white population is very much excited over this matter, and held last night an indignation meeting. About three hundred white men were present. Hon. Charles Delhommer made a stirring speech, in which he denounced such parties and such actions in the most virulent language. He was warmly applauded, and resolutions were immediately and unanimously passed that these negroes will be fully protected, so as to enable them to make the proper affidavits declaring all those whom they may have recognized, so that they may be duly arrested, delivered to the courts, and dealt with to the utmost rigor of the law.

The white people are decided that order and peace shall prevail, and that any disturber of them shall be summarily dealt with, whether white or black.

Also the following from the Picayune of the 18th:

CALLING A HALT ON NEGRO OUTRAGES—SAM. POLK CHARGED WITH MURDERING A COLORED WOMAN.

ST. MARTINSVILLE, LA., September 17.

An affidavit was to-day made against Sam. Polk, a young man of Breaux Bridge, for the murder of the negro woman who was so brutally killed near Breaux Bridge Friday night. It appears that Polk, who was accompanied by four other men, was well recognized, and he lost his hat, which was brought to the district attorney's to-day. The hat was recognized as belonging to Polk. Polk is said to be the one who outraged the other colored woman, and an affidavit was made against him for that crime also.

Polk has fled, and at this writing has not been arrested, although the officers and citizens of Breaux Bridge went in his pursuit.

There are strong doubts against the other assassins and they will soon be in the hands of justice.

The whipping and bulldozing of negroes is getting to be too frequent, especially by irresponsible parties, who, when banded, are criminally inclined. These outrages will be stopped and at once.

Another account, in the Washington Post, September 17, 1888, is headed:

LOUISIANA OUTRAGES.

NEW ORLEANS, September 16.

A Picayune special from Breaux Bridge, La., says that on Friday night five unknown men attacked a negro cabin, and shooting through the walls, killed a colored woman. At another cabin they outraged a colored woman and whipped a colored man.

A mass meeting of three hundred white men was held Saturday night to express indignation at the outrages. Resolutions were adopted pledging protection to the colored people and punishment to the perpetrators of the crime.

I make the prediction, as I did on a previous occasion, that the indignation will end in resolutions. There will be no indictment and no punishment of the perpetrators of these outrages upon these negroes, the object of which is to affect the approaching Presidential election, when the parish of St. Martin is to be converted from a Republican parish into a Democratic parish. In the parish in 1874 there were 1,631 white votes and 1,771 colored votes. The vote returned in 1888 was for Nicholls, 1,107; for Warmoth, 1,624. This is one of the few parishes in which at the last election the Republicans managed to obtain a majority. The decree, however, has gone forth from the Democrats of Louisiana that St. Martin shall not be in the Presidential election a Republican parish, but shall cast a majority for Grover Cleveland.

The Louisiana Standard of September 22 gives the following account of this Breaux Bridge atrocity:

DEMOCRATIC MURDER—AN EPIDEMIC OF ASSASSINATION—ORGANIZED GANGS OF DEMOCRATIC MURDERERS MAKING THE KILLING OF NEGROES A PASTIME—HOW LOUISIANA NEGROES ARE BEING REDUCED TO MEXICAN PEONAGE—ASSASSINATION ITEMS AS TOLD IN DEMOCRATIC SPECIALS—NO POLITICS IN IT, BUT THE MURDERERS ALL GOOD DEMOCRATS.

ST. MARTINSVILLE, LA., September 17, 1888.

"News reached here this morning of one of the most cowardly crimes that ever was committed in this parish." Friday night, at about 11 o'clock, in the vicinity of Breaux Bridge, a gang of four or five parties, some of them so far "unknown, whipped a black man, criminally assaulted one black woman, and killed another."

The particulars gathered from the mother of the dead woman are about as follows:

On Friday night the gang called at the door of the woman's house and knocked, saying it was the sheriff. She opened the door and recognized one of the parties, Sam Polk. She shut the door on them. They then fired through the door several shots, one of them taking effect in the woman's abdomen and she died next morning.

The coroner's inquest revealed "the fact that she bore seven months' twins, one of them having the ball through the head. The man Polk was recognized as having engaged in the three crimes. His hat was also found at the door of the cabin. He was not found when search was made for him.

"The white people are indignant and very much excited. Warrants have been issued against Polk and three other parties suspected to have participated in the crimes. The white people will see that the colored people are protected and justice done."

This is well enough in its way, in its recounting the damnable crime. All that about the white people being so terribly indignant is so much bosh. The parish has been a hell for the negroes for months. Democratic outlaws, called Regulators, have been and are in control of the parish. The killing and outraging of negroes has been their pastime. The planters have been and are helpless to afford their laborers any protection. The laborers are justly getting generally alarmed.

Those who can are showing the disposition to get away. The grinding season is coming on. The cane has to be gathered, and the sugar to be made. A large increase of laborers is wanted. The parish is getting to be known for the Democratic hell that it is. There is the growing fear that the needed laborers can not be had, that those now on hand will get out. All this means ruin. These Democratic murders, again, this epidemic of assassination of helpless negroes are reaching the North, may affect the coming election. There is the seeming desire to call a halt, to hold up until the grinding season and the election shall be well over. That is about the measure of the excitement among the whites. It is all fear and gammon. Nobody will be hurt for murdering negroes.

AND YET ANOTHER ITEM.

ST. MARTINSVILLE, September 18, 1888.

"Vilmont Hollier, Decliere Hollier, Detour Hollier, and Numa Boudreaux were arrested last night by Sheriff Gardemal and the citizens of Breaux Bridge, for the murder of the negro woman. Sam Polk is still at large and the officers are in pursuit. Vilmont Hollier is an ex-convict, having been pardoned last year."

This closes the present chapter of Democratic specials; maybe something may be done with that "ex-convict." Something evidently must be done, or that sugar crop goes to the demnition bow-wows—there won't be any laborers in the parish to make it.

That "ex-convict" will do to make an example of. There is nothing like an example, you know. The poor devil, as an "ex-convict," is not to be presumed as having any friends. Clean him out. The negroes will be satisfied that they are to be duly protected.

Bah! Why not go for the Democratic chivalry, the sons of the first families, the organized gangs of "regulators?" These are but the later and the smaller crimes. Why not attack that Democratic damnable verdict "parties unknown," covering the assassins of Freetown?

It is no use, gentlemen. Louisiana is overridden with Democratic assassins. You may not wipe out the facts.

The outside world is coming to understand them. You have your Democratic government, installed by force and fraud. Your authorities are in the hands of those who forcibly and fraudulently put them in power. Your bulldozers and ballot-box stuffers are running the State. They are making the State a Democratic hell by murdering and outraging Republican negroes. Your State is virtually damned, is accursed because of an assassin Democracy. The negroes must look out for themselves. They must get out of the State.

The Washington Post of August 27 has the following:

Race troubles in Louisiana—

This case is one of those which the Senator from Louisiana calls the petty grievances with which the Senate of the United States ought not to be troubled. He would scorn, he says, if any petty grievance of this kind should happen in the State of New Hampshire to unworthily and in an undignified and unpleasant manner bring it before this lofty body, of which he has the honor to be a member—

RACE TROUBLES IN LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 26.

A dispatch from St. Martinsville says: "For three or four weeks past wild rumors have been spreading all over the parish that the negroes were arming and that a conflict of races was imminent. These rumors induced whites to organize for protection and safety.

The 1,631 whites of St. Martin are in danger of having the 1,771 colored voters arm themselves and assail and assault, kill and murder these poor, innocent, quiet, well-behaved, and peaceful Democrats of that parish; so for protection and safety they decide as follows:

As a measure of preservation, the whites decided to disarm some of the negroes. The whites left yesterday for the Fifth ward, and completed the work of disarming without any resistance, except in one instance, where the whites were fired upon by two negroes, Albert Harris and his son, who were intrenched in a cabin.

The whites of Louisiana, if they hear that two poor negroes have possession of guns in an humble cabin in which they live, forthwith declare that these two negroes are intrenched in their cabin and that the whites are in danger, and thereupon they organize a posse—if there are two negroes, generally of about one hundred and fifty whites—and they go to the cabin and disarm these terrible negroes!

The negroes fired fifteen or twenty shots, which were returned by the whites. After firing for ten minutes the negroes surrendered. One of them was wounded in the arm. They were escorted out of the parish and warned never to return. The work of disarming was continued in a section of the Fifth ward where trouble was anticipated, but the rumor proved to be unfounded. Two bad characters were ordered to leave the parish within a specified time.

I have not the slightest doubt that they were going to vote the Republican ticket if they had staid there, and according to the modern Louisiana doctrine which the Senator has avowed and attempted to justify upon the floor of this Senate to-day, if a man wants to vote the Republican ticket he is a bad character, is to be notified to leave.

The weapons taken from the negroes were mostly old shotguns. A few rifles were found, but there was nothing showing an aggressive armament, except in the case of Albert Harris—who had a new Winchester rifle and a good supply of ammunition. All is now quiet.

One of these two negroes—

Undoubtedly all is now quiet, and that kind of quiet will continue until after the 6th of November, when the votes for Grover Cleveland in that parish have been counted and the votes for Benjamin Harrison have not been counted, and then the negroes may have some measure of real rest and peace until the approach of another election.

Here is a telegram from Shreveport, La. This is from the Daily Picayune of September 18; no old bones, or time-worn stories, or rotten timber in any of these extracts from the current Southern newspapers. The Picayune says:

SHREVEPORT—NEGRO MURDERERS SUE FOR A CHANGE OF VENUE—SHREVEPORT'S DELEGATES FOR BLANCHARD.

SHREVEPORT, LA., September 17.

The arguments in the case of Henry Brown et al. for a change of venue were heard this morning in the district court. A number of witnesses, all summoned by the defendants, testified that a fair trial could not be secured in Shreveport for the accused. The case was continued until to-morrow for further evidence. The accused are held for conspiracy and murder.

They are charged with killing Ed. Scott, a negro, on Saturday night, September 1, while he was at his home in bed. The crime is one of the darkest and most deliberate ever perpetrated in this communtty.

The primary election for delegates to the Congressional convention, fixed to convene on September 28, was very quiet. Less than 100 votes were cast throughout the city. All the delegates elected favor BLANCHARD's return to Congress from this district. He will have no opposition.

Undoubtedly the canvass of Mr. BLANCHARD will be quiet, as quiet as has been his nomination. No opposition has he to fear——

Mr. GIBSON. I do not like to interrupt the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. Nothing will give me more pleasure.

Mr. GIBSON. The remark that Mr. BLANCHARD will have no opposition means to his nomination, not to his election.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not to his election. There had better not be any vigorous opposition to his election, unless the negroes of that district want general slaughter among them before the 6th of November.

I do not know upon what ground the Senator from Louisiana says that there will be organized Republican opposition to Mr. BLANCHARD'S election. The last time he was elected there was no opposition, and if affairs are as quiet in his district—"quiet" meaning the quiet that succeeds the killing of prominent and active negro Republicans—there will not be likely to be any opposition to him at the approaching election.

[The Daily Picayune, Tuesday morning, September 18, 1888.]

TWO MORE NEGROES TAKEN OUT AND SHOT TO DEATH.

OPELOUSAS, LA., September 17.

Yesterday morning at Ville Platte prairie a crowd of armed men rode to the house of two negroes named Jean Pierre-Salet and Sidairo, and after leading them a short distance riddled them with buckshot, killing both men instantly. This killing is supposed to have been brought about by the incendiary language recently used by these two negroes.

The affair created intense excitement in the neighborhood where it occurred.

Doubtless the incendiary language used by these negroes was something like the incendiary language which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] showed the other day was used by the negroes in Texas, of which complaint was made, which was, I believe, that they argued in favor of a protective tariff.

Since this resolution was before the Senate on a previous occasion I have found one or two accounts in other papers of the Freetown affair, which I desire to incorporate in my remarks at the risk of disturbing the sensibilities of the Senator from Louisiana. This is from the Weekly Messenger at St. Martinsville, La.:

A RIOT—E. PAYSON SMITH KILLED AND ANOTHER MAN SLIGHTLY WOUNDED—TWENTY-FIVE NEGROES KILLED.

The news came here yesterday morning of a riot which took place in the parish of Iberia during the evening of Thursday. The particulars we got at the time of going to press are about as follows: It was reported that the negroes were arming and drilling in the section where the riot took place, and Captain Cades, in command of a detachment of his company, went there to quiet and disarm the negroes. The negroes, it appears, were congregated in a cabin, and when Captain Cades informed them of his mission the negroes from within the cabin opened fire on him and his men, killing Mr. E. Payson Smith and slightly wounding another man. Captain Cades then ordered his men to return the fire, and twenty-five negroes fell dead.

The body of Mr. Smith was immediately taken to New Iberia.

At the time we go to press everything is reported quiet.

NEW IBERIA—VERDICT OF THE CORONER'S JURY ON THE NEGROES SLAIN IN THE FREETOWN RIOT.

[From the Louisiana Standard, New Orleans, August 25, 1888.—Correspondence.]

NEW IBERIA, LA., August 23.

The coroner's jury reached a verdict yesterday evening in the case of the killing of the ten negroes in the Freetown riot on the 16th instant. Two days were spent in collecting evidence, which resulted in the following verdict:

"We, the jury impaneled to hold an inquest on the body of Tom Simon, deceased, come to the conclusion that he met his death by a gunshot wound inflicted by parties unknown to the jury. From the evidence collected the jury is further led to the conclusion that the following also met their deaths by gunshot wounds inflicted at the same time and place by parties likewise unknown to us: Sam Cahill, Louis Simon, Edw. Simon, Eugene Green, Alex. Valere, Edw. Valere, and others. This at Freetown, parish of Iberia, on the 15th day of August, 1888."

Here is the damning outcome. The verdict of the coroner's jury but smoothed over a wholesale massacre. It is a palpable, damning lie. Do the members of this jury realize the position in which this verdict places them? Do they realize that they must stand self-convicted as perjurers before God and man? Where is the honor of a community? Where the honesty of a juryman's oath? Where is the honor of Governor Nicholls? "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

I also have in the Picayune an account of this "Iberia riot," as it is called, which I desire to insert in the RECORD. The account of the beginning of the affray here given is that the white people of the section began to feel alarmed about the negroes at Freetown, and this is what they did:

The citizens rode into Freetown and found, as rumored, a large number of armed negroes quartered there. They asked its meaning and the negroes were silent. They then demanded a surrender of their arms, with the promise that when they learned to behave themselves—

I judge that means only that when they learned to submit to the policy that has been outlined here to-day by the Senator from Louisiana of having no ticket in the field except the Democratic ticket—they would be returned, and that the negroes should at once disperse. The great majority of them accepted the terms of the party and surrendered their arms, which were found without exception to be loaded with ball or buckshot.

The negroes took possession, it appears, of Rev. Mr. Nora's house. Then follows the brutal massacre which was described in the Times-Democrat, published with my remarks the other day:

THE IBERIA RIOT—TWENTY NEGROES AND ONE WHITE MAN SLAIN—GLOWING DETAILS OF THE BATTLE—THE NEGROES BARRICADED IN THE PREACHER'S HOUSE—NONE LEFT ALIVE TO TELL THE STORY—SOME INNOCENT MEN WHO SUFFERED WITH THE GUILTY—THE NAMES OF THE SLAIN—THE FUNERAL OF MR. SMITH IN NEW IBERIA—POLITICS NOT A FACTOR IN THE FIGHT.

NEW IBERIA, LA., August 17.

To-day all is quiet again. This morning a large number of men from various sections of the country and neighboring towns were here, but nearly all of them returned to their homes during the forenoon.

This morning the remains of Mr. E. P. Smith were removed to the Episcopal church. He was forty-two years of age and a native of Ohio, and a bachelor. The funeral services were conducted at the church by Rev. C. C. Kramer. The edifice was crowded to a jam, and the yard and walks in front of the church were also crowded. After the regular services at the church the funeral cortege was formed, as follows: The Iberia Guards, the Attakapas Rangers (of which the deceased was a member), the hearse, the Phœnix Bucket Fire Company (of which the deceased was also a member), Iberia Steam Fire Company, No. 1; American Steam Fire Company, No. 2; followed by many friends and acquaintances on foot and in carriages.

A large number of ladies were in attendance, and their floral offerings were profuse and tasty. Palm leaves figured conspicuously among the evergreens.

At the grave Rev. Kramer finished the services, after which followed a salute of three volleys by a detachment of the Iberia Guards. Thus were the last tributes of respect paid to the departed—a noble spirit, a fast friend, a congenial companion.

The trouble of yesterday grew out of a spirit of revenge on the part of the negroes. The better element of this and neighboring parishes had found it impossible to longer tolerate a certain element of idle and immoral characters. This latter class were ordered away from the various sections, and many of them found refuge at Freetown, a small village composed entirely of negro families. There they told their stories to their friends and nursed their growing anger.

On Monday last the report reached this place that the negroes were arming and congregating at Freetown. Their number was estimated at from 500 to 600 strong, mounted. Tuesday they had received re-enforcements sufficient to fully double their numbers, and feeling their strength they assumed a threatening attitude, boldly declaring the refugees should not leave the parish and should not be molested.

On Wednesday their numbers were further increased, and the people of the surrounding country began to feel some alarm lest these negroes, overestimating their strength, should attempt some acts of violence.

On Thursday matters had not improved up to noon. By this time the residents and property-owners of this section began to collect at a point a short distance from Freetown, their object being to disperse these negroes without violence and to send those who did not belong there to their homes and business.

Rev. H. Nora, a colored minister, left Freetown in the morning to attend a conference of ministers at this place, and during his absence his residence was taken possession of by a number of the armed negroes. This house refused to surrender, returning word that they were not to be taken. The whites then sent a second messenger to the house, saying they would give them twenty minutes in which to lay down their weapons. The negroes again refused.

In this house, situated but a short distance from the main road or street, were quartered some twelve or fifteen negroes, among the number their leaders.

A squad of mounted white citizens were some 150 yards from the house, waiting the expiration of the twenty minutes, and before the given time had expired a door of the house was thrown open and a volley fired at them. One horse was wounded.

This was a surprise to all, and immediately the firing became general. The door of the house was again closed, but a constant fire was kept up from windows and doors partly open for quite an interval. Later the fire was carried on by spurts by both sides, lasting in all for nearly an hour and a half.

At this time Mr. Smith broke from his lines and made for the house. His comrades implored him to return, but, deaf to their entreaties, he went on. The house was reached, the door was forced, and he fell. At his side was a comrade who had followed him on his fatal errand; but when Mr. Smith fell his comrade retreated backwards, keeping up a constant fire from a repeating rifle, and escaped unhurt.

At this stage of the fight the negroes became panic-stricken and attempted to flee from the house, and the deadly work was soon brought to a close.

After the fight closed the bodies of eight negroes were found in the house and five others outside.

Others say three or four more were killed. It is thought by some that a few made their escape, while others who were at the scene deny this.

One of the negroes who shot Mr. Smith was named Smith and was recognized among the dead by Mr. Smith's comrade to-day.

Coroner J. Wolf called a jury as follows: Mr. William Lamb, Dr. James A. Lee, Messrs. Zenon, Decuir, Doud, Laughlin, and William R. Burke, and proceeded with them to Freetown to view the remains of the negroes.

They returned this evening and have deferred taking testimony until a later date.

From the above statement of facts it will be clearly seen that politics have played no part; that the negroes brought the trouble on themselves; that they fired the first shot; that they shed the first blood, and that they bore the consequences of their acts.

The negroes who surrendered were not harmed in any way.

FREETOWN—WHERE THE BATTLE WAS FOUGHT—THE FIGHT AND ITS VICTIMS.

LAFAYETTE, LA., August 17.

The riot briefly reported from this point at a late hour last night as occurring at Cade's Station really occurred about 6 miles southwest of that point, at Freetown, which is located in the corner of Iberia Parish and only a short distance from St. Martin's, Lafayette, and Vermillion Parishes. This section is more properly located 4 miles southwest of Burk station on the Morgan Road, and about 10 miles from New Iberia.

Freetown is a little town of negroes, but more of a neighborhood, as it covers about 4 square miles, with fifteen families living in small hut-like houses from 100 to 400 yards apart, with small fields attached, from which they are supposed to make a living, and the houses and fields usually belong to the family using them.

About the center of the settlement is a store kept by a negro, a Baptist church, and a school-house. But a few white families live in the range of this neighborhood. There are but few houses there which could be called comfortable negro houses.

It is understood that for some years back considerable foraging and depredations in stealing of cattle, corn, and cotton on the outlying white neighborhood has been carried on, and supposed to have been done by some of those at Freetown. This is said to have been known to be true of Andy Smith and one or two of Tom Simon's sons. Several of these negroes are reported to have been whipped for it, but it was not possible to detect the ringleader, Andy Smith.

It is said that a few days since the regulators of that neighborhood sent him word that they were going to whip him. He immediately drew around him sixteen to eighteen negroes of the neighborhood, all of whom were armed with Winchester rifles, old muskets, and double-barreled shot-guns, numbers of the latter of recent purchase in New Iberia. This was but a few days since. He then sent word to the white people to come on, that he and his friends were ready for them, and, it is said, threatened the lives of four or five white men near by.

Andy Smith, the leader of the blacks in this trouble, has shot two or three white men in the past four years, and is known to be of desperate courage and meanness.

The four or five whites receiving this defiant message believed their lives were in danger, and sent a few messengers to New Iberia and Abbeville, across the line and into La Fayette, to the effect that they would be killed and appealed for help.

In response to this call about 150 to 200 men from these three sections reached Freetown after the dinner hour of yesterday. They found these armed negroes, about eighteen in number, barricaded in a new four-room frame house, built by their paster, Rev. Celeste Noop, who was at the time in New Iberia, holding a protracted meeting among his people. These negroes had sent Noop's wife away and were its sole occupants at the time.

The house was surrounded by the whites, and a half hour's delay occurred in a parley on the part of the whites, who assured Smith and his crowd that it was peace, if it was desired, and not violence, and if the negroes would surrender their arms the whites would take them away for the present, but at a subsequent time, when peace was fully established, they should be returned to their owners, and guarantied no violence to any one of the party.

In the interest of this purpose, the whites secured the services of old man Tom Simmons, father-in-law of Smith, and father of Louis and Edward Simmons, two of the occupants of the house, and also old man Sam Cohit, each of whom besought the barricaded negroes to comply with the request to surrender their arms and prevent any one from being hurt. Surly silence was the only response. The pacifying efforts were ineffectual. The whites were about 20 feet from the house. Payson Smith and Alfred Lasalle, of the whites, approached the house, and as Lasalle opened one of the doors, poor young Smith stuck his head in and was immediately shot down dead by Andy Smith.

This was the first signal for a general firing from inside by the blacks and outside by the whites. The house is new and unceiled and therefore has very thin walls. The doors and windows being closed, the firing was at and through this thin wall. The blacks standing close up the wall fired outside, and before it reached the whites the force of the ball was spent in passing through the wall. The whites at a long range penetrated the walls easier and only had a few feet to reach those on the inside, and hence proved more effectual in killing those for whom they shot. There were, it is estimated, four hundred to five hundred shots fired, and when the battle was over the walls from 4 inches to 5 feet above the floor were riddled with bullet-holes. Several of the negroes during the fight escaped and were shot while running, but most of them fell when they opened battle in the house.

It is understood when the battle was ended there were over twenty guns found in the house.

In addition to the killing of Payson Smith, the white forces suffered a slight wound in the wrist of Mr. Manard, a young creole from New Iberia Station.

In reference to the results on the side of the negroes, it is not absolutely certain, but from two sources it is made up as follows: A prominent gentleman who went to the grounds this morning says that he went into the negro church, when he found there were eight dead negroes who were left there to await the coroner's inquest. These were Sam Cohil, Earnest Grient, Andy Smith, Paul Charles, Louis Simmons, and three others whom the gentleman did not know. He was informed that old man Tom Simon had been killed and carried to his own house. He was also informed that an unknown negro was wounded and died last night, which would make ten killed. He was informed that four others were missing and unaccounted for—whether absent or dead was not known.

There was one wounded, Alex. Lee, a colored school teacher, who called Dr. B. T. Mosely to attend him. This would make a total of fifteen. Dr. Mosely says Lee is seriously wounded in the jaw and throat, and has a flesh wound in the breast. The other information is denied.

From a negro from Freetown, who was to-day at Cade's station: He says that there were originally thirteen dead negroes in the church, but that five were carried away, and that Tom Simmons, the unknown negro who died last night, and the school teacher would make sixteen, and the four missing would make a total of twenty.

In addition to the names of the dead first given the negro informant gives those of Edward Simon, son of old man Tom Simon and brother-in-law of Andy Smith; Edward Vallier, jr., Alex. Vallier, and T. Pochelle.

Violence is always an important fact in reaching intelligent conclusions, but this case is somewhat independent. Beyond the fact that Andy Smith for his general bad character was threatened with a whipping, in retaliation armed himself and friends and defied the white people, and then fired the first shot, in the face of the fact that there were ten whites to one, thus manifesting his daredevil rascality in the last moment of life, as death must have seemed inevitable to him after his killing young Smith.

This information is obtained by a buggy ride of nearly 40 miles to-day through mud and hot sun and a scarcity of intelligence to furnish it.

LAFAYETTE—THE EXCITEMENT IN A NEIGHBORING PARISH.

LAFAYETTE, LA., August 17.

Some excitement prevails here to-day consequent of the agitation in Abbeville and the unfortunate affair at Cade Station, in the lower portion of this parish. There is great uneasiness among the negroes, who fear a repetition of violent acts in this quarter. Many of the whites are supplying themselves with arms and ammunition in case of need, while it is rumored that there is a move to organize a guard for the protection of the town.

This trouble seemingly originated in St. Mary and Vermillion Parishes, and to some extent has spread over this parish, but your correspondent has been unable so far to gather definite information in regard to it. Several parties here, so says Dame Rumor, who have been guilty of miscegenation have been waited upon and ordered to leave. It is safe to say, however, that no bloodshed need be feared at this place, so the sober judgment of our citizens may be relied on to tide over the present uneasy state of affairs.

The farmers must necessarily suffer under this deplorable state of excitement, as the negroes will not leave their homes for fear of being waylaid. Everything is quiet to-night, and the outlook betokens an early subsidence of the regnant perturbation.

Mr. President, I wish to call the special attention of the Senate and of the country to this feature of Democratic Southern policy in the Southern States, which is called the disarming of the negroes. I take it that the right of every citizen to have a gun or a pistol and to keep that gun or pistol in his own possession, in his own house, is the indisputable right of every citizen of the United States. Without a law to the contrary—and I doubt whether any law to the contrary can constitutionally be enacted—every citizen, black or white, North or South, has the right to own a gun and to keep it. It is his property. It is his property for self-defense. It is his property for the defense of his home, his wife, and his children, and it can not be taken from him without the violation of a natural right, and as I believe without the violation of a constitutional right.

Article II of the amendments to the Constitution declares:

A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

That article grew out of the original theory of the founders of this Government that a well regulated militia was the sure defense of a State. It was the militiamen organized under that principle who fought the battles of the revolution and won our independence of the mother country, and from that day to this it has been understood to be a natural and a constitutional right on the part of every citizen to keep and to bear arms.

The policy which the Southern white Democrats have adopted is that in order to prevent the negro from exercising his right of suffrage under the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution he shall be deprived of the privilege of keeping arms in his possession. It must be apparent to every thoughtful citizen that this plan, if carried out, will prove to be utterly destructive of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution, and will bring the black people of the South into absolute subjection to the white people of the South.

Take the State of Louisiana. The proposition of the white Democrats of Louisiana is that every white citizen of that State may have a gun and a revolver, and may keep the same wherever he may be, and especially may keep them within his own home, and that he may use those arms according to his discretion if he does not create a breach of the peace.

The further proposition is that the colored people of Louisiana shall none of them be allowed to keep or bear arms and that the gun or the pistol of every colored man shall be taken from him. Manifestly the millennium of Southern Democrats will have come when this resolution of the Democrats of Louisiana is carried into effect, because we shall then have the whole white population armed each man with a gun, and we shall have the colored people, no one of them with any instrument either of offense or of defense, and all this in defiance of the natural and the constitutional right of the citizen.

Let me tell the Senator from Louisiana that this plan which has been inaugurated by the white Democrats of Louisiana, will not be a success. They may disarm here and there a few of the negroes of Louisiana, they may surround in their little homes or in the cabins of their colored clergymen a few little bands of negroes and take their arms from them, or shoot them down to bloody death because they are Republicans; but they will not succeed in disarming the whole body of the colored population of Louisiana.

The negroes of this country are growing in intelligence; they are gaining in courage on this question, and the colored men of Louisiana will maintain their right to keep and bear arms, in my judgment, in time and in the long run against the whole body of white leaguers, Kuklux ruffians, and all the other vagabonds, gamblers, thieves, thugs, and villains who, according to the Democratic papers of the city of New Orleans, have been organized in the interest of the Democratic party, and especially in the interest of the Senator from Louisiana who has addressed the Senate. The colored men will keep their arms and they will use their arms when they see fit to do so in defense of those rights of American citizens which belong to-day, at the South as well as the North, to every American citizen whatever may be the color of his skin, or whatever may be his politics, whether Democratic or Republican.

Mr. President, I do not intend to go over the ground which I covered the other day nor to follow the Senator from Louisiana at length in the remarks which he has made. He has omitted to refer in detail to any of the particular outrages which were recited by me as affording at least sufficient ground for an investigation. The Senator has undertaken to prove that there is nothing extraordinary or remarkable in the increase of the vote of the Democratic party in Louisiana from 62,540, the vote for Cleveland, from some 80,000, the largest vote that was ever cast, up to 136,746, by asserting that it is not strange that there are fluctuations of votes at different elections, and he has cited fluctuations which have occurred in Northern States.

Mr. President, I grant that mere fluctuations of votes up and down in various elections are not of themselves necessarily proofs of fraud, but I say that if you will find a case like this in Louisiana where for a series of years the largest vote which a political party has ever been able to cast has been 80,000, and where suddenly the vote has leaped from 80,000 up to 136,000, there is afforded a presumption of fraud which would of itself justify an investigation.

If the Senator will point out any parallel case to this monumental fraud in the State of Louisiana which was perpetrated by Governor McEnery and his satellites on the 17th day of April and subsequent to that time during the counting of the vote, I will insist that there should be an investigation of such an election, particularly if it resulted in the creation of a Legislature which has elected two United States Senators to claim seats in this body.

But I did not rest upon the extraordinary character of the vote on the face of the returns. I went on with prima facie proofs containing astonishing and remarkable revelations concerning the transactions that occurred in Louisiana on the 17th of April and prior thereto. I called attention to the murder of William Adams, a man who had been a Democrat, a friend of Governor McEnery, but who had seen fit to change his politics and to undertake to distribute in Monroe, La., the home of Governor McEnery, ballots for Warmoth, and who was killed by the infamous Captain Theobalds and his gang of cut-throats who to-day control the parish in which they live. His throat was cut and he was thrown into Bayou De Siard.

The Senator from Louisiana says he scorns in the American Senate to enter upon the consideration of an incident like this. I also called the attention of the Senator to a transaction in which his own brother was engaged, and which was exhibited to the Senate of the United States by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in a speech which he made here some three months ago, and which was repeated again in full in the newspapers of Louisiana. Not a word does the Senator utter in denial or in defense of that outrage upon the rights of the citizen.

The Senator from Louisiana has stated quite accurately, I think, the political policy of the Democratic party in the State of Louisiana. He says that in certain parishes, which I understand to be the colored parishes, where the colored people being Republicans and desiring to vote the Republican ticket are in an overwhelming majority, the policy of the Democratic party is to induce the Republicans to agree that there shall be only one ticket in the field and that shall be the Democratic ticket. He says that the Republicans of those parishes are becoming willing to assent to such a condition of political action or of political servitude, and that when such an arrangement is made, if anybody undertakes to dissent from it and to organize the Republican party, or to organize an independent party, or to run against the candidates nominated by the combination, it is customary to notify him to leave the parish.

Mr. President, I will take the proposition of the Senator and go before the American people upon the question whether or not there is under such circumstances a republican government. I understand a republican government to be a government elected by the free voters, with an honest count of the votes. I understand a republican government to be one which involves two parties; that republican governments are to be conducted ordinarily with a majority party and a minority party; that both parties are to be free; and that through the workings of parties, with vacillations from one side to the other of political power, the States and the nation go on successfully practicing the republican experiment.

But a government is not a republic unless two parties can safely be organized among the people, unless the members of each of those parties have equal rights in law and in fact. If there is to be but one party, with but one ticket in the field, the Republic is destroyed. That such is to be the rule I understand to be the position of the Democrats of Louisiana, as stated and justified by the Senator from Louisiana upon this floor.

On that issue I believe that the Republicans of this country can safely go to the American people. It is an issue which ought to be proclaimed in all its breadth and in all its fullness to the people of this Republic, the issue whether there shall be a free ballot, whether there shall be candidates on both sides, whether there shall be two parties in this Republic and in every portion of this Republic where citizens choose to organize parties, or whether, as the Senator says, there shall be but one party, and any citizen who undertakes to organize another party and to induce it to put candidates into the field shall be notified that he is a disturber of the public peace and be ordered to quit his home, as the Senator says, and as the facts show, Capt. H. B. Holmes was ordered to do in the case to which allusion has been made.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate any longer. I have heard criticism of the fact that there has been statement and discussion of the facts before the investigation has been made. I submit that unless the Senator from Louisiana had been willing that the resolution should pass it would not have been becoming for me to have urged its passage without presenting the prima facie evidence which seemed to me to justify an investigation. I have presented that evidence. I have shown the facts of record, the facts which have been reported to me; the conspiracy on the part of Governor McEnery and his associates to have a majority returned for Nicholls, whatever the vote might be that was actually cast, and I submit now, in closing, that the Senator from Louisiana has himself practically admitted in his speech that there exists in the State of Louisiana no republic, and if no republic, then no Legislature of a republic which could elect him and Mr. White to take seats in this body.

APPENDIX.

ARTICLES FROM THE LOUISIANA STANDARD, T. B. STAMPS, PROPRIETOR, NEW ORLEANS, AUGUST 25, 1888.

If the colored man in this State has a spark of spirit in his body, and desires to be practically free, as is guarantied by the national Constitution, he must leave here and go at once. Go North, East, or West, where you will be treated at least like a human being born according to God's laws.

We hope to publish next week the fact that the negro has started the immigration from this cut-throat slice of the solid South; that he will demonstrate that he means to be free by leaving a State where he is held now as much a slave as ever before the emancipation proclamation of God's great Christian servant, Abraham Lincoln.

On our front page will be found a letter from Mr. L. A. Martinet, the leading colored Democrat of the South and editor of the Progress, in which he scathingly and manfully denounces the Democratic methods and the cold-blooded butchery of negroes and diabolical outrages on Republicans by the Democrats.

MARTINET ON HAND IN CONDEMNATION OF NEGRO BUTCHERY—HE CAN NOT CONDONE DEMOCRATIC METHODS AND DECLINES FURTHER FEALTY WITH THE PARTY OF OPPRESSION.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 23, 1888.

To the Progress Publishing Company:

GENTLEMEN: When Saturday I read in the morning papers of the massacre of the negroes at Freetown, Iberia Parish, I was shocked and horrified. It was a ruthless and brutal butchery of human beings, without cause, reason, or sense. Moreover, there exists in the parishes surrounding that section a reign of terror and lawlessness that is a shame to civilization. Colored people are unmercifully beaten and whipped for no cause or reason; they can not be out at night after 9 o'clock with safety; their property is forcibly taken from them in broad daylight; and old and respectable residents and families are driven away from their homes, the latter because the husbands happen to be white.

In view of the fact that every act of violence against negroes in the South is charged in the North to the Democratic party, and of all that there is at stake for the Democratic party in the pending national contest, it does seem as if the perpetrators of these unheard-of outrages, who are said to be Democrats, have gone mad.

I called on the governor Monday and yesterday again, with a view of securing some official action for the protection of these injured and outraged people, or for putting a stop to this lawlessness. I explained to him how critical the situation is, but I regret exceedingly to say that he does not think that a case has yet arisen where he has the authority to interfere, and he seems apprehensive that if he does interfere now it might make matters worse.

Well, if the negroes are to be butchered, flogged, and driven from their homes under a Democratic administration, without cause or provocation, and the authorities are not able to speak one word in their behalf for humanity's sake, or in censure or condemnation of the atrocious deeds, then there is no reason that I know of why they should change their politics, and thus try to remove what we believed a bar to relations of amity between their white fellow-citizens and themselves, especially when it is known that even those who have voted the Democratic ticket are not exempt from brutal treatment. Even personal friends of ours of irreproachable character have been molested and driven away. I mention this to illustrate better the deplorable state of affairs—not that we would think our friends more sacred than others. If we favored a Democratic government it was specially for the purpose of assuring protection to our people. This failing, we see no way in which they are benefited by it.

I confess I am not only disappointed, but pained and grieved beyond expression. My faith in Governor Nicholls was such that I never could once believe that such outrages could be committed under his administration without at least immediate rebuke and condemnation. My faith in him is not altogether shaken, and I yet have the hope that he will take some action.

It is all a sad return for our unselfish and disinterested efforts to establish permanent relations of peace and harmony between the races, an end for which I have labored long, endured much vexation, and made great personal sacrifices.

A task that forced itself upon the Progress at the outset was to defend the election of the present State administration against the exaggerated charges of fraud, of rancorous political opponents. That we have not been entirely unsuccessful is shown by the readiness with which our articles have been quoted in the United States Senate and the extensiveness with which they have been reproduced by the Democratic press.

Thoroughly acquainted with the incapacity of the negro voters in their present untutored state to govern, and knowing how easy a prey they are to designing and unprincipled politicians and demagogues, we have labored hard to convince them that it was best for their interests that the people who own the property and possessed the intelligence, as I thought, should rule. Through it all we have been honest and conscientious. We have borne uncomplainingly the ostracism of our people and the odium that, among them, attaches to the colored man who professes himself a Democrat, and we have never asked nor expected personal reward in any shape or manner.

Our sole aim and endeavor has been to promote, in our feeble way, the good and welfare of the whole people. Conscious of having striven to perform what we considered a public duty, of having, in the interest of what we believed to be the cause of good government, labored to enable these people to control the mass of illiterate voters in their midst without a resort to violence or unlawful means, we could rest perfectly satisfied with the little appreciation our efforts have received from those who were to be first benefited by them. But I will not, I can not, condone the shedding of innocent blood.

Knowing the worthlessness of professional negro politicians, and how hurtful they are to their own race, I have been, with your approval, unsparing in denouncing them, going to the length of palliating, if not always justifying, the illegal measures taken to rid the community of them, when no bodily harm or injury was done. But I can not, I will not silently countenance the ruthless butchery and cruel whipping of defenseless and innocent people, the despoiling them of their property, and the running away of others from their homes because they chose to marry or unite according to their individual tastes.

The right of people to marry to suit themselves is the most sacred that I know. It is a divine right, and no one has rightfully the authority to interfere with the contracting parties. I could not say less on this point without, as it were, submitting to the desecration of the cherished memory of my dead parents, and condemning their holy union and marriage, of which I am the product.

No matter what the governor's personal feelings may be concerning these outrages—he has a strong sense of right and justice, and I know he deplores and condemns them in his heart—yet it seems to me that his silence will create on the outside world the false impression that this lawless condition of affairs is not so extensive, widespread, and critical as it really is, which would be wrong; or, worse, it may be taken by the "regulators" as warrant to go on in their nefarious course.

It must be remembered, too, that the Picayune, which may be regarded as the organ of the administration, has unqualifiedly pronounced itself upon the question of miscegenation, encouraging the inhuman crusade against it which is spreading all over the State, and from which spring so many acts of violence.

The Progress has no circulation outside of the State. It is not a factor in the Presidential contest—and there is something more sacred than politics in this matter. A question of humanity is involved. The party that would use the perpetration of such outrages merely for campaign purposes, as a stepping-stone to power, ought not to succeed; and the party that is too weak and pusillanimous to denounce them ought not to be intrusted with power. Also, our efforts to establish and maintain peace and harmony between the races have, it seems to me, not only proved futile, but may be, under the circumstances, considered officious. Therefore, unless the policy of the paper can be so directed as to deal with this lawlessness as it should be dealt with, I beg you to accept my resignation as editor.

Very respectfully,

L. A. MARTINET.

AN EARNEST PROTEST AGAINST THE WHOLESALE SLAUGHTER OF INNOCENT AND INOFFENSIVE COLORED MEN—MEMORIAL MASS MEETING IN GEDDES HALL—ABLE ADDRESS OF REV. E. LYON—MATTERS IN DETAIL.

Wednesday night Geddes Hall was filled by a large assemblage of prominent divines and citizens who assembled to enter their protest against the indiscriminate slaughter of innocent negroes in adjoining parishes. A large number of ladies were present.

The meeting was called to order by Hon. T. B. Stamps, who announced the subject of the meeting and read the following list of officers:

Rev. J. W. Hudson, president; Hon. George D. Geddes, honorary president; vice-presidents, Revs. F. T. Chinn, John Marks, A. E. P. Albert, I. H. Norwood, Graham Bell, C. H. Thompson, D. D.; J. W. Hudson, J. T. Newman, M. D.; Rev. R. Thompson, Messrs. H. C. Nichols, E. Brower, Robert W. B. Gould, Revs. A. S. Jackson, J. L. Burrell, Maj. C. F. Ladd, Hon. D. F. Diaz, Col. James Lewis, Rev. T. P. Jackson, Col. R. B. Baquet, Rev. Hon. George Devezin, Hon. Thomas W. Wickham, Rev. Charles Williams, Rev. M. Dale, Mr. Frank C. Taylor, Rev. Guy Watson, Hon. L. D. Thompson, Rev. C. H. The meeting was opened by divine services, prayers being offered by Rev. Henderson, pastor of the Central Congregational Church. The following committee was appointed to prepare an address: Revs. Ernest Lyon, A. E. P. Albert, M. C. B. Mason, J. H. Coker, M. D., T. B. Stamps, W. Paul Green, James D. Kennedy, Charles B. Wilson.

The committee retired, and in a few moments submitted the following report:

"To the people of the United States:

"We, citizens of New Orleans, as well as of neighboring parishes, from which we have been driven away without warrant or law, assembled in mass meeting at New Orleans, La., on Wednesday, August 22, at Geddes Hall, declare and assert: That a reign of terror exists in many parts of the State; that the laws are suspended and the officers of the government, from the governor down, afford no protection to the lives and property of the people against armed bodies of whites, who shed innocent blood and commit deeds of savagery unsurpassed in the dark ages of mankind.

"For the past twelve years we have been most effectively disfranchised and robbed of our political rights. While denied the privilege in many places of voting for the party and the candidates of our choice, acts of violence have been committed to compel us to vote against the dictates of our conscience for the Democratic party, and Republican ballots cast by us have been counted for the Democratic candidates. The press, the pulpit, the commercial organizations, and executive authority of the State have given both open and silent approval of all these crimes. In addition to these methods, there seems to be a deep laid scheme to reduce the negroes of the State to a condition of abject serfdom and peonage.

"It is being executed by armed bodies of men, styling themselves regulators, all of whom are white, except when a negro is occasionally forced to join them to give color to the pretense that they represent the virtue of their communities in the suppression impartially of vicious and immoral persons. With that pretense as a cloak these lawless bands make night hideous with their unblushing outrages and murders of inoffensive colored citizens. They go out on nightly raids, order peaceable citizens away never to return, whip some, fire into houses of others—endangering the defenseless lives of women and children—and no attempt is even made to indict them. No virtuous element in the State is found among the whites to rise up in their might and sternly repress these outrageous crimes.

"These acts are done in deliberate defiance of the Constitution and laws of the United States, which are so thoroughly nullified that the negroes who bore arms in defense of the Union have no protection or shelter from them within the borders of Louisiana. During the past twelve months our people have suffered from the lawless regulators as never before since the carnival of bloodshed conducted by the Democratic party in 1868, and which prompted the late and lamented General Philip Sheridan, in an official report, to style the whites as banditti. Fully aware of their utter helplessness, unarmed and unable to offer resistance to an overpowering force which varies from a 'band of whites' to 'a sheriff's posse' or the 'militia,' but which in reality is simply the Democratic party assembled with military precision and armed with rifles of the latest improved patents, toilers forbidden to follow occupations of their choice, compelled to desist from the discussing of labor questions, and been whipped and butchered when in a defenseless condition.

"In the instances where negroes have attempted to defend themselves, as at Pattersonville and Thibodaux, they have been traduced in a spirit of savage malignity, the governor of the State, with scarce an observance of the forms of law has hastened his mercenaries or militia to the scene with cannon and rifles ostensibly to preserve the peace, but actually to re-enforce the already too well fortified negro murderers falsely assuming to be lawful posses.

A single volume would scarcely afford sufficient space to enumerate the outrages our people have suffered, and are daily suffering at the hand of their oppressors. They are flagrantly deprived of every right guarantied them by the Constitution; in many parts of the State they are free only in name; they can not assemble in peace to indicate and discuss an equitable rate of wages for their labor; they do not feel safe as property-holders and tax-payers: and are permitted to enjoy but very few public conveniences.

"The latest wholesale murder, rivaling the most horrifying brutalities of the Comanches, took place only a few nights ago near Cade Station, in the parish of Iberia, in the negro village of Freetown. This place is owned exclusively by colored people, who were conceded to be industrious and respectable. They were charged with hiding and protecting in their midst some negroes from other parts of the parish whom the regulators wanted to whip. When this news was spread abroad a sheriff, fraudulently installed, with his men, without any warrant or shadow of law, at the hour of midnight invaded that quiet village, attacked a house wherein a number of negroes expecting the assault had gathered for self-defense, and deliberately slaughtered the inmates. No arrests will follow. The civil authorities are in sympathy with and applaud the crime.

"The governor has shown no disposition to afford our people any protection, because of this and other kindred wrongs, and our sad experience leads us to expect no redress from that source.

"The papers daily record lynchings, whippings, and murders of people on various pretenses, such as are not considered sufficient cause for lynch law for whites under the like circumstances, and tidings pour in upon us like a flood, of brutalities the record of which is suppressed from the public print because of the supposed political effect they would have upon the Presidential and Congressional campaigns in the Northern States.

"We have exhausted all means in our power to have our wrongs redressed by those whose sworn duty it is to impartially execute the laws, but all in vain, until now, because of our murdered fellow-citizens, and apprehensive for our own safety, we appeal to the awakened conscience, the sense of justice and sympathy of the civilized world, and of the American people in particular, to assist us with such moral and material support, as to secure the removal of our people, penniless as many of them are under the feudal system under which they live, to the public lands and other places of the Northwest where they can enjoy some security for their persons and property.

"To this end we have organized a bureau of immigration. We have so done under the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, That a bureau of immigration be composed of J. H. Coker, M. D., president; Rev. Ernest Lyon, A. B., secretary; W. P. Green, esq., M. J. Simms, assistant secretaries; Rev. C. B. Mason, A. B., treasurer; Rev. A. E. P. Albert, D. D., George D. Geddes, esq., Rev. A. S. Jackson, Hon. T. B. Stamps, D. D. Wethert, esq., Rev. J. L. Burrell, C. B. Wilson, esq. To our people we advise calmness and a strict regard for law and order. If your homes are invaded expect no mercy, for none will be shown, and if doomed to die, then die defending your life and home to the best of your ability. If convinced that you will not be permitted to live where you are in peace and perfect security quietly go away. If you are without other means to travel take to the public roads or through the swamps and walk away.

"Steam-boats and railroads are inventions of recent years; your forefathers dared the bloodhounds, the patrollers, and innumerable obstacles, lived in the woods on roots and berries in making their way to Canadian borders.

"Invoking the guiding favor of Almighty God and the sympathy of mankind, we are your brethren in affliction and the common bond of humanity,

"Rev. ERNEST LYON,
"Rev. A. E. P. ALBERT,
"Rev. J. H. COKER, M. D.,
"Rev. T. B. STAMPS,
"Rev. M. C. B. MASON,
"Rev. W. PAUL GREEN,
"Rev. J. D. KENNEDY,
"Rev. C. B. WILSON,
"Committee."

On motion of Rev. A. S. Jackson, which was duly seconded by Rev. M. C. B. Mason, R. W. B. Gould, and others in appropriate remarks, the address was unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

The following resolutions, offered by Mr. Marshall J. Simms, were adopted:

"Resolved, That the immigration bureau be, and they are hereby, requested to open immediate communication with the immigration and kindred organizations in California, Kansas, and the Northwestern States and Territories, and to adopt such other plans as will afford the information and relief for our oppressed people.

"Resolved, That every possible method be utilized to inform our people and neighboring States of the terrorism which reigns in the disturbed sections of this State, especially in Iberia, St. Martin, Lafourche, St. Mary, Assumption, Terrebonne, and Vermillion, so that they may be duly warned against endangering their lives and liberty by going to these places."

Stirring addresses were made by Revs. Ernest Lyon, A. S. Jackson, A. E. P. Albert, E. S. Swan, J. D. Kennedy, Miss S. A. E. Locket, Rev. M. C. B. Mason, and others. Meeting then adjourned.

REV. E. LYON'S ADDRESS—THE YOUNG DIVINE HANDLES THE OUTRAGE QUESTION WITH GREAT SKILL.

The following is the able address of Rev. E. Lyon delivered at Geddes Hall:

When will deliverance come? is the question which is being asked by the most concerned of our people.

The diabolical system of wholesale and unprovoked murder of our people in the country parishes continues on the increase. The peaceful and law-abiding colored citizens of the State thought that after "the danger was over" that affairs would assume their usual tranquillity; that after the murder and giving up of negroes, whose only crime seems to be, from facts obtained, the attempts on their part to exercise their liberty within the borders of a free Republic, that innocent and defenseless negroes would be allowed to pursue their daily avocation in peace, in order that they may provide for the necessities of their families. But alas! scarcely a wind blows but what it brings the intelligence of murder and bloodshed—murder and bloodshed confined invariably within the ranks of a certain class of the people, namely, the poor and unsuspecting members of the colored race. In all of these engagements the whites have always succeeded in escaping scot-free. This does not look reasonable. There is foul play somewhere, and the whole world begins to believe it.

For a decade of years the innocent and unsuspecting negroes have been made the victims of a cruel fate. The present year dawned upon us, and found the State rent from center to circumference by perplexing political issues. Issues which by a strange admixture of political circumstance, assumed the semblance of labor troubles. Whatever might have been the real causes of these troubles a bloody massacre was the result. A sham attack was shrewdly instituted by the whites on paper only, with the negroes as aggressors. This was only the pretense for the indiscriminate slaughter of men, women, and children which followed. A mother in Israel, bowed down with many summers, who remained faithfully at home during the war to watch her master's children till the battle was over, was mercilessly shot down with impunity within the very heart of a Christian country.

The intelligent members of the race watched with silence and waited with patience to hear the secular press and pulpits of the State, either in mild or in measured terms, denounce the inhuman ravages upon life and property. But to their disappointment that period has not yet come. Again, we are startled by the sad intelligence of weeping and mourning, of murder and bloodshed at Freetown, a village within the very shade of the capitol of the State. Eleven families in mourning. Eleven wives made widows by a band of white hoodlums claiming to be regulators. This village is largely inhabited by colored people who are industrious and law-abiding. The murder marks one of the bloodiest and most thrilling chapters in the history of crimes.

The offense for which these innocent and helpless people were butchered was the protection they offered to some of the members of the race who were flying from the murderous chase of midnight regulators. Confined within their own premises they determined to give protection to their fellows in distress. There was nothing wrong in this. It would be just what the white people would be too glad to do under like circumstances. But of course such manhood on the part of the negroes is exceedingly offensive to the whites, and they must die. These negroes must be understood were not lawless brawlers or clamorous insurrectionists. They were industrious, peaceful, and law-abiding citizens armed to defend their rights and property at the sacrifice of their own lives. They were murdered. Nothing less could be expected. The odds were against them. But before they welcomed death and shook hands with immortality they evinced to the cowardly whites courage and heroism worthy the race whose image they so nobly bore.

All honor to the brave men, therefore, who so nobly defended themselves at Freetown. May the hands that were swift in shedding their blood receive speedy retribution, and may the soil which drank their blood, as a fitting evidence of nature's displeasure, be barren forever. We ask, are not the laws enacted by the Legislature, composed of competent men, elected by the people, able to protect the State without the interference of regulators? Who are these regulators, and what are they? Are they acting under the official sanction of the governor of the State?

If they are not, why does he allow without his official protest this uncivilized system of affairs which places the whole people in juxtaposition to the Hottentots of the African reservation. The facts as given to the public by the daily journals and telegraph operator who are white men must be taken for what they are worth. What right has the sheriff posse to compel negroes to give up their arms in the defense of their person and property? Would the white people of the State in like position submit to such a glaring piece of injustice perpetrated on themselves?

If the negroes are to be disarmed, should not the regulators be disarmed also? And if their actions are inharmonious to the constitution of the State, they should be apprehended and punishment inflicted. It is time that the better class of our white friends speak out and clear in the defense of right and justice. There is no protection for the negro. If he attempts to protect himself the riot act is read. His arms are demanded. The militia is called out. A sheriff posse is organized and assisted by regulators, who murder the poor and unfortunate negroes with impunity. An investigation into the cause of the Freetown tragedy should be made; a committee should be appointed by the governor, composed of members of both races, charged with this solemn duty. We would advise the most calm, cool, and prudent of our representative men, both in church and in state, to meet and adopt measures whereby to relieve our people in these suffering districts.

They should wait immediately on his excellency the governor and ask him to appoint a committee of investigation, and if this righteous and godly demand is refused the people who are thus abused should be advised to leave those miserable hells upon earth.

In the days of slavery, when they were surrounded by enemies on every hand, with blood-hounds to hunt their tracks, they ventured to flee for refuge, amid perils indescribable. Guided by the Northern star of liberty, they reached the Canadian shores and Northern asylums.

And now, since freedom has come and every man is supposed to be a man, why not seek homes among those people who will accord to them the common rights of humanity?

If they have to leave with no patrimony but a single potato in their pockets, let them take their wives and children by the hand and lead them out of these Sodoms and Gomorrahs. Better die a free man than live a slave.

MEMORIAL MEETING.

Geddes Hall was filled on Wednesday night with representatives of our people, including wives and daughters. The meeting was called for the purpose of taking suitable action on the late murders committed on the unfortunate colored people in Lafourche and other parishes.

The meeting was governed by that calm feeling and deliberation which was warranted by the circumstances and which is so necessary to occasions of like serious import. The memorial address, which we print in another column, shows in unmistakable terms the past and present situation of affairs in Louisiana with reference to the colored people.

This was no political meeting, no body of people gotten together for the purpose of hashing out buncombe for political aspirants, no conclave of "bloody-shirt" shakers gotten up to fire the Northern heart in the interest of campaign capital, but a meeting composed of the ministry and representative men and women, who had no other cause at heart than to seek a remedy and its application in the shape of escape from further murders. The address of Rev. E. Lyon, and the orations of Rev. A. S. Jackson, Rev. A. E. P. Albert, D. D., Rev. M. C. B. Mason, Hon. T. B. Stamps, R. W. B. Gould, James D. Kennedy, and others were splendid efforts, and gave very pointedly the horrible details connected with the late butcheries. The calm reasoning with which they held the ear of the audience will certainly be fruitful.

We are glad to record the fact that in obedience to resolution offered a bureau of immigration was organized, which will take immediate steps in the matter of providing information, etc., regarding homes elsewhere.

A great deal can be said of the possible good effect of this commencement in behalf of the colored people, but lack of space forbids a further dissertation on the Geddes Hall meeting; suffice it to say the ball has been started on a roll and it must be kept rolling until we can place the colored people out of further harm's way. Emigrate at once. Don't wait for another butchery.

The colored man is doing himself and his family a great wrong by remaining in this murder-ridden State any longer. We say to you, emigrate to some other State and risk no longer being slaughtered for being a negro. You are worse enslaved in Louisiana than you ever were before. Leave, and leave at once.

"KEEP ON WITH IT."

We copy a head-line from the Times-Democrat. Certain Northern journals are pleased with the conviction of Dennis Kirby for running away with the keys of a New Orleans ballot-box. The Times-Democrat is happy over the good work. It advises that we "keep on with it."

We echo the sentiment. The Times-Democrat, however, is content with small cases. We would advise attention to the far more important. There is the murder of William Adams, in Monroe, his throat cut from ear to ear, for peddling Republican tickets. No arrests, no investigation. Would the Times-Democrat confine itself to the more trivial matters of stealing ballots?

Well, so be it. Take the case of Madison Parish. A return of 3,500 votes for Nicholls—Warmoth without the single vote. Vote, as actually cast: Nicholls, 588; Warmoth, 2,817—Warmoth with a majority of 2,229; a dead steal, in effect, of 5,734 votes in the single parish. Will the Times-Democrat take the case in hand? Dare it challenge the proofs?

What of the present Democratic hell, again, in the Third district? A white man, killed by whom? Certainly not by the negroes. A dozen negroes shot down like dogs. No politics in it. Where's the fool that don't know better? "Why should the prosecution of these criminals be interrupted or delayed?" We quote the Times-Democrat again. Echo answers, why?

PACK UP AND MOVE.

That is our advice to the negroes in the Louisiana bulidozed parishes. We mean it exactly as we say it. Pack up and move.

There is no other remedy. New Orleans is filling up with refugees. They are flocking in from the several different parishes and localities. They are not of the ignorant, or helpless class. They are generally intelligent, are the owners of their own little homes. They have been driven from home and family at peril of their lives.

They have been so driven because of their intelligence; because of their independence. They are not of the old-time class, to be held as servile dogs. That is why they are driven out. Every negro leader, every negro property-holder, every negro who can read and write, is branded as dangerous, must be got rid of. That is the edict, openly promulgated, and well understood. Take the situation as it is. You may not return as free men. Free men you must live and die. You have no protection under the laws. You have no earthly chance in seeking to protect yourself. There is the one resource. Take it, and at once. Pack up and move.

We want to be heard and heeded in every bulldozed parish and locality.

We say to the negroes, You have the one and only remedy in your hands. You are the only producers. You raise the cotton and the sugar. You are the supporters, in fact, of the men who persecute you. Without your labor they must themselves go to work or starve. Give them the chance. Let them try the working or the starving. Let them have the field. Pack up and move.

We don't advise any general exodus. That would entail possible privation and suffering. Let the remedy be gradually applied. Let the young men and women set the ball in motion. The movement begun makes the certain better chances for those who stay. There is no single, able-bodied negro too ignorant to know that his two hands will certainly make him an honest living.

He knows they will earn it anywhere on the civilized earth. So, too, with the single, able-bodied woman. She is sure of an honest living anywhere. She has but to work for it. Let the young man and woman get out. We say it, and we mean it. Pack up and move.

Stand not upon the order of going, but go. Don't wait upon any growing crops, or promises of pay. Steal out through the cane-breaks if you must. Any way to get out. Don't flock to New Orleans, or to any town. Set your faces toward a free land, a land where an honest life will insure the honest dues of free men and free women. Go to California, to Arizona, or to any like place where there is room. You can work your way there if you will. The will alone is wanted. Pack up and move.

In any other State, North, East, or West, its governor would seek and demand in person a reason for the atrocious butcheries which have occurred in this State in the last two or three weeks. But we suppose the governor of Louisiana knew how the "law was suspended" in his interest and has forgotten that the "danger has passed," or has forgotten his cue and don't know when to say, "Let up now."

There was a time when some people were led to believe that the Republican party got up these negro-killing matches for political effect. What say these people now? Look at the butchery being continued in this wretchedly-governed State and say whether or not the fact is true that the negro is being slaughtered for no other reason than that he is a negro by the Southern banditti, the never-licked and unwhipped Confederate spirit.

LOUISIANA BANDITTI.

The history of the colored people in Louisiana, as in other States of the solid South, has many pages in mourning commemorating the violent deaths they have suffered at the hands of murderous whelps under one pretext or another. For years the colored citizen of the State of Louisiana has contended with barbarous inflictions, the like of which we read in history of ancient eras, when cruel slaughter was rewarded by crown and scepter.

The negro has suffered death or banishment for exercising his rights of citizenship given him by a nation on whose soil poured the blood of millions of loyal soldiers and statesmen that this American Union might be saved, and that all its citizens might be free, as they were created by the Almighty God. These murders of colored people are the outcome of a lurking feeling of resentment of and refusal to accept of the issues of the late rebellion. A spirit akin to the animus engendered in behalf of the Confederacy, which, though subdued on the field of battle, is cowardly resorting to a warfare of extermination under the cover of civil government.

The pen is again taken up to record another chapter of slaughter and butchery on the unfortunate colored people of Louisiana, the latest deeds occurring at Lockport, New Iberia, Freetown, and adjacent localities where the dastardly idea is rampant that the negro is obnoxious, and they must leave, failing to do which he is to die by the assassin's bullet, the midnight marauder's bludgeon. What a horrible state of affairs to record against a government which brags and boasts of that chivalry under which crime is suppressed.

On Saturday, August 11, at night time, a band of white banditti, all mounted, went out the Bayou road from Raceland to Robert Williams's house, surrounded it, and concealing themselves in the cane, called for Williams to come out. Upon coming out, and seeing the state of affairs, attempted to escape, when he was shot from ambuscade, and died the next morning. After this piece of butchery, and the same night, they drove up to another colored man's home, Augustave Antoine, took him off some distance, hung him up to a tree, and riddled his body with bullets, and before doing this they shot and killed his brother Eugene.

Another case in view is that of a mulatto, who became obnoxious for some reason or another only known to the murderers, who was flogged in regular slave style and given notice to leave the hallowed precincts of New Iberia. He, terror-stricken, left for Freetown, to where some of his friends resided, for protection. On learning that he was in Freetown, a leader of the banditti, named Cade, organized an alleged military company for the purpose of slaughtering the colored man's friends, who had collected together in their own defense, and in short order butchered up at least a score of colored people.

We could mention many other instances of like character, but enough is here said, backed by authority, to warrant attention to this deplorable state of affairs.

We say to the colored people that they must leave this State.

The negroes of St. Martin, Iberia, St. Mary, Terre Bonne, Vermillion, Lafourche, Assumption Parishes, can never expect anything else than a continuance of this inhuman warfare, and if they have to walk they owe it to themselves and families to leave these parts, for the planter is powerless to protect you as a workman and the governor of the State is apparently indifferent to this condition. We say to you colored people to emigrate to California, Arizona, anywhere else where God's law is respected and man's inhumanity to man in the light of Louisiana methods is unknown and never expected.

Do not wait longer; you have suffered sufficiently long and if you remain you will certainly imperil your own life. Emigrate and leave this infernal hell-hole on earth.

[Extracts from the Louisiana Standard, New Orleans, September 1, 1888.]

THE GOOD WORK GOES BRAVELY ON.

Killing and outraging negroes is the order of the day. We ask of the Northern journals that they scan well the certain dispatches as seen in our New Orleans dailies. We mean those purporting to recount the troubles with dangerous and unruly negroes. We mean particularly those as just now appearing from certain sections in the parishes of Terrebonne, Iberia, and St. Martin. Let them read and ponder. The very dispatches of themselves are enough to damn the communities from whence they come.

Here are the armed organizations of whites going about as assumed regulators. Their mission is seen as wholly confined to the negroes. They are themselves outside the pale of all law. They represent no authority whatever save that of organized brute force. They constitute, in fact, nothing more nor less than outlaws; are in honesty to be viewed in no other light.

Here are the armed gangs of outlaws, then, riding roughshod over the country at large hunting negroes to the death. The negroes are largely on their own ground; they appear as living in their own little hard-earned homes.

This was particularly the case in Freetown. The little town was invaded by these armed outlaws. There was the pretense of the sheltering of certain refugees in hiding from the outlaws' threats. A dozen, at least, of negroes were brutally murdered. They were shot down as so many dogs in their kennels. It was the cowardly work of a gang of cowardly murderers. A coroner's jury, as cowardly as the murderers, but serves as the murderers' shield. It signs a verdict to the effect that the negroes were killed by parties unknown.

This late hellish work is mainly confined to parishes in the Third Congressional district.

It appears as in effect the beginning of the Democratic Congressional campaign. The three particular parishes are strongly Republican. The latest official registration with returns of the late election may be in order.

Parish.	Registration.		Election returns.
	White.	Negro.	Nicholls.	Warmoth.
Terre Bonne	2,276	3,035	1,687	2,033
Iberia	2,344	3,210	1,262	1,923
St. Martin	1,476	2,198	1,107	1,624
Total	6,096	8,443	4,056	5,580

The blacks are seen as having the majority vote of 2,347. There is the return of 1,524 majority for the Republican ticket. The voters absent and failing to vote are, for the three parishes, respectively, 1,591, 2,369, and 943, a total of 4,903.

There is here with the free and fair election the large white Republican vote. The 4,903 absentees were unquestionably two-thirds Republican. The three parishes are honestly Republican by fully 3,000 majority.

The bulldozing began previous to election. It was both rampant and fierce on election day. It was by no means confined to the blacks. There were the white Republican leaders coming in for their share. Hon. W. B. Merchant, ex-Republican postmaster in New Orleans, is mentioned for instance by Hon. Senator CHANDLER. Mr. Merchant, as notorious, was outrageously bulldozed; was held a prisoner by an armed body of bulldozers; has since left the State in disgust; is now resident in El Paso, Tex. The election as such was an outrage and a fraud.

The bulldozing broke out afresh immediately following the election in the parish of Terrebonne. Senator INGALLS recounted some of the cases in his famous speech in reply to Senator EUSTIS. An armed band of "regulators" sought to reap their vengeance for being defeated. It appeared, as in evidence, in lead of a brother of Senator GIBSON. The negroes were shot and outraged in every conceivable way. Dozens were driven from their little hard-earned homes in fear of their lives. There are the dozens, so made refugees, in New Orleans to-day.

Terre Bonne, Iberia, and St. Martin are virtually in the hands of the outlaws. They have converted these parishes into a veritable hell.

They are riding rough-shod over the country at large. Their path is marked with blood; is strewn with the bodies of a full score of murdered negroes.

These organizations of murderous outlaws are organizations of Louisiana Democrats. They are in effect shielded by the Democratic authorities. Their murders are glossed over and palliated by the Louisiana Democratic press. They are practically a part of the Democratic political methods, murder and outrage for opinion's sake. And still the good work goes bravely on.

MARTINET'S LETTER.

We recommend to the colored voters of the country to peruse the letter of Mr. L. A. Martinet, editor of the Progress, published last week in this paper. We address ourselves more particularly to the colored voters of the North, because it matters not how the negroes vote in the South, the result is the same—the South is always solid, through fraud and murder, for Democracy—whereas in the North, in several States, they hold the balance of power. The letter presents a mild picture of the fiendish outrages and the condition worse than actual slavery to which our people are subjected in this State, and the colored man who, after reading it, will vote the Democratic ticket is an enemy to his race.

We recommend especially to the colored press, Republican and Democratic, to reproduce this truthful statement from a Democratic source, not with a view of helping one party and injuring the other, but for the sake of humanity and for the purpose of placing the helpless and sorrowful condition of our people in the South before the American people in its true light. It is the more necessary that the colored press should do this as we can not rely upon the Democratic press to publish the truth about the diabolical outrages perpetrated upon our people. All their accounts are colored so as not to incur the regulators' displeasure, and they will publish no impartial statement from any one, colored or white.

There is not a colored man in the State that stood higher in Democratic estimation than Mr. Martinet, yet the Democratic press would not publish his letter, though couched in moderate language; nor would they publish the able and considerate address to the American people on the same subject adopted at the mass-meeting of our people held here last week, and which also appeared in our last Saturday's paper. They even made no mention in their local columns that such a meeting was held, notwithstanding that there were reporters present; and yet it was one of the most notable meetings ever held in this city. All our prominent men and ministers were there and the attendance was exceedingly large. Hence for the dissemination of the truth about those outrages on our people we must rely especially on the negro press.

Now, regarding the political bearing the circulation of such facts will have in the North, it is a matter of secondary consideration with us. As a Republican, we are sincerely and staunchly in favor of Harrison and Morton's election, but we will not use the perpetration of such infernal crimes solely to advance the interests of the party. Our primary object is to make our helpless and pitiable condition known with the view that the humane sentiment of the nation will devise means to alleviate the wrongs to which we are subjected by the Bourbonism of the South.

But we will be frank in saying that the re-election of Grover Cleveland will be taken by the murderers and destroyers of our people as sanctioning their deeds, and will encourage them to go on in their career of blood and extermination, and they will go on with renewed vigor; whereas the success of the Republican party will show that the healthy public sentiment of the country condemns those outrages, and will throw a damper and act as a check on the perpetrators.

This is no surmising. It is clearly shown by the contrast which the administration of Grover Cleveland and that of President Arthur affords. Compare the two administrations and see for yourselves. Under the quiet and peaceable administration of President Arthur, the rough edges of the war having been smoothed and its wounds almost healed by the long and beneficent Republican rule, angry passions were gradually cooling down and a better condition of affairs was quietly taking place in the South. While here and there at the time of an election some trouble might arise, it was always local and its effect temporary. Republicanism was undoubtedly fast gaining ground; prominent white men were continually proclaiming a change of faith and declaring their adherence to the Republican party, and we confidently looked to a day not far distant when it would be safe for a colored man to be a Democrat and when both parties would be composed of whites and blacks alike.

But the election of Cleveland put a stop to all this. It threw us back into the seventies. It did not cause a reaction in sentiment, but it effectually put a check on its manifestation, and Bourbonism once more became rampant and overbearing. His re-election will give it unlimited sway and will throw us back in the sixties; while the election of Harrison will restore the hopeful condition of things that existed under President Arthur and prepare the country for an era of peace, harmony, and prosperity.

Therefore, we say again, colored men, read Mr. Martinet's letter. His statements can not be contradicted. The Democrats have everywhere proclaimed his integrity and veracity, and they can not to-day impeach his testimony. Read his letter and vote the Republican ticket.

OUR MURDERED DEAD—A REQUIEM FOR OUR MURDERED DEAD.

Let all join in commemorating the victims of the Freetown massacre. Let the roll of the murdered dead be held a lasting roll of honor. Let their names not be forgotten: John Simon, Thomas Simon, Peter Simon, Lewis Simon, Eugene Green, Edward Valere, Alexander Valere, Antoine Michel, Samuel Kokee, Ransom Livingston, jr. They died, as died the veritable martyrs of old. They died for daring to assert their rights as free men.

They were murdered for giving shelter and protection to the outraged and hunted of their race. They gave up their lives in proof of their manhood. They are so many martyrs to Democratic hate. Let them be so held and revered. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord; I will repay."

We assert unhesitatingly that the last Louisiana election was simply an outrageous wholesale steal; that men were murdered for distributing Republican tickets; that Republican voters were generally either bulldozed or defrauded of their ballots; that the officials generally were installed through fraud; that the State is run practically by bulldozers and ballot-box stuffers.

We further assert that there exists to-day in certain sections of the State a reign of terror; that the country is overrun by gangs of outlaws known as regulators; that negroes are being hunted as so many animals; that they are being shot down by dozens, murdered in cold blood for daring to presume upon their rights as men; that scores again are being driven from their hard-earned homes, for all of which we challenge the proofs.

We favor emigration in lieu of immigration. We favor, as far as may be, the general emigration of the negroes.

We don't object to the Northern immigrants. They are of those willing to concede the negro his rights. We won't do any lying to induce them to come. We want the negroes to get out. They have no protection under the laws. The late outrageous verdict of a coroner's jury over a dozen murdered negroes at Freetown is abundant proof. We tell them they have no rights the Louisiana bulldozer is bound to respect. They may be murdered and outraged at will. They are certain to be murdered and outraged until reduced to a state of peonage. The only alternative is to pack up and move.

Let the move begin with the young men and women. Let them get out. Let them stand not upon the order, but go.

THE ASSASSINS LIE.

No politics in it; that's the story in connection with the Freetown massacre. Where's the fool who don't know it to be a lie out of whole cloth. The assassins are Democrats. The victims are Republicans. That tells the story. It is the "Old Third." The district is honestly Republican by 8,000 majority. It was carried two years ago by Democratic boodle, and amounted to say $60,000 in cash. The boodle candidate is now out of the race. There are no $60,000 this time in the Democratic bag. The want of it must be made good somehow. There's no other way for it but in killing Republican negroes. That is the one sure way of keeping Republican voters from the polls. The Democratic game has begun. A round dozen or so of negroes have been murdered. It is the beginning of the Third district campaign. That's the meaning of the Freetown massacre.

A CIRCULAR FROM THE BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION.

Fellow-citizens and brethren:

After receiving intelligence through the columns of the daily journals of the terrible outrages and cold-blooded murders of our fellow-citizens at Freetown and other portions of the State, from time to time, without any attempt on the part of the executive authorities to bring the murderers to justice, we felt that patience on our part has ceased to become a virtue, and that the present dangerous crisis to which matters have been allowed to reach in the country demanded immediate action on the part of those located in more favoring districts to adopt measures whereby to relieve those of our fellow-citizens suffering under a reign of terror and brutalism in the disturbed portions of the State.

Being bound by the ties of duty, as well as of those of race affinities, memorial meeting was held to contribute honor to those who died in defense of their lives and property, thus winning for themselves an honorable place among the number of martyrs who poured out their life-blood as a precious libation upon the shrine of liberty.

In accordance with this meeting an immigration bureau was organized, with authority to communicate with kindred organizations in California and New Mexico, in order to remove our suffering brethren to regions equally favored in fertile resources, and among a people who are willing to accord to us the common rights of humanity.

It was therefore agreed at a meeting of the board that before such a step is taken a pioneer be sent to the above-mentioned places, whose duty it shall be to survey the country and make arrangements with the planters of that region so that our people, instead of moving on a wild goose chase, will have something definite and sure before them.

It was also agreed by a series of resolutions, both at this board meeting and at the memorial meeting, that an appeal be made to every church organization, secret society, and benevolent association, and every friend of the race to contribute little or much towards defraying the expenses of such an individual upon so important a mission. The board promises to use care and discretion in the choice of such a man.

In accordance, therefore, with those resolutions, we issue this circular, calling upon you in the name of God and the name of common humanity to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. We need not say to you that the uncivilized methods of regulators are creeping all over the State, like a cancer creeps all over the human body, and that this now peaceful region may soon be disturbed by the hideous yells and the murderous fires of lawless regulators, and you likewise may be found on your way to some safe region where you and your family can dwell together in peace.

We are your brethren in distress.

Remember Iberia. Let negro laborers give the parish of Iberia a wide berth Let the Democratic bulldozers go to work. Leave them to gather the cane and make the sugar. You can have no protection for your lives. Avoid Iberia as you would avoid a pestilence. Go somewhere else for work. Let those already there get out. Let every one who can, pack up and move.

At Opelousas last week another negro was riddled with bullets by white assasins for the reason that it was thought he had purchased buckshot. The mayor of the city gave them the right of way and a carte blanche. And so the cruel work goes on. Colored people, you must emigrate. The respectable white people of this State deplore the condition of affairs, but they are powerless to stop this murdering. It is in order for Mr. Nicholls to petition Congress for more power to carry out the laws of this State.

Boycott Terre Bonne. Let the colored laborers boycott the parish of Terre Bonne. That's the word that with the Irish means the next thing to anathema. It fills the bill. Terre Bonne is overrun with Democratic bulldozers. They are hunting and killing Republican negroes. Don't give them a chance at you. Keep away. Get your work elsewhere. Let the bulldozers make their own sugar. Let those who are there get out. Every man who can, take to the canebreaks, if need be, and get away.

Shun St. Martin. Don't go there for work. Leave the cane and the sugar to the bulldozers. Let them go to work, or starve. They propose to reduce you to the status of the Mexican peons. Let them have the field to themselves. Go to California, to Arizona, anywhere outside of bulldozed Louisiana.

[Extracts from the Louisiana Standard, New Orleans, September 22, 1888.]

WHAT ARE THEY GOING TO DO?

What are they going to do about it? That is the question for our Louisiana negroes to decide. They are citizens and men in the eyes of the law. There is even the special clause in both national and State constitutions pledging them their rights. The law, in so far as they are concerned, is but a cheat and a lie. The national and State constitutions, as applicable to them, amount to naught. There is for the negro absolutely no protection for life or property in Louisiana. He is shot down with as little compunction as is the veriest mangy cur. No one ever hears of his murderer being punished for the crime. He is even hunted down as is the wild beast and shot at sight for no earthly offense but daring to presume upon his lawful rights. He is open to every outrage and contumely; his wife, sisters, and children to every insult and abuse. He has in point of fact not even the protection accorded him in the days when held a slave. He had then his lawful masters at least interested in seeing him free from the abuse of others.

The situation withal is growing worse and worse. The negroes are being gradually cowed into abject submission.

A goodly proportion of Louisiana to-day is for the Louisiana negroes a veritable hell. In the parishes of Terre Bonne, St. Martin, Iberia, and portions of Lafayette, in particular, there exists a reign of terror. All of law is here practically suspended. Gangs of outlaws, known as regulators, are the law unto themselves. Negroes have been wantonly massacred by the wholesale in broad light of day, as evidenced in the shooting down in cold blood of no less than ten in the massacre at Freetown.

Negroes are being hunted as so many wild beasts, are being as mercilessly murdered. Negroes everywhere are being driven from their little, hard-earned homes, are everywhere being wantonly outraged and abused. The infection of lawlessness is spreading, is heard of daily in some new locality.

Governor Nicholls has so far done nothing. He can not plead ignorance of the facts. They are being daily reported in the press. They are matters of common notoriety. His attention, again, has been specially invited, and that, too, by prominent citizens and friends. He was talked to and plead with by Hon. L. A. Martinet.

We have it on good authority, too, that no less a man than Hon. Mr. Breaux, elected with Governor Nicholls as State superintendent of education, has specially interested himself in the matter. We have it that he talked with Governor Nicholls, and plainly enough told him of the terrible massacres, of the outrageous and general lawlessness, of the serious injury it was doing, of the disgrace it was certain to entail, and besought the governor to interfere in behalf of law and order.

Governor Nicholls sits with folded hands while the murders, the whippings, and the outrages against Louisiana negro citizens are being daily carried on. He overlooks both the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of Louisiana.

He appears as giving no heed to enforcement of the laws, as ignoring all obligation as a man, as forgetting his registered oath.

These massacres, these daily murders and outrages, are crying aloud to Heaven. They are being registered beside the oath pledging the law's protection to life and property. Governor Nicholls the while joins in the devotions of the faithful, chanting the anthems ascending before the same High Throne. Is that registered oath to count as nothing? Is there no responsibility for these continued murders? Are these church professions and communions to be measured as sacrilege? Is Francis T. Nicholls to command respect as governor of Louisiana? Is he governor only in name?

PROFOUND IMPRESSION.

By reference to the columns of the Northern and Western press it has been seen that the Geddes Hall address made a profound impression wherever read. Editors who heretofore have received intelligence of Southern crimes with a feeling of incredulity accept the vigorous protest of a large and respectable mass meeting as conclusive evidence of their perpetration.

From the country parishes it is learned that in at least two places the whites, after reading the address, came together and resolved to assure colored laborers that bulldozing should be stopped and they would guaranty protection of life and property. But so great is the mistrust of the people that little reliance is placed upon those pledges.

It has been felt for many months that the colored people of the State should organize in some manner for common defense, precisely as the Irish do, who suffer in many respects under similar conditions of oppression.

The organization of a bureau of emigration is approved in the country parishes as a practical measure of redress; and many inquiries have been made as to means at hand to convey out of the State the hundreds of laborers who are willing to go. A question has arisen in the minds of some whether to go at once or wait until after the crops are gathered; but the good sense of the people tells them that to await the gathering of the crops is largely to defeat the primary object of an exodus of labor, namely, the embarrassment of those planters who aid and direct the marauders against their lives and homes.

It having been demonstrated that the whites are without tender consciences on the Thibodaux and Freetown massacres and other numerous outrages, the idea now is to touch them sorely in their pocket-books and bank accounts by depriving them of sufficient labor to gather their crops. Let this purpose be openly avowed and energetically carried out.

Timid counselors have said that the plan will fail, because other laborers will rush to take the places of those who go. Our advices show that such is not the experience of several planters who are already in distress. They offer high wages, but liberty of citizenship is not being sold by the negroes in the labor or any other market. Besides, if a new lot of negroes desire to undergo experiences of the kind visited upon the departed laborers, a very little will probably satisfy them, while those who enjoy their freedom in Northern States will extend them their sympathy.

A letter has been received from a United States Senator, in which inquiry is made in regard to the operations of the bureau of emigration. When it opens up communication with leading Republicans and capitalists, the way for effective work will be made clear. Let the bureau be sustained by words of cheer and liberal contributions.

[Extract from the Telegraph, Monroe, La., August 18, 1888.]

It would be a mistake to confound the principle of white primaries with that of representation in Democratic conventions.

We do not hesitate to concede that under normal social and political conditions, the Democratic vote is the fairest basis.

But have we normal social and political conditions in the Fifth Congressional district?

On the contrary, are these conditions not emphatically and pre-eminently abnormal?

We have white parishes and we have black parishes, each class widely and notoriously different with respect to these conditions.

The purposes of this discussion do not require that we analyze, reiterate, and enumerate these differences. They are well known and well understood throughout the district.

These two classes of parishes are not dissimilar in one important feature—they all return safe Democratic majorities.

For political purposes they all are Democratic parishes.

[Extract from the Post, Washington, September 20, 1888.]

It is an undoubted fact that in a number of the Southern States the negroes have been practically disfranchised. The honest men of the South admit this. * * *

It is an undeniable fact that in the disfranchisement of the blacks in the South the effect is not confined to local government, but extends to national affairs, and thus becomes a matter of serious interest to the people of all the States. The people of Oregon are as directly interested in the election of Congressmen and Presidential electors in Mississippi as in similar elections in their own States.

If the political complexion of the Federal Government is changed by suppression of the ballot, to just the extent of that change the Federal Government is wrested from its constitutional basis.

We have stated these facts because they are facts, the facts of a very ugly situation viewed from any possible standpoint. If it be true, as we think it is, that black rule is intolerable to the whites of this country, if it be true also that in eliminating that which is locally intolerable the National Government is necessarily vitiated by fraud, what is to be the outcome? It strikes us that this is one of the most serious problems ever presented to the statesmen of the Republic. It ought to be discussed without malice and with a recognition not of a part but of all the facts we have cited. It is a two-sided question, apparently as far from a solution to-day as it was a dozen years ago.

[Mr. GIBSON again addressed the Senate. For his speech complete see page 8981.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the Senate is called upon to enter on an investigation of transactions in the State of Louisiana. As I shall vote against the resolution I desire to state a few reasons which will control my vote; and in stating those reasons, without any previous investigation of the subject, but simply acting upon the spur of the occasion, I propose to answer as well as I can the very pertinent inquiry just submitted by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] as to the reason for such action as this.

If it was proposed to investigate the conduct of an election in which members of the House of Representatives were elected, Congress has the necessary jurisdiction. If it was proposed to investigate the conduct of the electors of any State in an election in which electors for President and Vice-President were concerned, Congress has the necessary jurisdiction. If it was proposed to investigate the question as to whether a Senator has been elected by fraud, by violence, by bribery, or other unlawful means, that would be a subject within the jurisdiction of the Senate. Does any Senator know of any other fact that gives jurisdiction to the Senate under the Constitution and laws as interpreted by the decisions of the Supreme Court?

That question I ask Senators. I do not ask for an answer now, but I ask them to take it to themselves, are there any other conditions of fact that authorize the interposition of the jurisdiction of the Senate of the United States for an investigation?

Let us see what the resolution proposes:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire (1) into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there were chosen State officers and also a Legislature, which has since elected two United States Senators; and especially to ascertain and report whether the 136,746 votes returned for the candidate of the dominant party for governor were actually cast, in view of the fact that at no previous election had the votes for such candidate of such party exceeded 88,794.

Then, omitting a part of the resolution which speaks of details, about which I am not informed, and about which I do not propose to speak, it proceeds:

And why there were similar returns from other parishes; and also to ascertain and report whether or not at said State election there was any violence, intimidation, or fraud which prevented a fair election, and particularly whether or not there were any false canvasses or false returns made by the local election officers or included in the final canvass of the votes.

Here is a State election for State officers, involving no election of a member of Congress, no election of Presidential electors, and it is proposed for the Senate to investigate that question as to whether it was a fair and honest election. It is true the resolution recites that a Legislature was elected which has since elected two Senators.

The election of that Legislature was the election of State officers, and I submit to the honorable Senator from Vermont, and he will understand what I mean by the submission of the point, that we will hardly go behind the election of members of the Legislature to determine whether United States Senators were lawfully elected by them. If Senators by their acts have done anything that would disqualify them for seats in the Senate, they are amenable for it. If the Legislature acted unlawfully, then it may affect the legality of an election by them; but there is no charge of anything like that. There is no charge that any Senator has in any respect violated the law. There is no charge that the Legislature has in any respect violated any law. Whence, then, the jurisdiction for this resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Texas refers, and correctly, to the election of members of Congress as illustrating, as it well does, his argument. I should like to ask him whether it is not within the competence of the House of Representatives to go behind the returns of the State officers who manage the elections of members of Congress and find out what the real truth is in respect of the election and the people who voted for a particular member of Congress?

Mr. REAGAN. My answer to that question is the action of the distinguished Senator himself in the great question which involved the election of a President of the United States in 1876, when he said to the United States and the world, "You can not go behind the count."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my friend means to say that the House of Representatives for now one hundred years has been wrong in going behind the returns and investigating the truth of the votes of the fundamental mass of mankind in each State, which makes Legislatures as well as members of Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall not go into that subject, a subject that is not involved in this question. The Legislature of Louisiana occupies the same relation to the proposed investigation which the electoral college occupied to the Presidential count in 1876.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see, if my friend will pardon me——

Mr. REAGAN. I have only a short time to speak. I desire to speak to the question before the Senate, and I shall not allow myself to be drawn off into the discussion of collateral and unnecessary issues.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator without his consent for a single moment, of course.

Mr. REAGAN. Now, we will look further into what the resolution proposes:

And in case said committee shall find that such illegalities as violence, intimidation, or fraud, false canvasses, or false returns prevailed in connection with such election, then said committee shall further inquire—

First the predicate is laid for the inquiry by proposing that the committee shall do what the Senate has no power to do by itself or its committee, to investigate a State election. Then it is to inquire—whether any of the acts or omissions of the officials or other persons responsible for or connected with such illegalities were contrary to the Constitution of the United States or the amendments thereof, or were violations of any of the statutes of the United States, especially the provisions of chapter 7, Title LXX, of the Revised Statutes, punishing crimes against the elective franchise and civil rights of citizens; and, if so, whether any prosecutions have been or ought to be commenced in the United States courts for such offenses.

The United States courts as well as the State courts of Louisiana have been open where all violations of law might be prosecuted in one or another as the jurisdiction appertained to the one or the other.

This chapter 7, Title LXX of the Revised Statutes, has been, some portions of it, the subject of examination by the Supreme Court of the United States. Some of its provisions have been declared to be unconstitutional, all of them where an attempt has been made by the Federal courts to take jurisdiction for personal offenses within the several States. If the law is violated in an election for a member of Congress or for Presidential elector, or in the election of a Senator by the Legislature, whatever provisions are made with reference to that may be enforced in the Federal courts, but no matters relating to an election of State officers come within its provisions, and no jurisdiction is conferred for their trial in the Federal courts.

I take it no formal solemn inquiry by a committee of the United States Senate is necessary to ascertain that fact. All Senators, I take it, know that fact without a solemn inquiry involving a slander against a State. I will read two or three paragraphs from the syllabus in the case of the United States vs. Cruikshank, decided at the April term, 1874, by the Supreme Court of the United States:

A charge that the defendants conspired to injure certain persons of African descent, being citizens of the United States, thereby to prevent them from exercising their rights as citizens, such as the right to peaceably assemble, to bear arms, etc., unless accompanied with an averment that the injury was committed by reason of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the person conspired against, is not sustainable in the courts of the United States.

I submit that in all the papers that I have heard the Senator from New Hampshire read, it has not been alleged, and whatever may have been the case as to that I submit that these resolutions do not allege that any of these offenses, inferentially alleged to have taken place, were committed to affect a person on account of his race, color, or previous condition, so that ground falls on the face of the resolution. Its averments fail to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Senate. If its averments, though false, brought it within the jurisdiction, possibly the Senate might take jurisdiction; but when its own averments fail to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Senate, surely we are not going to enter upon a solemn inquiry as to a matter over which we have no jurisdiction.

At that point, while I do not intend to deal withthe facts in this case at all, I could not but be struck with the reading of the newspaper clippings by the Senator from New Hampshire this morning. The statements in these papers in each case showed that the blacks were the aggressors, and although the Senator stated that the troubles grew out of politics, none of the papers he read showed that the parties injured were Republicans or that those alleged to have inflicted the injuries were Democrats; and yet we are indebted to that Senator, the country is indebted to that Senator, for interpolating upon these statements his evidence that the people injured were black people and Republicans, and that the aggressors were white people and Democrats. Yet you can not find one word to that effect in a single one of the papers that he read this morning, as far as I recollect. This is upon the testimony of a Senator who, as the Senator from Louisiana has said, lives 1,500 miles from that State and knows nothing of the facts himself; but that testimony, to influence an election, to arouse passions, to stir bitter feelings, is perhaps just as good as if it had been sworn to by some competent witness.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to read an account of a murder in Texas that was political?

Mr. REAGAN. If I have made a mistake, I shall be glad to be corrected. Is that one of the papers the Senator read this morning?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; this is a new one from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I do not yield to that. I am talking about what the Senator read. The Senator will have time after I get through.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will read a case after the Senator gets through where it does show why the murder was committed.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator has made his speech and I am talking now about what he has presented after his second speech as the grounds for this procedure. I do not know what the Senator has; I do not care what he has. I am dealing with the case on which after two speeches and the resolution he has rested his case before the Senate. I piropose to read further excerpts from the opinion I have just been quoting. Referring to the civil-rights act, the Supreme Court say:

That act was intended to give to the colored race the rights of citizenship, and to protect them, as a race or class, from unfriendly State legislation and from lawless combinations. An injury to a colored person, therefore, is not cognizable by the United States courts under that act unless inflicted by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude. An ordinary crime against a colored person without having that characteristic is cognizable only in the State courts.

I am reading this to sustain the position I have laid down, and I read further a part of the sixth clause of the syllabus:

The fifteenth amendment does not confer upon Congress the power to regulate the right to vote generally, but only to provide against discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

* * * * * * *

A conspiracy to prevent a colored person from voting is no more a United States offense than a conspiracy to prevent a white person from voting, unless entered into by reason of the voter's race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

If the Senator has something that he proposes to read hereafter to show that there is something in the paper which he has about politics and races, I call his attention and that of the Senate to the fact that he has failed to put it in the resolution, and a demurrer to the testimony would set it aside because he has no basis for its introduction.

Mr. BLAIR. It would not set aside the fact.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I am proceeding upon the supposition that Senators understand that the allegations and the proof must agree to and correspond with each other. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire—I will not conclude what I might have said.

Mr. BLAIR. Or I would reply.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not talking about that. There is no allegation to admit the proof, as will be seen by reading the resolution, and it is therefore immaterial. I am talking of the resolution which the Senate is asked to pass and not of loose proofs, not of what may come up by a drag-net collection of newspaper slips and anonymous letters over the country.

The object I had in view, Mr. President, was not to enter into a discussion of this question generally, but simply to respond to what I believe to be the very pertinent question which was suggested by the Senator from Vermont, and which had caused me to look into this resolution to see whether we had the power to pass it. There are some other points in it to which perhaps I had better call attention before taking my seat. This is the third clause:

Whether such illegalities are likely to be repeated in connection with the election to be held in said State on the 6th of November next of Representatives in Congress; and, if so, whether there is occasion for the alteration by Congress or any of the regulations prescribed by said State for holding elections for such Representatives in Congress.

This Senate, one of the gravest political bodies on earth, supposed to be distinguished for the maturity of the judgment of its members and for its conservatism and justice, is to enter upon an inquiry to enable it to guess whether the law will be violated in an election to be held next November. If absurdity could go further and do worse I do not know how it would be brought about, that we are to enter upon a solemn investigation for the purpose of enabling the Senate to guess whether the law is to be violated in an election to be held in Louisiana next November.

And if so, whether there is occasion for the alteration by Congress of any of the regulations prescribed by said State for holding elections for such Representatives in Congress.

If we have not sufficient provision to protect the rights of the voters and the rights of the candidates for office, and the peace and good order of society, I suppose we can extend that, and the Senator from New Hampshire, in his zeal in this respect, can surely suggest any additional remedies which may be necessary without a solemn and formal inquiry for the purpose, not of ascertaining the fact as to whether laws are desired, but for the purpose of inflaming the public mind, promoting sectional agitation, and inflicting injustice.

The fourth provision of the resolution is as follows:

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid State election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns, so extensive and systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said election without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means; and, if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana, or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators and to provide methods for the appointment of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.

This resolution raises a question that it seems to me ought to be thought of and ought to be discussed more than it has been of late years. Our whole system of government is predicated upon the idea of the capacity of the people for self-government. If the people of this country have not the capacity for self-government, then the Republic is a failure and there must be a monarchy, an oligarchy, or an aristocracy to rule it. That is the proposition. I submit that for one hundred years of peace and war the people of this country have proven themselves capable of self-government, and I submit that they are to-day capable of self-government.

Then the powers of government by the constitutions, State and Federal, are distributed between the States and the Federal Government. All the powers necessary are delegated to the Federal Government to enable it to perform all its foreign and Federal relations, and no State can interfere with them. To the States is reserved the vast residuum of power which relates to local controversies, to questions of marriage and divorce, descent and distribution of estates, the enforcement of local contracts, the punishment of local violations of the law—I shall not attempt to enumerate them, nor is it necessary, but all that vast residuum of power remains to the States and is wholly without the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Then our system contemplated that our people were capable of self-government to the extent of forming a Federal Government which should control our foreign and our Federal relations; that they were capable of self-government to the extent of forming State governments having the capacity to deal successfully with all those local questions that arise within the States.

This line of distinction has been steadily adhered to by the Supreme Court of the United States, and if the Republic is to exist it must continue to be adhered to. Instances in which it has been broken over by the action of Congress have been arrested and set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Senator from New Hampshire evidently contemplates that all violations of right are the subjects of Federal jurisdiction. He evidently makes no clear distinction between the powers of the Federal Government and the powers of the State governments in relation to such matters, and there is where this perpetual intermeddling comes from and comes in—the effort of the people of some of the States to intermeddle in, to interfere with, the local affairs of others for political purposes and to accomplish political ends.

If the States are capable of self-government it is fair to assume that the people of each State will dispose properly of the local questions that arise within it. It is fair to assume that there is no justice in any other State or in Congress attempting to interfere with the legal or constitutional duty of the State to dispose of merely local questions.

Mr. President, I only intended to state very briefly the reason why I should vote against this resolution. Whenever any resolution comes up calling for an investigation within the jurisdiction of Congress, when any Senator thinks that the law has been violated in any respect over which Congress may have authority to act, I shall certainly interpose no objection to the proper investigation, but as far as I can understand I mean to oppose all propositions for investigation which simply means political agitation in violation of the Constitution and of the rights of the States and of the people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the observations of my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] lead me to occupy four or five minutes in stating very briefly my views about this resolution.

The intermeddling of the Congress of the United States with the local affairs of a State is, of course, very improper. It was thought to be very improper in times, now happily gone by, when that intermeddling took the form of petitions of citizens of some States in the United States addressed to Congress, in favor of proposing to the States amendments to the Constitution which should abolish slavery. The same arguments that my honorable and distinguished friend from Texas now addresses to us were with much greater violence, but with not greater logic, addressed to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States against any exertion of the right of petition to change the structure of the Government in its constitutional forms so as to get rid of what many people then believed and many people and, I hope, all now believe was a curse to everybody on this continent, the institution of slavery.

So I am not so greatly agitated at this present moment in respect of the fear of our intermeddling with the affairs of the State of Louisiana or the State of Vermont, whose affairs in the same way, when the Democrats were in a majority in this body were by a resolution of the Senate instructed to be inquired into, and with the urgent appeals on the part of the Senators from that State (they may have been wrong) that that investigation should be made to the uttermost, in order that the Congress of the United States in respect of the elections of the constituents who embrace the other House and this (for they all come from the States and the people, only in different forms) might be found to be pure and true, or unhappily discovered to be false and corrupt. There was no man who ever called himself a Republican and there was not any man then, only eight or nine years ago, who called himself a Democrat in this body, who did not vote for that very thing.

Times have changed. It is inconvenient for some reason, I hope a good one, though I confess I am astonished at it; the light of truth, the light that comes from investigation and inquiry, should not be turned upon that portion of the people of the United States of whom it is said that the control is in the hands of a minority who have usurped power contrary to the forms of State written constitutions; contrary to the spirit of liberty and justice and equal rights that we all believe in, or profess to believe in (and I hope we all do believe in), and it is inconvenient that we should know what the truth is. I can not understand it, sir.

If this resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire, about some parts of which I express no opinion as to their propriety, but if the general tenor of it turns out to be a slander, as the phrase has been, upon the State of Louisiana, the Senator who introduced it, if he suspected it to be a slander, will deserve the reproach of the Senate. If he introduced it in the honest belief that there are wrongs in that State which go to the fundamental composition of the whole of this Government, because Louisiana is a part of it, and affecting the States of the North and the East and the West and the Pacific coast as much as they do Louisiana, for we are all one—if it should turn out even that he was mistaken, I hope that nobody would be more glad and happy than he to find out that the truth was that the State of Louisiana possesses a government that not only in form but in substance is a government of equal rights and fair play, and that every citizen is defended as every citizen of every political party in the State of Vermont is and always has been, of whatever politics, and by the efforts of men of all politics in that dearest of rights, his independence as a citizen, the right to cast his vote unchallenged by anybody, and the right to know that it is honestly counted in the sum that goes up to make the autonomy of the State government.

Who shuns an investigation of that kind? What Democrat in the State of Vermont would not hide his face in shame if any representative of his stood up and objected to an inquiry whether in the State of Vermont the practical power of its automatic arrangement had gathered into the hands of a few, by whatever name you may call them, and that the great majority of the people were denied and suppressed in their rights to be heard as voters, and in their rights to participate as voters in the operations of that State.

As little as I admire the general principles of the Democratic party (they have a right to them; we disagree about public affairs), speaking for the Democrats of the State of Vermont as my constituents, I am bound to say, in justice to them, that I know of no man in that State of the Democratic party who would not denounce me if the case were applied to the State of Vermont if I opposed an inquiry of this kind there.

But my friend from Texas says we have not any power. Well, let us see. If we have not, of course such an inquiry would be futile; very likely the witnesses could not be convicted of perjury; very likely they could not be compelled to attend, and all that; but let us see whether we have any power. The Constitution says, as it regards Senators and Members of Congress, and in the same phrase:

> Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

How much does that import? How much does it contain? Are we to say, as the Senator from Texas referring to the Electoral Commission did, that neither House has any power to go behind the certificate that comes to it from a State? The governor of the State in each case certifies, in the one case to the Clerk or Speaker as to a Representative in the House of Representatives, and to the President of the Senate as to a Senator, that so and so, in the case of the House, has been elected a member of that body, and that so and so, in the case of a Senator, has been elected a member of this body. If one House possesses the power to make an inquiry which goes behind the seal of the governor it would seem to be very clear by the Constitution that the other House would have it, for the language is the same, and is applied to each and to both in a group, with the same import and the same force.

I think I am safe in saying that in the House of Representatives for one hundred and one years, since it was organized, and since this body was organized, whenever the occasion has arisen by a suggestion, an inquiry, a protest, or whatever, the House has thought it competent, by the consent of all men of all parties, the fathers and the sons of the Republic, from beginning to end, to go to the bottom of that affair and ascertain the real truth of that election. So the certificate of the governor, the reports of the State canvassing boards, the reports of the district canvassing boards, the tally-sheets at the ballot-boxes in each voting precinct are all open to the scrutiny of the truth in order to ascertain what took place. Is there any safety for the liberty of men as voters and citizens if such a body with such powers can not go to the real truth of the affair?

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator one question just there, not with regard to the resolution, but on the subject he is discussing?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator hold that either House of Congress would have the right to make that investigation of its own motion, in the absence of some protest or the memorial or complaint of somebody in the State?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I most decidedly do, Mr. President. When the day comes that either House of Congress, when the day comes that either house of a State Legislature, or any other representative body in this world in a place that is worthy of the name of a government, can only move for the public security and for the development of truth for the public security when some man who may be in a dungeon or may be dead comes to the front and demands it, then there will be a failure of the government of men by men and for men upon the face of the earth.

We have had a grand-jury system which is, as I think, with great respect to everybody, a fair illustration of the present matter in regard to the particular topic that the Constitution has put in the possession of each of these Houses with regard to its own members. I believe one of the many good things that our English fathers' form of government gave to us—we having discarded most of the evil things—was the grand jury. Who ever heard in any State (unless it may be very recently somewhere) that a grand jury could not inquire into some crime or wrong injurious to the State to which it belonged because some citizen or some witness or some district attorney or some judge had failed to call their attention to it? They might desire to indict the district attorney himself; they might find it to be their highest duty to indict the judge himself; and are they to wait until he shall charge them to inquire into his conduct?

Mr. BUTLER. Then do I understand the Senator to say that the powers of each House of Congress are inquisitorial, as are the powers of a grand jury?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In my humble judgment, with great respect to the many people I see who are wiser than I, in respect of the subjects that the Constitution has confided to them, their power is universal and supreme in regard to inquiry, and there is no safety for liberty and private rights unless you admit the existence of that authority to its fullest extent.

Suppose in the State of Vermont, a State, and that means ever so much, one-fourth of its inhabitants being what are called Democrats, and I only use that term to illustrate my case, because the Democrats of Vermont are just as law-abiding as anybody else and would be just as eager to defend the right of a Republican voter as a Republican would, and so I only take it to illustrate—suppose one-fourth of the citizens of the State of Vermont being Democrats had by one contrivance or another, either by fraud or violence or other forms of usurpation, got possession of all the counting and canvassing officers in that State at the ballot-boxes, all the returning boards, and the possession of the governorship and the Legislature; and suppose the Republicans came in September last and wished to vote for their candidate for governor, and they were either driven away, or, being allowed to deposit their ballots, their ballots were entirely miscounted and counted for the candidate of the one-quarter of the people of the State, and the returns come in fair on their face under the seals of the county officers, gilt-edged, engrossed on parchment, with every form and semblance of the majesty of right-doing, and the three-quarters of the people of the State of Vermont, the possession of the government of that State and all its administrative affairs having fallen into the hands of one-quarter of its people, appeal to Congress for an inquiry into the composition of the government of that State, is it republican in form? So far as its constitution goes it appears to be, and always was. Does that answer the Constitution of the United States? Was that all that our fathers meant when they said that the United States should guaranty to each State a republican form of government? Did they only mean that in its written archives deposited in its state-house there should be the parchment that contained the fair words of liberty, of justice, of equal rights? Was that all? No, Mr. President; far from it. The word "form" in the Constitution of our fathers meant not only form, but structure and substance and exercise.

Whenever, therefore, there is occasion upon just ground to believe (whether it turns out to be right or wrong, and may it always turn out to be wrong) that in any State, Vermont or elsewhere, the minority has got possession of the Government and excludes the majority from participation and control, it is the business of Congress to interfere, whether silence or protest comes from the State thus affected, because it is not only the welfare of the people of that State, but it is the welfare of the people of every State, the welfare of the people of every part of the nation that is involved, and can not be separated from a right and just republican government in form and substance in every State over the continent. The Senators from Vermont make laws for the people of Louisiana. They are Senators of all the people once elected, and therefore there can be no evil spot anywhere in this Union that does not affect the welfare and the safety of every other part of it.

So I say, Mr. President, hoping with all my heart that an inquiry into the state of affairs in Louisiana will vindicate that people and that whole people, not a small part of it, but all of them as a mass from the beliefs and the suspicions, to put it in the mildest phrase, that now exist so broadly, I can not see any ground upon which any Senator should object to an inquiry of this kind.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I omitted when speaking before to ask permission of the Senate to insert at the close of my remarks certain accounts of the proceedings in Louisiana to which I have referred. I ask unanimous consent that I may put in the marked passages from the Louisiana Standard of August 25, of September 1, and of September 22, and also an extract from the Monroe Telegraph of August 18, 1888, and an article from the Washington Post of September 20, 1888.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] complains there was no averment in the case of the killing of colored people in Louisiana, which I submitted to the Senate, that they were murdered on account of their politics. If the Senator had listened to my remarks he would have understood distinctly that I took the ground that these murders were part of a deliberate system; that whether admitted to be political or not they were in fact such; that these disarmings and assassinations of the Louisiana colored people were for the purpose of creating a state of terror as a preparation for the election in November. The same state of things exists in the State of Texas, and I now submit to the Senator from Texas the account which I send to the desk of a recent murder, since the late debate, in the State of Texas, which clearly appears to have been the killing of a Republican because he was a Republican.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The article referred to will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

[New York Daily Tribune, Saturday, September 1, 1888.]

TEXAS—MURDERED FOR BEING A REPUBLICAN—A KUKLUX OUTRAGE PERPETRATED IN TEXAS—HANGED, SHOT, AND MUTILATED.

LONGVIEW, TEX., August 31.

About 2 o'clock this afternoon Deputy Sheriff Walter Reynolds returned from his search for the body of Harrison Spencer, the colored politician who was forcibly taken from his home a few nights ago by a masked band of Kuklux. Spencer had deserted the Union-Labor party and announced his intention of supporting the Republican ticket. Reynolds reported that he had found Spencer's body about 3½ miles from his place, on the west bank of Harris Creek. No sooner had the news spread than over one hundred citizens, white and black, started to the scene.

The dead man was found hanging from a limb about 15 feet from the ground with a rope around his neck. His hands were tied behind him, and the cords were drawn so tightly that they cut deeply into his flesh. He was evidently shot before the rope was placed around his neck. There is a bullet-hole just behind the left ear and one in his left side, and he had been brutally mutilated. A movement is on foot to investigate thoroughly this crime. The following circular was issued this afternoon, and two hundred and twenty-five citizens responded to the call contained therein:

"To all law-abiding citizens:

"A crime of the most foul nature has just been perpetrated in our midst. Therefore let us come together at 4 o'clock this evening at the court-house and take proper steps, that our citizens and officers may act in unity, that the perpetrators of this crime may be discovered and the law of our land vindicated.

"J. T. SMITH, County Judge.
"A. A. KILLINGSWORTH, Sheriff.
"E. B. RAGLAND, County Attorney."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is easy to get 130,000 Democratic majority in the State of Texas when such political murders as this are constantly taking place in that State.

The Senator from Texas complains that calling attention to outrages of this sort is an intermeddling with the affairs of a sovereign State. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has well shown how the States of this Union are interwoven together in all their political interests, and how a crime against the suffrage in one State concerns every other State. The Legislature of New Hampshire—the people of New Hampshire have sent me here to call attention to just such outrages as this and to intermeddle to just that extent with the affairs of every State where men are killed solely on account of their politics.

I now ask the Secretary to read the account of additional similar occurrences in the sovereign State of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[New York Tribune, September 9, 1888.]

DRIVEN OUT BY THE DEMOCRATS—NEGRO REPUBLICANS IN FORT BEND COUNTY, TEXAS, EXILED UNDER PAIN OF DEATH.

RICHMOND, TEX., September 8.

The white Democrats have triumphed, and the negro Republicans ordered to leave Fort Bend County have gone. About twenty black men were forced out of the county at the muzzle of Winchester rifles. The most prominent exiles are C. M. Ferguson, district clerk; H. G. Lucas and Peter Warren, school teachers. The war grew out of the attempt made on Monday night to assassinate H. H. Frost, a white Democrat. While he was on the way from his store to his house he was waylaid and shot. His wounds were considered fatal, and a pack of bloodhounds was put on the trail to the negro quarter of the town and to the house of John Ervin.

Ervin and his son and a school-teacher, Donavan, were arrested. No attempt was made to lynch them, as it was not certain that they were the guilty men. H. F. Randle, deputy county assessor, was arrested and is still in jail on the charge of being implicated in the shooting of Frost. Randle is a white man. The county assessor, Henry Ferguson, is a negro. On Wednesday morning the following circular was distributed about the stores of Richmond:

"Every white man in town is urgently requested to meet at the court-house at 1 o'clock p. m."

In response to this notice fully 400 men assembled in the court-house. Clem Bassett was elected president. After speeches, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That in view of the crimes lately committed in our midst, we consider it necessary to the public good that the following persons be warned to leave the county within ten hours from notification: C. M. Ferguson, H. G. Lucas, Peter Warren, J. D. Davis, Tom Taylor, Jack Taylor, and C. M. Williams; that this convention wait as a committee of the whole on such of these persons as can now be found and through our president notify them of these resolutions, and that the others be notified by a copy of these resolutions; that the above-named parties be forever warned from returning to this county.

"Resolved, That we believe that the leaders of the Republican party of Fort Bend County are morally responsible for the assassination of J. M. Shamblin and the attempted assassination of H. H. Frost, and we demand of them to bring the guilty parties to justice, and we notify them and we solemnly warn them that the patience of an outraged people has been exhausted, and that if another Democrat in this county is personally harmed we will hold said leaders responsible in their persons for such acts."

A body of four hundred armed Democrats then warned the colored men to move and escorted them out of the county. The negroes were compelled to abandon homes, crops, and family. There was nothing against them but suspicion.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Texas undertook to make the Senate believe that in all these outrages the negroes are the aggressors. I do not deny but what the Democratic papers, and the Democratic reporters who furnish the reports to the metropolitan press of the South, assert that the negroes are the aggressors; but I undertake to say myself that in no case where an investigation may be made will it turn out that the negroes have been the aggressors. It is not in the nature of things. It is not in accordance with the facts as developed in previous affairs of this kind.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. The facts about this are that Mr. Shamblin was supposed to be assassinated by a negro who had threatened his life because he was a Democrat. That was the beginning of it. He was called to the door and shot down in his own house.

Mr. CHANDLER. A negro killed a white man in his house, shot him down for being a Democrat?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is ridiculous.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me make my statement. It may be very unwelcome to the Senator——

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not unwelcome if it is true, but it is a ridiculous statement.

Mr. REAGAN. It may be very unwelcome to the Senator to hear that a Democrat was shot down by a Republican.

Mr. CHANDLER. That a negro went to a Democrat in his house and shot him down!

Mr. REAGAN. The man who shot him left a paper on his gate notifying him that he was killed for being a Democrat. Nothing was done about that. That was followed by the shooting of the other person named there. That was then followed, not by killing negroes in return for it, but by telling them that some of them must get away from there.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question if he will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. Under the general relations between the white and the colored people the fact that the white is the dominant race and that this inquiry among others is on foot, is there any reason to suspect that Democrats placed that same notification upon the door-post in order to create a suspicion at the North that the colored people were engaged in warfare and murder upon the dominant race of the South?

Mr. REAGAN. I must make a Yankee's answer to my friend by inquiring if he thinks it probable that a Democrat agreed to be shot down in order to make capital for the Democratic party?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know about that. I do not know what the devotion of a Democrat to his party might lead him to do. I have a suspicion that perhaps he would for the sake of carrying the election and securing to his party the plunder of the next four years allow such a thing as this to be done, but I do not think it would be probable of the mass of the Democratic party. I do not understand, however, as the Senator does, or as he has previously said, that anything of the kind he suggests in his last remark is true. I understand him to say that there was a notification pinned upon the gate-post of the house of the white man murdered that he was murdered because he was a Democrat.

Mr. REAGAN. So the statement is made.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that the colored man called the white man into the colored man's cabin and killed him and notified him that he killed him because he was a Democrat. That I do not understand.

Mr. REAGAN. It was a white man who was shot down in his own house, not in a colored man's house.

Mr. BLAIR. Exactly; a notification pinned upon the gate-post of the murdered white man that he was killed because he was a Democrat.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. The question I asked was, there being a cloud over the actual source of that man's death, whether it is not possible that as a means of false explanation to the North, the Democrats invented that notification and pinned that falsehood upon the gate of this murdered man in order that the North might be misled? Does the Senator, in other words, think that a Republican negro entered upon a crusade against the dominant race of the South and killed one of its leaders because he was a Democrat and then posted a notice accordingly?

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator does not understand what took place there. The dominant party there are the negroes. I have heard the suggestion that men who agree with the Senator in politics—I do not mean in character but in politics—in that country stimulated outrages for the purpose of furnishing political capital to Republicans, but I have never heard the suggestion before now that Democrats killed one and came near killing another man in order to make political capital for the Republicans or anybody else.

The Senator's question, in view of what has appeared, is simply absurd. I know that the Senator and his associates in opinion have no sympathy with white men. They may be shot down for their politics and their families deprived of protection and support. That is all right. But if a colored man happens to be shot down, that is terribly wrong. They never propose to investigate where white men are killed. If there were to be a general investigation into fraud and crime, every day I could pick up newspapers and I could bring a peck of them here showing murders and crimes of the deepest dye all over the North. Why not investigate those things?

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any pretense that they are political murders?

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman chooses to call everything a political murder.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish merely, as I had a share—a third interest, I think—in this colloquy, to ask the Senator if it would not be well and just on the whole to the public sentiment of these 65,000,000 of people, South and North, for him to introduce a resolution of investigation to find out about this political murder of a Democrat by a negro in the State of Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. If I had no more respect for the Constitution of the United States than my friend from New Hampshire has, I should do it; but as I respect the Constitution I decline.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand the Senator's construction of the Constitution of the United States would leave such things as political murders uninquired into.

Mr. REAGAN. It does not leave them uninquired into, but it leaves the proper authorities to inquire into them.

Mr. BLAIR. That is, nothing can be done under the Constitution of the country to suppress them.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator does not understand that there are such things as State constitutions and State laws and State courts to deal with local affairs of that kind?

Mr. BLAIR. No, I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say simply to the Senator from New Hampshire that I think he does not understand the question from the tenor of his last suggestion. I think that if he did he would assume that whenever a white Democrat is killed in the South by a negro the authorities are very prompt and efficient, and also some not in authority, in providing a remedy. It is only in those cases where a negro is killed by a Democrat that no rewards are offered and no attempt is made to apprehend or punish the guilty party.

Mr. REAGAN. That statement is gratuitous on the part of the Senator, and unjust and undeserved by the Southern people. So far as I know, certainly in the State of Texas, the punishment of crime, whether committed against blacks or whites, is as faithfully carried out as it could be in the State the Senator represents here, and such a statement ought not to be made by a Senator on this floor.

Mr. SPOONER. I have only this authority for making the statement as applied to the State of Texas, that in one case three colored men were hanged without any opportunity for trial, without any hearing, hunted as if they were dogs, and no reward was offered locally or by the governor of the State for the apprehension of the men who perpetrated that outrage; no grand jury ever inquired into it in the vicinage; no district attorney undertook to secure the apprehension of the men who did it. I have known of a case where a Democrat was shot down in the same county and a reward, and a large reward, was promptly offered by the governor of the State, and I think, also, locally, for the apprehension of the man who did it. I have that much warrant for the assumption that there is a different rule applied to those who kill Republican negroes from that which is applied to those who kill white Democrats.

Mr. REAGAN. That statement ought to be accompanied by this statement: That the judge of that district was a Republican, the district attorney was a Republican, and the county attorney was a Republican.

I have further to say, if the Senator is anxious to find a parallel, that he can go all over the Northern States and he will find places where men are lynched and no punishment is meted out to the lynchers, no proclamation issued, no reward offered for their apprehension, and apparently no more effort made than there was there to punish those men. We see accounts of them frequently, but it does not disturb the Senators that white men are lynched in Northern States and these lynchers are not punished and no rewards offered for their apprehension.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply want to say in response to that statement that I do not deny, and no man can deny, that in the Northern States there are occasionally lynchings; no man can deny that there are murders; but I have known no instance in my life where a lynching took place in a Northern State without a reward being offered and steps taken to ferret out the offenders and bring them to punishment. That is the difference between the two sections.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire to the left of the Chair [Mr. CHANDLER] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to his colleague?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish merely to say that if the Senator from Texas will put me in possession of the names and allegations of fact similar to those which he has so frequently stated to the Senate, I will myself take the responsibility, as I can do under my views of the Constitution, of introducing a resolution for the investigation of this case wherein, as I understand him, the proof will develop the fact—and I submit that it is the first one within the whole range of American history—that a colored Republican has murdered a Democratic leader in the State of Texas or any other State from political motives.

As the Senator represents the State where this outrage has been committed, respecting his constitutional scruples, as I must, if he will give me the data so that I can establish the facts, I will offer a resolution of investigation not only conscientiously, but with great alacrity, and I assure him with a perseverance that will probably result in a development of the actual facts.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to state one more fact, if the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. REAGAN. It has not been long since at Longview, Tex., a colored man declared his intention to vote the Democratic ticket, and he was waited upon about midnight by some other colored men, taken off to the Sabine Swamp, and has never been heard of since. Another colored man was taken off—so the newspapers say—and murdered by other colored men for saying he was going to vote the Democratic ticket.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator give the names of those people?

Mr. REAGAN. I can not, because I do not remember them. The first occurrence was at Longview and was published in the newspapers. I do not remember even the locality of the other, but the newspapers stated it.

Mr. COKE. I can give the Senator the names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield in a moment if the Senator will wait, because I do not desire to prolong this discussion so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield further.

Mr. CHANDLER. I congratulate the Senate and the Senators from Texas on the information which those Senators seem to have sought for and obtained since this resolution was last discussed. When it was before the Senate on a previous day the Senator from Texas nearest me [Mr. REAGAN] knew nothing whatever about the Washington County outrage, and had never heard of the assassination of eight negroes under the most atrocious circumstances at Spanish Camp, in Wharton County. But since that time the Senators do not seem to have needed the influence of the educational bill of my colleague [Mr. BLAIR] to arouse them into an inquiry into some of these transactions that are going on daily and hourly in Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I decline to yield. I am glad that they have begun to investigate the political condition of Texas, where one-quarter of the voters are colored men. One thing is certain, that nothing has taken place in Texas which has led the Democrats of Texas to conclude that it will not be expedient or safe for them to put a State ticket in the field at the coming election. But it has been the result and the intended result—in my judgment—of the outrages that have been committed in that State to induce the Republicans of that State to nominate no State ticket. I will ask the Secretary to read——

Mr. REAGAN. I want——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to correct a statement which the Senator has made. The Senator puts me in the attitude of saying that I never heard of the affair at Spanish Camp. I never said any such thing. I did see a newspaper account of it very different from what the Senator presented. Now he presents the fact that the Republicans of Texas have not nominated a State ticket, because they are afraid to do so. I read the proceedings of their convention at Fort Worth within a few days, and the members of that convention distinctly repudiate the idea that they are afraid to put a ticket in the field, but as a matter of policy, to secure a combination of the elements of all the parties together, they prefer not to put a separate ticket in the field.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wonder that the Republicans of Texas under the circumstances had the courage even to hold a convention.

Mr. REAGAN. The leading Republican there, and the one who was their candidate for lieutenant-governor at the last election, distinctly repudiated that doctrine.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the paper I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

REPUBLICAN TERRORISM IN TEXAS.

[The New York Star, Wednesday, September 12, 1888.]

GALVESTON, September 11.

The Republicans of Galveston County in mass-meeting last night adopted resolutions condemning the occurrences in Fort Bend and Washington and appealing to the governor of the State to right matters. Another resolution was adopted, as follows: "That the mob violence of Fort Bend County and the assassination of Joseph Hoffman, of Washington County, admonishes us that similar scenes may be expected to follow the vigorous efforts of our party in counties in which the Republican vote predominates; therefore it is the sense of this convention that the interest of the Republican party will be best served by not nominating a State ticket."

Mr. CHANDLER. I now yield the floor.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the statement just made by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the Republicans failed to put out a State ticket because of fear of personal consequences, I denounce here as absolutely and unqualifiedly false, without a particle of foundation. It is a statement made for political effect. The purpose for which it is made is a dishonest and an unfair one. It is a statement not believed by the Senator who makes it himself.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the Senator to order, and ask that the words which he has uttered be read, and that the Chair may rule whether or not they are parliamentary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. COKE. If I have said anything derogatory to the dignity of the Senate, I withdraw it and apologize to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to make a suggestion. I am not very familiar with the rules which govern parliamentary debate, and I do not know how far a Senator is at liberty to go on and say that a statement made by another Senator is unqualifiedly false, or that it is made for dishonest and unworthy purposes. If that be the practice of the Senate, if that be the rule of parliamentary law, I do not object to it. I am just as ready to engage in that kind of debate probably as any Senator on the other side; but it seems to me that the Senate can not afford to indulge in that kind of debate. The more language of that kind that comes from Senators on that side the better it is for Senators on this side.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the rule to be that when a Senator is called to order for unparliamentary language, it is his duty to sit down until the Chair has ruled upon the language taken down at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such is the order of the Senate, and the Senator from Texas will take his seat.

Mr. COKE. I submit, of course, to the orders of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would hold that the language used by the Senator from Texas was unparliamentary, but he understood that Senator to say that he withdrew the remark and tendered an apology to the Senate for its use.

Mr. COKE. That is what I did say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. COKE. The Senator from New Hampshire seems anxious that somebody on this side of the Chamber should kick him. I refuse to perform the operation. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the Senator to order, and ask that his words be taken down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will please resume his seat. The Senator from New Hampshire will please state his question of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit that the language used was unparliamentary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would hold that the language is not warranted by parliamentary law.

Mr. COKE. Then I withdraw the language and apologize to the Senate for having used it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed in order.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend one moment. The Chair will ask that the Senate preserve order, and he cautions the occupants of the galleries that marks of approval or disapprobation are forbidden by the rules of the Senate, and if they are persisted in the galleries will be cleared. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. COKE. The statement of the Senator to which I have just referred, that the Republican party failed to put out a ticket in Texas because they feared the consequences personally to the Republicans, is not true and not correct. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Austin Statesman giving an account of the proceedings in the Republican county convention at Austin, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TRAVIS COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

[Special to the Gazette.]

AUSTIN, TEX., September 15.

The Travis County Republican convention to-day appointed the following delegates to the State convention at Fort Worth on the 20th instant: J. C. Degress, J. B. Rector, C. A. Newning, D. Friedman, J. M. Holland, R. Platte, J. M. Snyder, J. A. Black, W. E. Easton, J. P. Taylor, J. B. Allen, Tom Helm, W. P. Bacon, W. B. Brush, J. Kerschler, M. Alexander, A. B. Palm, William Nichols, H. Russell, William Alexander, H. J. Oldham, A. Werton, F. Hall, H. Dickerson, and W. C. Rinishes.

The following resolutions were introduced in the Travis County Republican convention to-day:

"Whereas it is a well-known fact that since the Democratic party has been in power in this State the Republicans in a great many counties in the State have been terrorized and proscribed socially and otherwise; hundreds have been murdered, others have been required to leave their homes and again seek homes in other States; thousands of voters have been intimidated, and through fear have remained away from the polls, and thereby failed to exercise the right of suffrage as guarantied to them under the Constitution and laws of this State; and

"Whereas this feeling of proscription exists to a greater or less extent in almost every county in this State; and

"Whereas there has been a Republican convention called to meet at Fort Worth on the 20th day of this month to select a candidate for governor and other State officers against the Democratic nominees for State officers; and,

"Whereas we believe that there are at least 50,000 or 60,000 Republican voters in this State that have not voted the Republican ticket on account of the foregoing reason; and

"Whereas we believe there are thousands of intelligent Democrats or in other organized parties that stand willing or ready to join us in a continued effort to overthrow the old moss-backs, Bourbon, rebel, collar-bound element of the Democratic organization: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the delegates from this county to the Republican convention at Fort Worth be, and are hereby, instructed to co-operate with other parties and organizations that will best subserve the purposes heretofore mentioned."

The resolutions were voted down by 63 to 16. The point about it is the convention was composed of three-quarters negroes. The resolutions were introduced by a white man named Platte, a city alderman. The sixteen who voted for the resolutions were white men, and the negroes having more honesty than their white friends voted them down. A prominent negro got up and said the resolutions were a lie on the people of Texas. Thus the Republican negroes of Travis County give the lie to HOAR, INGALLS, and other bloody-shirt wearers.

It transpires that the bloody-shirt resolutions introduced in the Travis County Republican convention to-day, but defeated by 63 to 16, were written by a prominent white Republican politician of Austin now in the North, and intended for use against Cleveland and Thurman in the Northern States to fire the Northern heart. He failed.

Mr. COKE. Now, Mr. President, I will state that Judge Rector, who figures in this Republican convention, is the chairman of the Republican State executive committee, and he voted against this resolution and denounced it in a speech on the floor of that convention. I ask that the proceedings of the Cooke County Republican convention also be read. Cooke County is 350 miles from Travis County, where these proceedings were held.

The Secretary read as follows:

COOKE COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

[Special to the Gazette.]

GAINESVILLE, TEX., September 18.

The Republican convention of Cooke County met here this afternoon and was called to order by the county chairman. Delegates to the Fort Worth convention were elected, and resolutions indorsing the Chicago platform and favoring the nomination of a straight Republican ticket for all State offices were adopted.

W. B. Johnson, attorney, in a speech, referred to the alleged outrages reported from time to time and said for the most part they were all bosh. He had been in Texas several years and he had never been mistreated on account of his politics.

The chairman said it was reported all through the North that the Republicans of Texas were afraid to put out a ticket. He had been in the State fifteen years. He believed Texas was just as good a State for Republicans as for Democrats. Some of his best friends are Democrats. He had never been abused for being a Republican.

Mr. Harris echoed the sentiments of the chair. He labored under no embarrassment by being a Republican. He believed there are as fair elections in Texas as anywhere. He was in favor of a straight Republican State ticket.

On motion, the convention resolved itself into a Harrison and Morton club, and about fifty members were enrolled. The convention then adjourned till next Thursday.

Mr. COKE. I hold in my hand the platform of the Republican party of Texas, just adopted two or three days ago in convention at Fort Worth. Unless some gentleman on the other side desires it read in full I will not ask that it be done.

Mr. BLAIR. I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. COKE. Very well, I will read it. The portion you would like to hear particularly I intended to read. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE PLATFORM—OUTRAGES DENOUNCED.

We, your committee on platform and resolutions, beg leave to report as follows:

We cordially ratify the nomination of that eminent statesman and tried soldier, Benjamin Harrison, for President, and that able financier and philanthropic citizen, Levi P. Morton, for Vice-President, and do hereby pledge them our hearty support.

We hereby declare that we are in thorough accord with the platform promulgated by the late national convention at Chicago, and with the principles of the national Republican party as enunciated, explained, and interpreted in the recent letter of Benjamin Harrison accepting the nomination of the Republican party for President.

We demand such national legislation as will give adequate protection to wool, hides, and all Texas products and industries.

As citizens of this great State, the mutual welfare of which is to us paramount to every partisan consideration, we deplore the existence of these outrages which have been recently committed in Fort Bend and Washington Counties.

We believe that the growth, development, and prosperity of this great State should not be retarded nor imperiled by the lawless acts of certain parties in these counties. We denounce these outrages and demand that their perpetrators be punished according to the law of the land, without regard to party affiliation.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator if he does not approve of that language in the Republican platform?

Mr. COKE. That plank, of course I do.

Mr. BLAIR. I supposed so.

Mr. COKE. That was the one I intended reading for the Senator's benefit.

Mr. BLAIR. Then in regard to what they say of wool and other things that relate to the general prosperity of Texas? [Laughter.]

Mr. COKE. I have nothing to say about that just now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAIR. I supposed so.

Mr. COKE. Let the reading continue.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

In view of the fact that the Republicans of Texas have already placed a full electoral ticket in the field, and the further fact that there is no reasonable probability of electing a State Republican ticket, we hereby express our conviction that it would be unwise and inexpedient under these and other existing circumstances for the Republicans of Texas to place in the field any candidate or candidates for State offices.

Respectfully submitted.

EUGENE MARSHALL, Chairman.

A motion to receive the report and discharge the committee was made. This was objected to, and an amendment that the report be received and adopted was put to the house. The result was that the amendment was adopted by a vote of 256 to 130.

A motion thanking the chair and officers and the citizens of Fort Worth was adopted.

Richard Nelson introduced a resolution indorsing the Globe-Democrat as the faithful friend of the colored people of the Southwest. This was also adopted.

On motion of Richard Allen, of Harris, a campaign committee was provided for. De Gress was made the chairman, with power to make up the committee by appointing on it one Republican from each Congressional district.

The convention then adjourned sine die.

Mr. COKE. I have had that read for the purpose of nailing the falsehood that has been repeated in the press and in the Senate that the Republican party were afraid to put out a ticket in Texas.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator answer me the question in what way that platform proves that the Republican party were not afraid to put out a ticket?

Mr. COKE. The recital of the platform, the last clause of it:

In view of the fact that the Republicans of Texas have already placed a full electoral ticket in the field, and the further fact that there is no reasonable probability of electing a State Republican ticket, we hereby express our conviction that it would be unwise and inexpedient under these and other existing circumstances for the Republicans of Texas to place in the field any candidate or candidates for State offices.

Mr. BLAIR. Now, I ask the Senator's attention to that clause in view of the fact that there is no reasonable probability of the Republicans electing a State officer; is not that a peculiar form of expression, and how does the Senator account for the fact there stated?

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me to proceed, he will find——

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator understands my question by a sort of mental process which does not require me to state it, if he takes it naturally, and he sees the point, I certainly shall be very glad to have him answer it.

Mr. COKE. The Republican party of Texas is in a hopeless minority. At this time there are some two or three other political parties in Texas. All of them together may present a respectable appearance and poll a respectable vote. For the purpose of joining fortunes with these the Republican party of Texas simply does not put a ticket in the field, and it is understood that the Republicans are to vote with these other parties I have referred to.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator name those parties?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. COKE. I will yield now.

Mr. BLAIR. I simply wish to ask, does the Senator mean by "these other parties" the Prohibitionists?

Mr. COKE. They are the Prohibitionists and the Union Labor party, the Non-partisan party, and well, several others, the names of which I do not remember now.

Mr. BLAIR. The Prohibitionists being the chief; and is it not probable, then, this combination is made with the Prohibitionists in the hope of dividing the Texas delegation in the Senate and securing the support of the Senator's colleague?

Mr. COKE. The Senator can answer that question to suit himself. [Laughter.] All that I have to say about it is that the statement heretofore made in the Senate, that has been repeated in the Senate, that the Republicans refused to put out a ticket because they were afraid to do it, is not true, and this platform proves it; the proceedings of the Republican convention at Austin prove it; the proceedings of the Republican convention at Gainesville are clear proof of it. Now, Mr. President, I hope since that statement has been nailed to the counter it will be allowed to remain there and will not be taken up and used again in this canvass. It is untrue. The facts show it to be untrue. The Republicans of Texas themselves have denounced it as untrue and certainly it ought to be taken to be untrue.

Mr. President, with reference to the difficulty in Fort Bend County, about which something was said a few minutes ago, I have a statement here in a paper from that county:

REPUBLICANISM VS. ASSASSINATION.

On the night of August 1, 1888, Mr. J. M. Shamblin, a peaceable and most worthy citizen of this county, was cruelly murdered by an unknown assassin while sitting quietly at his home at night, surrounded by his wife and children. On the front gate of Mr. Shamblin's yard was tacked a notice which read as follows, some alterations being made in the punctuation and spelling.

I will ask that this notice be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"I am just from town and full of h—ll in the neck. Mr. Shamblin, you have been holding Democratic meetings with the negroes, and you have said that any negro that don't vote the Democratic ticket is sticking a knife in your child's side. The Republicans have declared that no Democrat shall be allowed to hold any Democratic meeting in any private place among the ignorant race of negroes. It is said that Grandpa Harrison's pants won't fit Benny, but Benny is going to wear them before the end of time. The Republican party is going to hold their heads up if they die hard. We will have no Democrat to mislead the ignorant negro astray. You are the man to lead them astray and cut their throats and suck their blood. I am a Republican, and have no use for a d—n Democrat. This is a lesson to all d—n cut-throat Democrats to hold no more Democratic meetings with the ignorant negro race of people."

This notice was written on a slip of paper torn from a railroad time-book, and corresponded exactly with the missing page of a time-book found in the possession of William Caldwell, a negro, while the writing seemed identical with the writing of Caldwell. This notice was published in nearly every daily paper in the State, besides a large number of weeklies, and the general impression conveyed was that Mr. Shamblin had been assassinated for political reasons, and because he was an influential Democrat.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, some two or three weeks afterwards Mr. Frost, a very prominent citizen of Fort Bend County, living in the same town with Mr. Shamblin, was going home about 9 o'clock at night, and as he opened his front gate was fired on from ambush and seriously and badly wounded. Mr. Frost was, like Mr. Shamblin, a prominent Democrat and white man. Steps were taken to try to ascertain who the assassin was. The people failed to find who he was, but suspicion rested very strongly upon three or four persons who were negroes, and they were ordered to leave. Shamblin had been murdered in his own house surrounded by his wife and children; Frost had been shot down at his own gate as he was going home at night.

Mark the conservatism of those people when not being entirely satisfied, having strong proof, but not that which amounted to legal evidence, that certain parties were guilty of this assassination, they offered them no violence, but as a measure of defense, as a measure of self-protection, as a measure to preserve the lives of other citizens, simply ordered them to leave; and they did leave. That was a Democratic outrage; but two Democrats—one was murdered in the presence of his wife and children, and an attempt was made to murder the other, and he was grievously wounded when he was going into his own yard at night. That is the Fort Bend occurrence. That is the transaction denounced here by the Senator from New Hampshire as a Democratic outrage. That is all there is about that. No drop of Republican blood has been shed in Fort Bend County; but one Democrat has been brutally butchered and another cripled and maimed for life by the shot of a Republican assassin.

Now, as to Washington County, the Senator from Wisconsin says that three negroes were taken out and hanged. This is true; but he failed to state the whole truth, and it is as reprehensible in morals as in law to fail to state the whole truth as it is to fail to state the truth at all. These three negroes were taken out of jail and hanged. They were taken out by a masked mob; and why were they taken out? They were taken out because they were accessories to the murder of young Bolton, another white man.

Notice the fact, Mr. President, that the assassin's shot has yet struck no Republican. The blood that has been shed has been the blood of white men and of Democrats in Fort Bend County and in Washington County, except the three negroes who were taken out of jail and hanged by a masked mob. These three negroes, as I stated here on a former occasion, for safe-keeping, in view of the violence that was feared against them, were sent to Houston and placed in jail there, and just before court met, and when it was believed that the feeling had subsided, they were sent back for trial to Brenham. Then it was that the jail was broken into and they were taken out and hung. They were hung for that for which men from the earliest history of this country have been hung, and in the way that men have been hung ever since these United States have been a country. It was not right to take them from the jail and hang them. It was not right to do this; I do not justify it; but I do say that the motive which prompted these men to take and hang these negroes was the same motive that has prompted similar performances in every State in this Union. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] said that nothing of that sort has ever occurred in Connecticut. I was interrupted to be so informed when this question was before the Senate heretofore, and I excepted Connecticut. I do not believe there is a State in this Union in which mobs have not hung men, and I believe that there are some States every county in which have witnessed similar violations of law.

The effort to make this out political is unworthy of a Senator. There was nothing political about it. The man who fired the shot that killed young Bolton is, I believe, alive now. These negroes were accessories. The feeling engendered by the murder of Bolton prompted the breaking of the jail and the hanging of these negroes, and not any political motive or political purpose.

Another Democratic outrage which is paraded before the country is the killing of Joseph Hoffman. Hoffman was a candidate for a county office on the Democratic ticket. He was a Republican, but the same shot that killed Hoffman also killed Holt, the most active, aggressive, and pushing Democrat in Washington County. Hoffman and Holt were sitting together, and the assassin fired and killed both of them. Hoffman was running on a Democratic ticket, and Holt was one of the leading Democrats of the county; and yet the assassin who killed both of them with one shot is said to have perpetrated a Democratic outrage.

Hoffman is the only man in Texas, so far as the testimony before the Senate goes, who has been struck by a bullet, because there is no proof of any other. While he was a Republican he was running on a mixed ticket, on a Democratic ticket, and the man who was killed with him was one of the most extreme Democrats in the county.

These are the Texas outrages; these are the outrages that have been kept for two or three years to fire the Northern mind for the purpose of gaining votes for the Republican ticket!

Mr. President, I find in the platform which has been read in the hearing of the Senate—

We denounce the outrages in Fort Bend and in Washington Counties.

And the outrages in Fort Bend and in Washington Counties are those that I have recited to you. They speak of no others in this platform. In one hundred and ninety counties in Texas the transactions that I have narrated to you are the only ones they can rake and scrape to assail Texas on. I suppose two and one-half millions of people—people from every country under the sun, not homogeneous people like your people in the Northern and Eastern States, but they are people from everywhere, who have not yet had time to be fused into a homogeneous mass, a condition of society which presents the very best conditions for violence and personal collision, and yet only two counties are found in the State where a mendacious Republican press are willing to frame a charge.

Mr. President, I dislike discussions of this character. I have to be driven into them. I believe there is no statesmanship in them. I believe they are derogatory to the dignity and character of the Senate. I believe they are disgraceful to this body. And yet my State has been attacked, my people have been slandered and traduced, and I speak in their defense only when driven to the wall. If gentlemen have anything legitimate to say against Texas let them say it. But when a great State like that is arraigned before the American people and the American Congress, I submit that charges of graver import than these should be brought against her.

I think, as I remarked awhile ago in answer to a question of my friend on my left, that we have 2,500,000 at least of people in Texas, and I will say about that 2,500,000 people that there are not 2,500,000 people in this Union who are doing more to make this a grand and a glorious country than they are.

We have there, Mr. President, the raw material of wool and of cotton and of hides to keep all the spindles and artisans in the United States who manufacture those materials going for an indefinite time. We have 8,000 miles of railroad, and it is being increased annually at the rate of from 1,000 to 1,500 miles. After feeding our people, we sent out $175,000,000 worth of products to other States and to foreign countries for sale. We are discharging our duty the best we know how, and we think we know as well how as the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from New Hampshire. At all events we are attending strictly to our own business, and we challenge any State in the Union to present a better record for social order than the Republican platform of Texas by the clearest implication shows that we have.

I do not care to thrash over old straw. This question was up some ten days or two weeks ago and was discussed. It is brought up again. It seems to be kept on tap to be used on any and all occasions. I have nothing further to say about it than that the allegations made against the people of Washington County, the people of Fort Bend County, and the people of Texas generally, are infamous slanders and falsehoods such as should never have been heard in the American Senate.

Mr. SPOONER Mr. President, I am surprised that the remark I made to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has led the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] to repeat, with some variations not altogether creditable to him, I think, the speech which he submitted on another occasion. I did not intend, I assure the Senate, to bring into debate again by the remark I made the Washington County outrages. The Senator from Texas gratuitously informs me that a suppression of the truth is as bad as a falsehood. When I want a teacher in ethics, Mr. President, I shall not go to Texas for one.

The Senator says that this discussion, and I am warranted in supposing that he includes the discussion of kindred topics, is a disgrace to this body. That depends, in my judgment, upon the manner of debate. I know of no subject better befitting the dignity of the United States Senate than the maintenance of constitutional right in the citizen of the United States. I know of no question which dignified Senators can better afford in the discharge of their duty to investigate and to debate than questions affecting the well-being and safety of republican government, and to determine whether there be any place in the United States where the rights of citizenship are denied to men entitled to them. There is nothing in the subject which warrants the animadversion of the Senator from Texas, and so far as my participation in this debate is concerned there has been nothing in it, I submit, which tended to degrade the Senate or which was not in harmony with the dignity which should prevail here. The bandying of epithets about this Chamber is disgraceful, no matter what the subject of debate may chance to be.

I am not to be taunted by the Senator from Texas or any other Senator with half telling the truth. The day when the manners of the negro-driver could frighten men in the United States Senate has gone by and gone by forever. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER rapped with his gavel.

Mr. SPOONER. This is a place for debate, for argument, not for abuse. The assumption that I have prejudice or hatred against the State of Texas, or the people of Texas, or the people of the South, is utterly without foundation. I want to see the South prosperous. I have withheld no vote since I became a member of this body which could by any possibility tend to build up the South, nor shall I do so; but when I am charged by the Senate of the United States with the performance of a duty, when I am bidden to investigate charges against a county in the State of Texas, or in any other State, and in the discharge of that duty I find that the rights of citizenship are denied there, that the law is trampled upon there, and that men in high station wink at it, and that the people of a county applaud it, and not only applaud it but reward it, I should be unworthy a place in this Senate if I did not say so to the Senate, and say so to the people of the United States.

The Senator can not meet this case, his colleagues can not meet kindred cases, by saying that this is for political effect, that it is to arouse the public mind simply for election purposes. I wish it might arouse the public mind to rightly appreciate that there is a community where Judge Kirk, the man who helped to plan and carry out the infamous outrages upon the franchise in Washington County, Texas, is decorated, is nominated again to preside over the orphans' court, and poor Joe Hoffman, the German-Republican soldier, is shot to death like a dog. If such things do not arouse the indignation of liberty-loving people, then the people of this country have undergone a change, and not a change for the better either.

Mr. President, I spoke with absolute sincerity the other day when I said that the whole debate and the entire subject was disagreeable to me. I wish there were no spot or place under our flag where a citizen can not exercise all the rights of a citizen. I take no pleasure in what I believe to be the fact, that in certain portions of this country those rights are denied and trampled upon for political purposes. It will not do for the Senator in answer to this to turn to us and say "We have so many thousand miles of railroad," "We have so many hides," "We have so many farms." You can not stop the ears of the people of the United States with greenbacks. They will not be deaf to petitions for relief or insensible to outrage and wrong perpetrated upon citizens; and the sooner that is realized in every part of this country the better it will be for us all.

The Senator from Texas the other day—and it showed how hard pushed he was for argument in this matter—when I read a letter from Joe Hoffman, in which he expressed his fear, and stated that he had been threatened, the letter of a brave, true-hearted man, which must touch every sensitive heart, challenged the authenticity of it because it was sent to me from Topeka by Judge Hackworth, and by the way I am told by the President of the Senate that Judge Hackworth is respected in Topeka, Kans., where he has built up a successful business.

Mr. COKE. They do not know him.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps not. We shall see.

Mr. COKE. They will find him out.

Mr. SPOONER. We shall see. He can vote there as he pleases, and can live there and can do business and is in no danger of being shot down and in no danger of being driven out. The Senator challenged the authenticity of the letter of Joe Hoffman upon the ground that it came from Hackworth. Mr. President, I have seen letters from Joe Hoffman, one of which came from Texas directed to Washington to a gentleman residing here. The post-mark is the Hempstead and Austin railway post-office, the same one that was upon the envelope containing Joe Hoffman's letter to Mr. Hackworth, which I read in the hearing of the Senate some days since. The matter of post-mark was the great point upon which the distinguished Senator from Texas wanted the Senate and the people of the couatry to ignore what was stated in that letter and to consider it as a fabrication.

I have a letter from a gentleman in Brenham, Tex., before me addressed to me, and it is post-marked in the same way. I have a letter also which did not come directly to me which states how Joe Hoffman died. It says:

He walked up the sidewalk as far as Murphy's, and there he met Jim—

That is, Jim Holt—

and told him that they were after us—

Referring to another, and not to Holt.

The letter states that they had been followed for nearly half an hour, and continues:

Jim, with an oath, said, "Joe, I will protect you; you are in no danger here;" and they both sat down in the front door, one on each side, facing the courthouse, and had not sat there very long before the buckshot came. Joe jumped up and said, "Oh, Lord, what will become of my poor children?" and fell dead in the next door. Jim jumped up and tried to help Joe in the house, not knowing that he was shot, and while doing so he fell in a faint, and the doctor pronounced him also dead.

He did not die immediately, but since then has died. The other day the Senator from Texas repeatedly announced, and based a portion of his argument upon it, that Joe Hoffman was a Democrat. To-day he corrects that blunder—I beg pardon; I will endeavor to be more courteous than the Senator—he corrects that mistake and admits——

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I stated that Mr. Hoffman was running on a Democratic ticket, not that he was a Democrat.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senate will remember the colloquy between the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] and the Senator from Texas upon that subject, and I am very certain that my recollection of it is accurate.

Mr. COKE. I will remark that the Senator may possibly be accurate. I never heard of the case at all until I saw it in the newspaper dispatches; but that he was running on the Democratic ticket was certain, and that is what I stated certainly when I spoke the other day.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator stated repeatedly, I think, that he was a Democrat and that he was running on the Democratic ticket. I stated that he was a Republican and that he was running on a union or mixed ticket, the formation of which was advised by Judge Hackworth, and in opposition to the regular Democratic ticket headed by Judge Kirk, which is the fact as I understand it.

Now, Mr. President, there can be no mistake about the accuracy and foundation of the charges made against the people of Washington County, Texas, as to the election which took place there in 1886, and the Senator from Texas can not successfully combat the facts nor meet the case in the way which it has pleased him to adopt.

I stated the other day to the Senator, and I state it again to the Senate and to the people, that the testimony shows that one ballot-box and the tally-list were forcibly seized by armed men at night, as they were being taken by officials to the county seat, from the custodians of them. I stated, and the testimony clearly shows it, that at one of the polling-places, Flewellyn, armed men, disguised, pushed their way into the room when the ballots were being counted, interrupted the officers in the discharge of that duty, and that one of the raiders was shot; the Senator says murdered. This was Mr. Bolton.

Mr President, every colored man in the room at that poll—and there were three or more, I think—testified to the facts as I state them. Two white Democrats who were present, after some prevarication admitted some of the facts but denied others.

The Senator—and that is his wont in dealing with this transaction—discards as utterly unworthy of credit the testimony of colored Republican witnesses and accepts as God's truth, no matter by how many contradicted or how absurd in itself, or how inconsistent with circumstances, the testimony of one or two white Democrats.

Now, sir, I have before me a letter signed by the United States district attorney of that district, a Democrat appointed by this Administration, Rudolph Kleberg. It is also signed by Thomas H. Franklin, appointed by the Attorney-General as special counsel to assist in the prosecution of these men under indictment in the Federal court for perpetrating these outrages.

The testimony before the committee, not at all overthrown in my judgment, was that the man Bolton was in disguise; that he had on what was called a "slicker," or yellow oil-proof coat; that there was a handkerchief over his face, and I want to call the attention of the Senator from Texas and of the Senate in order to show what I hope no Senator here deems necessary should be shown, that this is not the work of a Republican committee gotten up now on the eve of election simply for partisan purposes, to the report these gentlemen made to the Attorney-General of the United States, dated December 21, 1887, which commences thus:

COCKE, DENMAN & FRANKLIN, ATTORNEYS,
San Antonio, Bexar County, Texas, December 21, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 14th instant, requesting a report upon the Washington County election cases in United States district court at Austin, together with copy of letter from Senator COKE therein inclosed, received.

Replying thereto, we beg leave to say:

The indictment upon which a trial was had at the last term of said court at Austin contained the following counts:

First count, charging conspiracy to interfere with the officers of election at Flewellyn precinct, in said Washington County, in the performance of duties required of them by law, at which said election a member of the Federal Congress was voted for and elected.

Second count, charging conspiracy to commit similar offenses at Graball precint.

Third count, charging the robbing of the ballot-box at Graball precinct.

Fourth count, charging general conspiracy to interfere with officers of election at Graball, Flewellyn & Lott's store.

The indictment is not before us and we state its contents from memory.

Motion was made to quash the bill and overruled.

The Government proved the following facts on the trial:

1. That an election was held as charged in the indictment, the candidates for Congress thereat being Hon. R. Q. Mills and —— Rankin.

2. That the election precincts named in the bill were heavily Republican.

3. That there were two local parties in the field at said election, a straight Republican and "People's" or Democratic party.

4. That the Republican ticket was printed on a diamond-shaped ballot.

5. That at the precincts named in the bill the officers of election had decided to count the diamond-shaped ballots, but at other precincts they were declared illegal by the officers of election and not counted. At none of these last-mentioned polling places were the officers of election interfered with in any way.

6. That if all the diamond-shaped ballots cast had been counted, also the votes at Flewellyn, Graball, and Lott's Store, then the straight Republican ticket would have been elected by a large majority.

7. That on the night of the election whilst the officers of election at Graball were counting the votes, the ballots and ballot-box were forcibly taken by armed men, who were masked by having white cloths or handkerchiefs tied over the lower part of their faces.

8. That on the night after the election the ballot-box containing the ballots cast at Lott's Store was forcibly taken from one of the officers of election by masked and armed men while said officer was taking the same to the county seat, as required by law.

9. That on the night of the election armed and masked men undertook to take the ballot-box at Flewellyn, when one of them, subsequently proved to be Dewees Bolton, was shot dead by a negro named Polk Hill, who is now, we are informed, in jail in Milam County, Texas. The defendants contended that when shot Bolton was alone, unarmed, and unmasked; but—

I am asking now the attention of the Senate, not to any statement from Republicans of the Senate or elsewhere, but to this statement by the United States district attorney and his assistant in this case upon the subject of Bolton's visit to the polls and his disguise, etc.—

but this theory, we believe, was thoroughly demolished by the Government, Bolton's own father testifying that when he got to his son's body, shortly after the shooting, he (his son) had on a "slicker," or rain coat, and had a handkerchief knotted around his throat. The weather was dry and mild, and no necessity was shown for the use of such a coat on such a night.

10. That a number of negroes who were present when Bolton was shot were arrested and put in jail the day after the killing, and subsequently three of the number were taken from jail by a mob and hanged.

11. The Government then proceeded to show by evidence that the defendants were some of the conspirators who participated in the alleged conspiracy and the acts done in pursuance thereof. The testimony on this branch of the case was in the main circumstantial. It was shown that they took an active part in the canvass in the interest of the People's ticket; that some of them were candidates for office on that ticket; that some of them were at different voting-places on election day, armed; that some of them had threatened negroes because of their activity in the canvass; that some of them had threatened the life of some of the Government witnesses; that they were seen together leaving Chapell Hill on the night of the election and going in the direction of Graball; that later at night some of them were seen, together with other persons not identified, and were guided into a short road to Graball; that defendant Kirk left Brenham about 5 o'clock of the evening of election day and rode to Chapell Hill; when next heard of that night he is at Flewellyn about midnight, making inquiry as to how the vote stood; that he called out the presiding election officer and held a brief conversation with him, then rode off, and shortly after the attempt was made to rob the box; that at 12 m. of that day he sent to D. D. Bolton the following telegram from Brenham: "Things here look gloomy; do your work."

Other circumstances tending to identify the defendants were proven, but we do not deem it necessary to here refer to them, but simply state that we believe the facts do show that the defendants on trial participated in the commission of the offenses charged.

The defendants each relied upon an alibi as a defense. None of them testified in their own behalf, but introduced a number of witnesses to establish that defense. In argument counsel for the defense conceded that grave offenses against the law had been shown by the testimony, but contended that the defendants were not the guilty parties. They also contended that the offenses committed were violations of the State and not the Federal statutes. The real issue in the case, however, is simply this: Are the defendants the persons or some of the persons who committed the offenses charged in the bill?

The Government did not undertake to show that these defendants had conspired to rob ballot-boxes, and had robbed ballot-boxes, with the single intent to affect the result of the Congressional election, for the result of their conspiracy and the effect of their acts necessarily affected the Congressional election, regardless of the motive which prompted the conspiracy and directed the acts.

We do not understand the law to be that one can rob a ballot-box in which citizens have cast their ballots for a member of Congress, and destroy the votes cast for such member, and then claim immunity from punishment under the laws of the United States upon the ground that his intent in the robbery and his purpose in such destruction was not to affect the Congressional contest, but to defeat some candidate for constable who had been voted for on the same ballots.

We think the authorities establish the law to be that the Federal statutes were enacted to secure fairness at Congressional elections, and to protect the citizen in the free exercise of his right of suffrage at such an election. We refer to the following adjudications:

Ex parte Yarborough, 110 U. S., 651. Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S., 371–404. United States vs. Jackson, 25 Fed. Rep., 548. United States vs. McBosdy, 29 Fed. Rep., 897.

The jury trying the case found some of the defendants not guilty on the count charging them with the robbery of the Graball box and disagreed upon all other counts in the bill. None of the defendants have been acquitted on any of the conspiracy counts.

The stenographic report of the trial is in the hands of the clerk of the Federal court at Austin. It is very voluminous and in some respects inaccurate.

These cases have received our careful attention and the facts an impartial consideration by us. We have not allowed the Republicans of Washington County to give any political coloring to the prosecution, nor have we permitted our attachment to the Democratic party to sway us from the full performance of our duty as sworn officers of the Government in the prosecution of the defendants. We have given them a quiet, determined, and impartial prosecution, and believe it was demanded by the offenses committed and the facts connecting them with the commission of same.

Regarding the facts in our possession calmly and impartially, we are convinced that they show the commission of grave offenses against the laws of the Federal Government by the indicted parties; and if such offenses are left unprosecuted and the perpetrators unpunished the right of suffrage in this country can have no protection save that which each citizen may find in his own strong arm.

The stability of this Government depends on the virtue of its citizens, and that virtue can only be carried into the Government through the medium of the ballot-box; and if in one community the right of suffrage of a number of citizens is trampled upon by others, who are permitted by organized society to go "unwhipped of justice," then certainly the lawless element in any community is given full license to dominate over the virtuous, and order will soon resolve itself into chaos.

So believing, we feel that it is our duty to prosecute these cases to a final hearing, and if the defendants are acquitted that the responsibility of such acquittal should rest with a jury of their countrymen.

This being our duty, we must either do it and be true to our oaths as officers of the Government, or not do it and be false to our oaths and false to ourselves.

If the Department of Justice wishes these prosecutions dismissed and shall so direct, we shall follow instructions, informing the court of our directions; but if we are not so directed we shall bring these cases to trial, if possible, and give the defendants a fair hearing and a vigorous prosecution.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RUD. KLEBERG,
United States Attorney.
THOS. H. FRANKLIN,
Special Assistant in Washington County Election Cases.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

Let the Senator give his attention to this report when he asserts the falsity and slanderous character of the allegations that wrong and outrage characterized that election.

Let it be remembered upon this subject that Bolton's own father testified that when he reached him after he was shot he "had on a slicker or rain coat, and had a handkerchief knotted around his throat;" and that District Attorney Kleberg says "that the weather was dry and mild and no necessity was shown for the use of such a coat on such a night."

Whether this was "disguise" or not under the circumstances the Senate and the country can judge. I appeal from the Senator to the testimony and to the United States district attorney and his associate.

What stronger corroboration could there be of the negro officers of that poll than this statement made by the Democratic United States attorney (and the special counsel) to his official superior, Attorney-General Garland?

Now, that was not all. This man Kirk, the county judge of that county, at the time a candidate upon that ticket which was called the People's ticket, was on the witness stand here. He was the ringleader in the conspiracy, the representative of the Democracy in that controversy. He testified that along in the afternoon he heard that in the Republican precincts the vote was going strongly against them. The father of this dead man, Bolton, was a candidate upon the ticket, and Judge Kirk, after evading over and over again questions put to him, squirming and prevaricating like a witness who did not dare to tell the truth, admitted that he had sent to Bolton, the elder, a telegram in the afternoon of election day, saying that things looked gloomy.

I asked him repeatedly, "Did you say, 'Things look gloomy; get in your work, or do your work?'" He could remember, he testified, that he sent a telegram saying "Things look gloomy;" but although the telegram was followed by the death of his friend engaged in "getting in the work," which I believe he bade him to do, he could not remember, he testified, whether he used the words, "Get in" or "do your work," or any words of the kind. On the trial in Austin the telegram was produced, and it read, "Things look gloomy; do your work."

Can any man misunderstand that? What was the "work?" The "work" was that which followed in that county. It was the raid upon the ballot-box at Flewellyn; it was the raid upon the ballot-box a little later at Graball, and not a witness, Democrat or Republican, denied that armed men came to the Graball poll-box and demanded that the count be stopped and that the ballots be delivered to them, as I recollect it; it was the Lott's Store affair also. This was the "work," and it was efficiently done.

Another significant fact is that about 5 o'clock on that afternoon Judge Kirk, who was at Brenham, the county seat, 16 or 17 miles away from these polling-places, hired a horse at the livery stable and rode to three, I think, of the polls where these men a little later "got in their work." Thus it will be seen that there was not only one but three or four instances, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] knows, in Washington County where the polls or ballots and returns were interfered with, and they were all colored Republican precincts, of course.

Mr. TELLER. There were four.

Mr. SPOONER. Beyond any possible question there was not an honest election nor a fair count.

How are these allegations, established as they are, sought to be met? By telling the people the number of thousands of miles of railroad they have in Texas, the number of hides, the number of sheep, the capacity of Texas to set the spindles going all over the United States! Is this sufficient?

Mr. President, the rights of citizenship are higher than the interests of trade. Nothing can be dearer than those. We want the trade of the South; we want increased and ever increasing commerce between the sections, but if it is only to be had upon the condition of indifference to outrage upon the rights of citizenship, and violations long continued and boldly avowed of the Constitution, then sir, the price of such trade and commerce is too high!

In a few days the report of the committee upon this case will have been presented. All the testimony will be laid before the Senate. That it has not been done before is no fault of mine. I assisted in taking the testimony, but I was not chairman of the subcommittee and was charged with no duty in connection with preparing or submitting the report.

I stated on another occasion that I did not consider isolated cases of outrage upon citizens chargeable necessarily to the people of an entire State. The first day that the Senator from Texas who sits at my left [Mr. REAGAN] intervened in this Louisiana debate I so asserted. I reassert it now, with this qualification. The people of a State are not responsible for it unless they approve it and adopt it. They are not chargeable with or responsible for outrages perpetrated unless there be there a public sentiment which sustains those who perpetrate them and which exempts those who perpetrate them from punishment. The same is true, of course, as to a county or city. I regret to say that there was too much of this sentiment in the State of Texas, it appears to me, which tolerated if it did not approve these things done in Washington County.

The testimony of ex-Governor Ireland before the committee was that, although he was informed while yet governor of the State of the fact that these three colored men, who had simply been arrested upon suspicion, who had had no trial, no hearing, no chance for their lives, had been taken out and hanged, he offered no reward for the apprehension of the murderers. The testimony showed that no steps were taken by the officials of the county—and the county attorney elected at that election and the county judge were Democrats—up to the time the last evidence was given before our committee to attempt to ferret out the perpetrators of these outrages or to bring them to justice.

When these men were indicted by a grand jury in the United States court and brought to trial charged with these outrages upon the ballot-box, believed by the Democratic officials who prosecuted them to be guilty, and after one jury had disagreed and another acquitted them, as was probably to be expected, they being defended by eminent volunteer counsel, some of the leading Democrats of Washington County raised a fund, as I am informed, and I think there is some testimony before the committee to that purport, to pay the expenses of the defense. Some of them purchased a gold-headed cane for one of the counsel, and they passed resolutions thanking counsel that they had defended these gentry without asking any fee.

It does not seem to me, however it may seem to the Senator from Texas, as if in this instance the public sentiment of Texas was as strong and vigorous as it ought to have been in securing punishment to those who so grievously trampled upon the rights of its citizens.

Now, Mr. President, a few words generally upon this subject and I shall be through with it. For introducing the resolution providing for an investigation into the circumstances attending the death of Joseph Hoffman, with especial reference to ascertaining whether he was killed because of the testimony he had given or was expected to give before a Senate committee, I have been charged by numerous Democratic papers North and South with "flaunting the bloody shirt," with being "narrow" and "sectional," and with being a "South hater."

I care nothing for that. That is now to be expected. I venture to say that whenever any one from this time forth in the Senate of the United States gives heed to any man's petition alleging that he has been outraged in his rights of citizenship in any Southern State at a national election and raises his voice for investigation he will be denounced as narrow-minded and sectional and as a flaunter of the bloody shirt. That will deter no man, however, from the discharge of duty.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] said the other day in substance, "Let us alone; what we want is to be let alone." That was the cry of the South once before. All we want is what we are entitled to have, and that is that every man in the United States who is entitled under the Constitution of the United States to vote and to exercise the rights of American citizenship pertaining to the elective franchise, whether he lives in Texas or in Louisiana or in Wisconsin, shall exercise the right undisturbed and undismayed.

Is that asking too much? Bloody shirt, forsooth! We are not talking about the war. I hear nothing said about the war here. This is currrent; this is something that is happening now, which we were charged to investigate, and which the resolution pending before the Senate provides for investigating. "It is a condition which confronts us."

Shall we be deterred from listening to such voices as Joe Hoffman's because these Senators say "You are preventing the return of fraternal feeling?" For myself I say no, Mr. President. The Republican party has accepted the results of the war. The people of the North have accepted the results of the war. The South piled a mountain of debt upon our people and they are cheerfully paying it, and have been for over a score of years. You never hear a grumble or a whimper about its amount, nor a word about its origin.

They filled the land with the graves of our citizens and friends. We walk quietly among them and strew them with flowers, with sorrowing hearts, from which the bitterness is quite gone. That wrong was long ago forgiven, evidenced by due form of law, representing the sentiment of the Northern people.

The Executive Departments and the foreign service contain a great number of those who served against the Union. We do not like it, in large part because of the methods by which the result has been brought about, and we shall prevent an early recurrence of it if we can. But our protest is a peaceful and a quiet one. In it there is nothing of violence. We all rejoice in a restored Union, in a people living under one Constitution. We only insist that that Constitution shall be everywhere obeyed, and the rights which it guaranties everywhere recognized and observed.

The only men I know of in this country who have not accepted the results of the war are our friends from the South. It is not the people of the North. One of the results of the war, whether a wise one or an unwise one, was that the male negro of proper age should have the right to vote. It was given him by the Constitution. The South has to all intents and purposes deprived him of it. It is useless to attempt to deny it. It is vain in reply to it to talk about the purchase of votes in Rhode Island. The Senators from Rhode Island can take care of that charge when they are present. The vote of the Southern Republican has disappeared. The negro has ceased in the last few years to cast his vote and have it counted. His citizenship, new born and highly prized, is barren of fruitage for him, except of bitterness. Where has that ballot gone? Has the negro become a Democrat? Nobody can pretend it. Has he grown weary of the ballot? Who so bold as to claim that? It is not consistent with the characteristics of the race.

The negro, just brought out from bondage into the light of freedom, placed beside his master in respect of legal rights with the great badge of sovereignty, the ballot, in his hand, told by the Constitution that he had a right to walk beside his old master and overseer up to the polls and deposit his vote as a citizen of the United States, was as proud of it as any human being could be of a kingly crown. Has he grown tired of it, as a child wearies of a toy, and cast it aside? Who believes it? No man who stops to think.

What has become of that ballot? Thirteen or more large volumes printed by the Government, filled with testimony taken during a series of years by direction of Congress, of outrage piled upon outrage, massacre piled upon massacre, fraud upon fraud, explain why it is that the colored vote of the South is gone. "There is little violence now," it is said. "The cases are only sporadic; all is quiet, and peace reigns." Peace!

He makes a solitude, and calls it—peace.

Years of intimidation and fraud and wrong have done their work and accomplished their purpose. How long is this to last? The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]—and I know of no man who has more thoroughly my respect and my admiration for every manly quality—made a speech the other day upon the subject, temperate, dignified, and eloquent; but he who I believe would willingly deny to no man his rights was bound to say, practically—I do not attempt to give his language—that where the negroes are in a majority, and voting would elect their tickets, white or black, the superior race, the white race, will not yield to that result.

That is what we are told, also, by the Senators from Texas and Louisiana. What does it mean in its full significance? This at least: That the Constitution which gives the negro the right to vote is to be nullified, is to go for nothing wherever that vote is such that if cast and counted it would be potential. It means the systematic and avowed continuance of denial, by force where it is necessary, by threats where they will answer, by fraud where that is adequate, of rights given by the Constitution as plainly as the right to trial by jury, or the right to the free and unrestricted worship of God.

I admit it is in some of its aspects a delicate, difficult, and troublous problem. But it is a mistake to suppose that it is a matter of purely local concern which affects simply the people of the South. We of the North have great, almost vital interest in it. Before the war three-fifths only of the negroes entered into the basis of representation. Now, under the new order of things, they are all counted. It was inevitable that the elevation of the negro to the plane of citizenship should bring about a corresponding enlargement in the Southern basis of representation. No man for a moment could suppose that that increase in the basis would ever have been granted except as the natural concomitant of negro suffrage. The Southern States receive, by reason of the change in the basis of representation, born out of the enlarged suffrage, additional representation in the House of Representatives and the electoral college. Without those members the political complexion of the House of Representatives to-day would be different. Without those additional votes in the electoral college the political complexion of the Administration would be different.

To wield the increased power growing out of the enlarged representation, granted solely upon the enlarged suffrage, and to deny the right of suffrage is utterly indefensible from any standpoint, and has relation not simply to the local affairs of the South, but it is a matter of vital consequence to the whole people. Thus it comes about that by reason of systematic denial of constitutional right, by methods which I will not elaborate, for they are familiar to the country, our friends from the South have disproportionate power in the Government, in the Halls of Congress, and in the Electoral College. When the North protests against this inequality it is not a good answer to say that it is a "race issue," and that the white race, whatever comes, will rule. This is simply an assertion of the right of minority rule, and that I charge to be its effect in the Government to-day. We are told that it is to be permanent, at any rate so long as the colored and white Republicans together constitute, where their votes are cast and counted, a majority.

I do not know, sir, how long the people of the North will be willing to tolerate this condition of affairs, but I undertake to say that they will not tolerate it always; that it will bring in time a condition of public sentiment at the North which will solidify the North against the South until this inequality is removed, and that the time will come, however unpopular it may be to-day in some quarters, when one standing in the Senate of the United States, or elsewhere, and protesting against intimidation, fraud, and outrage in the South, which deprives the negro of his vote, and at the same time gives to the South this disproportionate power in the Government, will not be put down in public estimation by denunciation, or by the cry of "bloody shirt," "South hater," or the assertion that it is a matter of purely local concern. I deny that it is a matter of local interest simply whether every man who has a right to vote in Texas for member of Congress is permitted to vote or not. The people of Wisconsin are interested in it. It is not simply a matter of interest to Georgia whether a few people there may elect more members of Congress than the great mass of people in the State from which I come.

This is not simply a matter of justice to the negro; it is a matter of justice to the North; it is a matter of maintaining constitutional equality among the States, and a matter that affects the interests of the whole people, and that goes to the foundation of our system of government. This attempt to extinguish upon the race plea, or any other, the exercise of the right by the colored man or the white Republican, clearly possessed under the Constitution, to vote as he chooses, and to have his vote counted as cast, and returned as counted, is an outrage not simply upon the negro, but it is a crime against the North and against our system of government. If the suffrage be not kept pure and free the blood of our body-politic is poisoned. This condition will bring trouble in the South itself in the not distant future, of a serious kind, not pleasant to contemplate.

Mr. President, this bold proclamation of intention to deny in any section of the country rights conferred by the Constitution is not likely to be of other than deleterious influence in respect for and observance of the law generally. Those who habitually and with impunity disregard, by force and otherwise, rights as sacred as the right to vote are likely to lose respect for other rights and to hold in diminishing reverence the majesty of the law.

Call this partisan speech, if it be agreeable so to do. Appeal, by way of foil to it, to the desire of our great cities for Southern trade. I prophesy that the time will come, and is not far distant, if it be not already here, when this question of constitutional rights, of fair play and justice, so dear to the people of the United States will be deemed of greater worth and higher importance than any question or consideration of trade between the sections or of politics.

I think the assault which we are now endeavoring to meet upon the industries of the United States and the interests of labor, and upon the industrial independence of this country, to be due largely to this disproportionate power exercised by the South in the affairs of this Government. It is this that brings about the singular fact that the great State of Texas, not distinguished especially for its manufactures certainly, though it may be for its hides and some other things, furnishes to the country a chairman of the committee on Ways and Means, and that so many of his confrères upon that potential committee represent States not distinguished at all for great manufacturing interests, or for the dignified and prosperous labor which pervades the North. The singular fact that gives Arkansas a representative upon that committee and leaves New York without one is marked evidence of the undue power exerted by the South in the Government to-day, because of the extinction of the negro vote.

Mr. President, I did not intend or expect, as I stated at the outset, to be drawn into this debate to-day at all. I had not intended when the resolution should be reported from the committee, providing for an investigation into the circumstances attending the death of Joseph Hoffman, to occupy the time of the Senate in further debate upon the Washington County election of 1886, but I have felt called upon, partly by what the Senator from Texas has deemed it proper for him to say, although I think some of his utterances were discourteous and, so far as I am concerned, gratuitous, and partly because of the manner of his speech, to ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments. My observations have been desultory and have taken more time than I intended. I make no apology for it, however, as I know of no subject more entitled to attention.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the facts alleged against Texas are the transactions in Washington and Fort Bend Counties. The Senator from Wisconsin makes no explanation of the Fort Bend County transaction. He bases his entire remarks upon the transactions in Washington County.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not investigated the Fort Bend transaction. I have made no argument in the Senate now or at any other time about the Fort Bend transaction. I have simply confined myself to the subject-matter which was committed to me and to other Senators by the Senate.

Mr. COKE. The Senator has confined himself to the Washington County transaction. I call attention again to the fact that the indictment of the State of Texas by the Republican convention at Fort Worth, which adjourned about three days ago, is confined to transactions alleged to have occurred in Fort Bend and Washington Counties. No allegation of any charge is made as to any other county than those two.

For the purpose of showing that the negroes who were hanged were justifiable, and therefore that it was very much more criminal conduct on the part of the mob who hanged them, the Senator has asserted that they were justifiable in killing Bolton, because he says Bolton went to the polls armed and disguised.

Mr. SPOONER. I assume that the Senator would not willingly misrepresent me.

Mr. COKE. I will not.

Mr. SPOONER. I have never admitted for one moment, because I regard the testimony as clear and overwhelming upon the subject, that the three negroes who were hanged had anything whatever to do with the killing of Bolton any more than the Senator from Texas had. I asserted this, and I assert it again, I believe Bolton was killed, as the district attorney says he was, by Polk Hill, who is in jail under indictment. He has been tried once, I think, and the jury disagreed, and he is to be tried again. I justified on a former occasion the killing of Bolton upon my understanding of the testimony that he went there armed to interrupt the count, and to demand the ballot-box and the tally-list. I justify it now.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, standing here as a Senator of the United States from Texas, I put my assertion as to what that testimony means against the assertion of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I do say that the proof shows conclusively, the weight and bulk and mass of the proof, that Bolton was unarmed; that he was undisguised; that he simply went to the poll as he had a right to do, and was shot down by this negro, Polk Hill, and that other negroes who were there, and three of whom were hung, were accessories to the crime.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COKE. I did not interrupt the Senator. I will yield to him this time, but not again.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not mean to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas yields.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says he puts his statement of the testimony against mine. That of course he has a right to do, and that of course I expected him to do and I am willing he should do. I should like to ask him what he has to say about the testimony of Bolton's father, referred to in the district attorney's communication, and also about the statement of the district attorney and his assistant?

Mr. COKE. I was going to refer to that. With regard to the statement of Bolton's father that young Bolton had a handkerchief tied around his neck, that he had a slicker on, anybody who could manufacture those facts into a circumstance of suspicion against Bolton is certainly of an exceedingly suspicious nature.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I submit the Senator ought to secure the removal of that district attorney as incompetent.

Mr. COKE. The proof is here in this record that the night was cold enough for an overcoat. Two witnesses testified to that. One of them testified that he carried the supper of one of the men who was at the polls to him, and was told to bring his overcoat with him. Another witness swears that when the shooting occurred he was lying on an overcoat asleep.

Nothing is more common in the South than for one of these slickers, as they are called—they are wet-weather overcoats, that is all—to be worn by people. There is nothing more common; and as for Bolton having a handkerchief tied around his neck, it is a very common habit among laboring people to attire themselves in that way. Is it suspicious that a man should have a handkerchief tied around his neck? Is it suspicious that he should have an overcoat on when others found it cold enough for an overcoat that same night? Yet those two facts are adverted to by the Senator from Wisconsin as evidence that Bolton was there armed and disguised.

I assert the fact to be—and because it has to rest on the assertion of either the Senator from Wisconsin or myself is certainly not my fault, because he belongs to the committee which has charge of the testimony, and he should have it on every Senator's desk—I assert the fact to be that the testimony proves conclusively that Bolton was murdered by a negro, and that the negroes hung were most probably accessories to the fact before and after. I do not justify the taking out and hanging of these negroes in Brenham. It ought not to have been done; but it was done by a mob who were moved to do it, not because of any political reason, not to subserve any political purpose, but because Bolton had been murdered in cold blood by this negro, Polk Hill, and the others were along with him.

I say that is the fact. I have here a volume of the testimony, one that I procured from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], who is a member of the committee, and it is through his grace alone that I have any of the testimony. I have it here before me, and I shall ask, unless the Senator from Wisconsin will agree that it shall be inserted in my remarks, that the proceedings of the coroner's inquest in regard to the killing of Mr. Bolton be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CORONER'S INQUEST IN REGARD TO THE KILLING OF W. D. BOULTON.

COUNTY OF WASHINGTON, State of Texas:

An inquest taken the 3d day of November, A. D. 1886, at R. T. Flewellen's residence in said county of Washington, before J. A. Vernon, justice of peace of said county, upon the view of the dead body of W. D. Boulton, by William Ford, J. T. Lots, M. A. McCalip, S. H. Hatfield, John Alexander, S. T. Aubrey, good and lawful jurors of said county, who, being in due form sworn, say that the said W. D. Boulton came to his death at about 11 o'clock p. m. by a shotgun wound in the hands of Poke Hill, and further believe that Chad Felder, William Davis, John Glass, Felix Kinlow, Stewart Jones, and Ande Hays, and Stephen Jackson were accessories to the killing of deceased; and further believe that deceased came to his death by the advice of Ed. Lockett.

J. A. VERNON,
J. P. Precinct No. 1, Washington County, Texas.
W. G. FORD.
S. T. AUBREY.
H. H. HATFIELD.
J. T. LOTT.
J. R. ALEXANDER.
M. A. McCALIP.

[No. 1.—Testimony of William Davis, duly sworn.]

I, William Davis, was sitting near the house of R. T. Flewellen, by a tree, and heard two reports of a shotgun and a noise in the house. Going up to the house, I saw Poke Hill coming out of the door of said house, saying, "I have killed two men and my gun is empty; Davis, give me your gun." There was here five men with shotguns, with the names of John Glass, Felix Kenlow, Poke Hill, Stewart Jones, Ande Hays, all colored men. Stephen Jackson told us, "if we want a gun to go and get mine." This happened on the 2d day of November, 1886.

WM. (his x mark) DAVIS.

[No. 2.—Testimony of Alfred Jones, sworn.]

Mr. Ed. Lockett told me, "It is our duty to guard this box at R. T. Flewellen's place," and through the advice of Mr. Ed Lockett, John Glass, Ande Hays, Felix Kenlow, Poke Hill, and William Davis came here with shotguns. I did not hear of any threats to intimidate any person on the ground on the 2d day of November, 1880.

ALFRED (his x mark) JONES.

[No. 3.—Testimony of A. H. Rogers, duly sworn.]

The first I know of it was at about 11 o'clock p. m., while I was lying on my bed in the room where the election was held. To my best recollection I saw Poke Hill, Ande Hays, and Felix Kenlow and Stewart Jones in the said room, but I did not see any guns in the room. I saw Poke Hill going out several times prior to the shooting, but never after the shooting, on the 2d day of November, 1886.

A. H. ROGERS.

[No. 4.—Testimony of John Glass, duly sworn.]

I saw William Davis, Felix Kenlow, Poke Hill, Stewart Jones, Ande Hays with shotguns on the place of R. T. Flewellen's. The report of the shotgun woke me up, and I did not see anybody after the shooting, which happened about 11 o'clock p. m. on the 2d day of November, 1886.

JOHN (his x mark) GLASS.

[No. 5.—Testimony of Ande Hays, duly sworn.]

I was in the room where the election was held, my gun was sitting on the gallery of the house; when the door south in room opened deceased, after being invited to come in, was shot directly after Poke Hill went out of the north door, his gun being out on the gallery; deceased came in quietly and said nothing about the box and was not disguised. The shooting took place on the 2d day of November, 1886. There was in the room Chad Felder, Felix Kenlow, Poke Hill, and Stewart Jones; I believe that Poke Hill is the man who done the shooting. Gunshot was fired in the north door, deceased killed in the south door. I am satisfied that Poke Hill was the man, as he was standing in the door.

ANDE (his x mark) HAYS.

[No. 6.—Testimony of Dick Robertson, duly sworn.]

I was the presiding officer of the ballot-box on the R. T. Flewellen place on the 2d day of November, 1886. We were counting the votes when the shooting took place. Some one knocked on the door, and after being asked to come in, deceased was let in. The same time the door opened, Poke Hill, who was sitting in the room, got up and went to the opposite door, and a shotgun was fired by a gingercake-colored person. I feel satisfied that a darkey of the description of Poke Hill did the shooting, unless somebody was standing behind the door; he had fully time to pick up a shotgun. The election was going on quietly and I deemed it not necessary to have any guards whatever on the ground. At the time of the shooting there were in the room present Lewis Pennington, Chad Felder, Tom Jones, Felix Kenlaw, and Ande Hays.

J. R. ROBERTSON.

[No. 7.—Testimony of William Cawse.]

I was one of the clerks of election held on the place of R. T. Flewellen. There was in the room at the time of the shooting Felix Kenlaw, Ande Hays, Lewis Pennington, Chad Felder. The same time that the south door opened, Poke Hill left his seat and ran to the north door and opened the same door, and directly a shot was fired and deceased fell to the floor. The election was quiet, and it was not necessary to have any guards.

WM. CAWSE.

[No. 8.—Testimony of Felix Kenlaw, duly sworn.]

I was sitting in the room looking on. Poke Hill was sitting near me, and as soon as somebody knocked on the door Poke Hill, who got up and ran to the opposite door, picked up his shotgun, which was out on the gallery, I saw him, cocked the gun and shot the deceased, and I knew it was Poke Hill who did the shooting. He told me himself that he had killed a man, and laughed when he said it. I was lying under the bed and could see plainly. There was present in the room Ande Hays, Stewart Jones, William Cawse, Poke Hill, and the officers of the election. The shooting took place about 11 or 12 o'clock p. m., in the room of the house of R. T. Flewellen. The election was quiet and orderly.

FELIX (his x mark) KENLAW.

[No. 9.—Testimony of Lewis Pennington, duly sworn.]

I was one of the judges of the election held on the 2d day of November, 1886. The election was going on quietly and orderly. I was busy counting votes when somebody knocked on the door; the same time Poke Hill got up from his seat and ran to the door. I do not know who did the shooting, which took place about 11 o'clock p. m. Outside the officers of the election, there were present in the room Chad Felder, Ande Hays, Felix Kenlaw, and Poke Hill went out the door.

LEWIS (his x mark) PENNINGTON.

[No. 10—Testimony of Tom Jones, duly sworn.]

I was one of the clerks of the election, sitting at the table with my back toward the south door. I saw Poke Hill go to the north door before the south door opened. As soon as the door opened I turned my face, and saw a white man coming in the door with uplifted hands holding a pistol, and as soon as I saw the person I went out of the same door. I know that Poke Hill had a gun on the ground. There was present outside of the officers Chad Felder, Ande Hays, Poke Hill. The shooting took place on the 2d day of November, 1886, in the house of R. T. Flewellen.

T. M. JONES.

[Statement of Lewis Pennington, being re-examined.]

I did not see anybody coming in the door disguised with a pistol in hand. I was sitting close to the fire-place in plain view of the two doors.

LEWIS (his x mark) PENNINGTON.

[No. 11.—Testimony of Ephraim Jones, duly sworn.]

I was taking supper to Jones and along with it a shotgun to guard the polls; then I went out and went to sleep on John Glass's overcoat and I never woke up till I heard two reports of a shotgun. I ran off around the house and made for home. There had shotguns in possession, William Davis, Felix Kenlaw, Poke Hill, Andy Hays, for the protection of the box under the advice of Chad Felder. The election was going on quietly. The shooting was done at about 11 o'clock p. m., in the house of R. T. Flewellen, on the 2d day of November, 1886.

EPHRAIM JONES.

[No. 12.—Testimony of Stephen Jackson, duly sworn.]

I was on the election ground on the 2d day of November, 1888, and Alfred Jones and Poke Hill asked me for a pistol, but I declined it, but let Poke Hill have my shotgun, loaded, to keep the polls guarded. My gun was returned to me, both barrels empty, by Sallie Jones, wife of Oliver Jones.

EPHRAIM (his x mark) JONES.

This is to certify that this is a true and correct statement of the testimony given.

P. KÜHNEL, Recorder.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Washington:

I, C. F. Herbst, clerk of the district court of Washington County, Texas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original inquest papers in case of W. D. Bolton, deceased, now on file in said court.

Given under my hand and the seal of said court, at office in Brenham, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] C. F. HERBST, Clerk.

Mr. COKE. If Bolton was murdered, as I honestly believe he was, as I believe the testimony shows he was, while it does not justify these men in taking these negroes out of jail and hanging them, it does remove the deed from the category in which the Senator from Wisconsin has placed it, that of being a cold-blooded, premeditated murder for a political cause. Politics had nothing to do with it. These white men were incited by the brutal murder of Bolton, and they avenged him in this way. Polk Hill, the man who pulled the trigger and fired the gun that killed Bolton, is alive now. He was taken up to the Milam County jail. The three men who were hanged, unfortunately were brought back to Brenham to be tried, and the authorities were mistaken in supposing that the feeling against them had subsided. That is the statement of that transaction.

Here is the platform of the Republican convention which met at Fort Worth three or four days ago, which charges the Fort Bend and the Washington County transactions as all the outrages they have to complain of in Texas, and I have stated the history of these, so that the Senate can see for itself whether they were Democratic outrages.

The fact is patent, it stands out in bold relief, that no Republican was killed until Hoffman was killed, and that with Hoffman was also killed the leading Democrat of Washington County.

No Republican was killed in Fort Bend County, but one Democrat was killed and another was attempted to be killed. Bolton was a white man and a Democrat, and he was murdered in Washington County. Hoffman was running on a ticket that the Democrats were friendly to, and he was sitting with Holt, the leading Democrat in the county, and was killed with Holt by the same shot. That is the whole of it.

With reference to the testimony of the district attorney and the counsel employed by the State, I know both of them well; they are both good men, both honest men, both honorable men; they are like all other lawyers, though. They have identified themselves with this case, and although they had two trials, presided over by a Republican judge and the law charged as strongly as it was possible to charge it against the prisoners, the theory of these gentlemen was reversed; it was denied in the verdict of the jury who acquitted the prisoners. They are not impartial witnesses; they are witnesses whose judgment can not be relied upon, because they have been heated up in the prosecution of the case.

The Senator from Wisconsin makes divers and various charges against the people of the South, and especially against the people of Texas and the people of Washington County upon testimony which he does not exhibit here, upon private letters which he doubtless is not at liberty to exhibit.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. What I have said about this matter this afternoon was in reply to a review by the Senator from Texas of the testimony not before the Senate. I did not inaugurate it. I want to say in regard to the letter which the Senator says I am not at liberty to exhibit, that I would exhibit it cheerfully if it were not for the fact that I fear it would cost the writer his life, and the writer fears it also.

Mr. COKE. That is a sample of the way in which the people of my section of country are talked about. I have a letter in which the Senator's name is called in connection with the eviction in the State of Iowa of families of poor helpless women and children, evictions that parallel in atrocity and circumstances of pathos any that have ever occurred in Ireland.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. COKE. I decline to be interrupted in the middle of a sentence. I say the Senator's name is mentioned in that letter, but I do not condemn the Senator upon it. I do not condemn the people of Iowa upon it, because men, women, and children were ejected from sections and quarter-sections and subdivisions of land at the suit of a great railroad corporation, land that they had occupied some of them for forty years, so this informant tells me, some of them for twenty years, and he gives an instance of a poor woman who saw everything she had in the world thrown into the road and her home of many years taken from her. She became insane, so this informant states, and now is in a lunatic asylum. He gives the facts.

I do not use such a letter for the purpose of making allegations against the people of Iowa or against the Senator from Wisconsin. I would not do it. He has not hesitated to brand the people whom I have the honor to represent in a way that in my judgment would justify me in using this letter for all it is worth.

There is one thing, Mr. President, the people of the South have never done. They have never warred on women and children. They have never taken at the behest of railroad corporations the homes from women and children and left them in the public road to starve and freeze or take care of themselves. If the Senator desires to make an issue, let him make it; I will meet him. He will find that there are blows to receive as well as to give. The slanders that have been hurled at the people I represent shall not go unanswered, for they are slanders, come from what source they may.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, we started in to debate the Texas outrages. Very much to my surprise, the result is a debate by the Senator from Texas upon what I suppose may be deemed the Spooner outrages. I do not know to what the Senator from Texas alludes. I want to say, however, in regard to his speech, or that portion of it personal to myself, two things: In the first place, it will not divert the attention of the people of the United States from the outrages perpetrated in Washington County, Texas, upon the ballot. The people will be too discriminating not to see that it is a pettifogging effort to divert the attention of the jury from the trial of the case to something which does not relate to the case.

In the next place I want to say—and I shall endeavor to keep myself entirely within parliamentary bounds, and if I shall succeed in doing that I will succeed where the Senator from Texas, with his greater age and his greater experience, has signally failed several times to-day—that the man outside of this Chamber who states that as counsel or as owner, directly or indirectly, in any way whatever, I was the instrument of turning any man or woman in Iowa or out of Iowa from his or her land or from his or her cabin, whether a quarter-section or a quarter of an acre, is a liar. I say that of any man who makes that charge outside of the Senate.

I suppose the Senator refers to the fact that after I became a member of the Senate I argued a cause in the Supreme Court by printed brief between the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company on the one hand and the Sioux City and St. Paul Railway Company on the other. I was employed to argue that cause before I was elected to the Senate or before I ever thought of being a candidate for the Senate. It was not a controversy in which any individual was interested. It was not a controversy in which the United States was interested. It was a controversy simply between two railway corporations as to which was entitled to overlapping lands. I discharged that duty. That ended my connection with that client, and I have never had from that day to this any professional connection with it or any knowledge of its litigation.

Mr. COKE. I desire to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator if it was not charged—I do not say that the Senator was counsel, I say that his name was mentioned in this letter——

Mr. SPOONER. In what?

Mr. COKE. I say the Senator's name was mentioned in the letter to which I have referred, and I ask the Senator if there was not a charge made in the State of Iowa that there was collusion between the two railroad companies, and that this collusion excluded the consideration of questions that it was believed would redound to the interest of settlers on the land? I ask if that charge was not made?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know anything about what charge was made in the State of Iowa, and I do not know what charge was made in the letter to which the Senator refers. The Senator from Texas is at liberty to use any letter he has in his possession referring to me. I argued that cause in the Supreme Court of the United States and that ended my connection with the business. What has been done since in the way of evictions I know nothing whatever about.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator if there were not charges of collusion between the counsel in the case which excluded questions in which the settlers were interested, and if a member of Congress from Iowa did not telegraph to Governor Larrabee to send the attorney-general of that State here to intervene and protect the rights of settlers against the collusion?

Mr. SPOONER. I know nothing about that. I know that a day or two after that cause was argued in the Supreme Court of the United States a falsehood and a slander appeared about my connection with it in relation to my discharge of duty in the Senate. In one of the newspapers published in the city of New York it was charged that I offered on the floor of the Senate and advocated an amendment for a client whom a day or two afterwards I represented in the Supreme Court of the United States. That charge was utterly false. I offered an amendment in the Senate under circumstances which rendered it necessary for me to do it for my opponent in that cause, for a railroad company in whose service I had never been a moment in my life, and I voted against my client and for a bill which the then Senator from Minnesota, Mr. McMillan, representing that interest, fought to the utmost of his ability. Beyond that charge which was made in the newspaper, which was false and unjust in itself, and which was answered——

Mr. COKE. I know nothing about that charge.

Mr. SPOONER. Beyond that I know nothing about the matter to which the Senator refers. If anybody has been evicted in the State of Iowa, I suppose it has been in proceedings in the courts. I know nothing whatever about any such matter. I never had any connection whatever with it.

While I have not been at all personal to the Senator from Texas, my relations with him have been entirely pleasant. I have simply attempted to do my duty in discussing questions which were involved in an investigation made by me in conjunction with other Senators under an order of the Senate; and while I regard his attempt in defense of the State of Texas as of a character to draw me personally into disrepute in the Senate or in the country, as of a character which outside of the Senate I would denominate differently from what I would do here, I want to say to the Senator that he in part, as I have been informed—I will not say it——

Mr. COKE. Say it.

Mr. SPOONER. I have discussed this case upon its merits.

Mr. COKE. Say it.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall not go into personalities of the sort in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, October 1, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 27, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. A. PRICE, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments House bills of the following titles; asked a conference with the House on said bills and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. DAWES, Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, and Mr. STOCKBRIDGE:

A bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;
A bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and
A bill (H. R. 7843) granting to Citrous Water Company right of way across Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for prior years, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

ISAIAH FULLER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Attorney-General, recommending the appropriation of $301.50 in favor of Isaiah Fuller; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ACCOUNTS OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Attorney-General, asking an appropriation to pay certain accounts of United States attorneys; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RE-ENTRY OF HOMESTEADS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to consider that bill now. This measure passed the House substantially in the general bill, and I hope consent will be given to take up the Senate bill and pass it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, to avoid the consumption of time, I ask the gentleman to allow that bill to remain on the table until to-morrow morning, as I wish to look at it in the mean time.

Mr. McRAE. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the bill will be held for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MONUMENT AT SARATOGA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill 3460, appropriating $10,000 for the completion of a monument to commemorate the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOOTHMAN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. OWEN, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PENINGTON, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. FUNSTON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ENLOE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOGG, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BERRY, for this day, on account of private business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1591) granting an increase of pension to Madison M. Meredith;

A bill (S. 1101) granting a pension to Rachel A. Sinkinson;

A bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Gougan;

A bill (S. 145) for the relief of Edward Braden and Job W. Angus;

A bill (S. 1500) granting a pension to Margaret M. Miller;

A bill (S. 1044) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state and settle the account of James M. Wilbur with the United States, and to pay said Wilbur such sum of money as may be found due him thereon;

A bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased;

A bill (S. 1668) for the relief of A. M. Woodruff;

A bill (S. 3471) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River, and its tributaries, by the Louisville Southern Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 1958) granting an increase of pension to Eleanor B. Goodfellow;

A bill (S. 2711) restoring Phebe McLaughlin to the pension-roll;

A bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross;

A bill (S. 2836) granting a pension to William E. Taylor;

A bill (S. 3276) granting restoration of pension to Sarah A. Woodbridge;

A bill (S. 3125) restoring the right of pre-emption to Alfonzo Roberts;

A bill (S. 320) for the relief of John D. Adams;

A bill (S. 2887) granting a pension to George H. Johnson;

A bill (S. 2838) granting an increase of pension to Betsy A. Mower;

A bill (S. 2675) granting an increase of pension to Lieut. James R. Durham;

A bill (S. 2411) for the relief of C. A. Williams and others;

A bill (S. 2346) granting increase of pension to Jennie Hart Mullany; and

A bill (S. 937) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, as a privileged question I call up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The report was read yesterday and has been printed. And on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to know whether the report is subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. Conference reports are not subject to amendment.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONUMENT AT TRENTON, N. J.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (S. 599) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, and appropriating $30,000, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read at length for information.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has demanded the regular order, which is the call of committees for reports, and that cuts off all requests for unanimous consent, unless the demand for the regular order be withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the committees and that members having reports be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. As the regular order has been demanded, is it in order to dispense with the call of the committees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is the custom when the regular order is demanded to proceed with it, and the regular order now is the call of committees for reports. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks to dispense with that, and that gentlemen may file their reports with the Clerk.

The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the regular order. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RELIEF OF GAUGERS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 11397) for the relief of certain gaugers and other internal-revenue employés who have been assigned to duty and have rendered service before the date of their qualification; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills commences at nineteen minutes past 12 o'clock.

BONDS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Military Committee, I believe, would have the right to complete the consideration of bills reported yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8873) in relation to bonds of disbursing officers and to monthly payments of the Army, with amendments by the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will state that I am authorized by the committee to request non-concurrence in the Senate amendment and ask a conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is not an important one, simply a matter of detail.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised from the Clerk's desk that this bill is in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Military Affairs has authorized a report.

The SPEAKER. It can only be considered by unanimous consent. The rule of the House is that this hour is set apart for the consideration of bills reported on a previous day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I ask to withdraw the bill and surrender the hour. I believe it is not in order to substitute another bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I withdraw the bill.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call up House bill No. 4930, relating to the railway mail service, and, for the purpose of saving time, I move that the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill indicated by the gentleman from Georgia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General may appoint and assign to duty one general superintendent to superintend the railway mail service, who shall be paid a salary of —— dollars a year; one assistant general superintendent of railway mail service, who shall be paid a salary of $3,500 a year; eleven division superintendents of railway mail service, who shall each be paid a salary of $2,500 a year; one chief clerk of railway mail service, to be employed in the Post-Office Department, who shall be paid $2,000 a year; and as many chief clerks of railway mail service as may be necessary, who shall each receive a salary of $1,500 a year. The general and assistant general superintendent and division superintendents shall also be paid their necessary and actual expenses while traveling on the business of the Department; and chief clerks shall be paid the like expenses, not to exceed $4 per day to each, but the allowance for traveling expenses to any clerk shall not exceed $300 in any fiscal year. The salaries and expenses for such superintendents and clerks shall be paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of the mail on railways.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads were read, as follows:

In line 5, before the word "dollars," insert the words "four thousand."

In line 7, after the word "thousand," strike out the words "five hundred."

In lines 8, 9, and 10 strike out the words "eleven division superintendents of railway mail service, who shall each be paid a salary of $2,500 a year."

In line 19 strike out "four" and insert "three."

In lines 19, 20, and 21 strike out the words "but the allowance for traveling expenses to any clerk shall not exceed $300 in any fiscal year."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, there is one branch of the public service whose growth, with the consequent expenditure, is cause, not of complaint, but of congratulation to the whole country. I beg the attention of the committee for a few moments to a statement illustrating this growth. I have here a paper prepared officially by the Post-Office Department making a comparison of this service on the 30th day of June, 1887, with the same service on the 30th day of June, 1879, and I ask attention to the figures.

The number of miles of railroad over which the mails were carried in 1879 was 79,000. On June 30, 1887, the mileage was 131,000. The annual transportation of mails by the railroads in 1879 was 93,000 miles. In 1887 it was 116,000 miles. The miles of service by railway post-office lines in 1879 was 52,000. In 1887 it was 107,000. The number of postal clerks employed in 1879 was 2,609. The number employed on June 30, 1887, was 4,851. The number of pieces of mail-matter handled by railway postal clerks in 1879 was 2,659,000. In 1887 the number was 5,851,000. In other words, the amount of mail-matter handled in this branch of the service in 1887 was twice and a half as great as the amount handled nine years ago.

The expenditures nine years ago were about $33,000,000. To-day they amount to about $61,000,000.

We have this enormous service on our hands. The interest in it is as wide as the country. It touches all our people. It affects all their business relations. The importance of the correct and efficient handling of these mails and the proper management of this fund is of a magnitude scarcely to be overestimated.

This work can not be accomplished without the Government being able to command for positions requiring large intelligence and judgment suitable talent and capacity, and this can only be done by its being able to pay proper compensation. This bill proposes an increase of only $23,000 altogether over the present rates of compensation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], referring the other day to the increased cost of the postal service, failed to do justice to this side of the House in respect to that subject, and especially in regard to one item. In the matter of railway mail transportation, the rate of compensation was reduced 10 per cent. by the Forty-fourth Congress, under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. In the Forty-fifth Congress (or the Forty-sixth, I am not certain which at this moment) I had charge of the bill, and then the compensation was reduced by the amount of 5 per cent., making the entire reduction in the rate of compensation for railway mail service 15 per cent. from the former rates. Taking the total compensation now paid, $17,000,000, it is easy for gentlemen to see that a very large saving has been effected annually under the operation of those laws.

This bill proposes to increase the salary of the general superintendent by the amount of $500. It fixes the salary of an assistant general superintendent at $3,000. It proposes an increase of $600 in the salary of the chief clerk of the railway mail service. It increases the salaries of fifty-four chief clerks $100 each, making $5,400, and it makes an allowance for the traveling expenses of these clerks not exceeding $13,500. These items make a total annual increase of expenditure of about $23,000.

In regard to the proposed increase of salary of the general superintendent, as a matter of course I have no personal knowledge of what salary is sufficient to secure the services of a proper person to discharge the very important duties of that office; but the necessity for this increase has been urged upon the committee time and again in the last Congress and also in this Congress. During the last Congress I know that the Postmaster-General found great difficulty in procuring a proper superintendent, and I know that his success in that respect was due entirely to his personal relations with the gentleman appointed. I know, further, that the superintendent was constantly endeavoring to get away, and that, on the change of administration, notwithstanding urgent solicitations, he found that his private business necessitated his leaving the Department, and continued persistent efforts throughout several months to get relieved from the responsibilities of the office. And I know that the same thing is true of the present superintendent, and that his employment is only temporary. I know, also, the great importance of the office, and I know that the Postmaster-General has been and is exceedingly, keenly, anxious to obtain the highest talent for the head of this enormous service.

That item of increase amounts to only $500. More was recommended, but the committee did not see fit to put it in the bill.

I wish now to call the attention of the House to the salary of assistant superintendent. It seems like a new office, but many years ago, during the Forty-fifth Congress, as the law then stood there were two general superintendents. Congress abolished one of the offices, leaving one remaining. Under the change of law the Postmaster-General detailed a post-office inspector to do the work of assistant general superintendent. His salary was $1,600. His per diem was $5 a day. It was really more than the salary proposed by this bill. It continued up to the administration of the Post-Office Department by Mr. Vilas, who declined to assign an officer to the service. So then within three or four years we have been paying more than the sum indicated for this purpose.

The seeming increase of expenditure does not practically exist. It is better to do directly what you desire to do. Instead of detailing an inspector paid out of another fund and put into this place without law, it is better to understand what the service requires and designate the officer for that purpose.

The importance of this office, sir, is scarcely to be overstated. It does happen oftentimes that the general superintendent of the railway mail service is necessarily taken away from here. It is not long since when the mails were obstructed in the great Northwest, when trains ceased to run by reason of certain strikes, and the Postmaster-General felt it to be his duty to send the best officer there. The result was, by excellent management of this officer the United States mails were carried, although freight and passenger transportation entirely ceased. So we have now in the State of Mississippi almost a suspension of mail carriage. Only two or three days ago, from Cairo to Mobile, no trains were permitted to run through that State. When a train was started from Cairo to New Orleans, it was doubtful whether it would be allowed to run through. Such a situation required the best talent the Government had. The general superintendent withdrawn from this great service, shall we leave it to a clerk? It seems to me a statement of the fact is demonstration of the necessity.

The next item is as to the increase in the salary of the chief clerk of the Post-Office Department. This amounts to the sum of $600. The present and former Postmasters-General have recommended and urged it to be necessary with a view to getting proper talent. It is a small amount and one not to quibble over.

There is an increase in the salary of fifty-four clerks. Postal clerks are graded from $900 to $1,400 in the matter of salary. This item does not relate to those on trains distributing mails generally. By virtue of law there is detailed at headquarters out for different divisions and subdivisions sometimes a chief clerk, whose business it is to look out in reference to the matter of handling the mails, to examine clerks to see whether their conduct is correct, and whether their transaction of the business assigned to them is properly done, and to see that schemes of distribution are changed as new offices and routes are created. It so happens that it is made the duty of these clerks to do this thing with the same salary of the higher class of clerks on the trains, but there is no provision for their expenses. The expense every day traveled is taken out of this salary, and in many places if their full duty is done their expenses nearly absorb their salaries. Is it not clear therefore to this House that such a condition of things ought not to be allowed? It results necessarily in a strong inclination on the part of the clerk to remain at his office with a view of saving this expense. This is not deemed advisable.

There is an increase of $100 of actual salary. Clerks on the trains of the highest class are paid $1,400. This proposes as to fifty-four clerks of the higher class they shall have an increase of $100 each, making $1,500 instead of $1,400, and their traveling expenses.

This is the substance of this matter, amounting only to the sum of $23,000. I have brought it forward because the Department has deemed it of importance to the service, and that service belongs equally to all parts and classes of the country. There are none of us who are not directly interested in it, and I think none but will assent to the proposition that if this service is as large as indicated by the official report there should be no possibility of damages coming to it by refusing a small increase to employés. Gentlemen will observe, in the vast body of employés clamoring from every class of the service for increase of salary, the committee have brought to your attention no bill inviting you to larger expenditure.

Mr. KERR. I would like to ask the gentleman if the increased office rent allowed to postmasters is not really with a view to increase salaries?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is true; and it has been recommended by every Postmaster-General of whom I have any knowledge, belonging to all parties, for many years past; and has been kept off the bills by reason of points of order. It belongs to no administration, and so far as I am concerned I am quite content to admit that there was a purpose in the increase of salaries to remedy certain inequalities as far as practicable. If there was an error in it I am willing to assume whatever share of responsibility comes to me and to my side of the House. I am willing to assume any responsibility looking to the betterment of the service without reference to party views which may be connected with it.

Mr. KERR. Let me ask the gentleman if the increase will not require larger estimates for the next year?

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, we have provided already four hundred and odd thousand dollars for this current fiscal year. It has been provided already, and by unanimous consent of the House. Not a single gentleman objecting on either side, the legislation was put into the bill authorizing it; so I think the country can assume that it meets the approval of all parties.

Mr. KERR. When was that unanimous consent given?

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, sir, I can not recollect exactly the date. I recollect that it was done, and by reason of it legislation took place by which the bill passed the House and finally became a law. The Journal will disclose the exact date, if my friend shall have occasion to ascertain hereafter.

Mr. KERR. I ask if it was not early in the session, when few persons had their attention addressed to the subject or thought of it at all?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know at what stage people began to think. The attention of the country was called to it by Republican and Democratic Postmasters-General for years past.

If no gentlemen desire further to be heard, I will move that the committee now rise.

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to be heard.

Mr. BLOUNT. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SOWDEN. I propose to rise in my own right in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the general debate be limited on this bill, if I have the floor for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. Unless consent is given I shall move that the committee rise to limit debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman indicate any time?

Mr. SOWDEN. I propose to claim the time to which I am entitled under the rules of the House. I rise in opposition in my own right.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4930, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume consideration of the bill H. R. 4930; and pending that I move that all general debate on the same be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can the time be limited? Is not a member entitled to one hour under the rules of the House when he rises in opposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules of the House, after general debate has been entered upon it is in the power of the House at any time to limit it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope it will not be limited.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to debating the bill, but there are but two hours within which it can possibly be considered. If the gentleman desires to resort to any and every method to defeat the bill of course he can do so. I will not be responsible.

Mr. SOWDEN. I only want but a short time myself; but I believe that others want to be heard.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to suggest that there are several gentlemen on this side who would like about five minutes each, and fifteen minutes would seem scarcely long enough.

Mr. SOWDEN. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Georgia that personally I do not care to occupy more than from three to five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman be content with ten minutes?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly, although I may not occupy that much time.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think fifteen minutes will be enough on this side.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I will ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to twenty-five minutes after we go into Committee of the Whole; and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not desire so much as ten minutes I will reserve what he does not use for myself. I move, therefore, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, pending that, that all general debate on the bill be closed in twenty-five minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask unanimous consent now, if it may be done, that the hour be extended until this bill is finished. To-morrow will be Friday.

Mr. DINGLEY. We may as well do that, as there is no other business to-day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope there will be no objection to the request.

Mr. HOLMAN. Until the gentleman having charge of the sundry civil bill returns——

Mr. BLOUNT. That has been adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the deficiency bill. For the moment I desire to interpose an objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that I would have no objection, if it would suit his wishes, that the committee shall rise at any time during the consideration of this bill to enter upon the business he suggests.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the agreement will not be made at present.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman objects?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do object to extending the hour for the present.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I would suggest, if it be agreeable to gentlemen on the otherside of the House, that general debate be closed now, and they will be entitled to five minutes' debate under the rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. That would be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that that be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By a vote of the House the debate has been limited to twenty-five minutes. That vote will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the debate was limited to twenty-five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be closed, and that we proceed in committee to discuss the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think every gentleman who desires to speak upon a bill of this importance should have the opportunity. There ought to be reasonable time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that when the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill all general debate be limited to five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

Mr. SOWDEN. I regret that my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] exhibits so much anxiety to press this bill to a vote. It seems to me unfortunate, not only on his part, but on the part of the committee having this bill in charge that its passage should be so earnestly urged at this time, particularly since it would increase the present number of Federal offices and add considerably to the salaries of the officers already employed in this branch of the public service.

It proposes to increase the annual expenditures in the railway mail service $23,000. It increases the salary of the general superintendent $500 per annum. It seems to me that we can add nothing to the fitness and capacity of this very worthy officer by increasing his salary. So far as I know, he is thoroughly competent, and discharges the duties of his office in a most satisfactory manner, and is well paid for his services. There are undoubtedly many good and competent persons who would be glad to have his place at the present salary. If it were contended that in adding to his salary $500 annually we would correspondingly add to his competency and fitness, there might be some excuse for the proposed bill and the contention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. Unless he can satisfy this House that such is the fact I for one shall certainly vote against it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me——

Mr. SOWDEN. No; I have only five minutes. This bill also provides for the creation of a new office, namely, an assistant general superintendent of the railway mail service, who is to receive an annual salary of $3,000. The efficiency of this particular branch of the public service has never been questioned, and why the creation of this new office, with this additional expenditure of the public money, I am unable to comprehend, and would be pleased to have the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] explain it. It is certainly a departure from the obligation of this Administration to the tax-payers of the country. It is pledged to an honest and most frugal administration of the Federal Government.

For more than twenty-five years the party represented by this side of the House denounced the Republican party for keeping in office a large number of unnecessary office-holders at the expense of the people, and promised to correct this evil in the event of their accession to power by abolishing all unnecessary offices and the dismissal of all needless officials. In the face of this obligation we are now asked to do exactly the opposite in the pending measure.

It is also proposed to increase the salary of the chief clerk of this Department $600 per annum. What salary does this officer receive now? Is it not ample? Is there any complaint that it is too low? Are there not hundreds who would be glad to have it at the salary he now receives? Is the service to be correspondingly benefited by the proposed increase of his salary? If not, why this proposition and whence the necessity for it?

Again, it is proposed to increase the salary of fifty-four clerks $5,400 annually, besides allowing them $3 per day for actual traveling expenses.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no.

Mr. SOWDEN. Oh, yes; there are fifty-four chief clerks and the proposition is to increase their salaries $100 each, which makes the sum total $5,400, as stated. Why this proposition? Whence the necessity for it? Do these men complain that they are not well paid? Is the service threatened with their resignation unless this advance is provided for them? I have no doubt but that in the gentleman's district from Georgia, like in mine, there are any number of good Democrats who would gladly accept these clerkships at the present rate of compensation. I would like to know from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] what urgent necessity there is for the passage of this bill.

It is estimated that the traveling expenses provided for in this measure will not exceed $13,500 per annum. What assurances have we for this conclusion on the part of the committee presenting the report accompanying the bill? Heretofore these expenses were cheerfully borne by these clerks, whose salaries were deemed ample and satisfactory.

Is this Democratic economy? Are we in a position to add these increased expenditures to the already too large demands upon the public Treasury, and especially since the other side charge that we have increased the public expenditures under this Administration some $90,000,000 above the expenditures of the last Republican administration? This bill proposes to add to the annual expenses $23,000. In my opinion there is no necessity for it, and it comes with ill grace from this side of the House, since we stand pledged to the abolition of all unnecessary offices, the lopping off of all needless expenses, and the most rigid economy in the expenditure of the public moneys.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. So far as I am concerned I believe we ought to pay an adequate salary for the service, but the bill as presented by the committee it seems to me is imperfect. Under the law as it exists at present the general superintendent has a salary of $3,500 per annum, and his duty is to designate the different chief clerks, prescribe their duties, supervise their conduct, and look after their interests, and so on. In the present bill the committee propose to change that and relieve him of that duty entirely and put it in charge of the Postmaster-General, and still raise his salary $500 per annum.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does not change the duties.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Unless there is some good reason given for this by the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge, all who are in favor of retrenchment and economy should oppose this increase of salary of the superintendent. If the bill proposed to impose on him extra duties which would require a higher order of ability, either executive or otherwise, then of course the salary should be increased accordingly. But if the superintendent is simply to perform the duties which have already been performed by the present superintendent and those who have preceded him, I see no reason just at this stage for increasing his salary $500 per annum.

Now, it would be better to modify this bill so that instead of having the superintendent of the railway mail service appointed by the Postmaster-General he should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. According to the statement made here this morning by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, this branch of the public service has increased so much that it has become of gigantic magnitude, and this office is of such a character that the capabilities and qualifications of its incumbent should be passed upon by the Senate of the United States. That is a criticism that I make upon this bill, and which I desire to bring to the attention of the chairman of the committee. If this proposed increase of salary is to be adopted, then I think the bill should be amended so as to have this officer appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; but if he is to be shorn of a large proportion of his duties, as is proposed in this bill——

Mr. BLOUNT. That is not proposed here. This bill makes no change in that respect.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Well, there is nothing to show that. The law of 1887 prescribes the duties of this officer and fixes his salary at $3,500.

Mr. BLOUNT. This bill does not change the duties at all; but if the gentleman thinks it does, I have no objection to an amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Another point is this: there are fifty-four chief clerks, and it is proposed to raise the salary of each of them $100. Under this bill the number of these chief clerks is not limited to fifty-four; there may be as many of them as the Postmaster-General may think necessary. Of course that leaves the matter entirely within the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and if he should be so disposed, political considerations might control the appointment of a number of these officials.

A matter of that kind should be regulated and guarded in the bill itself. This branch of the public service is reduced to such exactness that the chairman of the committee must know to-day how many chief clerks are really necessary, and certainly the superintendent of the railway mail service knows. From the increase of the business between 1879 and 1887, as stated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOUNT] here to-day, the officers of the Department must be well able to judge of the number of these clerks that will be required, and certainly there ought to be some limit prescribed to the appointment of these officials, so that their number shall be increased only as the increase of the business demands.

Again, in regard to this assistant superintendent of railway mail service with a salary of $3,000 a year. The service has gone on thus far without any such officer and without the payment of any such salary, and before this bill is passed I for one would like very much to have the chairman of the committee explain to the House why it is necessary to create this new office, with this large salary——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments proposed by the committee must first be considered.

Mr. KERR. I ask to have the committee amendments read.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

In line 5, before the word "dollars," insert the words "four thousand."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of replying to some criticisms that have been made here. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] says that this is an increase of $23,000 in the way of salaries. I wish to call the attention of the House to this statement, which shows that of the $23,000, $13,500 will be required to pay the traveling expenses of the clerks who are required to go out on the different routes for the purpose of examining the employés, etc.

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that this bill, if it were enacted into law, would increase the annual expenditures $23,000, regardless of the character of the expenditures?

Mr. BLOUNT. I answer, Mr. Chairman, that that is the truth, but I am not going to suppose that the reason and intelligence of this House are so bridled that when they shall find that they are directing these clerks, the highest class of clerks they have, to travel over the country for the purpose of examining the men who are engaged in handling the mails, it will insist that these clerks shall put their hands into their own pockets and pay their traveling expenses.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether those expenses are not paid by the Government now?

Mr. BLOUNT. They are not; and that has been a subject of complaint by administration after administration; but under the rules of this House it was impossible to get consideration of it. You have tied down this House under your rules so that the great Departments of the Government generally can not get before Congress for the purpose of presenting these questions, and when they do come here, instead of the House understanding the real state of the case, instead of their understanding that this difficulty is an old and grievous one, gentlemen express astonishment that this "new" thing has been brought in! I could have kept it back, but I have chosen to bring it in here; and I now submit it to the reason and the judgment of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What are the salaries of those clerks?

Mr. BLOUNT. They are $1,400 a year, and out of that must be paid their traveling expenses; while many of the very men whom they go out to examine are getting salaries of $1,400 a year without any such deduction. The highest class of clerks known to the law have their salaries exhausted in this way, just as you exhausted the salaries of your third-class postmasters by making them rent houses for you, and pay for fuel, and so on.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Do not those clerks get their railroad transportation free?

Mr. BLOUNT. They have to pay their hotel bills and sleeping-car expenses.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. But their railroad transportation is free, is it not?

Mr. BLOUNT. Their mere railroad transportation is free; but they travel a great deal at night, and if they sleep they have to pay for their berths just as you would have to do, and when they go to a hotel they have to pay their hotel bills.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Do they not have to do the same thing when located in the city of Washington? Do they not have to pay here their board or hotel bills, etc.?

Mr. BLOUNT. Many of them have families located at some particular point, and there is a very great difference in the cost of living when the men are away from home and obliged to incur traveling expenses. In reference to the large class of inspectors in various Departments of the Government, Congress has never thought it just that the burden of traveling expenses should fall upon them, but they have been allowed a per diem.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with my observations as to fifty-four clerks, I have disposed of $13,500 of the $23,000, leaving less than $10,000 involved in this question of increase of salaries. I want to show now that the amount is still less. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] have referred to the creation of the office of assistant general superintendent at a salary of $3,000 as an increase to this amount. I beg the attention of those gentlemen to this fact. Under a former administration the practice was (and there is authority of law for it) to detail an inspector for this purpose; and this inspector has been in the habit of traveling from one end of the country to the other, his salary being $1,600 and his per diem $5 per day, making his compensation about $3,400.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BLOUNT. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the adoption of the bill now proposed by the committee do away with that office?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the purpose. If the language of the bill is not sufficiently explicit in that respect, I am perfectly willing it shall be amended.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The point I make is that there is nothing in the bill which would do away with that office; and if this bill should become a law this officer could be detailed in the same manner as he has been; so that the passage of the bill would result in an increased expenditure of $3,000 for this new office.

Mr. BLOUNT. There are two answers to the gentleman's suggestion. In the first place, the law allowing this assignment provides for a contingency which, if this bill be passed, will not occur. If we have an assistant general superintendent of the railway mail service the Department is not likely to be forced to the employment of a postal inspector. There was a time when there were two of these assistant superintendents, and those positions being abolished, the Department, operating under an absolute necessity, began to detail this inspec or under authority of law, at an expense, as I have said, of something like $3,400 a year.

If my friend from Illinois is not satisfied with the language of the bill, I have no objection to an amendment inhibiting the detail of any postal inspector in connection with the office of general superintendent of the railway mail service. So that in reality, as will be seen, this item of $3,000 amounts to scarcely anything at all. So far as concerns the chief clerk, I care very little about that. The main item of expense is the increase of $5,400 for fifty-four clerks, and also the traveling expenses, somewhere in the neighborhood of $13,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I confess my surprise at the flippant manner in which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] speaks of the proposed increased expenditures provided for in this bill. He says that the increased expense by reason of the creation of this new officer, to be known as the assistant general superintendent of the railway mail service, will amount to "only $3,000," and that the total increased expenditure under this bill amounted to "only $23,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is making a very fine speech which he attributes to me, and replies to. I do not think I made that sort of a speech.

Mr. SOWDEN. This is just what the gentleman said, that "only $23,000" was involved in this bill, and "only $3,000" of it by reason of the creation of the new office of assistant general superintendent. Why, sir, $500 here, $3,000 there, $600 here, $5,400 there, and $13,500 here make up the $23,000 total increase provided for in this measure; and if we keep on piling up the amounts in this way it will soon reach "only" $100,000 more. How lightly we are inclined to speak of these vast sums of money! It is a stultification, sir, of the party represented by a majority in this House to even submit a proposition looking to the further increase of the number of offices already provided by law and to add to the long list of office-holders, of which there is already too much complaint.

With more than one hundred thousand Federal officers it would seem, from the proposition before the House, that this vast army is to be still further increased. We have already created too many additional offices, and the time has come when a halt in this direction should be commanded. We can not afford such stultification. Let us rather ascertain what unnecessary offices there are, and, if any, lop them off. Let no proposition emanate from this side of the House to increase them. If the gentleman having this matter in charge can satisfy this House, or a majority of its members, that this proposed increase of salaries and the appointment of an assistant general superintendent of the railway mail service will essentially add to the efficiency of the public service, then there may be some reason for the urging of the passage of this bill.

Here are fifty-four clerks whose salaries it is proposed to increase $100 each per annum, besides their traveling expenses, not to exceed $3 per day. It strikes me that my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] would lose his zeal for the passage of this bill if he knew the political complexion of the majority of these officers. I think I may safely venture to remark that out of the fifty-four there are scarcely ten who are of the same political party represented by this side of the House. I believe if he investigated the political character of the parties interested in this measure, outside of the general superintendent, he would find that a large majority of them are politically opposed to the party to which he belongs, and perhaps even the man whose office he is seeking to establish may come from the other side. These suggestions, however, should have no effect whatever upon the merits of this bill if the efficiency of the public service is involved, and if the gentleman championing it can convince the House that its passage would materially improve it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the political complexion of these fifty-four clerks.

Mr. SOWDEN. Neither do I.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know what is to be the political views of the gentlemen who may get the offices hereafter when the salaries shall be increased. I do not think, sir, that with a service as important as this the House should resolve itself into a political meeting and get off campaign speeches when the people are expecting wise legislation; and the man who undertakes to trifle with a service of this kind, belonging to this or any other of the great Departments of the Government, will find the people of the country have a higher idea than the mere squabbles around the ballot-box for office.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] undertook to portray the speech I had made and said it was summed in the declaration that it was only $23,000, and this after I had taken occasion to give the reason which had been furnished by the Postmaster-General and by his predecessor, each of whom, by reason of his eminent ability and experience, was entitled to greater consideration than the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has given no attention or very little to the subject.

The gentleman is astonished to find that I should be willing to increase the expenditures of a service now $61,000,000, by the amount of $23,000, when most of it is to give per diem to clerks. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not the person, he has not the record in legislation in this House, to assail me as wanting in proper regard for public expenditure. He has served on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which has cost this Government more in that direction than has been expended by any Congress in the history of the country.

Mr. SOWDEN. The record will not show that or bear out the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take the opportunity to demonstrate the fact at the proper time.

Mr. DINGLEY. And his particular building was not added to the expenditure. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. No. The building at Allentown was so important it was absolutely necessary to override the veto of his own President. [Laughter.] If he wants to appeal to partisan views——

Mr. SOWDEN I am not like the gentleman. I do not appeal to partisan views.

Mr. BLOUNT. You made no partisan appeal when you said we were in the presence of a Presidential election, and it would not do.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

The morning hour having expired for consideration of bills, the committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4930) relating to railway mail service, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis., and at other places therein named;

A bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to Lieut. Starkey R. Powell;

A bill (H. R. 10934) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell township maps or plats remaining on hand in his office; and

A bill (H. R. 11101) to include Sapelo Sound, Sapelo River, and Sapelo Island in the Brunswick collection district, in the State of Georgia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess until 4 o'clock this evening——

Mr. McMILLIN. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will hear the gentleman's statement, and withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. HOLMAN. My purpose in moving to take a recess until 4 o'clock was with a view that in case the conferees on the general deficiency bill make a report by that time it could be received and ordered to be printed in the RECORD so as to appear to-morrow morning. The same object, however, can be secured if unanimous consent is obtained now that the conclusion reached by the conferees, if they shall reach a conclusion to-day, may be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow morning.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that is right.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there was an understanding, on this side of the House at least, that the bill called up by the gentleman from Georgia should have consideration to-day until it was concluded.

Mr. McMILLIN. No; that is a mistake.

Mr. BLOUNT. There was objection made to that request. The gentleman from Indiana objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana now asks unanimous consent that if the conferees on the general deficiency bill come to a conclusion to-day the report may be handed in to the Clerk and ordered to be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I hope an adjournment will not be had in the face of such an important bill as that now pending.

Mr. McMILLIN. But that bill is not now pending. It is not before the House, the hour having expired.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will have another hour hereafter for the consideration of the bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. McMILLIN, the House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 11519) granting a pension to Mary Ellen Burrill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHEADLE: A bill (H. R. 11520) granting a pension to Julius L. Benson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 11521) to pension James H. Sirrine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11522) to increase the pension of Thomas Foley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of Patrick Carr, Company I, Thirtieth Massachusetts Volunteers, for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Mary Ellen Burrill, for a widow's pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. M. ALLEN: Petition for reference of sundry war claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of John G. Dooley and some 200 others, citizens of Schuykill County, Pennsylvania, in favor of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of S. D. Warren, of De Kalb County, and of Thomas S. Winn, heir-at-law of Drucilla Winn, of Cherokee County, Alabama, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of William H. Kelton, of Coryell County, Texas, for the reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Petition for the relief of members of the Holland Horse of Missouri—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. J. D. STEWART: Petition of Claudius P. Cassin, of Fulton County, Georgia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STONE, of Missouri: Petition of William W. Kennedy, of Missouri, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition relating to the suppression of trusts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O. B. THOMAS: Papers in the case of William Miller, for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. A. C. THOMPSON: Petition of citizens of Jackson County, Ohio, to prevent the adulteration of food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of John D. Caron, for payment of his war claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 28, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. A. PRICE, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GENERAL INDEX OF JOURNALS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. CARUTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be hereby authorized to reappoint the person recently employed under the resolution of May 22, 1882, at the rate of compensation fixed by the said resolution, to assist in the preparation of a general index of the Journals of Congress under the resolution of June 18,1878, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until an appropriation shall be made.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY ACCOUNTING OFFICERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedule of claims allowed by the accounting officers, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate amendments to bills of the House of the following titles; which were referred as follows, namely:

The bill (H. R. 6612) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs;

The bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs;

The bill (H. R. 7843) granting to the Citrous Water Company the right of way across the Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona—to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and

The bill (H. R. 7516) to increase the pension of Sylvester Stearnes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARY F. PFEIFFER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4039) granting a pension to Mary F. Pfeiffer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is merely a formal amendment of the Senate to insert the name of the company in which the soldier served.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask the House to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

NANCY J. COTNER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10881) granting a pension to Nancy J. Cotner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that in this case the amendment is also merely formal, to strike out "E" and insert "C;" and if there be no objection the amendment will be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 110 to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

SUFFERERS BY YELLOW FEVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of sufferers from yellow fever, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will insist upon its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 3438) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of the late Alexander W. Baldwin, as United States district judge for the district of Nevada—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Daniel C. Rodman and others, sureties on the bond of Ozias Morgan—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2182) to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 3427) to amend section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 3124) creating three additional land offices in the State of Colorado—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3390) to create the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill, the title of which has just been read, be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

BOUNDARY LINE, CONNECTICUT AND RHODE ISLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3098) concerning the settlement of the boundary line between Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this has been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. A similar bill was introduced in the House and referred to the Judiciary Committee. A subcommittee have considered it.

Mr. ROGERS. As is well known, Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible to procure a quorum of any committee now. Something like a week ago this bill was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I have the honor to be chairman, and I have personally given it the best consideration I could. I think there is no sort of doubt, if we could get the committee together in order to submit it, it would receive the unanimous indorsement of the committee.

It is to ratify an agreement between the two States named, they having agreed upon the line, and all interests affecting the United States are properly preserved, I think. Under the Constitution, however, the assent of Congress must be given before the agreement between the States would be valid. This bill looks to giving the assent of Congress to this agreement between the States, and I think there is no objection whatever to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. 704) granting a pension to Thomas Redmond, late private Company K, Fourth United States Infantry;

A bill (S. 1598) granting to Truman A. Morton a pension of $24 a month;

A bill (S. 2363) for the relief of John W. Combs;

A bill (S. 2374) for the relief of David Gray Purman;

A bill (S. 2623) granting an increase of pension to James Patterson;

A bill (S. 3104) granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Smith;

A bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton;

A bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal;

A bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan;

A bill (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson;

A bill (S. 3429) granting a pension to Maria N. Abbey;

A bill (S. 3435) granting a pension to J. C. Haworth;

A bill (S. 3453) granting an increase of pension to Alfred T. McKinsey;

A bill (S. 3456) granting a pension to David O. Sanborn;

A bill (S. 3457) granting a pension to Abigail Farley;

A bill (S. 3462) granting a pension to John Watson;

A bill (S. 3477) granting a pension to Minerva Griffith;

A bill (S. 3479) granting a pension to Sarah J. Powers;

A bill (S. 3492) granting a pension to John Parkinson;

A bill (S. 3502) granting a pension to Juliana Roitsch;

A bill (S. 3513) granting pensions to Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers; and

A bill (S. 3540) granting a pension to Mary P. Myers.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 25, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations, showing the progress made in said surveys during the year ending June 30, 1887, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for distribution by said Superintendent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask to have that resolution considered now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House resolution on the same subject lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, September 25, 1888.

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887–'88 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 for distribution by the Commissioner.

CHANGE OF CONFEREE.

The Chair will announce as conferee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] in lieu of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], who desires to leave the city.

YELLOW FEVER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. 110) to aid the sufferers from yellow fever, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, indefinitely, on account of important business; and

To Mr. GROUT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7410) for the relief of settlers upon Old Camp Sheridan military reservation; and

A bill (H. R. 10060) prescribing the time for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HOOKER was recognized.

Mr. HOOKER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to make a formal motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done unless the gentleman having charge of the deficiency bill——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have already consulted the chairman of the committee having in charge the general deficiency bill, and he informs me that the conference report is to go to the Senate before it can be acted on here, and as the Senate adjourned over from yesterday until Monday, it can not be considered until that day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to insert Tuesday instead of Monday.

The amendment was rejected.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, when the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to.

MATTIE S. WHITNEY.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 2185 for the payment of a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of Mattie S. Whitney, administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased. I understand that the bill has been reported unanimously from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right to object.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It is a Senate bill, and the Committee on War Claims have considered it and reported it favorably.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Mattie S. Whitney, as administratrix of the estate of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, the sum of $22,224, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States, for supplies furnished to the Army and Navy of the United States, the same being the amount found to be due her by the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mattie S. Whitney, administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, asking payment for supplies and stores furnished the United States Army, have had the same under consideration, and finding all the facts set forth in the report made to the Senate, this Congress, by the Committee on Claims of the Senate, adopt the same as their report, and report an original bill to carry out the views of this committee.

[Senate Report No. 414, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

In the Forty-eighth Congress, at its first session, a bill (S. 1592) was introduced by Mr. MILLER, of New York, entitled "A bill for the relief of Franklin S. Whitney." In the bill the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and required to pay to Mattie S. Whitney, of New York, as administratrix of the estate of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, the sum of $70,914.18 with interest from January 1, 1865, and to her individually the sum of $12,875, in full "for supplies furnished to the Army and Navy of the United States."

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, and at the next session of the same Congress the committee referred the whole matter to the Court of Claims, in accordance with the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, known as "the Bowman act."

The purpose of this reference was to find the facts in the case and report the same for such further action as Congress might see fit to take in the premises.

The papers were accordingly transmitted to the court, and the claimant and the United States were both represented in the presentation of the case. On a preliminary inquiry, on the 20th day of December, 1886, it was found by the courts that the person alleged to have furnished the supplies or stores, or from whom they were alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government during the late war. This inquiry was made under section 4 of the said act, and such affirmative finding was necessary to give to the court jurisdiction of the cause.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 19th and 20th days of December, 1887, with the following results:

The claimant submitted a bill of particulars under thirty-nine items, aggregating in value the sum of $70,914.18.

The court rejected all the items which related to the use and occupation of the real property of Mr. Whitney by any part of the military and naval forces of the United States during the war, and to such losses as resulted from the destruction of property by the Army or Navy, or by the depredations of individuals, such items being expressly excluded from its jurisdiction by the third section of the act of March 3, 1883. These items so excluded amounted to $18,615.25, and left $52,298.93 as the value of the other items, according to the prices fixed by the claimant.

The court found that all the property included in the other items was taken from Mr. Whitney for the use of the Army and Navy, and the only other matter remaining to be determined was the value of the property so taken.

In reaching this determination the court has very largely reduced the values as fixed by the claimant, and the result suggests that the interests of the Government have been most carefully guarded and protected, and that the court has fixed a minimum value upon the articles taken by the Government for the purpose of the prosecution of the war.

The amount thus found is $22,224, and the court, in accordance with the law, transmitted a certified copy of the results reached to this body January 25, 1888. They were printed in Miscellaneous Document No. 41, and referred to this committee, and it is necessary to recommend what further action, if any, should be taken. Without attempting to mark out a general line of action applicable to all cases of this class, the committee will deal with this upon its merits, and make such recommendations as, in their opinion, is proper under the circumstances that now exist.

Congress having selected its own tribunal to ascertain and determine the facts in the case, and that tribunal having acted after examination in open court, at which the Government was represented by its own chosen counsel, we must accept its findings as correct, in the absence of any reason for reviewing them.

The present claimant and her late husband, who were residents of the State of Mississippi during the late war, in the very region which was the scene of active military operations, notwithstanding the excitement and the natural influences which would have drawn them in a different direction, stood by the Union in its hour of peril and danger. Their property was used to carry on the war; houses were torn down to bridge the Big Black; some of their cotton was used to build fortifications, some to make mattresses for hospital purposes; their plantation was used for pasturage, and the growing crops were destroyed; the quartermasters took their horses, mules, wagons, carts, and carriages, their corn and fodder, and every other article that was needed for use in that department; the commissaries took everything that was available for subsistence; the medical department stripped their home of everything that could be used for hospital purposes; and in August, 1863, the family was left in so necessitous a condition that General Grant, who was in command of the department and knew of their circumstances, ordered thirty days' rations to be issued to Mrs. Whitney and another lady similarly situated; and he speaks of them in his order as "having been left destitute by our troops taking nearly everything they had, in their march through Port Gibson."

But under the law the claimant is entitled to no recompense for a large portion of these losses, and the court dismissed them from consideration. It fixed the value of the items which it had jurisdiction over, but had no authority to allow the interest which was claimed and which in amount exceeded the principal.

A just and valid claim then exists, according to the findings of our own court, in favor of this lady, in her capacity as administratrix, to the amount of $22,224, and the Government has delayed its payment for nearly a quarter of a century, and the results reached appear to be supported by the facts of the case and the law applicable thereto.

The purpose of the Bowman act was to do justice to certain classes of creditors and claimants.

It left to Congress the power to determine whether or not the amount found to be due should be paid. But if the findings, unchallenged as they are, mean anything, they settle the amount that is justly due, the amount that should be paid if anything is paid, and no reason appears in the records, nor has any been brought to the attention of the committee, why the result reached should be reopened, either for the benefit of the claimant or the Government.

The only question that remains is whether it is a judicious and wise policy for Congress to pay just and valid claims of this class.

The Bowman act seems to have been framed to facilitate the settlement and payment of such claims. Why ascertain the amount, the meritorious nature of the claim, and the attitude of the claimant towards the Government during the war if it were not the intention, generally, to pay such claims?

But the right to reverse this policy was reserved; the right to deal with exceptional cases was reserved, and Congress has the power to set aside or disregard the findings in any case in furtherance of justice and right. But this appears to be a meritorious case; no facts appear in the record to exclude it from favorable consideration; the claimant has gone to the expense of a trial before the Court of Claims at our own request, and no argument has been presented for a change of the policy of the Government, which has been followed ever since the war in similar cases.

This policy has been that property taken from citizens who stood by the Union, for the purpose of maintaining the Army and Navy and carrying on military and naval operations during the war, should be paid for. It is just and right that it should be. And as the claimant is within the limitation of the law as to diligence, the long delay is not to be attributed to her, and it affords an additional reason why prompt and speedy relief should now be afforded.

We therefore recommend that the findings of the Court of Claims in this case be carried out by the passage of the bill which we herewith submit, and which is in harmony with the conclusion reached by the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be put upon its passage?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not rise to object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall ask for a vote upon it. The gentleman who drew that report carefully avoided setting forth the findings of the Court of Claims in the language of the court. That is avoided all the way through. The report is argumentative, but it leaves us uninformed as to the exact terms of the finding of the court. It would have been much better, I think, to have set out that finding as it was made by the court. The report speaks about a judgment. Now there was no judgment, and could not be any. There was a simple finding, and it ought to have been set forth in the terms in which it was pronounced by the court. Therefore, while I do not object to the consideration of the bill, I repeat that I shall ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to make any response to the gentleman from Indiana except to say that the printed findings of the Court of Claims can easily be had. Heretofore when bills of this kind have been under consideration in the House objection has been made because they were not accompanied by written reports, but simply set forth the findings of the court; and now in this case, when there is a written report but the findings of the Court of Claims happen not to be set forth, that is objected to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not objecting to the report. My objection is to the failure to set out the finding in the language of the court.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering this bill to a third reading.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If the bill is to be considered now I desire a little time to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. The bill is open to debate.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I have before me a digest of the evidence taken by the Southern Claims Commission, from which I find that this claim which is brought in here in the manner indicated by the report just read was submitted to that commission, that an exhaustive hearing was given to the claim, and that evidence was taken as to the loyalty of the party, as to the character of the claimant, and as to the amount claimed against the Government of the United States. When that evidence was taken on the part of the United States as to the loyalty of the claimant and of her deceased husband, full opportunity was given claimant to produce all witnesses he chose to establish his loyalty during the war; and after a full hearing the commission decided against the claim because this Mr. Whitney was disloyal to the Government of the United States, and was in favor of the Confederate government. In order to show the character of the proof that was submitted to the commission, I will read a few sentences from the testimony of William Baker. Now, mark, this William Baker was overseer for Mr. Whitney from January, 1860, until the end of September, 1861, and, at intervals, during the ensuing fall and winter, and he lived and boarded at Whitney's house. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen who are so anxious to reject all claims that are not meritorious to the testimony of this witness. He says:

Mr. Whitney was very anxious for me to join the Confederate army. He seemed to be very jubilant when the Confederate victories were reported. I recollect distinctly about his rejoicing over the Confederate success at Bull Run. He told me he thought it was every man's duty to go into the Confederate army. I had frequent conversations with him up to September, 1861. His general expressions were always in favor of the Confederacy. He was very liberal in contributing and assisting the Confederates, in raising means to give dinners for the companies raised in this county for the war.

That is the evidence of the overseer of Mr. Whitney. The report of the commission says:

The witness went to the war in March, 1862, and returned in July, 1863, and staid about four months. "At this time," witness says, "I visited Mr. Whitney. There was no one with him except his little son and two servants. His wife was absent from home. He seemed to be very despondent at this time, but still expressed himself in favor of the Confederacy."

Now, this is a fair illustration of a number of these claims which have been submitted to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand the gentleman, this claim was before the Southern Claims Commission?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And rejected?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not appear in the report made to the House.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Not at all. The finding of the commission is that—

The claim is disallowed upon the ground that the loyalty of F. S. Whitney is not satisfactorily proved.

After going over the entire evidence of these witnesses who knew Mr. Whitney and knew upon which side his sympathies and influences and actions were, the commission disallowed the claim.

Mr. Speaker, I had occasion a few weeks ago in the discussion of one of these claims to refer to the Court of Claims and the apparently easy manner in which these Southern war claims passed that court. I do not understand what cause could have produced a report of the kind presented to us this morning with the statement that the Court of Claims had found the claimant loyal, whether the fault was in the attorney who had charge of the interests of the Government or whether there was some other reason. Certainly we have here in the report of the commission a compilation of the evidence of witness after witness showing the disloyalty of this man Whitney, and that his claim should not be allowed. If we can rely at all upon the finding of the commission as reported here, this is a thoroughly rotten claim—one which ought not only to be voted down here, but denounced. I am not going to take up time in a discussion of this case, but I say that a claim of this kind ought not to have any standing in this House or before the country.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I did not introduce this bill, but it has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on War Claims. A full and complete answer to everything that has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is to be found in the fact that the Court of Claims, to whom this case was referred under the Bowman act, went into a preliminary investigation to determine the question whether this person was loyal or not, and they have found he was loyal. That finding of the court has been presented here, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and reported back to the House.

The question of the claimant's loyalty was a jurisdictional question; the party had to establish his loyalty before he could ask any consideration of his claim from the court. It was a question precedent to the adjudication of his right to the amount of money claimed, and the court find that the claimant was loyal. This is a full answer, Mr. Speaker, to anything which may have been said or done by any specific witness before the Southern Claims Commission. It is very well understood, Mr. Speaker, that the Southern Claims Commission had a method——

Mr. KERR. Has the gentleman in his possession anything showing that any evidence on this question of loyalty was before the court?

Mr. HOOKER. Undoubtedly there must have been evidence on that subject before the court, because this committee reports the fact that the Court of Claims had decided that question of loyalty before going into the investigation of the merits of the claim. If the gentleman had listened to the reading of the report he would have heard that.

Mr. KERR. That is simply a conclusion——

Mr. HOOKER. It is not a conclusion, but a fact.

Mr. KERR. I wish to know whether the court heard witnesses on that point?

Mr. HOOKER. Undoubtedly; otherwise the court could not have passed on the question.

Mr. KERR. I do not know about that.

Mr. HOOKER. Well, I do know. They say they have investigated the question of loyalty; the report so states in express terms. Undoubtedly that question was before the court. Now, with respect to the Southern Claims Commission——

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The court can examine only such evidence as is submitted to it; and the point I make is that we ought to know something as to the management of this case by the attorney who represented the Government—whether there was a full and fair investigation of this subject of loyalty. The court must base its finding upon the evidence as submitted. The report of this commission, which I hold in my hand, gives the names of witnesses examined before the commission; and it does not appear that the Government submitted the evidence of those witnesses to the court.

Mr. HOOKER. I want to say this, that the investigations by the Southern Claims Commission are well understood to have been often ex parte in their proceedings, and that commission frequently sent out its agents to take the depositions of persons where no notice was given to the claimant, and the ex parte testimony was set up to militate against the claims of parties. There is no evidence whatever that Mr. Whitney was aware of this testimony on the part of the man Baker, who was examined before the commission. It was done without his knowledge; he had no opportunity of being present to examine and cross-examine him, and hence it should have little weight in determining the question of the claimant's loyalty. Here is, however, the finding of the court duly constituted, composed of five learned judges, who had the matter referred to them under the provisions of the Bowman act, and who, before they could take cognizance of it at all, had to ascertain and determine the question of loyalty, that being a jurisdictional question. They found that the party was loyal; and I will state that there never has been a case presented to Congress which has been more thoroughly, fully, and efficiently investigated than this case.

It will be seen that a large portion of the claim, as shown by the report (that for the occupancy of the lands, the removal of the houses or their destruction, to be used for officers' quarters, barracks, etc.), has been eliminated already from the account. All the objectionable features of the case are eliminated from the claim; and the court find only that the provisions to feed the soldiers of the Army and the Navy of the United States were taken from the party to the amount specified, reducing the whole claim to only about one-fourth of the original amount. It does seem to me, therefore, that we must give some credit to a court and to the findings of a court composed of able, conscientious, and intelligent men, whose duty requires them to investigate the very question which the gentleman from Illinois now raises, and who are sworn to administer the law. This court, composed of men of ability, a legally constituted tribunal, has passed upon the question, and they are not likely to make a report here which is not founded in fact. The case, it seems to me, is so clearly presented in their report that it is not necessary to take up the time of the House longer with it, and I hope we will have a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in answer to what has been urged by the gentleman from Mississippi, that this claimant had no day in court, and no opportunity of being present or being represented in court to examine and cross-examine witnesses; that the report shows he had full knowledge of the fact of the commission taking proof on his claim and produced his witnesses to establish his loyalty; and it shows the singular fact that the only person produced to establish that loyalty was his wife, Mrs. Whitney; while the representatives of the Government, when they came to interpose their evidence before the commission, introduced the mother-in-law of Mr. Whitney, whose evidence is set out briefly in the report of the commission, and I will read it.

Mrs. Jane N. Sims, the mother-in-law of Mr. Whitney, was examined, and she says:

I had always supposed and understood that Mr. Whitney favored the Confederacy. All his relatives were upon that side, and it would have seemed unnatural if he had done otherwise.

Mr. Cox, a neighbor who lived about 2 miles from him, stated in his testimony before the commission:

I think he was in favor of the Confederate government, as he notified me in the fall of 1862 or the spring of 1863 to report to Colonel Patterson at Port Gibson for service in the Confederate army. People generally thought he was a Confederate.

Now, the gentleman says there was a fair and full hearing before the Court of Claims. That, Mr. Speaker, is simply a gratuitous statement of the gentleman from Mississippi, because there is no evidence before the House that there was any such hearing, and the very fact that the report fails to make any reference to the Southern Claims Commission having examined and found against it is proof to my mind, and it seems to me must be to every disinterested man, that there was not a full and a fair hearing before the court. Because certainly the court composed of men learned in the law and of such high character could not have found, as the report of the War Claims Committee states, if this evidence had been placed before them. I say, therefore, that there is something wrong in this claim, and that there ought to be an investigation full and clear before it is rushed through the House.

I do not care, however, for the purpose of this question this morning, what may have been the finding of the Court of Claims. It is not binding upon the members of this House. We have the evidence before us that this man was as disloyal as any man who served in the Confederate army; that he sympathized with the Confederate army, and when the Union forces were routed at Bull Run gloried over the Federal defeat. When such evidence as that is before the House no man can say that there is no evidence against the claimant's loyalty, while upon the contrary there is a wealth of proof which should not be ignored and which shows affirmatively the fact that he was a disloyal man and a sympathizer with the enemies of the Union.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Will you please indicate the names of the witnesses?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Certainly. The names are set out in the report of the commission. William Baker, J. W. Cox, William A. Goodrum, Mrs. Jane N. Sims, Charles W. Whitney, a brother of the deceased; Mrs. F. K. Whitney, a sister-in-law, who says—and I will read her evidence for the delectation of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. All right; let us have it.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. It seems that she lived within 2½ miles of Whitney. She testifies that she met Mrs. Whitney, the claimant, frequently at a sewing society to make clothing for the Confederate soldiers; that she talked in favor of the South and—aided the soldiers of the Confederacy by contributions and sewing for them.

Further she says:

Whitney was regarded as a Confederate.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Are you through?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. There are others.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask you the character of these people and their standing.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Well, I think the character of witnesses ought not to be questioned when we go into the family of the complainant.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] is recognized.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the different findings between this Southern Claims Commission and the Court of Claims in regard to this demand produce such doubt that it would not be proper that this bill should pass at this time unless the passage of it shall call out a vote of at least a quorum of this House and that a majority of such quorum are in favor of it. I desire to say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that if it comes to that point, I shall feel it my duty to demand that a quorum vote upon this bill before it be permitted to pass.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Of course if that is the intention of the gentleman he can carry it out, but I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that if Mrs. Whitney's claim is to be voted down upon the idea that she at any time gave relief to Confederate soldiers, you can find many people in the North who were regarded as loyal who gave relief to Confederate soldiers.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. You are dodging the issue. This is part of the evidence submitted.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I am not dodging the issue. I am going right to it. The gentleman has read the names of persons who have testified to the disloyalty of these people. Now, I want to give you a little testimony of those who have testified to their loyalty, and their names are not unknown in this country.

I read from them now:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., August 12, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I am really glad that you have gone to Rome, and hope you will not regard me as trespassing on your quietude if I occasionally call on you for politeness to friends who insist on seeing Rome before they die.

One such case is now present, a Mrs. M. S. Whitney, formerly of Mississippi, but now in New York. She is an accomplished lady, a widow, formerly owning a vast estate, now somewhat impoverished by the war. She was very patriotic during the war, and the fact is evidenced by General Grant and others, whose armies passed rough-shod over her estate.

Any politeness shown her will, I am sure, be appreciated.

Truly your friend,

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

PAUL DAHLGREN, Esq.,
Rome, Italy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF DETAIL,
Washington, D. C., August 11, 1865.

I certify that Mrs. Mattie Whitney is a resident of Grand Gulf, Claiborne County, Mississippi, and has resided there during the war. To the best of my knowledge and belief she is a loyal lady.

DAVID C. PORTER,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy,

NATCHEZ, September 21.

I knew F. W. (meaning Mr.) Whitney from his boyhood, and his parents before him. He was from first to last a Union man. He informed me of his sentiments the last time I ever saw him, which was soon after this State seceded. During the war I accidentally saw a list of certain natives of Mississippi who were "proscribed," and to be dealt with or expelled, and his name headed the list in the county of Claiborne.

In haste, yours,

J. F. H. CLAIBORNE.

E. P. WHEELER, Esq.,
Counsellor at law, New York.

In an indorsement of a letter dated Washington, D. C., 1879, to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, I find these words:

I hope the Department will thoroughly investigate this claim, and if just, as I think it is, pay it.

H. L. DAWES.

So do I.

J. A. GARFIELD, Ohio.

HEADQUARTERS, OFFICE OF THE PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL,
May 6, 1863.

Officers of the United States Army:

You are hereby ordered, as are also all soldiers, to refrain from taking any property, but render any assistance the bearer of this (Mr. Whitney) may need in protecting his property, he being a non-combatant and not subject to the confiscation act.

By command of Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant.

W. S. HILLYER,
Provost-Marshal-General.
JAMES SHERLOCK,
Assistant Provost-Marshal-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE TENNESSEE,
Vicksburg, Miss., August 23, 1863.

Captain ——, C. S., will issue to Mrs. Whitney and Mrs. Shelby, of Port Gibson, of Mississippi, thirty days' rations, they having been left destitute by our troops taking everything they had in their march through Port Gibson.

By order of Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant.

JOHN A. RAWLINS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

And so it is shown that the officers of the Government recognized the loyalty of these people.

Mr. HOOKER. And that while war was flagrant.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I care nothing about the case. I was disloyal at that time, and I have no interest in advocating specially the payment of this claim; but after this claim has been referred to the Court of Cairns and the Court of Claims have passed upon it by a set of judges whose Republicanism is so dark that Egyptian darkness would shine by the side of it, after they have acted upon it favorably, after it has been unanimously voted for on a report made by a Republican Senator, and after it comes to this House, I think it comes with exceeding poor grace for a gentleman who is poorly informed on the claim to get up here and denounce it as rotten, thereby impeaching not only the integrity of the court, but impeaching the general officers of the United States Army, impeaching the Senate of the United States, impeaching the committees of the Senate of the United States, and also impeaching the integrity and candor of the committees of this House.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The Southern Claims Commission had before it the evidence of General Sherman and of several other generals; but if gentlemen have paid close attention to the statement of General Sherman they have noticed that it is limited to Mrs. Whitney, and the commission state that there is not a word in the evidence of General Sherman with regard to the loyalty of Mr. Whitney. As to the other witnesses referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky it will appear upon an examination of their testimony that their knowledge of these parties was limited to a few months, and that that knowledge came chiefly through Mrs. Whitney. It seems that when the Federal forces occupied a position near the Whitney plantation, Mrs. Whitney, who was a good deal of a diplomat, cultivated friendly relations with them and tried to have the commanding officers believe that she and her husband were loyal. The object of that is of course apparent to everybody; but the evidence which I have submitted, and which is contained in the records of the Southern Claims Commission, is not the evidence of persons whose knowledge was limited to two weeks or two months, is not knowledge obtained from casual conversations with one of these parties at a time when it was to her interest to pretend to be loyal, but is the evidence of the neighbors, friends, and relatives, and of the overseer of Mr. Whitney.

The first witness whose testimony I called the attention of the House to this morning was the overseer, a man who himself served in the Confederate army and who went back and spent some months with Whitney after that, and it shows that during all the early period of the war Whitney was as intensely Confederate as any man who served in the Confederate army. In addition to the witnesses I have already cited, I desire to call attention to the evidence of the Rev. H. M. Booth, whose calling ought to give him consideration with the members of this House, and what adds additional force to his testimony is that he was a brother-in-law of Whitney. If this were a case in court would not his evidence carry more weight, from his long and intimate knowledge of Whitney, than the evidence of General Sherman, or any other general, who simply states that he met Mrs. Whitney on several occasions, and that she seemed to be loyal and patriotic? Ought not his testimony to have more weight with gentlemen here than the testimony of any general whose knowledge of these parties was limited to so short a period of time as General Sherman's was?

Now, what does Mr. Booth say? Remember he was a brother-in-law of Whitney, and was examined at the request of the claimant. He was not a witness brought forward on the part of the Government, but, the commission say, he was called on the part of the claimant. He testified that he lived within a quarter of a mile of Whitney during the war, and that their lands adjoined. He saw Whitney frequently during the war, and he says that Whitney—was at that time as much Confederate as any man living in the country. I never knew anything to indicate that he was favorable to the Federal Army, neither I nor any one else.

Now, if Whitney had been an outspoken man who was favorable to the Federal cause, would not this witness have known it?

Mr. WHEELER. Does that witness say that no one else knew it?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I will read his exact language again: "neither I nor any one else."

Mr. WHEELER. A man who would speak so carelessly in giving his testimony should not be quoted to defeat a claim which is proven to be just by unimpeached and reasonable evidence. How could he know what other people knew or did not know? If I were in the place of the gentleman from Illinois I would take another witness. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. That may be the gentleman's manner of determining the character and value of evidence, but if he had had a little more training in court and less upon the "tented field," he would be better capable of judging of the weight of the testimony I am reading. This witness further says:

I regarded him as being in sympathy with the Confederate cause. I never doubted his loyalty to the South. If he had been in favor of the success of the Federal cause, I think I should have known it.

Here is a witness whose farm joined the claimant's, and who was Mr. Whitney's brother-in-law, a witness who was brought before the Southern Claims Commission on behalf of this claim, but who was too honest to perjure himself for the benefit of this claimant, in order to enable her to mulct the United States Government.

Another witness is Mrs. E. W. Booth. She was the sister of Mr. Whitney, and lived within a quarter of a mile of him during the war. She testifies:

I suppose he was in sympathy with the South; his acts and language led me to that conclusion. I have no reason to doubt his loyalty to the Southern Confederacy.

That is the testimony of Mr. Whitney's own sister.

Now, Mr. Speaker, without taking up further time, I say that no claim of this kind will ever pass this House while I am a member without my protest and my vote against it.

Mr. HOOKER. A word in reply to what has fallen from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. It will be observed that in the findings of the Southern Claims Commission they say that the loyalty of the claimant is not fully and satisfactorily established; but it will be remembered that the Court of Claims had to investigate this very question before they could take cognizance of the claim. They did investigate it, and many of the witnesses who have been named here—all of them who were living—were examined before the court, and other evidence was offered of incidents which had occurred during the war and since the war, all showing that Mr. Whitney was a non-competent, that he did not go into the service, that he was not subject to military duty, and that he was loyal to the Government. Now will this House accept the mere inference of the Southern Claims Commission in preference to the solemn judgment of five judges to whom Congress had referred this question? If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is right in the position he takes, we can go behind every finding of the Court of Claims; every judgment of that court will be a nullity if it can be set aside upon such grounds, especially upon the finding of the Southern Claims Commission, which notoriously took its evidence ex parte upon many occasions.

Now, sir, I think this case has been fully discussed; I think the House understands it, and I call for the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 38, noes 7.

Mr. BACON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will withdraw this bill, because there is no quorum present, and if he insists it will interfere with the remainder of the business for the day.

Mr. HOOKER. I think we can get a quorum; let us try, at any rate.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 2.

Mr. BACON. No quorum.

Mr. HOOKER. The point of "no quorum" having been made, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] having advised me that it is his purpose to insist upon it, the point, I do not feel disposed to block the progress of other matters which may be permitted to pass to-day without a quorum. There is no quorum in the city, as I understand; hence I feel disposed, though very reluctantly, to withdraw this bill for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request for the present consideration of the bill.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION IN REGARD TO LIBRARY MATERIALS, ETC.

Mr. RICE submitted a privileged report; which was read, as follows:

Report of special committee appointed to inquire into whether any member of the House has sought to influence or control the action of the architect of the new Library building in the selection, etc., of materials to be used in the construction of said building.

The special committee appointed in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 4th of September, instant, which directed said committee to inquire into and report whether any member of the House, acting for himself or in concert and combination with others, has sought by persuasion, intimidation, or other corrupt and improper means to influence or control the action of Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, the architect of the new Library building, in the selection, acceptance, or approval of inferior or improper materials to be used in the construction of said building, and the further resolution of the House of Representatives of September 17, directing the said committee to inquire into and report to the House whether any member of the House, acting for himself or others, or in connection with any person acting for or in the interest of others and with the knowledge of any member, or acting for or with the knowledge and in the interest of any company, person, or individual with whom any member of the House is interested or associated in any business, directly or indirectly, has sought by persuasion, intimidation, or any undue or improper influence to direct or control or influence the action of Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, the architect of said building, in the selection or acceptance, or in procuring to be selected or accepted, material to be used in the construction or in the management or control of said building, beg leave to report that they have had the same under consideration; that charges were placed before the committee against Hon. WILLIAM G. STAHLNECKER, a member of the House of Representatives; that counsel in support of the charges and in opposition thereto appeared before the committee and were heard in conducting the investigation; that the sworn testimony of witnesses was taken, and the same is herewith submitted to the House, together with the charges above mentioned.

The testimony is very full and the examination was given considerable latitude, greater perhaps than the matter at issue would strictly warrant in support of the charges.

The committee is unanimous in the opinion that the evidence does not sustain the charges, and there is no impression upon the mind of any member of it that Mr. STAHLNECKER is not fully exonerated from all charges of any improper attempt by persuasion, intimidation, or other corrupt means to influence or control the action of Mr. J. L. Smithmeyer, the architect of said Library building, in the selection or acceptance of any material to be used in the construction thereof, nor does his action in connection therewith in any way reflect or leave a shadow of suspicion upon his honor, or upon the dignity and honor of the House of Representatives.

They desire also to say, in conclusion, that they are satisfied from the investigation that the distinguished gentleman who offered these resolutions and set on foot this inquiry, was actuated by the most honorable motives, and a sincere desire to vindicate the integrity of the House of Representatives.

They recommend that the report, charges, and testimony be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE] asks that this report, with the testimony, be printed and laid over for the future action of the House. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1940, and that it be now considered. Before the question is submitted, I ask consent to make a statement.

Mr. ABBOTT. Regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope my colleague [Mr. ABBOTT] will not insist on calling the regular order just now. Let there be one recognition on the other side for unanimous consent, and one on this.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I hope I may be permitted to make a very brief statement; and then if the gentleman objects——

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is not withdrawn; the Chair has no discretion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move that we proceed to the consideration of order No. 5 on the Calendar, which provides for taking up certain bills for increase of pensions, which have been passed in the Committee of the Whole, and are now in the House, the previous question having been ordered upon them. I dislike to intrude upon the House so often, but I believe there is great merit in these bills, and the persons concerned in them are in many instances really in need that the bills be promptly passed. I appeal to members who may have felt an interest in these bills, to support me in this proposition. The bills certainly can not occupy much time. The reports, which are full, have been read; the cases are very meritorious; I do not believe the House will hesitate to pass the bills if they are taken up. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that we proceed to the consideration of those bills, and then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] can press his motion to proceed with the Private Calendar. These bills can not come up under the arrangement of alphabetical calls of members. The bills have been pending in the House since April last, and it is only a matter of justice that they should now be taken up and passed.

Mr. LANHAM. That can be called up some other time.

Mr. HOOKER. I believe to-day has been set apart for the call of the roll, so that individual members may be permitted to call up bills in which they feel an interest.

The SPEAKER. There are pending certain motions to reconsider votes by which the House rejected certain pension bills. Those are privileged matters.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But I understand that the business which I desire to bring up comes within the line of the regular order of the House at this time. The previous question has been ordered upon these bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that those pension bills upon which there is no motion to reconsider pending are simply reports from the Committee of the Whole House, and come up in their order when the House proceeds to consider measures of that character; that is to say, after the Committee of the Whole House has risen and made its report. But there are two bills upon which motions to reconsider are pending; and those motions are privileged.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have no disposition to put anything in the way of those bills; but I do insist that the bills to which I have referred are entitled to consideration now; the previous question is operating upon them.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has now emphasized his solicitude to have those bills passed; I trust he will permit us to proceed with the regular business.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am not seeking to emphasize simply my own solicitude in this matter. I speak in the interest of those who deserve the attention of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the only pension bills which can be called up now are those upon which motions to reconsider are pending. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE], who has charge of one of those—perhaps both—has announced that he has no desire to call them up during the present session. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, has the right to call them up if he desires to do so.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not wish to interfere with any matter of which another gentleman has charge, but I do wish the gentleman from Iowa were here and would call up the bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Burnett; that is certainly a meritorious bill.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman will allow us to go along in the usual way. There are gentlemen here who are expecting to call up bills in which they feel an interest.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I have bills on the Calendar which I would like to call up when my name shall be reached alphabetically, but I am making this appeal in behalf of the widows of admirals and generals and officers of less rank, whose pensions it is proposed to increase by bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole and are now before the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman call up the motion to reconsider in the case of Mrs. Ward B. Burnett?

Mr. HOOKER. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It is the regular order if the gentleman calls it up.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to postpone it.

The SPEAKER. It has been postponed. It has been passed over at the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE], but the gentleman has the right to call it up if he thinks it is proper to do so.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to do.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not know what may be the idea of the gentleman in charge of the bill of Mrs. Burnett. I should like to see it called up, reconsidered, and passed, and then the House could proceed to the consideration of the other bills.

The SPEAKER. The other bills will come up when the committee rises.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report——

Mr. LANHAM. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, and the Clerk will read the privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred resolution of inquiry concerning the alleged violation of the navigation laws, report the same back with the recommendation that said resolution be adopted.

"Whereas it is alleged by evidence adduced by the committee of the House of Representatives appointed to investigate immigration that in many instances foreigners are commanding and in some instances owning vessels registered or enrolled as vessels of the United States and engaged in the coastwise trade; and

"Whereas the laws of the United States provide that only vessels registered or enrolled as vessels of the United States shall participate in the coastwise trade, and that no vessel shall be registered or enrolled as a vessel of the United States unless it is wholly owned by citizens of the United States and commanded by a citizen of the United States: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the House whether the Treasury Department has information of such violation of the laws of the United States, and, if so, what steps have been taken to vacate the register or enrollment of such vessels, and to prosecute persons who have violated our navigation laws."

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, before that vote is taken I wish to say that the committee investigating the subject of immigration obtained some evidence to the effect that vessels have been registered and engaged in the coastwise trade under the command of alien captains, which is not in accordance with law; that evidence is now being published. It shows several cases of vessels registered and commanded by aliens through fraud perpetrated upon the collectors and custom-house officers. I do not know from the evidence obtained by that committee, nor have I heard it before alleged, that there is a registry of any vessel at any of the custom-houses contrary to the law with the knowledge or connivance of the custom-house officials. In a case in Boston there was proof in more cases than one perhaps, certainly in one, wherein they took a cook who was an American citizen, and obtained clearance papers in his name as commander, and before the vessel was out of sight of the custom-house the de facto captain, who was an Englishman and an alien, took possession and command, and sent the cook to the galley.

There was also evidence taken by the committee where by fraud practiced upon the naturalization laws through certain persons papers were obtained for aliens in some cases in a few hours, or in a day after they had arrived in New York. They came there for the purpose of obtaining command of some coastwise vessels, and for consideration paid have obtained what purported to be naturalization papers, issued out of Judge Moore's court, of Brooklyn; but the collector, when he was sworn and examined by the committee subsequently, testified that when this allegation was brought to his knowledge he sent a trusted officer to examine the records of that court, and that no such case was found on record, although the man in each case who had command of the vessel had papers showing he was a naturalized citizen.

So there was no evidence taken by that committee which shows clearance has been given to any vessel contrary to law so far as the collector is concerned. When the commander was of foreign birth he had papers of his having been naturalized. There is no evidence, however, of frauds having been perpetrated in that way wherein the customs officers are at fault.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire simply to say that while the facts are substantially as stated by the gentleman from Alabama, that numerous complaints were made to the Secretary of the Treasury of informalities under our navigation laws, and those complaints have been investigated by the Secretary, and a mass of information obtained which disproves the allegation, which was that our navigation laws have been violated, it is thought best those facts should be laid before the public which will tend to show these allegations have no basis to rest upon. If there is nothing more to be said, I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. On the 17th day of this month I introduced a resolution of inquiry, which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings. Not having been reported back, in conformity to the rules of the House, I now ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the resolution be now considered with a view to submitting an amendment at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the resolution to be read to determine whether it presents a privileged question or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is reported in the public prints that the contract for the construction of the Brooklyn Federal building was awarded, after advertisement, to one Gobel, of Chicago, at his bid of $623,000, and that said Gobel failed to comply with the terms of said contract, and that the Supervising Architect has forfeited his check for $1,000 deposited with his bid, and that the said official has since awarded the contract to Bernard Gallagher, of Brooklyn, at his bid of $860,000; and

Whereas it was reported that said Gobel had undue advantages in the matter of information; that other contractors said that with these advantages they could have reduced their bids: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings be directed to inquire into all the facts of the case, and to report to the House whether the Supervising Architect was derelict in his duty in failing to readvertise for proposals, and in awarding the contract at a figure nearly a quarter of a million of dollars more than the lowest offer submitted at the letting.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and that it be adopted with an amendment which I shall propose.

The SPEAKER. This is not a privileged resolution. It is not a resolution calling upon the head of a Department for information, but a mere resolution directing a committee of the House to make a certain inquiry.

Mr. CHEADLE. But I propose to amend it with a view to calling upon the head of a Department for certain information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must treat it, however, as it is now. It does not in its present form present a privileged question.

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CHEADLE. It will be a privileged resolution when the amendment is submitted.

The SPEAKER. But the amendment is not now before the House. The motion of the gentleman is to discharge the committee. What the purpose of the gentleman may be hereafter is not a question that can enter into the consideration of the subject. It is not a privileged question to be called up in its present form, and the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. CHEADLE. I do not pretend to say whether or not it presents a question of privilege, but——

Mr. SPINOLA. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CHEADLE. I do not think there will be a solitary objection (when I make a statement as to the facts in connection with this building) to the consideration of the resolution at the present time.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. CHEADLE. One moment, Mr. Speaker. Without saying whether or not the Supervising Architect has been derelict in his duty, I want to call the attention of the House to this important fact, that in awarding the contract for the building, instead of its being awarded to the lowest bidder, it was awarded at a sum 35 per cent. greater than the lowest bidder, and was not awarded even to the next lowest bidder. If there is any looseness in the statutes by which an executive officer of the Government is permitted to award a contract for a quarter of a million dollars more than the lowest bid, or any lower bidder, I think it presents such a question as will permit the perpetration of the gravest frauds upon the Government, and is therefore a matter which should receive the prompt and careful attention of Congress.

Mr. SPINOLA. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information upon the subject, it will be a privileged resolution under the rules of the House. But the resolution to which he refers is simply one calling upon a committee of the House to make an investigation of the matter alleged, and is not privileged.

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a request to the House.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BLOUNT. If it is insisted upon, I will, of course, acquiesce; but I hope I will have the privilege of testing the sense of the House on a proposition I wish to submit.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I propose to leave the city on Monday, and the House has determined that when it adjourns to-day it will be to meet on Monday next. On yesterday a matter from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was being considered in the morning hour. Another hour remains to the committee, and I ask unanimous consent that the hour may be preserved to the committee until my return.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to make a brief statement, with a view to submitting a request. I am compelled to leave here on Tuesday, and I hold in my hand a bill which has been on the Calendar for a long time appropriating only the sum of $130, a most just and equitable bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration and that it be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read subject to the right of objection, if the demand for the regular order is withdrawn.

Mr. SPINOLA. I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Mississippi to insist upon the demand.

Mr. HOOKER. I will withdraw it for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9874) for the relief of administrator of Alfred Alcorn.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to know what is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports on bills of a private nature.

Mr. MORGAN. Has any order been made that in the proceedings to-day we will pursue the course adopted on last Friday?

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair does not preside in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORGAN. I assume the same course will be pursued, and the gentleman's name will be called in time when we get into committee. Therefore, I object.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of committees for reports; and that gentlemen having reports from committees may be permitted to hand them in at the desk.

There was no objection.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

MACADAMIZED ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the following bill (H. R. 11524) as a substitute for bill H. R. 4307 to provide for the construction of a macadamized road to the national cemetery near Wilmington, N. C., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MATTIE S. WHITNEY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2185) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Mattie S. Whitney as administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, heretofore referred to said court; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

D. W. BOUTWELL.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2253) for the relief of D. W. Boutwell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

B. F. ROBINSON.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 351) for the relief of B. F. Robinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOWDEN. Before the regular order is proceeded with I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BOWDEN. I wish to ask consent to make a statement in reference to a bill which was passed on the day before yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is the regular order insisted upon?

Mr. LANHAM. I think we had better proceed with the regular order.

Mr. BOWDEN. I desire to lay before the House a statement.

Mr. LANHAM. If it is just a statement, I will yield for a moment.

Mr. ABBOTT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOWDEN. On the day before yesterday——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair has no discretion in the matter, but must proceed with the regular order.

Mr. BOWDEN. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] insists on the regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and pending that I desire to submit a request that we pursue the same order as was adopted when the House was in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar last Friday, namely, that the roll of members be called in alphabetical order, commencing where we left off, and that each member be recognized to call up a bill for consideration if it be not objected to by five members.

Mr. BOWDEN. I propose to get in my statement, and I object to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Prior to putting that motion I will state——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] insists on it. [After a pause.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BOWDEN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 6.

Mr. BOWDEN. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion to adjourn was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOWDEN] as tellers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The inquiry I desire to make is whether the order allowing members to call up bills alphabetically was a continuing order or not.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair was not in the House at the time the order was made. The Chair supposes that it was not a continuing order from the fact that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] asks that it be applied to this day's proceedings.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] whether the order allowing members to call up bills was a continuing order.

Mr. LANHAM. It applied only to that day, and I have requested that it be made applicable to this day's proceedings.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to go into Committee of the Whole prevails, this request can be made of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LANHAM. In the interest of the disposition of business, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia be allowed one minute.

The SPEAKER. That request has been made and objected to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] and not withdrawn, and the gentleman insists upon the regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. Then the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOWDEN] insists upon the point of no quorum. There is evidently no quorum in the House, and if it is to be insisted upon, the best thing to do would be to move to adjourn, and I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The House has just refused to adjourn, and no business has been transacted since.

The tellers proceeded with the count.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move a recess until 8 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I make that motion.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Division.

Mr. BOWDEN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the demand for a division.

The SPEAKER. The "ayes" have it, and the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] to go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar is agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk shall call the roll in alphabetical order, commencing where we left off on Friday last, and that as each gentleman's name is called he may be allowed to call up one bill, not including pension bills, provided that the consideration of it be not objected to by five members.

There was no objection, and the order was made.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. When my name was called on last Friday under this rule I was absent. I understand that my privilege by unanimous consent was reserved at the request of my colleague, Mr. PEEL. I desire to know, therefore, if it is in order for me to call up a bill under that reserved right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that action was taken when the gentleman's name was reached on Friday last and the gentleman is now recognized for the purpose of asking consideration of a bill.

WILLIAM A. BEVENS.

Mr. DUNN. Then I call up the bill (S. 317) for the relief of William A. Bevens.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to open and restate the accounts between the United States and William A. Bevans as receiver of public moneys at Batesville, Ark. That in such restatement of said accounts the Secretary shall charge Bevans with all such sums of money as were in his hands at any time as receiver aforesaid, and shall credit him with all such sums as he was compelled by the State of Arkansas or other superior force to surrender, and with such other sums as in equity should be allowed credit for, notwithstanding any previous rejection of such items by the Treasury Department or by any other tribunal.

SEC. 2. That upon such restatement the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to said Bevans any sum of money found due him, not to exceed the sum of $20,000.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MILO M'CRILLIS.

Mr. GEST. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of Milo McCrillis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Milo McCrillis, late postmaster at Weaver's Corners, Huron County, Ohio, the sum of $75.76, the same being for postage-stamps, postal-cards, and stamped envelopes feloniously taken by burglars from the office of said postmaster March 1, 1883, without any fault or negligence on his part.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the reports ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman now desire the reading of the report?

Mr. KILGORE. I will not make that demand as to this bill; but shall do so from this time forward.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. LIND. In behalf of Governor GEAR, who is absent to-day, I wish to make a brief statement. Some days ago he obtained recognition to offer a bill granting a right of way, and it was objected to. I now ask unanimous consent to present the bill on behalf of Governor GEAR, who is necessarily absent to-day. It is a very small matter, simply providing for a right of way through an Indian reservation in my district.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any excuse for it. If there is some overruling necessity I will not object, but if not I will object.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. MORGAN. Regular order.

J. W. PARISH & CO.

Mr. GIFFORD. I call up the bill (H. R. 9718) for the relief of J. W. Parish & Co.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on War Claims, and as the report is quite long I suggest that the reading of it be dispensed with, and if desired I will make a brief statement of the case.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the report ought to be read.

Mr. PEEL. It is quite long and will occupy a good deal of time, and I can state the substance of it more briefly.

Mr. KILGORE. If I yield in this case, other gentlemen will demand the same privilege, and I think the report had better be read.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Joseph W. Parish, George C. Hadley, and William L. Huse, lately composing the firm of J. W. Parish & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., praying for relief, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

This is a claim for the payment for loss sustained by the petitioners, as they allege, on account of the meltage and loss of ice which they had purchased for the Government hospitals in 1864, in pursuance of a written contract made with the medical purveyor at Louisville, Ky., and approved by the Surgeon-General, but which was subsequently changed in an arbitrary way by the Secretary of War.

The facts in the case are as follows:

On the 27th day of November, 1863, the Acting Surgeon-General of the United States, at Washington, through his assistant, C. H. Crane, surgeon, United States Army, directed Surgeon D. L. Magruder, United States Army, medical purveyor at Louisville, Ky., "to advertise for proposals for furnishing ice for all the United States general hospitals at the West (those of the Division of the Mississippi, and of the Department of the Gulf upon the Mississippi and its tributaries), in such quantities as may be required for the use of the sick and wounded during the year 1864." (Exhibit A, attached hereto.)

In pursuance of such directions, Surgeon Magruder advertised for proposals on the 4th day of December, 1863; and on the 7th day of said December informed Acting Surgeon-General Barnes, at Washington, stating in his letter that he had the advertisement "inserted in five newspapers of the principal cities of the West, namely, the Louisville Journal, Cincinnati Gazette, Chicago Tribune, and the Democrat and Union, of St. Louis. (Exhibits B and C.)

J. W. Parish & Co. thereupon and in pursuance of said advertisement filed their bid covering all the points specified, namely, to "furnish ice to all the United States general hospitals at the West (those of the Division of the Mississippi and of the Department of the Gulf upon the Mississippi and its tributaries), in such quantities as might be required for the use of the sick and wounded during the year 1864." This bid, together with other bids thus filed, eleven in all, were forwarded by Surgeon Magruder on the 21st of December, 1863, to the Surgeon-General of the United States at Washington. On the 25th of the same month all bids were returned to him, with the following letter:

SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 25, 1863.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 21st instant, inclosing proposals for furnishing ice for the ensuing year, etc., I am instructed to return the bids, and to direct you to award the contract as may be deemed by you most advantageous to the service.

These offers are considered fair and reasonable by the Acting Surgeon-General.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. H. CRANE,
Surgeon, United States Army.

By order of the Acting Surgeon-General.

Surgeon D. L. MAGRUDER, U. S. A., Medical Purveyor, Louisville, Ky.

Armed with this full and complete authority, Surgeon Magruder, on the 30th day of December, 1863, entered into a written contract with the memorialists to deliver at various places, including New Orleans, La., and the Department of the Gulf, the necessary amount of ice required at each place for the year 1864, agreeing to pay for the same the various specified amounts set out in said contracts (see Exhibit D).

Parish and his associates state that, immediately upon being notified of the acceptance of their bid, they were directed by Dr. Magruder and Ice Inspector Learned to proceed with the fulfillment of the contract, for the reason that the contract was a large one and the season for obtaining a superior quality of ice would in all probability be of short duration. Accordingly they purchased and hired the requisite steam-boats and barges for the transportation of the ice, and also with their workmen proceeded to the places on the Illinois and Upper Mississippi Rivers where the proper ice could be procured, and cut and placed in temporary ice houses, erected by them for that purpose, a sufficient quantity of ice to supply the entire quantity required by said contract. For New Orleans and Baton Rouge they cut and put up 5,000 tons, that being the quantity estimated by the Medical Department for those points—which ice, so prepared, cost the sum of $2.50 per ton—and for said 5,000 tons the sum of $12,500. They chartered ten or eleven barges, at a cost of from $70 to $80 per day, to fill this contract and transport the ice, the average length of said charters being about five months, and fully one-fourth of said barge stock was furnished for the transportation and delivery of the ice required at New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

The contract which was made and executed, as above set forth, was forwarded to Washington and approved by the Acting Surgeon-General, J. K. Barnes, January 7, 1864 (see Exhibit D), and duplicate delivered to the contractors, was returned to Surgeon Magruder at Louisville. While the contractors were busy in purchasing material, chartering barges and steam-boats, and packing ice, in fulfillment of the said contract, Dr. Magruder was ordered by the Secretary of War to return the papers and contract, approved January 7, 1864, to Washington. Some pretended charge of fraud or dishonest practice in securing the execution of the contract had reached the ears of the Secretary, and was made the occasion for this order. The matter seems to have been placed in the hands of C. A. Dana, then Assistant Secretary of War, for investigation.

On the 27th of January, 1864, Mr. Dana sent a communication to Secretary Stanton, in which he declares that he has not been able to discover any evidence of fraudulent design or dishonest practice in the making of the contract; that Parish & Co. were the ice contractors the previous year, when they had faithfully executed their contract at considerable loss; that it was indispensable that the contractors should be men in respect of whom there could be no fear of failure; that it was more convenient to deal with one contractor than with many; that Parish & Co. were the lowest bidders out of eleven bids, and that, considering the risks involved, the prices were not extravagant. Mr. Dana added: "But the stipulations in the papers executed do not appear sufficiently precise and guarded to secure faithful fulfillment, and I therefore also recommend the execution of new and amended papers for that object." (See Exhibit E.)

In pursuance of this a new form of contract was forwarded to Dr. Magruder, which was similar in all essential respects to the one already executed, differing only in its phraseology and in unimportant verbal changes. But before this latter paper could be signed by your petitioners Dr. Magruder received a telegram from the Secretary of War directing him to erase from the said form of contract, as points of delivery, New Orleans and the Department of the Gulf. The paper, with these erasures, was presented to the petitioners for signature. They had already provided all the ice requisite for fulfilling the contract which they theretofore signed, and which had been approved by the Surgeon-General at Washington. They had also procured the means, at great expense, of transporting the ice to New Orleans and the Gulf Department. To have their deliberate written contract with the Government thus rudely and arbitrarily set aside, and to be prevented from delivering the ice they had purchased and prepared to deliver, was a great hardship and would result in great loss. Therefore they protested; but protestations were of no avail. To fail in delivering the 5,000 tons at New Orleans and other points on the Gulf, under the contract, would bring heavy loss; but to fail on the whole contract, after the investment they had made, they believed to be utter ruin. They were thus compelled, as they supposed, to sign the paper, but did so under protest, and giving notice to Dr. Magruder, as the only representative of the Government present, that they should thereafter insist upon their rights in the premises. And subsequently they did tender the ice for New Orleans and the Gulf to the United States ice inspector, and urged him to accept the same, which he refused to do.

The contractors accordingly proceeded and furnished the ice, as provided in the first contract, to all places other than New Orleans and the Department of the Gulf, and received their pay therefor. But the ice they had purchased for New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and other places on the Gulf melted on their hands and was a total loss. They were also damaged to the extent of $6,000 and upwards by the preparations they had made to deliver said ice, in chartering transportation on the river, and in expenditures in preserving the ice ready to deliver at any time up to the expiration of the year 1864, as by their contract they had agreed. All this clearly appears in the evidence filed with the committee, most of which was taken under commission from the Court of Claims.

Col. J. H. Ferry, assistant quartermaster United States Army, stationed at Louisville, Ky., during the years 1863 and 1864, testifies that he was aware that Parish & Co. had contracted to furnish ice for the Department of the Gulf, and believes that they fully prepared themselves to do so during the month of January, 1864, at great cost, and adds: "From my best knowledge and belief Parish & Co. expended for preparing to fulfill the contract for the Department of the Gulf from $18,000 to $20,000." General Robert Allen, deputy quartermaster-general United States Army, officially indorsed the statement of Colonel Ferry.

In pursuance of the protest made by the claimants, and to recover such losses as they had sustained by reason of the violation of the contract on the part of the United States, as above set forth, they promptly entered suit in the Court of Claims. The court held that the United States violated its contract with the claimants, and intimated that the claimants were largely damaged by such violation, and that they "were unjustly treated by the officers of the Government." But the court applied the strict legal rule of the common law, which is blind to all equity, that the claimants, by executing the second contract, had waived their rights under the first; and, as the contract was entire, the claimants could have refused to perform any part of it after it had been violated by the United States, and by not so refusing waived their right to damages and must be held to have accepted the second for the first contract.

In other words, had the claimants seen fit to have refused to sign the second contract, and thus possibly ruined each of them, they would have been in position to have brought suit against the United States with possible hopes of recovery. But the evidence before the court showed clearly that there was no intention on the part of the claimants to relinquish any of their rights under the first contract. They were forced to act in an emergency without counsel, and did what they supposed would preserve their rights. The proof that they objected to the second contract and protested against signing it, and that they subsequently tendered the ice for New Orleans, etc., is abundant. They gave distinct notice to the officers and agents of the United States intrusted with the matter that they would seek redress for the invasion of their rights, with a distinct avowal that they would not waive them, and their failure in court seems to have been one of the unjust results of applying a harsh technical rule.

The fact that they protested against this action of the Government, that they executed the new contract under a practical duress, that the circumstances of the claimants were such that while to execute the second contract would damage them greatly, still, not to execute it and thereby save to them a market for the great mass of ice they had procured, relying upon the first contract, would be utter ruin, seems to have had no weight in the suit at law, although it develops an irresistible equity.

The Supreme Court on appeal sustained the rule laid down by the lower court, that the signing of the second contract, although done under protest, was a waiver of their legal claim under the first contract.

These complainants could not have avoided their liability to the Government under the first contract. Had they attempted it, they and their bondsmen would have been brought into court and made to pay all the damages. But the Government, by the right of might alone, tenders the alternative of a change of contract, or something much worse.

From the foregoing statement, which is well sustained by the evidence in the case, your committee reach the conclusion that the prayer of the petitioners for relief is well founded, and we recommend the payment of $18,500 as provided in the accompanying bill.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the digest of the case, following the report, be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist on the further reading of this paper, but I shall want a very satisfactory explanation from my friend from Arkansas as to how far this claim is mixed up with one which has heretofore been acted upon by the House. I find that there were two contracts, but it seems that the Court of Claims decided—that the United States violated its contract with the claimants and intimated that the claimants were largely damaged by such violation, and were unjustly treated by the officers of the Government, but the court applied the strict legal rule of the common law which is blind to all equity——

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, is this bill under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] asked unanimous consent that the further reading of the report should be dispensed with.

Mr. OATES. I understood that was objected to.

Mr. PEEL. I have the evidence here in my hand which will answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana and which shows that this has nothing to do with the other claim.

Mr. OATES. I rise for the purpose of objecting to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That question has not been presented yet.

Mr. OATES. But the gentleman from Indiana seems to be discussing the bill, and that is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply waived the further reading of this paper, with the view of having an explanation as to how far this transaction was mixed up with a former one for which we have already passed a bill.

Mr. PEEL. I can answer that in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent. Objections to the consideration of the bill have not been called for, and if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] makes the point of order, the Chair will submit the question.

Mr. OATES. I do make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] thinks he has evidence sufficient to satisfy the House in this case, I will withhold my objection for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to put my question to the gentleman from Arkansas. The report states that the Court of Claims—applied the strict legal rule of the common law, which is blind to all equity—

I do not think that was written by a lawyer—that the claimants, by executing the second contract, had waived their rights under the first; and, as the contract was entire, the claimants could have refused to perform any part of it after it had been violated by the United States, and by not so refusing waived their right to damages and must be held to have accepted the second for the first contract.

Now, these are some of the provisions that were in the case we have already acted on.

Mr. PEEL. And the gentleman wants to know whether this has any connection with that case?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEEL. I have here a letter from the Department, dated May 27, 1888, only a few months ago, addressed to Senator MITCHELL, who had called for the same information. I will read from that letter in reply to the gentleman's question:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 17th instant, inclosing a petition of Joseph W. Parish, George C. Hadley, and William L. Huse, praying relief on account of the loss of 5,000 tons of ice, claimed to have been purchased by them in 1864, under orders from officers of the Medical Department of the Army, and not accepted; also copy of an act approved February 20, 1886, allowing Joseph W. Parish $58,341.85 on account of ice purchased by him for the Medical Department of the Army and not accepted.

In answer to your first question I would say there is no connection whatever between the subject of the present petition and the transactions covered by the act of February 20, 1886. The latter was for ice collected in the early part of 1863, under a contract with Henry Johnson, dated at Washington, March 5, 1863; the former is for providing ice in 1864, under a contract first made with Surg. David L. Magruder, at Louisville, Ky., December 30, 1863, and afterwards amended and altered by authority of the Secretary of War.

So the gentleman will see that this contract was for a different year, with a different firm, and was a different transaction entirely, having nothing in the world to do with the other claim.

Mr. KILGORE. When was it that this transaction occurred?

Mr. PEEL. This contract was made in the fall of 1863 for the performance of the contract in 1864.

Mr. KILGORE. How does it happen that the matter has stood over so long?

Mr. PEEL. It has been before the Department, and before the Court of Claims, and before the Supreme Court, and then before Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. When was it first presented to Congress?

Mr. PEEL. I do not remember the time exactly, but very soon after the Supreme Court passed upon it. There has been no laches on the part of the claimant.

Mr. PAYSON. But the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court both decided against the claimants, I understand.

Mr. PEEL. Upon the ground that they had accepted a new contract, which, under the action of the Secretary of War, they were compelled to accept. They had made a perfect contract with the officers of the Government to furnish ice for all the Western departments, including New Orleans and the Department of the Gulf. The Government officers made the estimates of the quantities necessary for each department.

The estimate was 5,000 tons as the quantity necessary to fill the order for the Department of the Gulf. Then, as the report and evidence show, a few days after the contract had been concluded by the Surgeon-General, these parties were directed by the officers of the Government to proceed at once and procure the ice. They did so. But, as the evidence shows, after they had incurred the liability for this ice, the Secretary of War, for no cause that any one has ever been able to find out, ordered the provision for supplying the Department of the Gulf to be stricken from the contract, and the 5,000 tons which had been estimated by the officers of the Government as necessary for that department were a loss upon the hands of these contractors. According to the contract these parties were to be paid $25 a ton for this ice, delivered in New Orleans, for the Department of the Gulf. That provision was stricken out; and the Government, at the instance of the Secretary of War, refused arbitrarily to accept the ice thus contracted for, the contract for that department being let to another party, a party in Boston, who received $32 a ton for the ice.

This claim is not for the contract price, which would be the basis of payment between man and man. The Supreme Court, in this case, has laid down the rigid rule that these parties can recover only the actual cost of the ice, with expenses of transportation, etc. Under the strict rule laid down by the court these claimants are denied payment for anything except the money they actually paid out. Not a cent is allowed for interest, profit, or anything of that kind.

Mr. OATES. Did not these parties receive all the money that the second contract provided for?

Mr. PEEL. I believe they did.

Mr. OATES. And they now want the difference between that sum and the sum named in the first contract?

Mr. PEEL. No; they want payment for the ice which they were ordered to procure and which they did procure, but which the Government under a military order of Secretary Stanton refused to accept.

Mr. KILGORE. Did they not sell the ice to somebody else?

Mr. PEEL. No; the evidence is full and complete that the ice was a total loss. We have the testimony of officers of the Government—the ice inspectors——

Mr. KILGORE. Why is it that this claim has hung on for twenty-five years? That looks rather singular.

Mr. PEEL. As soon as the war was ended these parties presented the matter to the Surgeon-General; it took some time to get the matter through that Department; then it was referred to the Court of Claims, where it was worked on for several years; then it went to the Supreme Court, and it was there a long time. When the Supreme Court got through with the case, the parties commenced coming to Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the gentleman from Arkansas should be permitted to withdraw his bill.

Mr. PEEL. I do not see any reason why I should do so; for if there was ever any claim that had equity on its side this is such a one. When officers of the Government acting under the authority of their superiors have entered into a written contract with private citizens for the delivery of certain supplies to the Government at certain times for the benefit of the sick and wounded; when that contract has been completed and approved by the Surgeon-General, as shown here; when the contractors, under direction of the officers of the Government, have gone on and procured the supplies, paid out their money, incurred the fullest liability; when under these circumstances the Government, by an arbitrary order, has refused to take the supplies contracted for, and gives the contract to somebody else, I must confess that if there is no equity in a claim for reimbursement I am a stranger to every principle of equity. That is such a case. The evidence is not from the claimants, but from the officers of the Government themselves. It is plain and emphatic. The contract was made, approved, and signed. Among other places, this ice was to be delivered at New Orleans for the Department of the Gulf, the estimate of the officers of the Government being 5,000 tons for that part of the contract. It was late in December when the contract was made, and the time for procuring ice was rapidly passing away. The officers of the Government directed the parties to go and procure the ice. They did so; they tendered it at the place designated time and again after the arbitrary order of the Secretary of War. An officer of the Government, an inspector who was an expert, testifies——

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the nature of the other claim allowed two years ago?

Mr. PEEL. That was a contract made at St. Louis by the medical department there; and the order was simply suspended.

Mr. PAYSON. I remember the other claim; it was in the Forty-ninth Congress. We made an appropriation of something over $58,000 in behalf of these same parties for ice which, it was claimed, the Government had contracted for and afterwards refused to receive. That claim was paid. Why was not this claim presented with that?

Mr. PEEL. Because, although the firm name was similar, the members of the firm were different. It was not the same firm. Besides this claim was pending before the court when Congress acted on that.

Mr. PAYSON. Can the gentleman refer us to the volume of reports containing the decision of the Supreme Court of this case?

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir. Let me read from the Senate report; and I ask gentlemen to remember that this claim has in its favor the unanimous report of the committees of both Houses:

There seems to be no doubt as to the sufficiency of proof as to the first item. In a former case before the Supreme Court (10 Otto, 500), where the circumstances were quite similar, it was held that the measure of damages should be what the ice cost the contractors and their expenses in connection therewith made necessary by the breach of contract on the part of the Government.

The rule between individuals would give the contractors the contract price of the ice, which in this case would be largely in excess of the amount now claimed. But the court having fixed the rule where the Government makes the breach, we can only follow it.

It being conceded that the first item is sufficiently proven, attention is directed to the second.

The exact language of the court in Otto, supra, is:

"Claimants are entitled to the expenses and losses incident to the preparation to meet the demand of the notice served on them."

Learned, the United States ice inspector, testifies that he ordered the ice, and that it was accordingly procured by the contractors. They paid $2.50 a ton for the 5,000 tons. What else did they do? They bought lumber and built ice-houses for storage, and procured transportation to carry the ice from points in Illinois to New Orleans and other places on the Gulf.

The testimony on this point is as follows, by Mr. Learned:

"That this deponent was engaged in the ice business on the Mississippi River for more than fifteen years previous to the last-named date (1861) and knows the cost and expense of securing ice and making provisions for its transportation, and that from his knowledge of what Parish & Co. did to secure ice and provide transportation for the same to the Department of the Gulf, he verily believes they incurred cost and expenses to the amount of $18,000.

Mr. PAYSON. That doubtless included the other ice they had contracted to deliver there.

Mr. PEEL. No, sir. Listen.

Eighteen thousand dollars more than they would have incurred had they not supposed that they were required by their contract to supply the ice for that department; and deponent further says that all the ice required to enable Parish & Co. to supply ice to said department had been secured and full provision made for its transportation previous to the final order of the War Department prohibiting the ice for the Department of the Gulf.

Mr. PAYSON. That ice was secured under the second contract.

Mr. PEEL. No; under the first contract. The Secretary of War refused to include in the contract the Department of the Gulf after the parties had procured the ice for that department.

Mr. PAYSON. It was on the Upper Mississippi where that ice crop was harvested; am I right about that?

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. The question I wish to ask is this: Why does the committee of this House report that this ice was tendered in New Orleans and refused there? If the first contract was not executed and the second contract was, if the parties went on and performed their obligations under the second contract, and the ice was housed on the Upper Mississippi, how could it possibly have been tendered in New Orleans under the first contract?

Mr. PEEL. Under the first contract they bought the ice for all points. It was an entirety. The various points were estimated for. This was for 5,000 tons.

Mr. PAYSON. That was under the first contract?

Mr. PEEL. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the second one you abrogated that?

Mr. PEEL. Yes; by the Secretary of War.

Mr. PAYSON. This can not be true that they tendered the ice at New Orleans.

Mr. PEEL. They tendered it, but they would not bring it down if it was not to be accepted.

The closing part of the report is as follows:

In addition to these, Mr. Parish states in his deposition that although the firm had on hand about $20,000 worth of barges, yet they purchased others at a cost of $9,000, and chartered ten or eleven more at a further cost of $75 or $80 per day, charters running five months, and that at least one-fourth of this barge stock was necessary to deliver the ice to points on the Gulf. And this does not include the steamers necessary for towing the barges.

It will be seen that Learned and Ferry put the extra expenses made necessary by the breach of the contract on the part of the Government at $18,000, the latter saying from $18,000 to $20,000.

This testimony of two experts, made when all the facts and circumstances were fresh in their memories, should have great weight. It should also be noted that one of these witnesses was a Government officer, selected on account of his peculiar fitness to be an ice inspector.

Taking the testimony of these four witnesses, Learned, Ferry, Huse, and Parish, on the point of "expense incurred," it would seem that the second item in the account is well sustained.

Therefore, in view of all the circumstances, your committee report back the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to ask a question.

Mr. PEEL. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Subsequently, that is subsequent to agreeing to the second contract, subsequent to that they did tender that ice for New Orleans and the Gulf to the United States ice inspector and urged him to accept the same, which, however, he refused to do. If I understand my friend from Arkansas correctly there was not any actual delivery of ice to the United States inspector.

Mr. PEEL. No, they did not have the ice down there and actually make a tender of the ice itself to the United States inspector, because if such had been the case their damages would have been much heavier.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are you putting the 5,000 tons of ice at?

Mr. PEEL. Two dollars and a half, when they were to get $25 under the contract. It is only the actual cost of the ice.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is singular General Dana reports this first contract was so loosely drawn that he required one to be made more definite in its language.

Mr. PEEL. Only in language.

Mr. HOLMAN. It appears that—

Mr. Dana added: "But the stipulations in the papers executed do not appear sufficiently precise and guarded to secure faithful fulfillment, and I therefore also recommend the execution of new and amended papers for that object." (See Exhibit E.)

In pursuance of this a new form of contract was forwarded to Dr. Magruder, which was similar in all essential respects to the one already executed, differing only in its phraseology and in unimportant verbal changes. But before this latter paper could be signed by your petitioners Dr. Magruder received a telegram from the Secretary of War directing him to erase from the said form of contract, as points of delivery, New Orleans and the Department of the Gulf. The paper with these erasures was presented to the petitioners for signature.

Mr. PEEL (showing a paper). Yes, here is where it is erased; he drew his pen across it.

Mr. HOLMAN (reading from report of the committee):

They had already provided all the ice requisite for fulfilling the contract which they had theretofore signed, and which had been approved by the Surgeon-General at Washington. They had also procured the means, at great expense, of transporting the ice to New Orleans and the Gulf Department. To have their deliberate, written contract with the Government thus rudely and arbitrarily set aside, and to be prevented from delivering the ice they had purchased and prepared to deliver, was a great hardship, and would result in great loss. Therefore they protested, but protestations were of no avail. To fail in delivering the 5,000 tons at New Orleans and other points on the Gulf under the contract would bring heavy loss; but to fail on the whole contract, after the investment they had made, they believed to be utter ruin. They were thus compelled, as they supposed, to sign the paper, but did so under protest, and giving notice to Dr. Magruder, as the only representative of the Government present, that they should thereafter insist upon their rights in the premises. And subsequently they did tender the ice for New Orleans and the Gulf to the United States ice inspector, and urged him to accept the same, which he refused to do.

The whole trouble springs out of that second contract.

Mr. PEEL. Yes, and that is the reason why the court did not allow it.

Mr. PAYSON. They were the same gentlemen?

Mr. PEEL. But for different places and different work.

Mr. PAYSON. But they were the same men. I see Hughes figures here as having been connected with both. Although the parties may be different, the gentleman from Arkansas is not prepared to say this is not the same old ice. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEEL. I say emphatically this is not the same ice.

Mr. HOLMAN. They were fulfilling the contracts together.

Mr. PEEL. The contracts were made and approved by the officers of the Government and they were ready to deliver the ice, but when they tendered it it was refused. The question now is whether or not the Government will pay the damages in court or will allow these parties to suffer this loss.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, this is a very cold subject, and I do not think it is necessary to consider it any further. I call for the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Five members having risen to object, the bill was not considered.

GEORGE CAMPBELL.

Mr. GREENMAN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6018) for the relief of George Campbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record of muster-in of George Campbell, late second lieutenant of Company A, of the One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, such muster-in of said Campbell as second lieutenant to bear date of February 23, 1865, when said Campbell took command of said Company A by order of Col. J. A. Colvin, commandant of said One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment. And said George Campbell shall be, and hereby is, entitled to all pay and allowances or emoluments as if mustered in at such date: Provided, That the pay and allowances actually received shall be deducted from the sum to be paid under this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much is involved in the bill?

Mr. GREENMAN. The time he served was from the 23d day of February to the 16th day of March, less than one month.

Mr. HOLMAN. At what rank?

Mr. GREENMAN. As second lieutenant.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, MARIETTA, GA.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6189) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian church in Marietta, Ga.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,478 be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the trustees of the Presbyterian church in Marietta, Ga., for any and all damages done said church by the Federal Army in the year 1864.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

In July, 1864, the officers in command of the United States forces at Marietta took possession of the Presbyterian church at that point and converted it into a hospital for the Army. While the Army occupied it no care was taken to protect the property, nor were repairs put upon it, and when it was turned over to the congregation they found the fencing all gone, the windows, sash, and glass broken, the plastering and lathing stripped from the walls, the flooring, pulpit, and pews carried off. The use, occupation, and material carried off are proved to be worth $1,478 by the oaths of parties who were present at the time, and is fully proven in every particular.

No tribunal has had jurisdiction to settle this claim. In 1865 the trustees of said church applied to General Donaldson, chief quartermaster of the Military Division of the Tennessee, for compensation for use and occupation and for the material taken and used by the Army, and that officer referred the case to Col. C. K. Smith, chief quartermaster Department of Georgia, for report, and the report made by J. M. Marsh, agent for the Quartermaster's Department, fixes the injury to said property at $1,478. In April, 1866, General Donaldson notified the trustees of said church that he had no authority to pay the claim.

Your committee are of opinion that the church should be reimbursed by the Government, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me call attention first to this fact, that this bill provides for the payment for use, occupation, and damages exclusively, the very things which by the law the officers of the Government were prohibited from doing, by the act of 1867, in express and definite terms, and again, so far as the Court of Claims is concerned, by the provisions of the Bowman act.

I know that several such bills have been pressed heretofore, and gentlemen do not desire to object to the passage of bills which seem to be for the benefit of the Christian religion; but at the same time I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this claim is for the very purpose which is prohibited by the Bowman act, and also by the law enacted in 1867 amendatory of the act of 1864. By this and by the provisions of the Bowman act the Government has expressly denied any liability in such cases.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let me ask my colleague, has Congress at any time allowed claims for the use and occupation of buildings for hospital purposes at the seat of war or within the belligerent territory?

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not point to a case where it has been done, at this moment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Has not the prevailing rule in Congress been against the allowance of such claims?

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly; as I just remarked, the act of 1867, as well as the Bowman act, expressly prohibited it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It seems to me that the allowance of this claim would lead to the allowance of every single claim of this character for the use or occupation of property for the Army or any part of it within the belligerent territory at the time of the war.

Mr. HOLMAN. And at the seat of war.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And would furnish a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. HOLMAN. The language of the Bowman act is "at the seat of war," and this is at the seat of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that this discussion is going on only by unanimous consent. The first question is, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Five members rose to object.

Mr. CLEMENTS. As gentlemen have been allowed to discuss the merits of this question, I ask unanimous consent to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Georgia will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It is true that the report in this case states that it is for use, occupation, and damages; but from the reading of the report it will be seen that this is not an unusual amount for the actual damage done. I suppose the amount, if any was allowed by the committee for use and occupation, is but slight.

As stated by the report, the lathing was torn down, the plastering destroyed, the furniture torn up and destroyed, and the amount claimed is only $1,478. Of course it was at the seat of war. There is no dispute about that. But I do not think that Congress has heretofore rigidly adopted a rule which would prohibit the payment of similar claims. According to my recollection bills containing the same principle have been paid from time to time. I admit that it is in violation of the general law and the Bowman act, which gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction. As stated by the report in this case, no tribunal has ever been established having jurisdiction to pass upon just such claims; and again I call particular attention of the committee to the fact that the officer in command at this time reported this to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, who investigated it and reported upon the amount.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no controversy, I suppose, as to the amount of damages done. The objection is as to the principle embodied in the bill itself; and I submit now to the gentleman whether or not we dare go into this domain and make the Government responsible for all damages that may have been done by the armies of the United States in the territory occupied by the belligerent forces during the war. If that is to be the rule we have found a happy remedy for existing conditions and a means to exhaust very speedily the surplus. We would perhaps better continue the "robber tariff" for a few years longer and get more funds before we begin that course.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will not discuss the "robber tariff" to-day, bu I want to say that I do not think the allowance of a case of this kind would make a precedent of a dangerous character or lead to any very great expenditure. There are not many claims of this character which have not been already passed upon in some way. The claims for church property are the only ones remaining, and it will be remembered that there is no tribunal in which such claims could be adjudicated. The Southern Claims Commission, which was authorized to audit the claims of loyal claimants, has embraced all individual claims, and hence nothing is left except the churches, and no tribunal has been authorized to consider their claims. The whole of the claims of the South, to which the gentleman alluded, have already been passed upon by the Southern Claims Commission and been either allowed or rejected, and it is not likely that any considerable number of claims will be opened up by this, or that it will lead to any very considerable expenditure.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This whole subject, it seems to me, was discussed, and very thoroughly discussed, in the somewhat celebrated William and Mary College case, and it seems to me, too, that we should either adopt a policy of Congress to provide for these claims or——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood that the Chair called for objections, and five gentlemen objected. I want to know what is now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] asked to be briefly heard, and the gentleman is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. MORGAN. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the regular order, and five gentlemen have objected to the consideration of this bill.

JACOB CRAMER.

Mr. HALL. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the heirs of Jacob Cramer a bounty-land warrant for 200 acres of land, for services rendered by said Jacob Cramer as a lieutenant in the Pennsylvania Continental line in the Revolutionary war, the said Jacob Cramer being entitled thereto pursuant to the resolution of the Continental Congress of September 16, 1776, and the provisions of the act of July 27, 1842, extended by the act of February 8, 1854.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Jacob Cramer (H. R. 855), have considered the same, and recommend its passage for the following reasons:

The records of the Interior Department show that Jacob Cramer was a lieutenant of the Pennsylvania Continental line, and as such was entitled to a bounty-land warrant for 200 acres for services in the Revolutionary Army, and that said warrant has never been issued or satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. WHITFIELD.

Mr. HARE. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of the estate of John W. Whitfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas John W. Whitfield, on March 10, 1857, became one of the two sureties on the bond of W. W. Dennison, as an agent of the Otoe and Missouria Indians of Nebraska, in the sum of $15,000; and

Whereas the said Whitfield, in August, 1857, became a register of the land office in the Delaware land district in Kansas, and as it was claimed by the United States, in March, 1861, that the said Dennison was a defaulter, the Secretary of the Interior, on March 28, 1861, in writing, informed the Commissioner of the General Land Office that "no further payments will therefore be made to Mr. Whitfield from the Treasury whilst the matter of his liability on the official bond of Mr. Dennison remains unadjusted," in consequence of which John Wilson, the attorney of the said Whitfield, in writing, on April 3, 1861, requested the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to cause the affairs of the said Dennison to be examined, "to ascertain the actual amount due by him, that his sureties may take early and prompt measures to recover the amount of any defalcation, if it can be done;" and

Whereas the other surety on said bond has, in the long time that has elapsed, become insolvent, and as the larger part of the moneys due to said Whitfield as register of said land office have been withheld from him by said order of March 28, 1861; and

Whereas the administratrix of his estate has rendered his account, and a settlement thereof has been refused, the full amount due to him has never been ascertained and stated on the books of the Treasury of the United States; and

Whereas the said Whitfield died on October 26, 1879, leaving a widow, Sarah B. Whitfield, and a son, John A. Whitfield, as his heirs at law, and the United States has brought suit against them on the bond of the said W. W. Dennison, as Indian agent aforesaid, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at the November sessions, 1887, numbered 346; and

Whereas the actual indebtedness of the United States to the said Whitfield as late register aforesaid has never been fully stated on the books of the Treasury, and as the heirs at law of the said Whitfield, in the trial of said suit commenced against them to recover the penalty of said bond, can not claim any indebtedness due to said Whitfield as register aforesaid, as a set-off to any claim made against his estate as a surety of said Dennison, and as the sum of $1,162.46 allowed to said Whitfield as register for office rent, etc., on settlement of his account on December 21, 1860, under the act of August 18, 1856, and on that day reported to Congress for appropriation as required by said act, has not yet been appropriated, his account can not be fully and finally settled; and

Whereas justice requires that the heirs at law of the said Whitfield should have a legal settlement of his accounts as register of said land office, and as special register or agent for the sale of certain Indian trust lands, and should have the right to offset the amount due to him as late register, etc., aforesaid against any amount, if any, that may be found to be due to the United States by him as a surety of said Dennison: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That in accordance with the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, and the settlement of the account of John W. Whitfield, register of the land office in the Delaware land district in Kansas, under and in accordance with said act, and the report of the Secretary of the Interior to Congress on December 21, 1860, as required by said act, the sum of $1,162.46 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, which amount shall be placed to the credit of the said John W. Whitfield, deceased, late register, to bear date from December 21, 1860, being the date of settlement and report of said account under said act.

SEC. 2. That Mrs. Sarah B. Whitfield, the widow of the late John W. Whitfield, deceased, who is the administratrix of his estate, be, and she is hereby, authorized and empowered to bring a suit in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, against the Government of the United States, and for any and all claims, differences, and disputes arising out of the various accounts of the said John W. Whitfield against the United States as a register of the land office in said district, and as a special register or agent for the sales of the western portion of the Delaware and of the Iowa Indian trust lands, under the treaties of May 6 and May 17, 1854; and said court shall hear and determine according to law, and on their merits, all claims, disputes, and differences between the United States and the said John W. Whitfield, late register, etc., in reference to his various accounts, as well under said treaties as under the laws for the sales of public lands and for the location of public lands donated by military bounty land-warrants and for the compensation of registers and receivers, if the court shall determine him to be entitled thereto, with the same effect as if the suit authorized by this act were commenced by one individual against another, and said claims, differences, and disputes shall not be barred by any statute of limitations. It shall be the duty of said court and of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which an appeal may be taken by either party, by a writ of error, to file a written or printed opinion in the case, setting forth the special findings by the jury or the court on the facts alleged in the petition or declaration of the plaintiff, and the conclusions of the court or courts upon all questions of law involved in it, and to render judgment thereon. Should the said court or courts be of the opinion that the said John W. Whitfield, as a register of said land office, is not entitled as compensation for his services to all of the fees paid by the holders of military bounty land-warrants, for whom he located them, then the said court or courts, in the written or printed opinion aforesaid, shall refer to and cite the act of Congress which made said fees accountable to and payable into the Treasury of the United States, either in whole or in part, during the time which the said John W. Whitfield served as a register of said land office, and the decision or opinion of said court or courts in this case shall finally settle the question of law in relation to said fees, and the accounts of registers and receivers who served, at any time between March 22, 1852, and July 1, 1862, if necessary, shall be readjusted to conform to said opinion.

SEC. 3. That the plaintiff in the suit authorized to be brought by the second section of this act shall file a petition, duly verified, with the clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, in which shall be set forth the full name and residence of the plaintiff, the nature of the claims of the said John W. Whitfield, deceased, as late register and special register aforesaid, with a succinct statement or declaration of the facts upon which the claims are based, the moneys claimed, or the damages sought to be recovered, and praying the said court for a judgment upon the facts and law. The plaintiff shall cause a copy of the petition above referred to to be served upon the district attorney of the United States for said district, and an affidavit of such service shall be filed with said court, and it is hereby made the duty of said United States attorney to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit brought under this act, and within thirty days after the service of the aforesaid petition upon him, he shall file a plea, answer, or demurrer, on the part of the Government, and also file a notice of any counter-claim, set-off, claim for damages, or other demand or defense whatsoever of the Government in the premises. Should the said district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense above authorized and required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case, and produce the evidence necessary to entitle her to a judgment. No appeal or writ of error in this case shall be taken after sixty days from the time the judgment or decree of said court is entered.

SEC. 4. That the suit now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at the November sessions, 1887, No. 346, brought by the United States against Sarah B. Whitfield and John A. Whitfield as the heirs at law of the said John W. Whitfield, who, on March 10, 1857, became a surety on the bond of William W. Dennison, as an Indian agent, shall not be withdrawn, discontinued, nor abandoned without the written request or consent of the said Sarah B. Whitfield and John a Whitfield, filed of record therein, but shall be tried to a final conclusion, without unnecessary delay; but no execution shall be issued on any judgment which the United States may obtain against the estate of the said John W. Whitfield, or against the heirs at law or estate of the said Whitfield in the suit now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas at the November sessions, 1887, No. 346, for the alleged defalcation of said Dennison, until after the trial and final conclusion of the suit against the United States which the said Mrs. Sarah B. Whitfield, administratrix of the estate of the said John W. Whitfield, is authorized, by the second section of this act, to institute against the United States for the services of said Whitfield as register, etc., and not then unless the amount of the judgment that may be obtained against the said John W. Whitfield, as a surety on the bond of said W. W. Dennison, or against the heirs at law of said Whitfield, shall exceed the amount of the judgment, which the said Mrs. Sarah B. Whitfield, administratrix, or her successor may obtain against the United States, for the claims of J. W. Whitfield as late register, etc., in which case execution may issue against the estate of the said John W. Whitfield for the difference between the two judgments above referred to. Upon the final conclusion of these two suits the judgment that may be found in favor of the estate of the said John W. Whitfield in the one case shall be an offset to any judgment that may be found against said estate or against the heirs at law or estate of the said John W. Whitfield in the other; and should said circuit court find that there is a balance due to the estate of the said John W. Whitfield, or to his heirs at law, it shall certify the amount so found to be due as aforesaid to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who shall pay the same to the administratrix or administrator of the estate of the said John W. Whitfield, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 5. That Mrs. Sarah B. Whitfield, administratrix of the estate of the said John W. Whitfield, or her successor, or her or his duly authorized attorney at law, or in fact, upon a written request made to the head of any Bureau or Department having in his possession or under his control any papers, documents, or records connected with either of said cases, shall be furnished by said officers with certified copies thereof, free of any charge therefor; and such certified copies shall have the same force and effect in the trial of said causes as if the original papers, documents, or records had been produced in court; and it shall be the duty of said officers to transmit to the Solicitor of the Treasury a list of the papers, documents, or records furnished as above required.

The report (by Mr. KERR), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of the estate of the late John W. Whitfield, beg leave to report:

From evidence submitted to the committee John W. Whitfield was a register of the land office in the Delaware land district in Kansas from August, 1857, to June, 1861, and that Daniel Woodson was a receiver of public moneys in said district during said time.

Congress on the 18th of August, 1856, in the seventh section of "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government," enacted—

"That in the settlement of the accounts of registers and receivers of the public land offices the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow, subject to the approval of Congress, such reasonable compensation for additional clerical services and extraordinary expenses incident to such offices as he shall think just and proper, and report to Congress all such cases of allowance at each succeeding Congress, with estimates of the sum or sums required to pay the same." (Statutes at Large, volume 11, page 91.)

On December 21, 1860, Moses Kelly, the Acting Secretary of the Interior, settled the account of John W. Whitfield as register of the land office, and of D. Woodson as receiver of public moneys in said district, for clerical services, office rent, etc., under said act, and allowed them $12,857.92, and on said day he reported said sum to Congress for appropriation, as required by said act of 1856. This sum was made up as follows:

Amount allowed Register Whitfield for clerk-hire	$7,383.00
Amount allowed Receiver Woodson for clerk-hire	3,150.00
Total allowed both officers for clerk-hire	10,533.00
Amount allowed Register Whitfield for office rent, as per voucher No. 3	845.80
Amount allowed Register Whitfield for fuel and light, as per voucher No. 2	316.66
Amount allowed Receiver Woodson for office rent, as per voucher No. 1	845.80
Amount allowed Receiver Woodson for fuel and light, as per voucher No. 4	316.66
Total sum allowed both officers for clerk-hire, rent, etc	12,857.92
Amount appropriated on February 19, 1861, to pay for clerk-hire (12 Stat., 133)	10,533.00
Balance of sum allowed for office rent, fuel, and light, not appropriated	2,321.92

Only $10,533, allowed both officers for clerk-hire, was appropriated by the appropriation act of February 19, 1861 (12 Stats., 133). No appropriation has yet been made to pay the sum of $2,324.92, due to said officers for office rent, etc., as per report of settlement on December 21, 1860; nor does it appear that the Secretary of the Interior reported to any succeeding Congress for appropriation the sum of $2,324.92 remaining due to said officers.

The Acting Secretary of the Interior, in said report of December 21, 1860, in these cases says:

"The register and receiver for the Delaware land district, Kansas, appears to have proceeded in this matter according to the law of August 18, 1856. Their expenses for clerk-hire, office rent, etc., during the three years mentioned, have amounted to $12,857.92, or a little over $4,000 per year, which is regarded as reasonable in view of the unusually large quantity of land sold and located at that office during this period of time."

The late John W. Whitfield, deceased, became a surety on the bond of W. W. Dennison, an Indian agent, in March, 1857, who in March, 1861, was supposed to be a defaulter to the United States; in consequence of which the Secretary of the Interior, on March 28, 1861, instructed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to withhold payment of any moneys due to the said Whitfield as register, etc., "whilst the matter of his liability on the official bond of Mr. Dennison remains unadjusted." In April, 1861, the attorney of the said Whitfield, in writing, requested the Commissioner of Indian Affairs "to ascertain the actual amount due by him (Dennison), that his sureties may take early and prompt measures to recover the amount of any defalcation, if it can be done."

Mrs. Sarah B. Whitfield, widow and administratrix of the estate of the late John W. Whitfield, deceased, made application for the special adjustment of the account of said Whitfield, as late register of the land office in said district, which she was unable to obtain; and that she also requested a settlement of the account of the said W. W. Dennison, as late Indian agent, and that in 1885 she made a proposition of compromise in the case of the said Dennison, which the Solicitor of the Treasury refused to recommend; and that in 1887, more than a quarter of a century after the said Dennison had ceased to be an Indian agent, the Solicitor caused a suit to be instituted against Mrs. Sarah B. Whitfield, widow, and John A. Whitfield, as the heirs at law of the said John W. Whitfield, deceased, on the bond of the said Dennison, as late Indian agent, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas, at the November sessions, 1887, No. 346.

During the Forty-ninth Congress H. R. bill No. 5470, appropriating $1,162.46 for the relief of the estate of the late John W. Whitfield, deceased, late register, etc., was formally reported by the Committee on Claims, which was not acted on by Congress.

No just and final settlement of the accounts of said Whitfield, as late register, etc., can be made until the sum of $1,162.46, due to him for office rent, etc., is appropriated to be placed to his credit, and as the administratrix of his estate can not institute any suit against the United States under any existing law, and as she can not claim any moneys, long withheld and due to said estate by the United States, as a set-off in the trial of the suit now pending in said circuit court of the United States against the heirs at law of the said Whitfield, deceased, the said circuit court of the United States for said district should be empowered to try both suits and settle the accounts of the said Whitfield, deceased, as late register, etc., and determine the question whether the said Whitfield, deceased, or his heirs at law, are or are not indebted to the United States.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 4624), with the following amendments: In line 6 of section 2 strike out the word "and," after the word "States;" and in line 21 of section 3, after the word "Government," at the end of that line, insert the word "in."

Mr. SAYERS. In asking that the report be read in order that it may be well understood, I desire to make a brief explanation. The report was made by my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], and it is briefly this: In 1859 John W. Whitfield was register of the land office in Kansas. In 1857, when W. W. Dennison was Indian agent, and Mr. Whitfield was surety upon the bond of Dennison, Dennison proved a defaulter, and thirty years afterwards suit was instituted against the heirs of Whitfield to recover the amount due upon the bond against them as the surviving wife and heirs of John W. Whitfield.

Now, there is no claim of any defalcation against John W. Whitfield as register of the land office. The object of this bill is simply to authorize the establishment by the court of whatever may be due from the Government to John W. Whitfield as register of the land office, so as to enable his heirs to offset what may be found due him against the suit which has been brought against the heirs upon the bond of Dennison.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me this question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I noticed the matter I understand it to be allowed by way of credit to him as entered on land warrants.

Mr. SAYERS. It is not authorized to be a credit. It is to ascertain what he is entitled to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think so.

Mr. SAYERS. As soon as it was found that Dennison was a defaulter they stopped any settlement with Whitfield as register of the land office. It is not sought that he should be allowed any credit. Suit was brought thirty years after the party was dead.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RAILROAD BRIDGE NEAR ALMA, WIS.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask consideration of Senate bill 2816, to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Soo and Southwestern Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain railway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota from the most feasible and accessible point between the city of Alma and the mouth of Beef Slough, in the county of Buffalo, Wisconsin, to and upon the west bank of said river, in the county of Wabasha, in the State of Minnesota: Provided, That Congress may at any time prescribe such rules and regulations in regard to toll and otherwise as may be deemed reasonable.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be built with a draw, so as not to impede the navigation of said river; said draw shall be a pivot-draw, over the channel of said river usually navigated, near the Wisconsin shore, and giving a clear width of water way of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and in addition to said draw openings shall have one or more fixed channel-spans, each having not less than 350 feet clear channel-way, and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and a draw opening shall, if practicable, be located next or near shore: Provided, also, That if the physical characteristics of the locality so require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the lengths of the fixed spans or the number of draw openings may be reduced: Provided, also, That for every two adjacent openings of 200 feet each, one draw opening of 300 feet may be substituted if the interests of navigation be not injured thereby: Provided, That said draw shall always be opened promptly upon reasonable signal, and said corporation shall maintain at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe: And provided further, That no bridge shall be built under the provisions of this act except there also be built at the time of the erection of the piers proper sheer-booms or other proper protections to safely guide boats, vessels, rafts, and other water craft through said draw-spans and the raft-spans of said bridge.

SEC. 3. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation on said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at extreme high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and said bridge shall not be built until the plan and location thereof are approved by the Secretary of War, but when so approved the work on said bridge and the approaches thereto, and the accessory works, may be commenced and prosecuted to completion: Provided, That as nearly as practicable the said bridge shall be at right angles to, and the piers parallel with, the current of said river: And provided further, That any change in the mode of construction of said bridge shall be first submitted to the said Secretary for his approval, and when approved the said corporation may then proceed with the construction in accordance with said change: And provided, also, That if said bridge when constructed shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, be a substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river, the said Secretary shall require said corporation to change the construction thereof, or to remove the same entirely, so as to avoid any serious and substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river at the expense of the owners of said bridge.

SEC. 4. That the bridge hereby authorized shall be a lawful structure, and shall be a post-route upon which no higher charge shall be made for transportation of the mails of the United States and the troops and munitions of war, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid to railroads and transportation companies leading to said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States, and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties: Provided, That the provisions of section 4, in regard to charges for passengers and freight across said bridge, shall not govern the Secretary of War in determining any question arising as to the sum or sums to be paid to the owners of said bridge by said railroad companies for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be subject, except as above mentioned, to the limitations and provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the town of Clinton, in the State of Iowa, and other bridges across said river, and to establish them as post-roads," approved April 1, 1872.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any change in such structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interests require it, is also expressly reserved.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof that a necessity exists therefor, to require the corporation or persons owning said bridge to cause such aids to the passage of said bridge to be constructed, placed, and maintained at their own cost and expense in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable or proper structures for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other water-craft safely through the passage-way, as shall be specified in his order in that behalf; and on failure of the corporation or persons aforesaid to make and establish such additional structures within a reasonable time, the said Secretary shall proceed to cause the same to be built or made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in any circuit court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such bridge or any part thereof is or may be located, for the recovery of the cost thereof; and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 9. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year, and completed within three years, from the date thereof.

During the reading,

Mr. LIND said: If this is an ordinary bridge bill I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was about to make the same request. It has been recommended by the War Department. There are two amendments offered by the committee, and I ask that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments offered by the committee will first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, commencing in line 8, strike out the words "the most feasible and accessible point between the city of Alma and the mouth of Beef Slough, and insert the following:

"A point just north of the Beef Slough cut-off, in section 21, township No. 22 north, of range 13 west, of the fourth principal meridian, above the city of Alma."

Also, in section 9, line 3, strike out the words "one year" and insert "two years."

Also, in the same line, strike out the word "three" and insert "four."

The amendments offered by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the following amendment to come at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows;

That the city of Duluth, a municipal corporation in the State of Minnesota, or its assigns, or any legally incorporated railroad company or companies, which may be associated with it therein, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the ship-canal and upon the Government piers of the same through Minnesota Point, being the entrance to the Duluth Harbor from Lake Superior; if upon consideration of a board of engineer officers, to be specially selected for the purpose, a bridge can be built without serious injury to the canal as an entrance to the harbor, and then only upon the plans and at the location recommended by the board and approved by the Secretary of War; said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and further provide for the passage of wagons, street-railway cars, and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals and foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of tolls as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

SEC. —. That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said canal as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and said corporation or corporations shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location of the same, giving the topography of the banks of the said canal, together with all other information, as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any changes be made in the plans of said bridge during the construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. —. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route upon which also no higher charges shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to the said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph and telephone lines across said bridge.

SEC. —. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railroad trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters of issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. —. That the corporations or persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge authorized by this act shall be in attendance on the same at all hours; shall maintain at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, and during heavy fogs, lights or other signals on said bridge, as the Light-House Board shall prescribe, and promptly open said draws upon reasonable signals for the passage of boats, vessels, and other water-crafts.

SEC. —. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in said structures at the expense of the owners thereof whenever Congress shall decide that the public interests require it is also expressly reserved.

SEC. —. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of a bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

During the reading—

Mr. HAUGEN. It is very evident that the amendment offered is not germane to the bill, and I shall make the point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to have it read.

Mr. HAUGEN. I shall object to the amendment as not germane.

The reading of the amendment was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to make a statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the bill. You might as well attach every bridge bill that is introduced here to my bill as this particular one. The location is 300 miles away from the place where the bridge provided for in the bill I have called up is to be built.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say in reference to this matter that the first part of this proposition, the bill called up by the gentleman from Wisconsin, is for a bridge across the Mississippi River, between the State of Wisconsin and the State of Minnesota, while the amendment I have offered is for a bridge across the canal entrance to the inner harbor of Duluth, which is entirely within my State. The city of Duluth has made a canal entrance to the inner harbor and the people desire to have a bridge built there. I have tried all this session to get this bill passed, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] has steadily objected, although this bill is for a bridge entirely within the limits of my district. Now, under these circumstances, if the point of order against the amendment is insisted upon and sustained, I shall feel constrained to do what I have never done in any instance before, namely, to call a quorum upon the original bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not insist on pressing his amendment, because it is contrary to the usual course of proceeding in the House in such matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin is well taken.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I do not object to any bill of the gentleman from Minnesota which is not objectionable on general principles. I think the one to which he has referred is objectionable on that ground, because the proposed bridge would interfere with navigation on the lakes. For that reason the bill ought not to pass; and that is why I have objected to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. NELSON. I object.

The question was taken, and three members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Only three gentlemen have objected; not a sufficient number. The bill is before the committee for consideration, and the question is upon laying it aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken; and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. NELSON. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 2.

Mr. NELSON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Minnesota is determined to insist upon the point of no quorum, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. PERKINS. Pending the vote, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside for the present, without losing its place, in order to enable the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Minnesota to come to some understanding that will be mutually satisfactory, while in the mean time we can proceed with other business.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am willing to agree to that if I can call the bill up again this afternoon, but I do not want to have it run up against the adjournment hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside temporarily, not losing its place.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will assent to that provided I can call it up at any time.

Mr. NELSON. I object to the gentleman having the privilege of calling the bill up at any time. I will agree to the request as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] put it.

Mr. PERKINS. Simply that the bill shall be laid aside temporarily, but that it shall not lose its place upon the Calendar, nor shall the gentleman from Wisconsin lose the privilege which he now has of calling up a bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will not consent to that unless I can call it up again this afternoon.

Mr. PERKINS. My suggestion would secure to the gentleman all the privilege he has now, but would not give him any additional privilege.

Mr. HAUGEN. We may as well have it out now.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. When this order of proceeding was adopted by the House it was agreed that no bill should be considered to which five objections were made. The spirit of that agreement was and its object was to avoid taking up bills which would occupy a great deal of time. Now, I insist that the bringing up these bills, which seem likely to consume the entire day, is in violation of the spirit of the order; and unless we can agree upon that, I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of amending the order, so that we may not have the whole day spent in filibustering over one or two bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] I desire to state my request again. It is that this bill be temporarily laid aside, with the understanding that it is not to lose its place upon the Calendar, nor is the gentleman from Wisconsin to lose the privilege of this call, but the bill is to be laid aside reserving to him the right to call it up again whenever he can get an opportunity, either this afternoon or at any other time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, not losing any of its privileges and subject to be called up at any time during this afternoon or later.

There was no objection.

JOHN W. WHITFIELD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the last bill passed, which was called up by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE], contained two formal amendments upon which the Chair failed to put the question. If there be no objection, they will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI NEAR ALMA, WIS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I call up my bill again at this time. I can make no sort of agreement with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. I have made the gentleman a proposition, which I wish to state to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman propose to call up his bill again?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I understand that this is a bill for the purpose of erecting a bridge over some stream. How does that come to be considered a private bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is on the Private Calendar; all these bridge bills are on the Private Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to make a statement of just a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to make a brief statement?

Mr. HAUGEN. I withdraw my request for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

MRS. SARAH L. LARIMER.

Mr. HAYES. I call up the bill (S. 2563) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyoming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer the sum of $5,000, in full for valuable services rendered by her to the Government in the year 1864, by giving important information to Captain Shuman, in command of the United States troops, and others, of the evil designs of hostile Indians, while she was held in captivity by them, the said sum to be paid out of any funds due to said Indians if there be any available for such purpose, and if there be none, then out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BACON. I would like to hear the report in this case.

The report of the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims (by Mr. WILLIAMS) was read, as follows:

This committee, after a careful examination, made report on H. R. bill No. 777, in which they recommended the payment of $10,000 to Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for services rendered and property destroyed by the Indians. Said report stated it as being clearly established that she rendered valuable services to the United States troops, preventing great loss of life and destruction of property.

The Senate bill under consideration, for reasons stated in the report accompanying said bill, provided for the payment of $5,000 for services rendered, but does not consider the claim for property destroyed.

The committee, after due consideration, adopt the views expressed by the Senate committee and recommend the passage of the Senate bill, and to their report attach the report of the Senate.

[Senate Report No. 1591, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2563) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyoming, and for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians, respectfully report:

It is abundantly established by the testimony laid before the committee that the claimant, on the 12th day of July, 1864, while traveling from Iola, Kans., with her husband, Lieutenant Larimer, an honorably-discharged soldier, in bad health, en route to the mountains, was, with one of her children, together with Mrs. Fanny Kelly and other immigrants, attacked by a band of Sioux Indians on the usually-traveled road leading across the mountains and in Wyoming Territory. Three of the party were killed and two were wounded. Mrs. Larimer and her child and Mrs. Kelly and her child were taken captives. The Indians destroyed the property of the party, including, it is alleged, a large stock of gold watches and jewelry, chloride of gold and nitrate of silver, clothing, and family jewels, and $3,7 0 in money. Mrs. Larimer, was carried by the Indians a considerable distance—75 miles or more; and at night, within a day or two after her capture, escaped with her child; and on foot, after great hardship and suffering, she reached the camp of Capt. Jacob S. Shuman's command. The affidavits show—but such evidence would not be needed to satisfy one that her condition when she reached the camp was pitiful.

The committee are satisfied from the evidence that the claimant rendered great service to the commands of Captains Shuman and Marshall by information as to the position and purposes of the Indians which she communicated to the military authorities. This is abundantly established by the affidavit of Levi G. Marshall, late major Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and Jacob S. Shuman, who was the captain of the latter regiment, and was stationed with his command at Fort Laramie, Wyo. These affidavits are subjoined to this report.

It is apparent that the information given by Mrs. Larimer was efficient to prevent great loss of life, and was therefore of great value. The bill proposes to pay her $10,000 for this service rendered the Government and for property alleged to have been taken and destroyed by the Indians. Mrs. Kelly, who was captured at the same time and who was held captive for some months and finally ransomed, was paid $10,000 by acts of Congress, $5,000 of it being for information given to the military authorities as to the whereabouts and plans of the Indians, and $5,000 for property taken and destroyed.

In support of the claim of Mrs. Kelly there was presented a statement signed by Spotted Tail, Swift Bear, and other chiefs and warriors of the Sioux Indians, acknowledging the massacre and destruction of the property of the emigrants, and consenting that payment be made out of funds due, or to become due, to the Indians. Five thousand dollars of the appropriation to Mrs. Kelly for information communicated and service thereby rendered to the Government was made payable, it will be observed, out of the Indian funds. The $5,000 for property taken and destroyed by the Indians was appropriated out of the general funds of the Treasury. The acknowledgment of the Indians as to the case of Mrs. Kelly clearly applies to the case of Mrs. Larimer, who was captured at the same time.

The committee think that Mrs. Larimer should be paid for the service rendered to the Government by her. If there is a fund available for that purpose due, or to become due, to the tribe of Indians by whom she was captured, and there is no treaty obligation to prevent it, the committee think the appropriation should be paid out of that fund; otherwise it should be paid out of the general funds of the Treasury.

The committee is not satisfied that the property alleged to have been captured and destroyed by the Indians, for which this bill proposes compensation to Mrs. Larimer, was her property. The affidavits establishing the title to have been in her are unsatisfactory. Facts have come to the knowledge of the committee, independent of the affidavits presented in support of this claim, which tend to show that the property for which she claims was in fact the property of her husband, who is still living but has deserted his wife.

The committee is not willing, in the present state of the proof as to the title of the property, to recommend that an appropriation be made to her therefor.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the following, and that as so amended it do pass.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer the sum of $5,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for valuable services rendered by her to the Government in the year 1864, by giving important information to Captain Shuman, in command of the United States troops, and others, of the evil designs of hostile Indians, while she was held in captivity by them."

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Clay, ss:

In the claim of Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer, for Indian depredations, and pay for information furnished United States troops, personally came before me, Levi G. Marshall, of Clay City, county of Clay, State of Illinois, who, being first duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid claim, as follows:

On or about the 13th day of July, 1864, property belonging to the said claimant was taken and destroyed by Indians of the Sioux tribe at or near Box Elder Creek, in Wyoming Territory, under the following circumstances: I was captain of company, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, and with my command was stationed at Fort Laramie, Wyo., at the time (later being mustered out as major); that on or about the 13th day of July, 1864, I was ordered to move against the Sioux Indians with 200 mounted men; Captain Shuman, being the other captain, was ordered with me; that when 115 miles out and at Deer Creek Station, we were met by Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer, who had been carried off by a band of Sioux Indian warriors, but had escaped in the darkness of night from their camp with her child in her arms, and climbed the hills for a distance of 75 or more miles on foot and alone.

As commanding officer I procured of Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer very valuable information about the movements of the enemy, as well as of their number and arms and how mounted, so that, being forewarned, I was able to avoid the ambushes and surprise that otherwise would have happened, to the death and destruction of my command. A few of my men, acting contrary to orders, fell into one of the ambushes, where their leader, Lieutenant Brown, lost his life. Mrs. Larimer was now destitute, bare of head and foot, all her property, which I understand had amounted to about (can not tell how much), having been taken or destroyed by the Indians when she and her child were carried off by said Indians. Her husband had been a commissioned officer of a Kansas regiment, but was discharged and in poor health, and now had the addition of a severe arrow wound near the groin. I know that all of her property was destroyed by the Indians; I do not now remember as to the value of said property.

I have no interest in said claim and am not concerned in its prosecution.

LEVI G. MARSHALL,
Late Major Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day, by the above-named affiant; and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said claim, nor am I concerned in its prosecution.

Witness my hand and official seal this 12th day of March, 1886.

[SEAL.] E. MCGILTON,
Notary Public.

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of Pettis, ss:

In the matter of the claim of Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for Indian depredation, and for information furnished to the United States troops after her escape from the Sioux Indians, by whom she had been captured and her property destroyed, personally came before me B. H. Ingram, clerk of the circuit court of Pettis County, Missouri, Jacob S. Shuman, of Sedalia, in said Pettis County, Missouri, who, being first duly sworn, on his oath states that on the 13th day of July, 1864, this affiant, Jacob S. Shuman, was captain of and in command of Company —— of the Eleventh Ohio Cavalry, and with my command was stationed at Fort Laramie, Wyo., and that on or about that date, having information that the Sioux Indians had made a raid on the emigrant road, captured and destroyed a train of emigrants, and had carried into captivity the said Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer and her little child, I immediately moved against the Indians up Platte River, in a northwesterly direction about 115 miles, to a place called Deer Creek Station. I there learned that the capture of Mrs. Larimer and her child, and the destruction of her property, and the murdering of several persons who were with the train, had taken place on Box Elder Creek, and as I was about to move against the Indians with the force I had, which consisted of my own company and a force under Captain Marshall, the said Sarah L. Larimer came into camp carrying her little child in her arms, she having escaped from the Indians, after having been carried by them about 75 miles, and returned on foot to the emigrant road, where she met my command.

When she came into our camp her condition was most deplorable; her clothes had been nearly all torn off her body; her arms and limbs were lacerated from making her way through the thorns, bushes, and cactus, on her way after her escape, and she and her little child were nearly famished. As soon as she could be resuscitated by nourishment, which was only a very short time, she gave me a detailed account of the position of the Indians, their plans and movements, and designs against my command, and also their numbers and the positions they occupied, and the ambuscades they had prepared; so that by taking proper precaution my command was enabled in a short time to move forward and thwart their designs, not only against the pursuing troops, but against other exposed points and trains that were on the emigrant road.

And I do most positively and solemnly swear that if it had not been for the information received from the said Mrs. Larimer that the command with which I was about to start out at that hour would have been massacred and destroyed; but by acting under her information, dismounting and arming the teamsters, and gathering in all the available and additional forces within immediate reach, and by following the directions given by the said Mrs. Larimer to avoid an ambuscade, I was enabled to obtain the advantage of the Indians and drive them north, not only saving part of my command from being massacred, and saving the lives and property of others, who would certainly have been captured and murdered if it had not been for the valuable information given to me by the said Mrs. Larimer.

I found the information that she gave as to the position and movements of the Indians exactly as she had given it.

And further, from my own scout's personal observation, and from the further fact that when Lieutenant Brown disobeyed orders a few men fell into an ambuscade, described by Mrs. Larimer, and were killed by the Indians. I also learned at that time that the property taken from Mrs. Larimer consisted of a fine collection of pictures, photograph apparatuses, and stock for that kind of business, and wagons and mules, all of which, as near as I can now recollect and estimate, was of the value of over $10,000. I further learned at the time, and afterwards, also, that Mrs. Larimer was a photographer and artist herself, and that the property was hers; and I learned the fact that her husband was with her and was wounded and left for dead by the Indians, but afterwards partially recovered; and that he had been a commissioned officer honorably discharged from the Eighth Kansas Volunteers, which I learned from Mr. Larimer himself, whom I saw, and I saw arrow wounds upon his person. And this affiant further says that the above and main facts that I have stated herein as to the information received from the said Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer as to the position, location, and designs of the Indians came under my direct and personal observation; and that I have not the slightest interest in any claim she may have; but that if she has a claim for property lost and for the information furnished me, I can and do say that it is just and deserving.

Owing to the fact that I am suffering from a severe nervous ailment, I am unable to write this affidavit myself and am compelled to dictate it to a stenographer and have it printed on a type-writer for me.

And this affiant further states that I have read this affidavit over carefully, and had the same read over to me, and that it, the same, is true in substance and in fact. So help me God.

JACOB S. (his x mark) SHUMAN,
Affiant.

Attest:
J. G. LINDSAY,
JOHNSON ORR.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this the 15th day of March, 1886, and I further certify that I have been personally acquainted with the above-named affiant for about fifteen years last past, and know from such acquaintance that he is the identical person he represents himself to be, and I further certify that for several years he has been afflicted with some nervous disease or trouble, thereby incapacitating him of writing his name. I also certify that I am in no way interested in his claim.

[SEAL.] B. H. INGRAM,
Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pettis County, Missouri.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to inquire whether it is proposed that this money be paid out of the Indian fund?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; there is such a provision in the bill.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, House bill No. 777, similar in substance to the Senate bill just passed, will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

REIMBURSEMENT OF STATE OF MISSOURI.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 473.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] desires to call up is not a private bill. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. HEARD. This is a bill for the payment of moneys due to the State of Missouri. I can not see why it is not a private bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a general bill; it is on the House Calendar——

Mr. HEARD. Of course I accept the ruling of the Chair, but in my view it is a private bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. HEARD. Having been misled in reference to that bill, I ask, by the indulgence of the committee, to call up another bill, so that I may not lose my right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that the bill which the gentleman just now desired to call up is on the House Calendar—not in the Committee of the Whole at all; hence it can not be considered here. The gentleman from Missouri, having been misled, requests that he be not deprived of the opportunity to call up another bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. But the gentleman from Missouri called up a bill a week ago to-day.

Mr. HEARD. I apprehend that a great many gentlemen have done the same thing by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. But it was done with the understanding that the gentleman should not have a call to-day.

Mr. HEARD. I beg pardon. If there was any such understanding I do not know how it arose; certainly not from any statement of mine. But, Mr. Chairman, I will yield. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair does not know anything in regard to the agreement which may have been made at a previous sitting of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I submit the matter to the committee. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and my colleague [Mr. WARNER] did the same thing that I did. Each of those gentlemen called up a bill by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state——

Mr. HEARD. I decline to occupy the time. I will not cut anybody else out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the practice last Friday was to allow a member under these circumstances to have a second call.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

HENRY SETZER.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I call up the bill (H. R. 11227) for the relief of Henry Setzer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Henry Setzer, of North Carolina, or to his legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $386.46, the amount collected from him on or about May 1, 1880, by the collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of North Carolina.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report of the Committee on the Judiciary (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

In May, 1879, Henry Setzer was assessed by the collector of internal revenue, sixth district of North Carolina, in the sum of $354.60 for taxes on spirits produced in November and December, 1877. The same spirits were seized and sold subject to tax. The report of seizure shows that a seizure was made of 502 gallons of brandy January 8, 1878, which was sold March 5, 1878, subject to tax. On July 30, 1879, Mr. Setzer made claim for abatement on the ground that the brandy was forfeited and sold, and the tax paid from the proceeds. This claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue March 18, 1880. Mr. Setzer was thereupon required to pay the assessment, together with penalty, amounting in the aggregate to $386.46, which he did under protest. It has since been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, October term, 1883 (U. S. vs. Ulrici, 111 U. S., 38), that the payment of the tax on the spirits relieves the distiller from any liability to pay it the second time.

The committee recommend the adoption of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out the word "fifth," in line 9, and insert "sixth."

The following letters are made a part of this report:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, August 17, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiries in the case of Henry Setzer, who desires relief from certain taxes assessed against him in 1879, you are advised that it appears from the records of this office that Mr. Setzer was assessed on the May list, 1879, sixth district of North Carolina, $354.60 for taxes on spirits produced in November and December, 1877. This sum is referred to in correspondence with Collector Mott on the subject as tax on spirits which were seized and sold subject to tax.

The report of the seizure shows that a seizure was made of 502 gallons of brandy from Mr. Setzer January 8, 1878, which was sold, March 5, 1878, subject to tax.

On July 30, 1879, Mr. Setzer made claim for abatement of the assessment on the ground that the brandy was forfeited and sold and the tax paid from the proceeds. This claim was rejected March 18, 1880.

It has since been decided by the Supreme Court, October term (U. S. vs. Ulrici, 111 U. S., 38; 30 Int. Rev. Rec., 111), that the payment of tax on the spirits relieves the distiller from liability to pay it the second time.

There is now no authority in this office to refund the amount paid if it was certain that it was a second payment. It can only be done by special act of Congress.

Mr. Setzer's letter is returned herewith.

Respectfully, yours,

JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN S. HENDERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

STATESVILLE, N. C., June 22, 1888.

DEAR SIR: During the year 1877 I was a brandy distiller, sixth district, North Carolina, duly registered and bonded, and after having made several hundred gallons of spirits, and while waiting for the gauger to come around and gauge the same, a party of special revenue deputy collectors came to my distillery and seized and carried away all the spirits, which were forfeited and sold; the tax, 90 cents per gallon, was paid to the Government from the proceeds of the sale. Afterwards the gauger came around and asked for my returns, which I made, all the time claiming that the distillery had not been closed and that the seizure was illegal, and no brandy being reported by the gauger I was afterwards assessed for the tax on the amount reported produced, which was the identical spirits seized, and notice given me by Collector Mott of the assessment. I protested against its payment and he allowed me to file a claim for abatement, which was sometime afterwards disallowed, and I paid the tax and penalty, $386.46, the tax being twice paid to the Government on the same spirits.

I have been informed that the Supreme Court of the United States has since decided a case in point with mine, that the tax could not be legally collected but once. I never filed a claim to refund the amount, as I have been informed that such claims must be filed within two years after payment.

I would now respectfully ask that you introduce a special act to refund to me the amount paid.

I inclose a letter from the collector's office giving some information bearing on the subject, and suppose that the report of seizure and sale, also the returns made by me as distiller, and the claim for abatement of the tax can be had by application to the Internal Revenue Office at Washington, D. C.

Very respectfully,

HENRY SETZER.

Hon. JOHN S. HENDERSON, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, FIFTH DISTRICT, NORTH CAROLINA,
Salisbury, June 7, 1887.

SIR: Replying to your letter of May 4, I am sorry to inform you that all of the information I can give you in the case of Henry Setzer is as follows:

On May, 1879, list, page 1, line 9, I find Henry Setzer assessed for a "tax on brandy, November and December, 1877, $354.60. Record 1 shows that this amount, together with penalty, amounting in the aggregate to $386.46, was paid by him on May 1, 1880. There is no evidence in office of claim for abatement having been filed. I have also searched for record of seizure, but have been unable to find the record 44 of that date.

Respectfully,

J. H. McREE.

GEO. H. BROWN, Esq., Statesville, N. C.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, to strike out in line 9 the word "fifth" and insert "sixth," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PHINEAS T. RICHARDSON.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, called up the bill (H. R. 3112) for the relief of Phineas T. Richardson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Phineas T. Richardson, the pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant from the 14th day of July, 1863, he having been commissioned by the governor of Illinois as second lieutenant of Company I, Ninety-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and having in good faith served as such for the time mentioned, upon the order of his colonel.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3112) for the relief of Phineas T. Richardson, report as follows:

The claimant, Phineas T. Richardson, was commissary-sergeant of his regiment, the Ninety-third Illinois Volunteers. On or shortly before the 14th day of July, 1863, he received a commission from the governor of Illinois as second lieutenant of Company I of said regiment, for gallant conduct in the battles of Jackson and Champion Hill, by which commission he was to take rank as such second lieutenant from the 16th day of May, 1863, and it was owing to the irregularities of the mail, while the regiment was in the field, that he did not receive it until about or shortly before the 14th day of July, 1863. The claimant accepted the commission, and applied for and received his discharge as commissary-sergeant, and received his final settlement in accordance with the same.

After the receipt of his commission and his discharge to receive promotion, the War Department issued General Orders No. 182, Adjutant-General's Office, series of 1863, whereby he could not be mustered in on account of said company not having the minimum number of men required. If it had not been for the irregularity of the mails he would have received his commission in due time for muster.

By order of Colonel Putnam, commanding the Ninety-third Illinois Volunteers, Richardson was on the 14th day of July, 1863, put on duty as second lieutenant of Company I of said regiment, and faithfully performed his duties as such officer from that time until the 27th day of September, 1863, inclusive. He received no pay for such services rendered, except that he received pay as commissary-sargeant up to July 29, 1863. An application was made to General Grant to allow Richardson to be mustered in as second lieutenant, on the ground that he resigned to receive promotion and received his commission before the said order of the War Department was issued. General Grant declined to make such an order, but directed that, "as this officer has been discharged in good faith the discharge is approved." This was not received until September 27, 1863, and during all that time, from July 14 to September 27, 1863, he was on duty as lieutenant of Company I under Colonel Putnam's order.

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill should be amended in line 9 of the bill, after the words "sixty-three," where they occur therein, by adding the following: "less the amount paid him as commissary-sergeant between July 14 and July 29, 1863;" and that when so amended the bill should pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. JUDKINS AND WILLIAM T. JUDKINS.

Mr. HERBERT called up the bill (H. R. 10042) for the relief of the estates of James H. Judkins and William T. Judkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the alleged taking by the United States authorities, for the use of the United States troops during the year 1865, of a quantity of quartermaster's stores alleged to have been the property of James H. Judkins and William T. Judkins, of Montgomery County, Alabama, such investigation to extend to the status of the owners, whether loyal or not, the value of the property taken and used by the Army; and when such investigation shall be completed the Secretary of War shall report the result thereof, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for action in the premises.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom were referred the bills (H. R. 2018) for the relief of the estate of James H. Judkins and (H. R. 2019) for the relief of the estate of William T. Judkins, report as follows:

That the claims are for quartermaster's stores alleged to have been taken by the United States Army during the late war from the claimants' plantations in Montgomery County, Alabama.

It seems to your committee that an investigation by the Secretary of War, or under his direction, is a matter of necessity before intelligent action can be had upon these claims; and the history of the alleged taking of the property is susceptible of proof; and while this is true, the committee desire the benefit of such proof.

The committee therefore report herewith a bill conferring power upon the Secretary of War to have the cases investigated through the Quartermaster's Department, and to report the result, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress, for its action in the premises, and recommend its passage.

The committee recommend that the original bills do lie on the table.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET KENNEDY.

Mr. HIESTAND called up the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Quartermaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain and state the value of all timber, fences, and fruit trees on the farm of John Kennedy, deceased, situate in the District of Columbia, upon which Fort Sedgwick was erected, taken and used for firewood by the Army of the United States, and also the value of all timber sold by the Government, which had been taken from said farm and used in the construction of said fort; and the amount so stated shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Margaret Kennedy, the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, deceased.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Margaret Kennedy the sum of $3,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be in full satisfaction for all claims against the Government for and on account of the damages sustained by the said Kennedy by reason of the cutting and using the timber, fencing, and fruit trees from her land by the Government."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report of the committee be read.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy, report as follows:

In March, 1853, John Kennedy, the deceased husband of the claimant in this case, purchased a farm containing over 26 acres, situated in the District of Columbia, for $1,605, and moved upon it with his family during the same year. He was a loyal citizen of the United States, and for about twenty-five years was employed as a stone-cutter on several public buildings of the Government, including the Capitol. With the money accumulated from his earnings he was enabled to purchase said farm. Margaret Kennedy, who is now asking for relief, is the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, aged about sixty-four years, and the mother of ten children. The claim has never been acted on by either House.

It appears by the papers on file that in the years 1862–'63 the military forces of the United States took possession of this land and constructed thereon the fortification known as Fort Sedgwick. The property consisted of over 26 acres, as before stated, on which stood about 12 acres of oak, chestnut, pine, and other timber, and 200 fruit-bearing trees of apple, peach, pear, and cherry, and was inclosed by a post and rail fence. By the construction of the fort and digging of trenches, sewers, and rifle-pits, about 20 acres of the land was practically destroyed. A part of the standing timber was used in building the fort, and the remainder, together with the fruit trees and the fence, was used by the troops for fire-wood. It is also shown that afterwards the timber was torn from the fort and sold to one Lacey by the Government.

The occupation of and injury to the farm of the claimant, and the erection of a fort thereon, were the unavoidable results of military operations in the face of the enemy, and for which no compensation can be made. Wood used for fuel by the Army, whether forest timber, fruit-trees, or fences, may be classed under the head of quartermaster stores, and the claimant having been a loyal citizen is entitled to compensation therefor. The timber which was cut from the farm and used in the construction of the fort was the property of the owner of the farm after the war was over and the fort abandoned. If the Government sold or disposed of such timber the claimant is entitled to compensation for the value thereof.

Your committee report herewith an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill referred to them, and recommend its passage.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES MILLINGER.

Mr. HIRES called up the bill (S. 602) for the relief of James Millinger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James Millinger, of New Jersey, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $19,893.75, for property taken from him for the use of the United States Army at Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1862; the said sum being the amount reported as just and right to the Secretary of War, under an order of General Dana, Quartermaster-General United States Army, appointed to investigate the same; which sum shall be in full of all claims against the United States by said Millinger.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the report of the committee be read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The report is a lengthy one, and if allowed I will briefly state the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, it appears that in 1860 this claimant, James Millinger, was a member of a firm engaged in the construction of a hotel at Nashville, Tenn. When the war broke out that hotel was not finished. Afterwards it was taken possession of, together with all the material placed therein, by the troops under the command of General Negley, of Pittsburgh, Pa. This material was used for the purpose of constructing barracks and hospitals. The Quartermaster-General's Department sent an officer to examine into the matter, and under date of Nashville, January 31, 1867, he reported that this money was due to Mr. Millinger, the remaining partner of the firm.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, how much money is involved in this claim? Is it not about $19,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair the amount is about $19,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the report read.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, this case is a just one, and ought to pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. My recollection is there were two persons engaged in partnership. Am I correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I do not recollect.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that one was a loyal man, and the other was not.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. No, there is no question of loyalty about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that one transferred his claim over to the other?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. There may be something in that. They had all the material for doors, windows, etc., in this hotel, and the Government took possession of this property and used it in other buildings in that city for the use of the troops.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my colleague say that the material alone appropriated by the Government was worth the sum of $19,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. About that. Whatever my report specifies I will stand by, because I know I gave the matter a very thorough examination. I understand this is a copy of my report, and if so, I am satisfied it is correct. I was myself prejudiced against the claim at the start, and gave it a very searching investigation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I examined the matter myself some years ago, but I am not able to say now what conclusion I reached. But upon the statement of my colleague, who has made a more recent investigation, I will not insist upon the reading of the report.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE H. OWEN.

Mr. HITT. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 11495) for the relief of George H. Owen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of George H. Owen, late consul at Messina, to credit him with the sum of $1,098.63, expended by him for clerk-hire, printing, and postage, under the authority of the Department of State, while in charge of the United States consulate at Messina, and not heretofore allowed in his accounts.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

W. O. HIATT AND OTHERS.

Mr. McCLAMMY (when the name of Mr. HOGG was called). I ask unanimous consent that Mr. HOGG be allowed to retain his place in the call. He was unexpectedly called out of the House on some business, but the bill he desires to present is one of more than usual merit.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from West Virginia will be allowed to retain his place on the call until he returns.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLAMMY. I ask now unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6622) for the relief of W. O. Hiatt, Edward Hughes, and J. W. Powell, session clerks of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from North Carolina as desiring to call up a bill for the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. McCLAMMY. I make that request, that I may be permitted to call it up.

There being no objection the bill was considered.

It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to W. O. Hiatt, Edward Hughes, and J. W. Powell, each the sum of $198, this being the amount of money due them, respectively, for their services as session clerks of the Forty-ninth Congress.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its approval.

Mr. McCLAMMY. There is an amendment which should be made to the bill, to strike out "Hiatt" where it occurs in the bill and the title and insert "Wyatt."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE F. ROBERTS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 200) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William R. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of the firm of Thayer Brothers. I will state that this bill involves three very considerable amounts of money.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROGERS). The Chair is informed that the bill is on the Speaker's table and not on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that by unanimous consent it might be considered now.

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is to be any delay about it, however, I would not insist; but there is a similar bill in the House, and this might be substituted.

Mr. HOOKER. Is the House bill on this Calendar?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is on the Private Calendar. I ask to take up the Senate bill instead of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that when the bill is reported back from the committee it may then be substituted, but it can not now be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call up the House bill; and before the reading of the bill I wish to say that while these parties live in my section in Indiana, it is a subject with which I am not acquainted. My colleague [Mr. BROWNE] from the Richmond district is familiar with the facts, and I desire that he may be permitted to make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I send up a copy of the House bill, and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2127) for the relief of George F. Roberts and others.

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 30, 1864, had been uniformly construed and administered to allow for loss by leakage on distilled spirits while in bonded warehouse; and

Whereas it was the uniform practice, and in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to collect internal-revenue taxes upon only so much of the spirits distilled as were actually withdrawn from bonded warehouse; and

Whereas under said act, in a few exceptional cases, taxes were also collected on that portion of such spirits which was lost by leakage while remaining in warehouse: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named persons, or their legal representatives, respectively, as follows: To George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, the sum of $10,790.32; to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., the sum of $19,662.19; to Henry W. Smith, surviving partner of T. and J. W. Gaff & Co., the sum of $14,062.50; the said payments being a refund of taxes exacted and paid on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from United States bonded warehouse between July 1, and December 31, 1864.

The committee recommend the following amendment: Insert in line 6, after the word "respectively," "such amounts as shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have been paid by them as tax on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from United States bonded warehouse: Provided, That the amount paid to each shall not exceed the sum hereinafter stated, that is to say."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACON. Let us have the report read.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The report is quite voluminous.

Mr. BACON. It ought to be voluminous. It proposes to release the tax on many thousands of dollars of spirits alleged to have leaked.

Mr. HOOKER. This bill, I think, covers about $60,000, and before any discussion takes place I hope it will be determined whether it will be considered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my colleague may be heard for a minute or two.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Just two minutes.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; say two minutes.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I speak in regard to this case because I happened to have become familiar with the facts while I occupied an official position and was acting as an attorney of the Government. The facts are these: Under the act of Congress of June 30, 1864, the owners of distilled spirits are required to pay a tax upon such as are distilled and sold or withdrawn for sale. In this case the distillers withdrew from the cistern-room and put into the bonded warehouse a certain amount of distilled spirits, and when the distilled spirits were withdrawn for sale they were taxed, not with the amount they withdrew, but with the amount that had been deposited in the warehouse. But the act of Congress to which I have referred provides that they shall be responsible for taxes only on the amount distilled and withdrawn for sale. The collector of internal revenue put a misconstruction on that act and collected this tax in excess of the amount withdrawn, making no allowance whatever for leakage. It has since been decided by Secretary Sherman, Commissioner Raum, Commissioner Rollins, and the entire Treasury Department that it was excessive and should not have been demanded.

Mr. SOWDEN. What became of the balance of the distilled spirits in bond?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It was all withdrawn and sold, and the tax paid on that which was sold as well as on all that evaporated besides.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My recollection is that there was an enlargement of the amount that was allowed for evaporation a few years ago; and I wish to know whether this bill provides for a return of the tax under the law that then existed or under the law as amended?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Under the law that then existed. And this bill does not provide for the payment of a dollar unless upon investigation by the Secretary of the Treasury the amount is found due.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It only provides for the return of whatever may have been illegally collected at that time?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is the whole of it. The Government of the United States collected from these men money that did not belong to the Government and was not due under any law. It has been decided that it was not due, and all that these claimants ask is that the money be returned to them. Distillers at any time pay a good deal of taxes when they pay according to the law, and a great deal when they pay in excess of what the law demands.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] for a question.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Was this ruling by which this excess was exacted in your district——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It was not in my district. There is not a distillery in my district.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Well, in that part of Indiana where it was collected. Was that some rule applied to every other distiller, or was it a ruling of the collector?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It was at the time applied pretty generally; but in innumerable cases the Government has already reimbursed the parties for the payment of this excess, and this case and two or three others are all that remain, the Government having reimbursed the distillers in all other instances.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The question I desired to ask in order that I may understand the case was how is it that this tax was collected illegally? Was it a judgment of the court or an order of the collector, or in what mode?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman remembers doubtless that under the revenue laws the collector of internal revenue was court, judge, and everybody else, and when he made an assessment, if the distiller refused to pay the amount, the collector could seize and sell, and the distiller had not anything left him but to pay or suffer forfeiture, but he could pay under protest.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And when he paid under protest did he not have the right of action in the courts?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I thought so; but it seems not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why, was it not so decided, and have there not been a great many of these cases so decided, that the distiller had the right to sue the collector for the amount of the illegal assessment?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I can not say. I do not remember whether they had the right to sue in this case or not. I only know that they have paid in this instance; and I know that they have laid out of their money for a number of years. I know that the Government makes no question as to the liability, but it has not the power to pay it without authority of Congress.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A certain amount of whisky goes into a bonded warehouse. Now, the distiller takes out a certain amount or withdraws a certain amount, being simply an amount out of the amount that went in. By the law of evaporation there is a certain legitimate amount that escapes. Is the amount that the party now asks to be reimbursed for the amount that would have legitimately escaped by evaporation, or is it an amount that may have escaped by other means than evaporation?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. No, sir. There is no controversy as to there being any loss except such as may naturally result from evaporation, and, if I remember correctly, it is less than the amount uniformly allowed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That was under the act of 1863.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Of 1864.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. When was it that the law was changed so as to make the distiller pay tax on the amount that went into the bonded warehouse?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not remember.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There was a law passed that allows a credit for evaporation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not remember when that was.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The law allowing remission of the taxes upon a certain amount for evaporation, I think, was passed in 1881 or 1882.

Before that time if there was any allowance for evaporation I do not remember it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman must misunderstand the case. We do not pretend, nor do the officers of the Government, in construing the act, pretend that this is an allowance for loss by evaporation. It grows out of a construction of the statute itself. The statute provides that the distiller shall pay upon the amount of the liquors distilled and sold, or distilled and withdrawn for sale. Now, they made the distillers in this case pay, not upon the amount distilled and sold, or distilled and withdrawn for sale, but upon the amount deposited in the warehouse, and the amount deposited in the warehouse is in excess of the amount withdrawn for sale or withdrawn and sold.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] and I were here when the bill was passed making the allowance for loss by evaporation. If I remember correctly—and I only state it from memory—prior to that time the distiller was assessed upon the amount he put in bond, and if there was any leakage or evaporation he got no credit for it. If I am correct in that, would not my friend's bill open up a large number of cases for the readjustment of losses by evaporation?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims of this House and unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims of the Senate; and the bill itself simply provides that this case shall be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall inquire into it and pay such sum as may be due, not to exceed the sum set forth in the bill itself. I have no interest in the case myself. The claimants are not my constituents; they do not belong to my political party. The way I came to be interested in it is because I happened to be engaged in prosecuting some cases against these parties that turned out so manifestly unjust and to their injury that I have felt a sympathy for them, for they have been literally skinned by the Government out of $60,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The point of difficulty in my mind is this: According to my recollection, under the law that has always been in force since the internal-revenue system was adopted the distiller was charged with all the spirits that went into the bonded warehouse.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And there was a remission of any portion of the tax only upon his showing to the Department some good reason why the whisky was not there. So strict was the rule that even if the warehouse was burned down the distiller was required to pay the tax. Later, under what was known as the Carlisle bill, an allowance was made for evaporation running through three years, but no evaporation larger than that amount was allowed for. Now, it seems that in this case there must have been something more than the mere fact that there was less spirits taken out than was put in, because if that were all the distiller would be responsible for the tax on the spirits put in. There must have been bad cooperage or something of that kind, and what I wanted to get was information as to the fact which made this case exceptional.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Perhaps I have been unfortunate in my statement, but I have tried to state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think the gentleman stated with great clearness the fact that there was more whisky put in than was taken out.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Kentucky is a lawyer; will he allow me to read to him the section of the act of Congress to which I have referred, and then I will ask him to put his own construction upon it. I read section 15 of an act approved June 30, 1864:

> In addition to the duties payable for licenses herein provided, there shall be levied and collected and paid on all spirits that may be distilled and sold, or distilled and removed for consumption or sale, of first proof, on and after the 1st day, etc., $1.50 per gallon.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he thinks that under a proper construction of that section, the distiller is responsible for the tax on a single gill of liquor except that which is either removed for sale or removed and sold?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Taking it as an original question, I am not prepared to say what would be the proper construction, but if my recollection is correct, it was construed to mean that the distiller should be charged with all the spirits put into the warehouse.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I know it was.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And that he was to show what had become of it. And the question I ask the gentleman is, whether there is anything in this particular case to show affirmatively what became of the difference between the amount of whisky that was withdrawn and the amount there was put in?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no question at all as to the fact that the difference between the two amounts was the result of evaporation. There is no question at all but what the Government did for a time construe the law to be that the distiller was bound for the tax on the whole quantity deposited. There is no question but what the Government subsequently reversed that ruling and collected only upon the amount withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. No, sir; I am not mistaken. I hold in my hand the decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury and of Commissioners Raum and Rollins, and evidence of the fact that the Government did in a number of instances reimburse persons who had been required to pay in excess of the amount withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my colleague that he have read at this point the statement of Commissioner Raum, which is very brief.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Pate & Co., from July 1 to December 31, 1864, deposited in bonded warehouse 4,186 barrels distilled spirits, containing 215,885½ gallons proof spirits; when these packages were removed from warehouse they contained, by actual inspection, only 200,613½ proof gallons. This tax of $1.50 was collected on the full quantity deposited, amounting to $320,828.25. The tax due on the 200,613½ gallons actually found in the packages on withdrawal was $300,920.25, showing an excess of $19,908 collected. In computing the leakage in transit, the sum of $245.81 was computed on the full quantity bonded. I propose to allow the claim for the remainder of the tax appearing to have been paid by these claimants in December, 1864, as set forth, on spirits lost by leakage and evaporation while stored in bonded warehouse, to wit, $1,962.19.
>
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
>
> GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, if my colleague will permit me, I notice that the sum mentioned in this Pate transaction is the sum named in the bill, and I wish he would state, if he knows, how it happens that that money was not paid?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not know, unless it was because the Secretary of the Treasury did not feel that he had the money appropriated for the purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I supposed that was the case, but I did not know.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I yield now to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BACON. I object.

The question was taken, and seven members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Seven gentlemen have objected, and the bill is not before the committee for consideration at this time.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

Mr. HOLMES. I call up joint resolution (H. Res. 189) to amend and enlarge the provisions of a joint resolution approved July 25, 1866, entitled "A joint resolution to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this joint resolution at this time?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if I recollect this case it involves $375,000, and I think that in the consideration of a measure involving so large an amount of money the report ought to be read. The case was before the Committee on Claims when I was chairman of that committee.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask for the reading of the report, reserving the right to object.

Mr. HOLMES. The report is quite extended, and the reading of it could not be completed before 5 o'clock, so I ask unanimous consent to make a statement instead.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMES. This is a claim which, it is true, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] states, involves some $300,000; at least that is the amount which was found due by the Spanish Government to this claimant. Richard W. Meade is the grandfather of General George G. Meade—a distinguished name in the annals of this country, and one to which we certainly can not afford to do injustice with regard to a matter of this character. Prior to 1819 Richard W. Meade, an American citizen, was a resident temporarily in Cadiz, Spain, doing business there. He had claims against the Spanish Government growing out of some fourteen contracts for assistance and supplies furnished during the Napoleonic wars, and for damages on account of two years' imprisonment of himself by the Spanish Government, which was acknowledged to have been wrongful.

After a long series of years, this claim of Mr. Meade was passed upon by the Spanish Government and was allowed. Before its allowance the treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain was negotiated; and by one clause of that treaty the claims of American citizens then pending against Spain were assumed by the United States. The six months allowed for ratification of the treaty having expired, and the treaty not having been approved by Spain, the matter was relegated to its original status, as was thought by the American commissioner; and after this failure to ratify the treaty the Spanish Government, through a commission, considered the claim of Mr. Meade, and after cutting it down repeatedly and systematically, rendered judgment in his favor for $300,000—much less than he ought to have had. Afterward negotiations were resumed between Spain and the United States and the treaty was ratified. Then it became a question whether this claim was included in that treaty.

The Government of the United States had limited its liability to $5,000,000, and it became a question whether Mr. Meade was entitled to any relief from the hands of our Government, or whether his claim was still operative as against Spain. The American minister had presented the case with great force to the Spanish Government, but after the claim had been allowed by that Government it became a disputed claim as between the Government of the United States and the Government of Spain. At length the claim was placed before the United States for allowance. The commission appointed to investigate it demanded the original papers upon which Spain had rendered the judgment or allowance. Spain, fearing that the claim would still be made against that Government, refused to give up the original papers, saying that the certificate of allowance ought to be sufficient for this Government, and was all that the Spanish Government would furnish; whereupon the commission appointed by the United States to investigate the claim disallowed it, refused further to recognize it as a claim against this Government, treating it as a claim against Spain which that Government should liquidate. Now Spain refuses to liquidate the claim by reason of a statement made, it is asserted, by the American minister that the Government of the United States was responsible. So that, while this claim is admitted on all hands to be just and proper in every way, having been so declared by Minister Adams, by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court in passing upon the judgment of the Court of Claims——

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES] yield for a motion that the committee rise? It will obviously be impossible to finish the consideration of this bill this afternoon in time to allow the passage in the House of the bills already acted on favorably.

Mr. HOOKER. Let the gentleman from Iowa yield with the understanding that this bill shall go over.

Mr. HOLMES. Very well; if it be understood that this claim holds its place——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] will yield a moment, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] desires to make a request.

Mr. LIND. Being called away from the city, I request that my colleague [Mr. NELSON] may be permitted to call up in my behalf a small bill on next Friday, or as soon as the order of business we have had to-day may be resumed.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. LANHAM. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. SOWDEN. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES] reserves the right to call up this bill on next Friday, I reserve the right to object to it if I should think proper.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; no rights will be waived.

Mr. HOLMES. The status of the case will be the same as now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Iowa now yields with the understanding that if this order of business be resumed next Friday his bill will be first considered, no rights being waived.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The right of objection being reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. That is understood.

The motion of Mr. LANHAM, that the committee rise, was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ROGERS reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

WILLIAM A. BEVENS.

The bill (S. 317) for the relief of William A. Bevens, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of Milo McCrillis;

A bill (H. R. 6018) for the relief of George Campbell; and

A bill (H. R. 11495) for the relief of George H. Owen.

Amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to House bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of the estate of John W. Whitfield;

A bill (H. R. 11227) for the relief of Henry Setzer;

A bill (H. R. 3112) for the relief of Phineas T. Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 10042) for the relief of the estate of James H. Judkins and William T. Judkins; and

A bill (H. R. 6662) for the relief of W. O. Wiatt, Edward Hughes, and J. W. Powell, session clerks of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. Can we not have some of the bills read as we go along?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair). The gentleman has the right to have the bill read in each case if he desires it.

Mr. KILGORE. I will not insist on the demand for the reading of the bill in each case, but the Committee on Enrolled Bills should have more time to examine the bills.

HEIRS OF JACOB CRAMER.

A bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer was reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "land," in line 5, "said warrant to be locatable only on public land subject to private entry."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SARAH L. LARIMER.

The bill (S. 2563) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyoming, and for the loss of property taken by Sioux Indians, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

House bill 777, with the same title, was laid on the table.

MARGARET KENNEDY.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES MILLINGER.

The bill (S. 602) for the relief of James Millinger, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with a favorable recommendation, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BUCHANAN, House bill 31 with the same title was laid on the table.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE TENNESSEE AND CUMBERLAND RIVERS.

On motion of Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company, organized under act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain bridges, and approaches thereto, over the Tennessee River at any point below Aurora, in the State of Kentucky, and the Cumberland River at any point in Trigg County, State of Kentucky, on said river. Said bridges shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation by which they may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States, and equal privileges in the use of said bridges shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way over said bridges for postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridges shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridges and the several railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridges, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 4. That any bridges authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said rivers as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridges, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the rivers, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridges are approved by the Secretary of War the bridges shall not be built, and should any change be made in the plan of said bridges during the progress of construction such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridges herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move in section 1, line 7, to strike out "Aurora" and insert in lieu thereof "south boundary of Calloway County," and in the ninth line, after the word "Kentucky," to strike out the words "on said river," and in lieu thereof to insert "at any point in Monroe or Cumberland Counties, Kentucky, or in Clay County, in Tennessee, on said river."

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS, INDIANA.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 755) to appropriate $127.50 to reimburse the Indian committee of Western Yearly Meeting of Friends in Indiana for money expended by them in the purchase of Government lands in North Carolina for an Indian training school, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $127.50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, from the money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the executive committee on Indian affairs of Western Yearly Meeting of Friends in Indiana for money paid by them for the purchase of two lots of land situated in Swain County, in North Carolina, in the town of Cherokee, for the purpose of building thereon Government buildings for a training school home for the education of the children of the Eastern band of Cherokees, the titles to which have been conveyed to and are now held by the United States, and on which said buildings have been erected and are now in use as designed; the said payment to be made by the Secretary of the Interior to B. C. Hobbs, of Bloomingdale, Ind., the representative of said committee, on presentation of proper vouchers and satisfactory evidence of said indebtedness.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out, in the third line, "twenty-seven" and insert "twenty-two."

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the committee adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to conform.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES OF CALHOUN AND PULASKI, TENN.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10866) to refer the claims against the United States of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Churches of Calhoun and Pulaski, Tenn., and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the evidence and papers which refer to the claims against the United States of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Calhoun, Tenn., and of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Pulaski, Tenn., be, and the same are hereby, referred to the War Department; that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the use and occupation of said churches by the United States Army, and report the length of time and period during which the United States used and occupied said churches, the purposes for which said churches were occupied, the value of the rental during said occupation, and the extent of the pecuniary damage said churches suffered by United States troops during said occupation; and when such investigation shall be completed the Secretary of War shall report the result thereof, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for action in the premises.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the several votes taken on the passage of bills this evening, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion has been made with reference to all of them but the one just preceding that called up by the gentleman from Tennessee. If there be no objection, the order will be also made in that case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GIFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments to a House bill the title of which I ask to have read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted as follows, on account of important business:

To Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia.
To Mr. TOWNSHEND.
To Mr. DIBBLE.
To Mr. COTHRAN.
To Mr. DARGAN.
To Mr. HOLMAN.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. SENEY to print remarks in the RECORD on House bill No. 9084, to establish a court of patent appeals.

FORT WALLACE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11525) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Wallace military reservation, in Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws his objection to the request I made a few moments since.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, under its previous order, takes a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 28, 1888.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JNO. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. YODER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of pension bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARUTH in the chair.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the order of proceeding followed on last Friday be pursued to-night; that the roll be called, beginning where we then left off, and that each member as his name is called be allowed to ask consideration of one bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARTHA V. COLEMAN.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha V. Coleman, a volunteer nurse in the late war, giving her, for life, the sum of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to hear the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman, respectfully report:

The facts and circumstances of the service of Martha V. Coleman as an Army nurse, her disability contracted therein, and her present necessity are set forth in the Senate report as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 1176, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The claimant, Martha V. Coleman (nee Hudson), was matron and nurse in Adams General and Officers' Hospital at Memphis, Tenn., from January 10 to September 5, 1863. She now resides at Forestville, Md., and petitions to be granted a pension of $30 per month, on the ground that, owing to the arduous duties incumbent upon her as matron and nurse in hospitals at Memphis, Tenn., during the war of the rebellion, she contracted typhoid fever, and is suffering from the effects of the same at the present time; that she has children dependent upon her for support and education, and that a pension would relieve her present necessities.

"Dr. Wilbur P. Buck, of Moweaqua, Ill., testifies that he was assistant surgeon of the Eighth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and has personal knowledge that claimant rendered valuable service as nurse and matron in the Officers' General Hospital at Memphis, Tenn. The testimony of Dr. Buck is corroborated by J. G. Garland, M. D., acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, 1863-'64; Harley Crocker, late captain Company C, One hundredth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Rev. H. L. Vannuys, of Goshen, Ind.

"It appears from the facts in the case that the claim is a meritorious one, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendments:

Strike out, in lines 5 and 6 of the bill as printed, the words "giving her, for life, the sum of twenty-five," and insert in place thereof the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of twelve."

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMMA F. READ.

The name of Mr. LEE was called.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask unanimous consent in behalf of General LEE, who is necessarily absent to-night, to call up the bill (H. R. 5408) granting a pension to Emma F. Read.

There being no objection, the bill was considered.

It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Emma F. Read, the blind daughter of Capt. John Read, of the Falls Church (Va.) Home Guards, upon the United States pension-roll and pay to her a pension at the rate of $50 per month during her lifetime, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general law.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

Emma F. Reed is the blind daughter of Capt. John Read, of the Falls Church (Va.) Home Guards, and the applicant for pension provided for in this bill. John D. Read, her father, was a volunteer in the Falls Church Home Guards. Under the provisions of a special act of Congress, approved July 4, 1862, his widow applied for a pension and was granted the same by the Interior Department, special act, certificate No. 87458, on the 5th day of December, 1866, and continued to draw pension up to the day of her death, which occurred about January, 1886.

At the time of the death of her father, who was shot by Mosby's guerrillas, he left a widow and three children—one son and two daughters. The son died some years ago, and the daughters left wholly unprovided for (the youngest daughter was injured and has become wholly blind; she requires constant attendance of another person), and both daughters are dependent on public charity for the necessaries of life. These facts are evidenced by affidavits on file, which are made a part of this report. After a careful investigation of the evidence on file, and in consideration of the helpless and total blindness of this daughter of a man who suffered death because of his loyalty to the Government, and while in the service, your committee are clearly of the opinion that this is a meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, by striking out in seventh line "fifty" and inserting "eighteen," making it $18 instead of $50.

TOWN OF FALLS CHURCH,
County of Fairfax, State of Virginia, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the place above named, George B. Ives, a resident and citizen of said place, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he has been a citizen and resident in the town of Falls Church for thirty years; that he was a member of the Falls Church (Va.) Home Guard, which was organized by the loyal citizens and furnished arms by the United States Government, for the purpose of defending the place and their property against the forces of the Confederate government; that he personally well knew John Read, who was a member of said organization, and who was taken from his home in the night time by a band of Mosby's men and conveyed some distance farther back into the country, and was there shot and killed by them, and left upon the ground until his body was brought home by his eldest daughter Lotta and her aunt; that the said Reed left a widow, a son, and two daughters surviving him; that the son died some years ago, and the widow died about six months ago; that the said two daughters are left wholly alone, they having no kindred either here or elsewhere on whom they can depend or call upon for support; that their only property consists of an inferior house and small lot of land worth not over $1,000, from which they are wholly unable to gain a maintenance, and have to be helped to a livelihood by charitable friends; that the youngest of said daughters, named Emma F. Read, was injured when a child in one of her eyes by the accidental discharging of a gun, some of the shot from which entered her face and one eye, and that she has since become and is now totally blind; that because of such infirmity she is obliged to require a constant attendant; that because of such attendance upon her, her sister is unable to follow her profession of nurse to the sick, by which she was able to render a support for the family prior to the death of the mother. And the witness further states that the said organization existed and the said Read was killed during the war of the rebellion, and that he has no pecuniary interest in her claim for pension through a special act of Congress.

GEORGE B. IVES.

STATE OF VIRGINIA, County of Fairfax, ss:

On this 10th day of July, A. D. 1886, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Levi Parker, aged sixty-nine years, a resident of Falls Church, in the county of Fairfax and State of Virginia, whose post-office address is Falls Church, Fairfax County, Virginia, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case, as follows: That he was a citizen of the town of Falls Church, and lived there during the year; that he has resided there continuously since the year 1844; that he was acquainted with John Read, the father of Emma F. Read; that said Reed was a member of the Falls Church (Va.) Home Guard; that he remembers perfectly well the time when said Reed was captured at his (Reed's) house, was taken therefrom by a band of Mosby's men, who took said Reed some miles farther into the interior of the State and shot him, and left him on the ground dead, where said Read's body remained until brought home to his daughter Lotta and her aunt; that the said home guards were organized by and made up of men (citizens) of the vicinity who were loyal to the Union, and that they were supplied with guns by the United States Government; that said John Read left a widow and three children—one son and two daughters; that the son died some years ago; that the widow died about six months ago; that the daughters are left wholly unprovided for, except a house and small lot of land worth not more than $400; that the youngest daughter, Emma Florence, was injured by the accidental discharge of a shotgun, some of the shot from which entered her eyes and caused her to become wholly blind; that said Emma requires the constant attendance of another person; that for this reason her sister has been forced to give up her profession of sick nurse and attend upon her; that they are unable to provide a comfortable maintenance for themselves, and that they have to be helped by those who they have no claim upon to the necessities of life.

[SEAL.] M. E. CHURCH, Notary Public.

Mr. CARLTON. Mr. Chairman, I have come to the conclusion that inasmuch as the order under which we are assembled to-night, in the way it has been construed, has no equity in it at all, I shall feel constrained to call for a quorum upon the passage of every bill. I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to pension legislation; but there is another class of bills ruled out under the special order, which if not pension bills are certainly nothing else; and I do not see how members can have any redress to secure the legislation that is necessary in such cases except to object to the bills to be considered here to-night, in order that the House may reframe that order.

Mr. RYAN. What are the other bills to which the gentleman refers?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair will state that he knows of no other bills called up for consideration except pension bills and bills for the removal of political disabilities.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] has proposed an amendment to this bill, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in the seventh line, after the word "pension," " for total blindness."

Mr. MCMILLIN. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, which has been read, as I understand it, will put this pension at $72 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which has been adopted is the committee amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The pension for total blindness, however, as I understand it, is $72 a month, and the question is whether, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia were adopted, that would not increase the pension to $72 a month. I would merely suggest that the blindness sufficiently appears in another part of the bill, and that the amendment proposed will give more pension than was designed.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of the gentleman can be accomplished by rejecting the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not apprehend that there is any danger such as the gentleman suggests. There is no rate of pension now for dependent daughters, however, and unless some rate is fixed the Pension Office could pay her no pension at all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But, Mr. Chairman, if you adjudicate the question of right to a pension, and then fix the disability as total blindness, under the law you will fix the rate at $72 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. CARLTON. I object.

The question was put; and the Chairman stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. CARLTON. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 1.

Mr. CARLTON. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CARLTON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. SPINOLA. It is evident that there is not a quorum here, and as the gentleman says he will raise the question of no quorum on every bill, I move that the committee do now rise for the purpose of moving that the House adjourn.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. CARLTON. Mr. Chairman, there are a great many bills here that may be subject to the ruling that they are not in order under the special order, and I say that that order is not an equitable one. I have a claim here where the claimant was awarded a land warrant as a part of his pension as a Mexican soldier. If that is not a pension it is not anything else. It was so declared by the act of March 3, 1855. That bill was referred to the Committee on Pensions. That committee have had it under consideration, and it was reported on by them after they had acted on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that no such bill has been called up for consideration at this night's session.

Mr. CARLTON. The point of order was made last Friday night that the bill was not in order under the special order governing Friday evening sessions, which was sustained by the Chair, and I think that the order should be changed.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CARLTON] be taken up as the next bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Georgia. Members who came here to-night, expecting to pass pension bills on this Calendar, are taken by surprise. I think the gentleman should permit us to go on this evening. He has given sufficient notice by stating his purpose to the committee. Members will see it in the RECORD and they will know it by next Friday night, and it may be the means of bringing a quorum here. It is a little hard on those who are here to-night expecting to get bills considered that the gentleman should on this very short notice require us to have a quorum here.

Mr. MAISH. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that the position of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CARLTON] is by no means an untenable one. I think there is great merit in what he has stated. If the bill which he proposes to present has been decided to be a pension bill I think it is plainly proper that the committee and the House to-night should consider it——

Mr. WASHINGTON. It has not been reached.

Mr. MAISH. And therefore I move that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to call up that bill for consideration.

Mr. CARLTON. I will state in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, why the bill has not been called up to-night. I went to see the Speaker of the House, and also the Chairman of the committee of the proceedings to-night, and I was informed that that bill would not come in under the order. Now, I dislike exceedingly to put myself in the attitude of an objector, but being convinced, as I am in this instance, that that order is not an equitable one, so far as it relates to these claims, I think it is my duty to see that the order is perfected before any further business under that order is proceeded with.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the title of the bill to which the gentleman from Georgia refers?

Mr. MAISH. By what committee is the bill reported?

Mr. MORRILL. By the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARLTON. I will withdraw my objection for the present, with the understanding that when this bill under consideration is passed I be allowed to ask unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to the bill to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum has been withdrawn, and without objection the bill as amended will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection.

JONAS DOERING.

Mr. LYMAN. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jonas Doering, late private of Company A, Eighth Battalion Turner Rifles, District of Columbia, in lieu of pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering, submit the following report:

It clearly appears from the report of the Senate committee in this case, which is hereto annexed and made a part hereof, that this is a meritorious case, and they therefore recommend that this bill do pass with an amendment striking out the word "fifty," in the third line of the bill, and inserting the word "forty" in place thereof.

[Senate Report No. 1693, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering, have examined the same, and report:

This is a bill to increase the pension of Jonas Doering, late a private in Company A, Eighth Battalion Turner Rifles, District of Columbia, to $50 a month.

The claim is based on the loss of sight of the right eye, and resulting disease of left eye, occasioned by injury received or disease contracted in the Army in 1861 in the line of duty. There is no conflict between the claimant and the Pension Bureau as to the incurrence of the disability. The testimony is ample on this point and also as to its extent. The sight of the right eye was wholly gone in 1861 for any practical use, and the left eye, the sight of which was then impaired, is continuously failing, and in the opinion of skilled oculists he will soon be totally blind.

Dr. Richey, in March, 1884, testifies that the right eye has no visual power—totally blind; and the left eye can read figures No. 15 at 5 inches. On this testimony he was allowed a pension of $8 a month from February, 1881, to March, 1884, and from that time at $24. On appeal a reconsideration was had, and the Commissioner announced that it was believed he was entitled to the latter rating from the time of filing his application.

Four years ago the doctors pronounced him totally disqualified for reliable manual labor. There is apparently no difference of opinion between skilled oculists who have examined the claimant and the medical board to whom the case has been referred by the Pension Bureau; and the conclusion is that he is totally blind in one eye and that the other is so affected that it is of no use to him in the way of his engaging in any employment; that he is so nearly blind as to be helpless; that his helplessness is permanent, and that it exists to such an extent as to entitle him to a pension of $50 a month.

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES W. GEDDES.

Mr. CARLTON. I ask unanimous consent now to make a brief statement in regard to the bill to which I called the attention of the Committee of the Whole a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make a statement. In the absence of objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CARLTON. This is a bill reported from the Committee on Pensions, awarding to Charles W. Geddes, under the act of March 3, 1855, a land-warrant. The point has been made, not by any member of the committee, but on last Friday night, by the then occupant of the chair, that this bill is not entitled to consideration according to the terms of the order under which the House proceeds at these Friday night sessions; in other words, that the bill does not grant a pension. Now, I respectfully submit that if this is not a pension it is not anything. The claimant was a soldier of the Mexican war, and under the act of March 3, 1855, a land-warrant was made a part of his pension for services rendered in that war. Owing to some slight technicality in the law the Commissioner of Pensions withheld this land-warrant from the claimant, and advised that a bill be introduced in this House and referred to the Committee on Pensions, in order that the claimant might obtain what is equitably his right. With this statement I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CARLTON] has called attention?

Mr. KILGORE. I have no disposition to "kick up a row" about the bill of my friend from Georgia, but I am inclined to submit the point of order and let the Chair rule upon it.

Mr. CARLTON. Before the Chair rules I wish to make an additional statement. Perhaps under a very strict construction of the order this bill might possibly be ruled out, but upon an equitable construction of that order there is no doubt in my mind that it should be admitted. If the attention of the House had been called to this question at the time the order was framed, I have no doubt the terms of the order would have excluded all doubt as to the propriety of considering this bill as a pension bill. The point I made in the earlier part of this evening, when I raised my objection, was that this order as it has been construed is not equitable in its operation and ought to be changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The order under which the House is now acting was adopted on the 2d of March, 1888. It reads as follows:

Resolved, That, until further ordered, on each Friday, at 3 o'clock p. m., the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and after the 15th day of April next until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiciary removing political disabilities, shall be considered, and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions, and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than 10.30 p. m.

The only question which arises here is whether or not this bill is in the nature of a pension—not whether it is a pension, but whether it is of that nature. The bill, when originally introduced in the House, was referred by order of the Speaker to the Committee on Pensions; and it has been reported back by that committee. The evident object of the resolution just read by the Chair was that business coming from the Pension Committee should be considered at these Friday evening sessions. The Chair therefore rules that the bill of the gentleman from Georgia is in order. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9791) for the relief of Charles W. Geddes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to include the name of Charles W. Geddes, late assistant engineer United States Navy, among those who served in the Mexican war, and to issue to said Charles W. Geddes, under the provisions and limitations of law, a land-warrant for his services as assistant engineer on the United States steamer General Taylor during said war.

The CHAIRMAN. The report in this case was read at the last Friday night session. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BITTINGER.

Mr. MAISH. I ask to call up the bill (S. 3047) granting an increase of pension to William Bittinger.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that this bill is not on the Calendar, not having yet been reported from the committee.

Mr. MAISH. I supposed it had been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman should find that the bill has been reported and is on the Calendar, it will, of course, be considered. While that fact is being ascertained, the call of the roll will proceed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest that the gentleman be regarded as retaining his place in the call.

SAMUEL LANE.

Mr. MAISH. I wish to inquire whether the bill which I called up last Friday night is not now to be considered as unfinished business. It had been partially considered when the House adjourned. I refer to the bill (S. 122) granting a pension to Samuel Lane.

The CHAIRMAN. That bill, the Chair understands, was pending in the House, not in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAISH. It was pending in the House at the time of the adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, according to the record, the House had not proceeded to the consideration of the bill; pending the request for unanimous consent the House adjourned.

Mr. MAISH. That being the case, I call up the bill now.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Lane, late of Company G, Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 122) granting a pension to Samuel Lane, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully state that they adopt the Senate report and recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

That Samuel Lane was enlisted in the Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry October 8, A. D. 1861, and discharged October 8, A. D. 1864, by reason of expiration of the term of his enlistment. His claim for a pension, sworn to on the 5th June, A. D. 1885, was based upon an alleged injury to the head, sustained from a falling tree near Beaufort, S. C., in 1862, and rheumatism, resultant from the kick of a horse received on his right thigh near the same point in 1863. It was rejected February 25, 1886, upon the ground that the claimant has not been disabled in a pensionable degree by reason of the alleged disabilities since the date of the filing of the claim, the examining board declaring that they discovered no evidence of any injury to head or thigh. At a re-examination made August 25, A. D. 1886, the board report that they find no external evidence of any injury to the head or any fracture of the cranium, though there is impaired hearing, which may be consequent upon injury of the head; no external injury of right thigh, varicose veins upon both thighs, and a curvature of the lower spine, which, in their judgment, may have resulted from the exercise of his trade (that of stone-mason) prior to his entry of the service. This board recommend a special rating for severe deafness of one ear and slight deafness of the other.

Affidavits accompany the claim from Lane's captain, his physician, a number of his comrades, and some of his present neighbors, establishing that he was in sound health at the date of enlistment. That the injuries alleged were actually sustained in the service and in the line of duty, and that he was under medical treatment therefor while present with his regiment. That at his return from the Army he was in feeble health; has since been unfitted for manual labor, suffering from vertigo, accompanied by discharge from the head, as well as from deafness and rheumatism.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant, now seventy-six years of age, who was certainly of sound health at the date of his enlistment, and of feeble health at his discharge, and unable since his return from the Army to earn a living by manual labor, is entitled to credit for the alleged disabilities and the benefit of the doubt as to their cause, and accordingly recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BRIDGET CARROLL.

Mr. MARTIN. I call up the bill (H. R. 9296) granting a pension to Bridget Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bridget Carroll, mother of Patrick Carroll, late a sergeant of Company H, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

Bridget Carroll is the mother of Patrick J. Carroll, who re-enlisted in Battery H, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, October 21, 1881, after the completion of a previous term of enlistment in the same command. He was accidentally drowned September 12, 1886, by the capsizing of a sail-boat near Fort Warren, Mass., while on pass. The commanding officer of the battery in a letter to the soldier's brother, dated September 13, 1886, says:

"Sergeant Carroll was in a small sail-boat with two other men and the boat was capsized near the shore. One of his comrades tried to save him, but your brother was entangled in the sail and ropes and unable to swim, was dead before relief could reach him. * * * Sergeant Carroll was a good soldier and non-commissioned officer, and his death is deplored by his comrades and his officers."

Having been drowned while off duty, the mother is not entitled to pension under the general laws.

A large number of affidavits have been filed with this committee, from which it appears that the soldier left neither wife nor minor child surviving him; that he aided in the support of his parents; that they never possessed any real or personal property producing any income; that the father of the soldier died in the poor-house a short time before the latter's death, and that the mother at the age of seventy-six years is dependent upon others for support.

Nearly ten years' honorable service of the son clearly entitles the mother under these circumstances to the favorable consideration of Congress.

The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAISH. I have been requested to ask consent to call up a bill for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], who, as we all know, is necessarily and unavoidably absent from the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SENEY. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope no one will object, under the circumstances. For six years the gentleman from Indiana has been chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and he has done an immense amount of good for the old soldiers. He is now necessarily absent, attending to his canvass in Indiana. To allow him the privilege of having a bill called up in his absence would be only a tribute of respect which every member of the House ought to be glad to pay to him.

Mr. SENEY. I object. Our method of proceeding is perfectly fair. The men who attend here call up bills.

JOHN V. HENNESSEY.

Mr. MCMILLIN. By request of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MCKINNEY], though not undertaking to exercise his right—for I do not wish to infringe the rules—I call up the bill (S. 2321) granting a pension to John V. Hennessey. The bill I expected to call up in favor of Pat. Gagherty has not yet been reported, and is not on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2321) granting a pension to John V. Hennessey.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John V. Hennessey, late of Company I, First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, and Company M, Third Massachusetts Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth the essential facts in this case, which your committee adopt as a part of their own report:

"SENATE REPORT.

"This claimant enlisted August 23, 1863, in Company I, Eighteenth Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, and was discharged June 17, 1865. His claim in the Pension Office was rejected on the ground that the disease for which application was made—disease of the eyes—was not received in line of duty. The facts in the case are these:

"Hennessey had been granted a pass by his captain to come to Washington, his company being then stationed near Arlington Heights, Virginia. On his return the sentinel at the end of the Long Bridge told him his time had expired, when claimant, looking at his own watch, found that he still had ten minutes remaining, and all the evidence indicates that Hennessey was right as to the matter of time. The sentinel thereupon struck him over the head with a musket, inflicting quite a severe wound. This delayed him necessarily, and when he reached camp he was put under punishment by the hasty and inconsiderate act of some officer. His wound remained undressed for some time, and the weather being cold inflammation set in and it resulted in a serious affection of the eyes. The regimental surgeon treated him for this disease, and he has never recovered from the effect thereof.

"There is no question about the fact of disability, and the only objection raised is that claimant was not in line of duty at the time his disability was incurred. Your committee consider that, inasmuch as claimant, on consulting his watch, really believed that his leave had not expired, he ought not to have imposed upon him the consequence of a brutal abuse of authority which was wholly unwarranted and which he could not prevent. A multitude of letters and petitions from well-known citizens residing in claimant's neighborhood attest that he is a sober and industrious man, that he was a faithful soldier, in fact was of exceptionally good record, and that he is a worthy object of relief."

Your committee will add that an examination of the papers in the Pension Office reveals the fact that the captain and other members of claimant's company swear to the assault, and also to the resultant effects upon the eyes. Repeated medical examinations confirm the view that the assault was the cause of the disability, the last examination having been made by a distinguished oculist, whose report concludes in these words:

"In my opinion the connection between a blow on the occiput and gradually increasing nerve atrophy is fairly to be concluded, and the entire history of the case, with the appearances and symptoms, support the connection."

It will be seen that the only question at issue is as to whether soldier was in line of duty when the assault was committed, and on this point the fact that he was on his way to camp would seem to justify the belief that he was acting in good faith. Even if his furlough had expired a few minutes before he presented himself to the guards, on which point there is no proof whatever, there was no good reason why he should have been brutally assaulted and made to suffer for a quarter of a century. The case is one that appeals strongly to the sense of justice, and the technical objection of which in the Pension Office should not deter Congress from giving the relief asked for in this bill.

Your committee report the bill back favorably and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY K. RICHARDS.

Mr. MERRIMAN. I call up the bill (S. 3306) granting a pension to Mary K. Richards.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary K. Richards, widow of Edwin F. Richards, late captain Company D, Fifty-ninth New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Senate report contains all the facts, and is adopted as the report of the House, namely:

The beneficiary under the bill is the widow of the late Capt. Edwin F. Richards, Company D, Fifty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, who was wounded by shot in the fore-arm in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., June 4, 1864, discharged the service November 20, 1864, and pensioned from that date until his death, July 28, 1878. A description of the wound is given in the certificate of a board of examining surgeons, convened in New York City January 3, 1872, as follows:

"Ball entered outer aspect of right fore-arm, middle third, fracturing the ulna, and made exit at inside aspect. There has been an exsection of about 3 inches of the bone, with no reproduction of bone. Hand is not well nourished, and he has but little use of it. He is unable to wash his face with that hand; there is but little strength in it. Disability total and permanent."

Examining Surgeon James Neil, after a like technical description of the wound, states:

"The result is loss of pronation, and suppuration, and the hand is cold, atrophied, and partially paralyzed."

The effect of the wound upon the health of the officer, and its complications with other diseases, resulting in death, are detailed in the affidavits of his attending physicians, Drs. Adams and Bennett, and affirmed by Dr. Addison Ely, an examining surgeon of the Pension Bureau. These follow:

In the matter of the application of Mary K. Richards, widow of Edwin F. Richards, a soldier of the war of the rebellion against the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Putnam:

Dr. John Q. Adams, of the town of Carmel, in said county, being duly sworn, says: That he is a practicing physician, and has been for the last —— years; that he attended Mr. Edwin F. Richards, late of Company D, Fifty-ninth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry; that his last illness and death was caused by a shot wound in the fore-arm, received in the battle of Cold Harbor,

Va., June 4, 1864; that the shock following the wound was severe, and from the effects of which his nervous system has never recovered; that the immediate effects of the wound upon the nervous system were excessively great; nervous perturbation, with twitching of the eyelids and partial loss of vision, followed by ptosis or paralysis of the lids, rendering him utterly unable to raise the upper lids; that the discharge from the wound was profuse and long continued, consisting of offensive puss and broken down tissue, causing and bringing on general debility of the whole body and complete nervous exhaustion.

The whole body ceased to be nourished, the nervous symptoms increased, the vision became impaired, the impairment of vision steadily increased, the mind also became impaired, and finally the blindness became total two years and a half ago. During this period he has been unable to leave his bed without assistance, his memory was almost entirely lost, the functions of his body were much impaired, the body was poorly nourished, nervous perturbation was great, interfering with sleep and rendering his mind and temper irritable; the above state of affairs all having been brought about by said shot wound of the forearm. He continued to waste and sink, and died July 28, 1878, from exhaustion, the mode of death being by asthenia; and deponent further says that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of the pension of the said Mary K. Richards.

J. Q. ADAMS, M. D.

Sworn to before me this 15th day of October, 1878.

A. P. HAZEN, Deputy County Clerk.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, County of Fairfield:

Ezra P. Bennett, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a practicing physician and surgeon, residing in the village of Danbury, of said county and State; that he was well acquainted with the lately deceased (July 28, 1887) Capt. Edwin F. Richards, of the Fifty-ninth Regiment New York Veteran Volunteers, of Putnam County, New York, whose pension certificate was No. 36584; that he was his attending physician more or less for the last two years of his life; that the said Capt. Edwin F. Richards was totally blind for the last two years of his life and nearly blind for a much longer period; that the immediate cause of his blindness was amaurosis, the result of a slow degenerative action or process that had been going on in his physical system from the time when he received the gunshot wound in his right fore-arm in the battle of Cold Harbor, Va. (for which he was pensioned), and of his extreme illness associated with malarial fever in the hospital at Washington; that said diseased action was undoubtedly superinduced and caused by the injury his system received at that time; that his vitality was ever after of a lower grade, developing a chain of morbid actions ending in functional and structural changes of the brain and cerebral nerves, causing blindness and finally death; and that his parents are still alive and are healthy persons.

EZRA P. BENNETT, M. D.,
Attending physician to said Edwin F. Richards.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of October, 1878.

DAVID B. BREED,
Clerk of the Superior Court for Fairfield County, Connecticut.

POST-OFFICE, CARMEL, October 18, 1878.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Putnam:

I hereby certify that I carefully examined Edwin F. Richards, captain in Company D, Fifty-ninth Regiment New York Veteran Volunteers, whose pension certificate was No. 36587, on the 29th day of October, 1877, by order from the United States Pension Department; that he was at that time totally blind and helpless, and that said blindness (amaurosis) was undoubtedly the result of the gunshot wound and disease he received while in the military service of the United States; that Dr. E. P. Bennett, of Danbury, Conn., his attending physician, ranks high as a physician and surgeon.

D. ADDISON ELY,
Examining Surgeon.

The record shows no testimony antagonistic to that of these three surgeons. The claim was rejected, however, by the Pension Bureau, "on the ground that cause of death was not due to military service," ignoring, by such decision, all the medical evidence in the case.

Believing that, in the case under consideration, the pathological connection between the pensioned disability and the fatal disease is established by the testimony and that the soldier's death is referable to such pensioned disability through its wasting and debilitating effects upon the nervous and general physical system, thus inviting the specific form of disease of which he died, the committee report favorably upon the bill and recommend it for passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN BUTLER.

Mr. MOFFITT. I call up the bill (S. 1766) granting a pension to Stephen Butler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen Butler, late a private in Company B, Second Nebraska Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

SENATE REPORT.

Claimant enlisted in Company B, Second Nebraska Volunteer Cavalry, October 14, 1862, and was mustered out with the company September 4, 1863.

The claim was rejected October 15, 1885, on the ground that there is no record of the alleged deafness on file at the War Department, and that claimant is unable to furnish competent evidence to establish origin of deafness in the service and line of duty; that the evidence taken before a special examiner shows almost conclusively that the deafness existed prior to enlistment, and that the negative testimony since filed is not sufficient to outweigh the positive adverse testimony.

In affidavit filed December 1, 1879, claimant states that while on the march from Fort Kearney to Omaha, Nebr., he was exposed to the wet in camping out, and being already in a debilitated condition, he readily took a severe cold, which settled in his head, producing deafness in both ears; that said disability was contracted in the line of his military duty about the latter part of August, 1863; that he was deaf when discharged from the service and has been ever since.

In affidavit executed September 13, 1879, claimant states that he derives no benefit from medical treatment, and that his disability is said to be incurable.

In affidavit executed June 9, 1881, claimant states that he has roaring in his head, which annoys him very much, and that he is more disqualified on account of deafness than he would be with the loss of a leg or an arm.

In affidavit filed August 27, 1881, claimant states that Dr. R. Conkling, of Omaha, Nebr., his regimental surgeon, was the only one who treated him while in the service.

In affidavit filed March 23, 1888, Levi J. Kennard, of Omaha, Nebr., testifies that claimant was free from deafness at the time of his enlistment into the service, and could hear as well as any one. If claimant had been deaf prior to enlistment affiant certainly would have known it, but that claimant is very deaf at the present time. This testimony is corroborated by Jesse T. Davis, of Blair, Nebr.; Thomas Kennard, of Lincoln, Nebr.; Thomas Price and George McKenzie, jr., of Omaha, Nebr.

In affidavit filed March 23, 1888, G. W. Martin, of Beatrice, Nebr., testified that claimant's hearing was good prior to and at the time of his enlistment into the service, and that the persons who have testified to the contrary have done so either under a mistake or have willfully and maliciously sworn to a falsehood. Affiant further states that the said claimant is so deaf that it is difficult to make him hear at all.

In affidavit filed March 30, 1888, Dr. J. R. Conkling, of Washington, D. C., testifies that claimant was not deaf while at Fort Kearney, but was a perfectly sound man.

In affidavit filed March 23, 1888, George McKenzie, of Omaha, Nebr., testifies that claimant is now very deaf, and has been since his discharge from the service, but was free from deafness prior to enlistment.

In affidavit filed March 23, 1888, Lafayette Shipley, of Florence, Nebr., testifies that claimant was free from deafness at the time of his enlistment into the service, and could hear as well as any soldier at the drills during the earlier part of his service; that owing to exposure incident to army life he contracted deafness in the line of duty, which has continued to the present time; that affiant was by claimant's side during the period of his enlistment and has personal knowledge of the facts to which he testifies.

In affidavit filed March 23, 1888, William Blackwood, of Fort Calhoun, Nebr., and Alexander Real, of Blair, Nebr., testify that claimant was free from deafness at the time of his enlistment, and this testimony is corroborated by Chris. Rathmann, of Blair, Nebr.; W. H. B. Stout, of Lincoln, Nebr.; Oliver Bouvier, of De Soto, Nebr.; J. M. Trisler, of Fort Calhoun, Nebr., and Frank Leach, of Florence, Nebr.

In affidavit filed December 1, 1883, W. H. B. Stout, late a second lieutenant of claimant's company, testifies that claimant contracted a violent cold while in the service, which resulted in deafness.

In affidavit filed August 27, 1881, Elias H. Clark, of Blair, Nebr., testifies that claimant has been deaf from the date of his discharge from the service to the present time.

In affidavit filed August 27, 1881, Dr. S. B. Taylor, of Washington County, Nebraska, testifies to continuance of deafness since 1870.

In a petition signed by H. Glasgow, Perry Walker, A. F. Drake, E. T. Joy, H. Allen, C. H. Martin, S. H. Ayres, Israel McLaren, G. C. Ferguson, T. S. Berry, and other citizens of Odell, Nebr., it is stated that claimant is an honest and upright man, who served his country faithfully and well, and is entirely deserving of a pension.

The adverse features in the claim appear in the testimony of John Coulter, of Blair, Nebr.; Lewis Bouvier, of Blair, Nebr.; Almon Brewster, of Kennard, Nebr.; W. G. Cunningham, of Blair, Nebr.; John E. West, of Blair, Nebr.; W. G. Olinger, of Omaha, Nebr.

Claimant was accepted as a sound man at the time of his enlistment, and the records do not show that he was deaf at any time during his term of service. The testimony of his officers and comrades show that he was free from deafness at the time of his enlistment, but that he contracted a cold in the service which resulted in severe deafness, continuing to the present time. The fact that there was no question raised by the Government as to claimant's prior soundness at any time during his term of service should be accepted as evidence that he was sound at the time of enlistment. The abundance of testimony from credible citizens who had personal knowledge that claimant was free from deafness at the time of his enlistment should not be allowed to be contradicted by the adverse statements of persons made before a special examiner of the Bureau of Pensions.

The facts warrant favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN M. KRUNK.

Mr. HUNTER. I call up the bill (H. R. 10769) granting a pension to John M. Krunk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John M. Krunk, late a private of Company C, Thirty-fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

Claimant enlisted as a private in Company C, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Volunteers, August 12, 1863, and was discharged December 29, 1864. In his declaration for pension filed July 10, 1877, he alleges that during the winter of 1863 and 1864 he was greatly exposed to cold, bad weather on different marches through Kentucky and Virginia, and took deep cold, which settled in his system and produced erysipelas, with which he has been diseased ever since.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground of no satisfactory evidence connecting either of the alleged causes of disability with the service.

There is abundant evidence to show that the claimant was physically sound and healthy at the time of enlistment, and there is also evidence to substantiate the fact that he has been suffering from disease which he alleges was contracted in the Army and in line of duty. Dr. Keplinger testifies that he knows claimant came home from the service with a deep-seated cold and pneumonia and erysiplas, which confined him to his bed nearly three months, since which time he has not been able to do manual labor enough to support him; that he has since his first attack of sickness treated him for disease of the lungs, and at times he has been confined to the house for seven months at a time. He says he knows one-half day's work so fatigues claimant that he is incapacitated from work for a week or two at a time with pains in his lungs and throat. William S. Mansey testifies that he returned home with claimant, and that he was taken worse the next day and has never been entirely well since.

J. L. Bennett, first lieutenant of claimant's company, testifies that when the command left Smithland, Ky., for Franklin the weather was extremely cold and soldiers were exposed to great hardships; that soon after this, winter of 1864, the health of claimant commenced to fail; that he, Bennett, took him into his tent and kept him from his duty that he might recover his strength; that claimant's health was impaired, and he was feeble until mustered out. Albert Kinney testifies that he was in the same regiment with claimant, and that his health seemed to fail at Lexington from exposure at the barracks. John McLaughlin Rumsey, W. S. Mansey, members of claimant's command, testify substantially to the same state of facts. He received no hospital treatment, as he was mustered out of the service about the time of the incurrence of his disabilities.

The committee believes this to be a meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HUGH BRADY.

Mr. MORRILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 7683) granting an increase of pension to Hugh Brady.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Hugh Brady, late of Company I, Eighty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Infantry, to $36 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him under certificate 62848.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill is now a pensioner at the rate of $24 per month, on account of gunshot wound of left hand and breast, piles, and disease of heart, contracted while serving as private in Company I, Eighty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. This rate was fixed by the Pension Bureau because the combined disabilities are held as equivalent to the disability resulting from the loss of a hand or foot, for which the act of March 3, 1883, provides said rate. By the provisions of the act of August 4, 1886, the rate of pension for loss of a hand or foot was raised to $30 per month, but equivalent disabilities were not increased over the former rate.

Pensioner asks that his pension be increased to $36, the rate now provided by law for loss of leg above the knee, or arm above the elbow, or total disability in either. Such a disability, however, is not shown by the medical certificates. But as the disability, as heretofore stated, is equivalent to the loss of a hand, your committee are of opinion that the pension should be increased to $30 per month, and therefore recommend that the accompanying bill be amended by striking out the words "thirty-six," in line 6, and inserting instead the word "thirty," and, thus amended, ask that it do pass.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE MOTZ.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, called up for consideration the bill (S. 654) granting a pension to Caroline Motz:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Motz, widow of the late John Motz, deceased, who was a private in Company K, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for pension at the rate and rank of said John Motz.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 654) granting a pension to Caroline Motz, beg leave to report:

This is an application of Caroline Motz, widow of John Motz, to be placed on the pension-roll, and providing, further, that her pension should commence from the date of the death of her husband, to wit, the 13th day of November, 1867.

John Motz enlisted as a private in Company K, Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, December 22, 1863. Discharged January 3, 1865, for "disability from wounds received in action September 22, 1864." He filed an application for a pension January 16, 1865, which was granted and paid to him up to November 14, 1867.

The application of the widow was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the grounds that "it appears from the records of the health office, Philadelphia, that the cause of death was cholera."

The evidence in the papers go to a great extent to sustain the finding of the Pension Bureau, that death was not the result of wounds or disease received in the service. The certificate of the attending physician alleges the cause of death to have been "cholera morbus." The testimony furnished in behalf of the Government and claimant shows that the physician who was called in during the last illness of the deceased had never seen the patient prior to that time; knew nothing of the fact of his previous wound, and his certificate, under these circumstances, was limited to the immediate cause of his death.

Dr. Emmett Fisher, the physician referred to, states in his affidavit:

"In my judgment the disease was more decidedly fatal in his case than ordinarily, on account of his system being already in some peculiar broken-down condition, concerning the nature of which I was not at the time aware, but which was nevertheless evident in the rapidity of his sinking under the attack."

Dr. W. S. Stewart, assistant surgeon Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, testified that—

"It was several months before the ball was extricated, and the suppuration which was going on around it during this time resulted in producing blood poison, under the effect of which he was under my care and seemed to have convalesced, when he removed from my neighborhood and afterwards, in a short time, died. His treatment was supporting—iron and quinine, beef-tea, milk-punch, etc."

Dr. Henry S. Wittkamp testifies that—

"He had treated the same John Motz since his discharge from the United States service; that he was suffering of two wounds which he is said to have received in the United States service, one in the left leg and one in the left shoulder; that both wounds were not well healed, broken open and commenced to run, whereby his whole system was weakened; that he died of general debility in November, 1867."

It is in proof that from the time of his being wounded up to the date of his death he was subject to the cramps similar to the ones with which he was affected in his last illness; that he was a well and hearty man prior to his enlistment. Under this testimony the only question presented to the committee is, whether a mere certificate of the physician called in during his last illness, which continued but ten hours, should be taken as controlling against the clearly established fact of his debilitated condition from the date of his wounds, the opinion of his regular physician that his death was, in fact, the result of these wounds, and the expression of opinion of the physician who attended him during his last illness that "the disease was more decidedly fatal than ordinarily on account of his broken-down physical condition."

The committee is of the opinion that the burden of proof in this case is in favor of the right of the widow to a pension, and where a grave doubt exists as to that right it should be solved in favor of a meritorious claimant. The evidence in this case shows this claimant to be now sixty-six years of age, absolutely dependent, and, by reason of her age, necessarily unable to maintain herself by manual labor.

It is not the practice of the committee, however, to allow a pension, under such circumstances, to commence prior to the passage of the bill, as is contemplated by Senate bill 654.

Your committee would therefore recommend that Senate bill 654 be amended by striking out all in lines 8, 9, and 10 after the words "John Motz," and as so amended the bill is reported favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, said: Let the reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. KILGORE. No; let it be read.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY KARSTETTER.

Mr. PATTON called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7877) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mary Karstetter, widow of Jacob Karstetter, a soldier in the volunteer service of Pennsylvania, be placed on the pension-roll, and receive an allowance of pension as the widow of a soldier, late a private of Company C, Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7877) granting a pension to Mary Karstetter, submit the following report:

Jacob Karstetter, husband of claimant, was in receipt of a pension previous to and at the time of his death of $18 per month for gunshot wound of left hand, received in action. He died August 21, 1874, of gastritis, alleged to be the consequence of broken constitution, the result of exposure and injuries received in the service. His widow's claim for pension was rejected "because death resulted from gastritis and congestion of kidneys, due to unknown causes not medically established."

The evidence all shows that the soldier was over 6 feet in height, and engaged in farming in the mountains of Pennsylvania at the time of his enlistment; that his health was of the most rugged character; that he returned home wounded and broken down in health; that he never recovered, and that he finally died from some disease which, as is claimed by the Pension Department, could not be medically established.

James F. Berry, neighbor, testifies:

"When he came home he was broken down and not able to do manual labor. He complained a good deal after he came home, and was frequently sick and laid up. Saw him often in his last sickness. He was much worn down and very feeble."

F. H. Van Valzah, M. D., testifies:

"From June, 1870, to 1871, saw soldier almost daily. In months of November and December, 1870, I attended him in an attack of pleuro-pneumonia, brought on by exposure and the broken-down condition of his system. The above trouble was in the left side and lung; he always complained of a weakness in this lung, from some injury received in the service. Affiant thinks a horse ran against him in the seven-days' fight, injuring him and leaving an enlargement or tumor in the left side, which, no doubt, has been the starting point of his lung trouble."

Dr. J. A. Houtz testifies:

"Knew Jacob Karstetter from December, 1871, to date of his death. Do not know anything about his condition before enlistment. He never was under affiant's treatment except during his last illness, which lasted about four weeks. His illness was caused by gastritis and congestion of kidneys. Death was caused by gastritis. Although soldier never consulted affiant before his last illness, affiant frequently heard him say he was not the same man physically he had been before he was in the service. He did very little hard labor during the time affiant knew him."

From the evidence of these physicians, who attended soldier during his last and a previous severe illness, it is apparent that his broken-down constitution, the result of exposure and service in the Army, predisposed him to several attacks of sickness, the last of which proved fatal.

Your committee are clearly of the opinion that death can be traced in this case to soldier's service in the Army with very nearly the same degree of certainty (notwithstanding the fact that it can not be medically established) as if it had been the direct result of a gunshot wound. They therefore report favorably, and recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. The name of my colleague, Mr. PERKINS, has been called, but he has gone out of the Hall and will return in a few minutes. I ask, by unanimous consent, his name be passed over with the right to call up a bill when he returns.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DANIEL TANNER.

Mr. POST called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4649) granting a pension to Daniel Tanner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel Tanner, father of Russel J. Tanner, deceased, late of Company C, One hundred and third Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4649) granting a pension to Daniel Tanner, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

That the claimant bases his claim for pension on the ground that his son, Russel J. Tanner, who was his chief support, was killed while in the service of the United States. The claim was refused by the Department on the ground of non-dependence; that the claimant was possessed of sufficient property at the time of the soldier's death to suffice for his support.

Thomas Montgomery being duly sworn, testifies that—

"He is well acquainted with claimant, being his nearest neighbor on the east; that in 1862 he owned 40 acres of land, from which he derived his support with the assistance of his two sons, Russel J. and Henry A. Tanner; that both of his sons enlisted and both died in the service; that claimant was so prostrated by the loss of his sons that he was unable to work his farm and was obliged to sell it; that he purchased town property and lost a considerable portion of it by fire, and that by laboring to his whole ability he is only able to earn a moderate living."

Daniel Burbridge and Thomas J. Burbridge also testify that they were well acquainted with Daniel Tanner; that they know that his son, Russel J. Tanner, was the mainstay in his father's support for five years previous to his enlistment.

Daniel Burbridge further states that he was at work with claimant when he received a sunstroke, and that he has since been unable to labor in the hot sun.

There are other affidavits filed in this case stating that the sons helped to support their father before enlistment, and that they sent money to him while in the service; that the claimant is now seventy-two years old and supports himself principally by gardening and doing odd jobs.

Your committee think the facts in this case show that the claimant was largely dependent on his sons for support, and having lost both his boys while in the service of their country, we think he is justly entitled to a pension, and we therefore respectfully recommend that this bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EPHRAIM NYE.

Mr. RYAN called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 210) granting a pension to Ephraim Nye.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ephraim Nye, late a private in Company A, Second Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 210) granting a pension to Ephraim Nye, submit the following report:

The applicant enlisted in Company A, Second Kansas Cavalry, November 6, 1861, and was discharged June 22, 1865, doing nearly eight months more than three years' service. He filed declaration for pension for piles June 21, 1880. The claim was rejected on the ground of inability to show the continuance of piles from discharge up to 1880. The claim of the origin of piles in the service was established by two or more witnesses, and upon that point the Pension Office seems to have been thoroughly satisfied. Applicant shows that from discharge to 1870 he resided in Coffey County, Kansas, and his physician during those years is dead, as are also several other persons who were neighbors during that period and who knew of his disability.

John Goodyear testifies that he knew the soldier from about 1876 to 1884; that Nye worked for him for several years, and that he suffered from the effects of piles.

Dr. E. B. Allen, in March, 1884, after an examination, says that soldier suffered from external and internal hemorrhoids. Two medical examinations, one made in 1882 and one in 1883, reported that there were external and internal hemorrhoids.

This man has a splendid record as a soldier. His service was long, continuous, and arduous. The record shows that he suffered during the last year of his service from this disability, but, with characteristic energy, continued on duty most of the time. It is true he does not show continuance of the disability during each and every year from discharge to about 1876, because of the death of his family physician, who treated him during that time, and also because of the death of some neighbors who knew of his ailment during those years. But the character of the disease, as shown during the last year of the war, and by his employer and the medical evidence from 1876 on, leads almost irresistibly to the conclusion that the disease was continuous.

This, together with his good, long record as a soldier, as your committee think, justify the granting of the relief asked for by the bill, and therefore recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE WALLEN.

Mr. SCULL called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9175) granting a pension to George Wallen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Wallen, late a private in Company C, First Regiment of Kentucky Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9175) granting a pension to George Wallen, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, from the 5th day of November, 1861, to December 31, 1864, when honorably discharged. He has filed an application for pension, numbered 184804, which has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the record of service shows that he was a deserter during a portion of the term of service, and the charge had not been removed.

The claimant was absent from his command for a portion of his service, but on account of sickness, and was upon his return restored to duty, served out his term of enlistment, and was honorably discharged from the service.

He makes a claim for deafness contracted in the fall of 1863, in Russell County, Kentucky. He has shown by the testimony of comrades that he contracted a severe cold at said date and place, and that partial deafness followed as a result thereof. This was contracted after his return from absence without leave. Testimony shows that he has been disabled each year since discharge by deafness.

The examining board at Burkesville, Ky., certify that—

"There is partial deafness of both ears. He can be communicated with without artificial aid, but only by loud sounds. This partial deafness, in our opinion, is due to thickening of the drum membranes from former inflammation of internal ears. Rating one-half."

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill should pass, and so recommend.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL M. REESE.

Mr. SENEY called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Samuel M. Reese.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Samuel M. Reese, late private Company B, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report by (Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Samuel M. Reese, having examined the same, submit the following report:

Samuel M. Reese, a private in Company B, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Ohio National Guards, enlisted May 5, 1864, and was discharged August 23, 1864. Filed his declaration for pension in the Pension Office February 12, 1875. Alleges in his declaration that on or about June 20, 1864, while on picket duty he was subjected to exposure and compelled to lie on the ground during a rain; took cold that settled in the glands of his neck on the right side, which has resulted in a weakness of the neck and affection of the right ear and right side of his head, causing deafness and more or less pain in the head.

His application was rejected upon the ground that there is no record of the alleged cold settling in glands of neck, causing deafness, and that after a special examination claimant failed to show by satisfactory testimony that said disability originated in the service and in line of duty.

J. C. Buel and J. G. White on August 25, 1876, testify that they were well acquainted with claimant prior to enlistment and knew that his hearing was perfect, and that after his return from the service his health was bad.

W. R. Nevins, late captain of Company B, One hundred and fiftieth Ohio Volunteers, testifies that claimant was a sound man when he enlisted, and while at Fort Bunker Hill, January 20, 1864, in line of duty and in a severe rain-storm took cold, settling in his neck, on the glands of his neck, causing a large swelling at that time, which resulted in affection of the right side of the head and deafness of the right ear. He knew these facts from his own personal knowledge, and that the claimant was a good soldier and of good moral character.

C. F. Dutton, late assistant surgeon of the One hundred and fiftieth Regiment, testifies that he treated claimant while in the service during July and August for the discharge caused by exposure while on duty, resulting in the formation of a severe abscess under the right ear, involving a number of the cervical glands. He was in his company both before and after his return to the regimental hospital for several weeks, and there are numerous affidavits on file to the same effect, and quite a number of affidavits testifying to his prior soundness before entering the service.

There is no doubt of its existence in the service. He has been examined by two boards of examining surgeons as to his present condition, and the disease alleged has been found to exist, and his disabilities have been rated at one-half for abscess of right gland and that caused by chronic inflammation of the middle ear, and total, that caused deafness of right ear. This case has been at different times examined by special examiners, and a large amount of evidence is on file, and after a careful investigation of the same, your committee have come to the conclusion that this is a meritorious case and one entitled to special action by Congress, and unhesitatingly recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MISS SARAH MARY CARROLL.

Mr. SPINOLA called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2499) increasing the pension of Miss Sarah Mary Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Miss Sarah Mary Carroll, late an Army nurse, from $12.50 to $50 a month, to date from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2499) granting an increase of pension to Miss Sarah Mary Carroll, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

The grounds upon which the interposition of Congress is asked in this case are so fully set forth in the petition of the claimant that we submit the same in full for the information of the House:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, Sarah Mary Carroll, of the city and county of New York, New York, respectfully states, i. e.:

That in the year 1862, being then a member of the community of the Sisters of Charity of the United States, and a resident of Washington City, D. C., Surg. J. S. Billings, United States Army, now in charge of the Anatomical Museum, Washington, D. C., applied for sisters to nurse the sick and wounded in the Cliffburne General Hospital, Washington, of whom some two or three hundred were Confederate prisoners of war, and the balance United States regular and volunteer soldiers.

He especially requested that the undersigned be appointed to the charge of the corps of nurses, for reasons he explains in his letter accompanying this statement. The application of Dr. Billings was most willingly complied with, and the undersigned at once commenced duty at the said Cliffburne General Hospital, Washington, D. C. There she remained engaged in the duties of principal nurse until assigned to the Eckington General Hospital, near Washington, where she labored, much exposed to the inclemency of the weather, until her health became impaired, and in 1865 she was assigned to duty at the Hotel Dieu, New Orleans, La., in the hope that a milder climate would benefit her health. That she received nurse's pay whilst in the Cliffburne and Eckington General Hospitals, but she applied every cent of it, as well as her rations commutation, to the wants of the sick and wounded patients, for the procuring delicacies, etc., the Sanitary Commission supplies sometimes not being sufficient, and frequently sent the same to distant field-hospitals.

That she even drew on her own patrimony to procure what she thought nice for the sick and wounded; she could easily do so then, for the community gave her support and clothing, which was all she needed.

That the Providence Hospital, Capitol Hill, Washington (then in its infancy), was begun and governed by her, opened in 1861 and conducted until 1865. The Hotel Dieu, New Orleans, La., she managed from 1865 to 1867, and in both of these hospitals she received and cared for, free of charge, many officers whose families were poor and dependent on the patient's pay for support.

(The above three paragraphs are given very reluctantly.)

That she served in the Hotel Dieu, New Orleans, La., during the cholera and yellow-fever epidemics of 1866 and 1867, and although not a military hospital, and the war ended, several officers were therein restored to health and usefulness, both of the Army and Navy. Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan's letter testifies to some of the facts.

That she visited and cared for many officers in their quarters who were stationed in New Orleans during those epidemics. That her constitution and health prior to her hospital service during the war were exceptionally good, so much so that she could not believe any amount of fatigue in the care of the sick could break her down, but gradually her health became impaired, hemorrhages of the lungs frequently prostrated her during the latter part of her hospital service in Washington, D. C., and the yellow fever, which she contracted while nursing Capt. Allen Smith, Fourth Cavalry, in New Orleans, reduced her very much. That not being able fully to perform her duties in the community of the Sisters of Charity, she resigned in 1880, and has since supported herself by writing.

That in June, 1887, she was obliged to resign her position as one of Maj. Gen. D. E. Sickles's secretaries, and has expended the little funds (her savings) in remedies for her health, with the hope of being able to resume her duties; but the hope has not been realized. That she is absolutely without any funds, save the $12.50 per month invalid's pension granted by special act 208 of Congress, approved July 26, 1886, and which does not suffice to pay room-rent; she is, therefore, entirely dependent on the kindness of friends in Boston for a home. That her debility is rapidly increasing, and she is now, at the age of fifty-four years, so feeble and ill as to be unable to do any work for her support.

Your petitioner therefore prays that in consideration of the many she has helped and restored to our country's service in the past, if it be right and just, she may be granted an increase of pension, sufficient to keep her from want during the few remaining years which may be left to her. Her present state of physical weakness makes her believe she will not long need it.

SARAH M. CARROLL.

Subscribed and sworn to at Boston, in the county of Suffolk and State of Massachusetts, before me, this 28th day of February, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.] CHAS. HALL ADAMS,
Notary Public.

43 WEST FIFTY-FOURTH STREET, NEW YORK, February 3, 1886.

During the time that I was in charge of the Medical Bureau of the Army, as Surgeon-General on the active-list, I had occasion repeatedly to observe the devotion to duty of Miss Sarah M. Carroll, then a Sister of Charity, and having charge of the nurses of the Providence Hospital, in the city of Washington. I then regarded Sister Mary Carroll, as she was called, as the best nurse in the service. Not only was she indefatigable in the discharge of her duties, but she was gifted with a degree of intelligence that rendered her doubly valuable.

I am very sure that many of our wounded owe their lives to her fidelity and kindness.

WM. A. HAMMOND,
Surgeon-General United States Army (retired).

ARMY AND MEDICAL MUSEUM, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 7, 1886.

Having been informed that Miss Sarah M. Carroll is now an applicant to Congress for pension on the ground of services rendered by her as nurse during and immediately after the late war, I take great pleasure in saying that this lady, at that time known as Sister Mary Carroll, rendered extremely valuable service as the chief of the sisters employed as female nurses in Cliffburn general hospital, near this city, under my charge during the spring and summer of 1862. These were the first Catholic sisters employed in the military hospitals in this vicinity, and in requesting their assignment I made special request that Sister Mary Carroll should be sent in charge, being assured of her knowledge, zeal, and loyalty. The result more than confirmed my expectations. Her zeal and devotion to the sick and wounded I have never seen surpassed, and the service which she rendered in assisting in the organization of the hospital and in bringing order out of confusion, which at first prevailed, were so great that it would be difficult to assign to them a suitable pecuniary reward.

JOHN S. BILLINGS,
Surgeon United States Army.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1886.

I take great pleasure in stating that I have known Miss Carroll for many years. I first met her as a Sister of Charity in New Orleans, La., during the prevalence of the cholera there in 1866. She was then in charge of the Hotel Dieu Hospital, and attended and administered to officers in the hotel and at their houses. I frequently saw her during that year and during the yellow-fever epidemic in 1867. She took care of a number of officers in the Hotel Dieu, among them Capt. Allen Smith, Fourth Cavalry, and Lieut. Col. M. V. Sheridan, while dangerously ill with the fever, and was finally taken down with it herself.

During the war she was a skillful and able nurse in the hospitals about Washington. She nursed Lieutenant-Colonel O'Keefe, dangerously wounded at Five Forks, until his death.

Sister Mary Carroll is a woman of great intelligence and refinement, and devoted her life during the war to the care of officers and soldiers when sick or wounded.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

23 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, March 17, 1886.

I have great satisfaction in bearing testimony to the valuable services rendered by Miss Carroll in nursing officers, soldiers, and sailors of the Army and Navy, and prisoners of war in the Washington hospitals, from 1861 to 1865. I can speak of her services from my own observation and from the statements made to me at the time, by many of the officers and men of my command, who were inmates of the hospitals in charge of Sister Mary Carroll, as she was then called.

Although devoted to the cause of the Union, and enjoying the confidence of President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton, she seemed always to devote herself with peculiar tenderness to the care of wounded and sick prisoners of war. Sister Mary was a woman of remarkable aptitude for her vocation. She was gifted with a rare unison of executive ability and feminine gentleness, which enabled her to do much good in providing means for her work, gaining the co-operation of the authorities and of citizens, while her skill and tact as a nurse were acknowledged by the sick and wounded and by the Army and Navy surgeons.

In July and August, 1863, while suffering from a wound received at Gettysburgh, I was attended daily as a nurse by Sister Mary Carroll, in addition to her duties as chief of the Providence Hospital, and I am persuaded that I am equally indebted to the skill of my surgeon, Dr. Thomas Lein, and to Sister Mary Carroll for my recovery.

D. E. SICKLES,
Major-General United States Army (retired).

It is evident that Miss Carroll's services during the war were of a high order. She was one of that good sisterhood who, in war or peace alike, are the aids of suffering humanity. She gave her pay to the sick and wounded under her charge, and to benefit them drew upon her private patrimony. She did all that she could to help her country, and at last surrendered her health. She was obliged to leave the sisterhood because she was unable, by reason of failing powers, to perform the exacting duties their labors of love and charity impose on them. She has since struggled to obtain a livelihood, and now, unable to work, is dependent upon the small sum of $12 per month allowed her by the Government.

We recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment fixing her pension at $25 instead of $50.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN LYNN.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 308) granting a pension to John Lynn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Lynn, late of Company A, Forty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 308) granting a pension to John Lynn, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

This claimant enlisted July 3, 1863, as a private in Company A, Forty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers, and was discharged December 17, 1864. He made application April 14, 1879, alleging that while in service and line of duty at Elizabethtown, Ky., about June 16, 1864, he was taken sick with inflammatory rheumatism, which has settled in his knees and ankle-joints. The claim was rejected on the ground of rheumatism prior to enlistment, as shown by the evidence adduced upon special examination, including claimant's own admissions. After the claim was rejected a large amount of evidence was filed to remove the ground of rejection, but the Pension Bureau adhered to its decision.

After a careful examination of the evidence, the committee believe that a large preponderance of testimony favors the opinion that claimant was free from inflammatory rheumatism prior to and at the time of his enlistment; five comrades who served in the same company and regiment testify to that fact. These same comrades and others testify as to the incurrence of the disability for which he claims pension in the Army and in line of duty. There is also abundant proof that said disease has continued to disable him to a considerable extent ever since his discharge up to the present time. His family physician for the past seven years says that he is a cripple from the effects of rheumatism. His left leg is perished until it is not more than half as large as the other one, and at times, if he exposes himself to bad weather or takes cold, he has to use a crutch. While there is a bare possibility that the claimant may have had slight attacks of rheumatism prior to enlistment, yet from the evidence the committee believe that his present condition is the result of his Army service, and so believing, submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH ROSIER.

Mr. TILLMAN called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9668) granting a pension to Joseph Rosier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Joseph Rosier, a private in Captain Tripp's company, Colonel Brisbane's regiment, South Carolina Volunteers, in the Florida and Seminole war of 1836, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $20 per month from the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BARRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9668) granting a pension to Joseph Rosier, have considered the same and report as follows:

The departmental records show that the claimant served in Captain Fripp's Company of South Carolina Volunteers in the Florida and Seminole war, from February 23, to May 1, 1836, and was honorably discharged at the latter date, at Fort Brooke, East Florida

He is now seventy-nine years of age, is totally blind in both eyes, and is in poor and needy circumstances.

The committee report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM S. BRADSHAW.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I call up the bill (S. 3208) granting a pension to William S. Bradshaw.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William S. Bradshaw, late first lieutenant of Company C, Sixty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth the facts in this case fully, and is hereby adopted, and passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 2032, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3208) granting a pension to William S. Bradshaw, have examined the same, and report:

Claimant was mustered into the service of the United States as a first lieutenant in Company C, Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, to date October 28, 1861. There is no account of his service till February 28, 1862, when he is reported present, and so reported to April 30, 1862. He was absent with leave from January 3 to 14, 1862, and present sick from February 3 to June 30, 1862; was discharged from the service June 28, 1862, upon tender of resignation accompanied by surgeon's certificate of disability showing "disease of a chronic pleuritic character contracted prior to his entering the service, from an injury received while shoeing a fractious horse, about four years ago, in consequence of which he was laid up a number of weeks with a severe attack of pleuritis, and has never been able to endure severe labor since that time; that since entering the service active drilling or marching has invariably developed severe pleuritic pains about his chest and underneath his sternum, rendering him totally unfit for duty."

The claim was rejected February 18, 1884, on the ground that the disability for which pension is claimed existed prior to enlistment, as shown by the records of the War Department.

In his application for pension filed September 28, 1883, claimant alleges that he contracted lameness of breast and back at New Madrid, Mo., March, 1862.

In affidavit filed November 13, 1883, claimant states that his disability was incurred by drawing cannon at New Madrid, Mo., about April, 1862.

In affidavit filed November 20, 1885, claimant states that he was a perfectly sound man prior to and at the time of his enlistment into the service of the United States, and that his disability was incurred under the circumstances as stated above.

In affidavit filed February 16, 1883, claimant states that in the winter of 1858–'59 he received a strain in his breast while shoeing a horse, but that he fully recovered from the effects of said strain prior to entering the service.

In affidavit filed March 15, 1887, claimant states that the United States surgeon who examined him for the service pronounced him a perfectly sound man.

In affidavit filed May 2, 1887, claimant states that on account of his disabilities incurred in the service he is not able to perform more than one-fourth the labor of an able-bodied man.

In affidavit filed October 18, 1887, claimant states that not being familiar with army rules and regulations, to the best of his knowledge and belief he never read the certificate of disability given him by the assistant surgeon, not knowing at the time what the requirements were respecting the phraseology of such certificates; that the injuries received in the line of his military duty have resulted in rheumatism and permanent injury of breast and back, and that in consequence thereof he is not able to earn his living by manual labor.

In affidavit filed November 16, 1883, Ritner Smith, a comrade, testifies that claimant was a perfectly sound and healthy man prior to and at the time of his enlistment into the service of the United States; that while stationed at New Madrid, Mo., about April, 1862, he contracted disease of his chest and back by dragging heavy cannon in line of his military duty.

In affidavit filed February 20, 1884, C. E. Smith, late captain of claimant's company, testifies that between New Madrid and Tiptonville, Mo., claimant incurred injuries of his breast and back by dragging heavy cannon, which disabled him for duty, and was the occasion of his resigning from the service. This testimony is corroborated by the testimony of First Lieut. W. S. Tucker, of Company D, same regiment.

In affidavit filed October 27, 1884, John Rice, S. E. Stout, and E. S. Weldon, all of Meigs County, Ohio, testify that claimant was a perfectly sound man at the time of his enlistment into the service, commanding the highest wages then paid in that county in his line of business.

In affidavit filed November 20, 1885, H. D. Stebbins, of Ellsworth, Kans., testifies substantially as above, and his testimony is corroborated by the testimony of J. V. Wedon, Peter Jeroleman, W. C. Townel, Jacob Adams, and Elemer Pierce.

In affidavit filed November 15, 1887, Wesley S. Tucker, late first lieutenant of Company D, claimant's regiment, testifies that claimant was a sound man prior to the incurrence of injuries of his breast and back at New Madrid, Mo., in the spring of 1862.

In affidavit filed April 24, 1888, Horatio G. White, of Ellsworth, Kans., testifies that claimant was free from injury of breast and back prior to his enlistment into the service, but that since his return home from the war he has been troubled with rheumatism to such an extent as to be compelled to give up his business as a blacksmith.

John F. Baker, Joseph Kahira, George Seitz, M. Maclean, Frank S. Foster, Edward C. Jenkins, G. A. Calbott, T. Hamilton, J. E. W. Johnson, R. S. Lang, and others, of Ellsworth County, Kansas, state that claimant is entirely disabled for manual labor.

In affidavit filed April 23, 1888, Dr. William Reed, of Kanopolis, Kans., testifies that claimant has affection of spine, kidneys, heart, middle lumbar region, and rheumatism, making him wholly disabled for manual labor.

The certificate of disability containing the statement that claimant was injured prior to his enlistment into the service locates the disability in the region of the chest and underneath the sternum, but makes no mention of the alleged injury of back. It is without warrant and manifestly unjust to the claimant to reject his claim on account of injury of back because the surgeon's certificate of disability describes affection of the chest and breast-bone, incurred prior to enlistment. It is easy to separate the counts of his declaration, rejecting the claim on account of injury to breast, and admitting the claim for disability from injury of back, shown to have been incurred in the service and in the line of claimant's military duty.

The facts warrant favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with this amendment: In the seventh line, after the word "sixty," strike out the word "fifth," and insert the word "third."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY I. DRAKE.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9173) granting a pension to Mary I. Drake.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary I. Drake, widow of Newton E. Drake, late a private in Company E, Fifty-second Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

It appears from the records of the War Department that Newton E. Drake, husband of claimant, was enrolled at Scottsville, Allen County, Kentucky, on the 1st day of August, 1861, as a private in Company E, Fifty-second Regiment of Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers, and was mustered into the United States service at the same place on the 16th day of Octobor, 1863, for one year, and was honorably mustered out with his command on the 18th day of January, 1865.

The soldier filed an application for pension on the 23d day of September, 1879, and alleged in his declaration that while in the military service of the United States, and in the line of duty, at Huntsville, Ala., in October, 1864, he contracted rheumatism of both arms and legs. He died a pauper on the 7th day of June, 1881, while the claim was still pending, and was buried at the public expense, leaving his wife in destitute circumstances. His widow continued to prosecute the claim, but it was rejected on the 7th day of September, 1887, "because of the widow's failure, after a reasonable term, to furnish the necessary proof to complete the claim."

Your committee have carefully considered the proof in this case, and believe that claimant died of disease contracted in the service of his country, and that the claim is meritorious. We therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage, with the following amendment: Insert "Mary J. Drake" in title and body of the bill in place of "Mary I. Drake" wherever that name occurs.

The amendments were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS B. WALSH.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 7) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

Claimant enlisted as a private in Company D, Tenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, January 1, 1864, and was discharged August 1, 1865. Claims a pension for disability caused by rheumatism contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. Claim rejected on the ground that there is no record of alleged disability, and claimant is unable to prove by reliable testimony that it was contracted in the service and in line of duty. Claimant states that he was treated for rheumatism, in camp, by Dr. Leonard, assistant surgeon of his regiment, at Johnsonville, Tenn., for about two and a half months, until sent to Nashville for discharge. After his discharge he was treated by Drs. Abel, Slack, May, and Parkerson; that he has not been treated by any physician for the last several years, but has used a medicine recommended by Dr. Parkerson, which always afforded temporary relief. Has performed manual labor about one-fourth of his time since discharged; that he can not find a commissioned officer of regiment to give further testimony than that now on file; that he has written to Dr. Spencer J. Freeman, formerly of his regiment, but fails to get any reply.

Dr. Alexander is dead. Dr. John A. Parkerson, Isaac M. Bigham, and Capt. John A. Davis all testify as to prior soundness of soldier, and that at date of enlistment he was a sound, healthy man, having no disease whatever. Capt. John A. Davis further testifies that soldier complained of rheumatism, located in both hips; saw him placing his hands on his hips as if in pain; that soldier often reported to the surgeon for treatment for said disease, and to make his lot easier he was detailed about the adjutant's tent, where he staid until mustered out. Knows above from personal observation.

Comrades John G. Williams and William H. Wingo testify to the same state of facts.

First Lieut. Lorenzo D. McJunkins testifies that claimant, while in the line of duty at Johnsonville, Tenn., about July, 1865, was affected with rheumatism, and that he relieved him from duty on that account, and he did no more active duty until discharged; that soldier, with his company and regiment, was transferred from New Orleans to Nashville, Tenn., on a steamer. They were eleven days on the passage, exposed to the fogs and mist from the waters. This, with exposure to camp life, brought on rheumatism.

Dr. Abraham Slack testified that he treated soldier for lumbago and rheumatism shortly after his discharge, and again in 1868, 1869, and 1870.

Dr. A. G. Clapton also treated soldier for rheumatism.

Dr. J. P. Rowe testifies as to continuance of rheumatism, and rates soldier as two-thirds disabled. There is an abundance of testimony showing continuance of disability from date of discharge.

Dr. A. J. Paine, examining surgeon, gives soldier a three-fourths rating for disability from rheumatism.

Your committee are of the opinion that soldier contracted the disease from which he now suffers while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. He is clearly entitled to a pension, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill,

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCES H. PLUMMER.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask consent to consider at this time the bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Frances H. Plummer, widow of Brig. Gen. Joseph B. Plummer, United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $100 a month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out in the eighth line of the printed bill "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. CHEADLE (interrupting the reading). It is not necessary to consume time with the reading of that report, for I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that I will object to the bill because of the amount it carries.

Mr. WHEELER. I should have thought the gentleman would have objected when the bill was read, and not have the time of the committee taken up in reading the report.

Mr. CHEADLE. The gentleman from Alabama knows I have repeatedly stated that I would object to all bills of this character, and I supposed he would have remembered it without taking up the time of the House by calling up the bill and report.

Mr. WHEELER. In view of the objection I withdraw the bill; and ask unanimous consent that my name be passed over for the present, with the right to call up another bill hereafter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HENRIETTA WALDRON.

Mr. WICKHAM. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 7344) granting a pension to Henrietta Waldron.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henrietta Waldron, of Wakeman, Huron County, Ohio, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7344) granting a pension to Henrietta Waldron, have examined the same and beg leave to submit the following report:

This seems to be a case of great merit, and one in which the Pension Bureau was prevented only by technical law from issuing the pension.

The applicant made application for pension as widow of Seymour Waldron, late private in Company B, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers. Her application was rejected upon the ground, and only upon the ground, that she had never been legally married to the deceased.

The evidence shows that in 1841 she was married in New York to one Fillmore; that five months after the marriage he abandoned her, and about a year after the marriage was arrested for horse-stealing, convicted, and sentenced to the Sing Sing State's prison for three years; that shortly afterwards the applicant removed to Ohio, where, in 1845, she was married to Seymour Waldron; that before marrying him she was informed by those in whom she had confidence, and especially by one Elijah Bills, long since deceased, who was a leading man and the legal adviser in her neighborhood, that the conviction and sentence to the penitentiary of her former husband operated as a divorce and left her free to contract a new marriage, and that a license was duly and without question granted to said Waldron and her to marry, and the marriage solemnized by the officer authorized without any question as to her right.

Now, this advice to her that she was released from her former husband by his sentence to the penitentiary, while wrong, was very natural. At that time, and ever since, imprisonment in the penitentiary was and has been a ground of divorce by the laws of Ohio, and her advisers doubtless confounded the ground of divorce with the divorce itself.

The evidence shows that the applicant entered into this second marriage in the utmost good faith; that she has lived and moved in good society, her marriage never having been questioned, ever since; that she lived with the deceased as his wife for a period of forty years, having by him a family of seven children, one of whom was a soldier and lost his life in the service of his country in the war of the rebellion; that during all this period she supposed that she was lawfully married to Waldron, and first learned the contrary when informed by the Pension Bureau.

In the opinion of your committee, under these circumstances, in the forum of conscience and in the sight of God, these two persons were man and wife, and for the purpose of determining the question of the applicant's right to a pension should be so regarded.

The only ground of rejection by the Pension Bureau, as already stated, was the nullity of the marriage.

The evidence to support the claim that the soldier Waldron died of disability incurred in the Army consists, first, of an affidavit of Dr. E. N. Hawley, who attended him in his last illness, and who testifies that the deceased died of chronic diarrhea and rheumatism, the immediate cause being exhaustion, brought on by those diseases.

The postmaster at Wakeman, Ohio, testifies that he knows the cause of the soldier's death to have been chronic diarrhea and rheumatism, and that he was affected by both of these diseases from his discharge, in 1863, to his death.

Dr. E. H. White testifies that he knew the soldier for thirteen years before his enlistment, and was during all that time his family physician, and that the soldier was during that period and at his enlistment remarkably robust and strong, and that he knows that he was free from all diseases and had no rheumatism or diarrhea; that he was called to treat him immediately upon his return from the Army and found him prostrated with rheumatism and chronic diarrhea; that he treated him for a year or more, then removed from the place, to which he returned in 1878, and found him still suffering with the same diseases. He also states in a letter to the Commissioner, written May 10, 1883, that the soldier had constant diarrhea, and that it was the cause of his death. The standing of Dr. White is certified as good by the postmaster.

A. P. Phillips and Henry Hayes both testify that they knew the soldier at his enlistment and from his discharge till his death; that he was sound at his enlistment; that at the time of his discharge he was suffering with rheumatism and diarrhea, with which he was continuously afflicted from his discharge to his death.

This evidence seems to render it almost conclusive that the disability was incurred in the service, since he entered the service sound and came out with chronic diarrhea and rheumatism, which he had continuously till his death, and which caused his death. It should not be forgotten, in justice to the Pension Bureau, that it puts the rejection of the claim alone on the ground of non-marriage.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN B. TIMBERMAN.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 2606) granting a pension to John B. Timberman.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John B. Timberman, late private in Company G, Thirty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2606) granting a pension to John B. Timberman, having considered the same, report as follows:

They adopt and make part hereof the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1154, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2606) granting a pension to John B. Timberman, have examined the same, and report:

The applicant was a private in Company G, Thirty-fourth Ohio Volunteers. He entered the service September 9, 1861, and was discharged September 13, 1864. He filed an application July 2, 1880, alleging rheumatism contracted while on the march over the Alleghany Mountains. He claims that in 1867 this complaint resulted in paralysis of the legs from the hips down. His claim was rejected for want of evidence to clearly show the origin of the disease in the service. The examining surgeons gave him a total rating.

A careful review of the evidence convinces the committee that the case is a meritorious one, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IDA M. HOWELL.

Mr. WOODBURN. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of Ida M. Howell.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Ida M. Howell, the sister of the late Capt. Judd M. Mott, Sixteenth Michigan Regiment, Company I, and to pay to her the amount of pension which has accrued, commencing from the time of the death of the said Capt. Judd M. Mott, and to the date of the passage of this bill.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Insert in line 5, before the word "sister," the word "dependent," and strike out in the same line the word "captain" and insert "lieutenant-colonel." Also strike out all after "Company I," in the seventh line, and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, as if she was the widow instead of the sister of the said Judd M. Mott."

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of Ida M. Howell, submit the following report:

Ida M. Howell is a sister of Judd M. Mott, deceased, late lieutenant-colonel in Sixteenth Michigan Regiment Volunteers, Company I, in the late war of the rebellion, having entered the service as private and was successively promoted to the captaincy; was in the seven days' battle before Richmond; was captured and subsequently exchanged; re-entered the service and continued in service until June, 1863, when, in a skirmish at Aldie, Va., he was wounded, taken to Armory Square Hospital in Washington, D. C., where he died from the effects of the wounds received. When in hospital he was further promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

That the said Judd M. Mott and the said Ida M. Howell, his sister, resided in Michigan, and he contributed in a large degree towards her support; that she was at that time and is now in poor circumstances, and was chiefly, if not wholly, depending on the said Judd M. Mott for her support; that the said Ida M. Howell is a widow; is now poor and with little or no means, having herself and a young daughter to support; that the parents of the said Judd M. Mott and said Ida M. Howell died prior to 1876; and that neither the father nor mother nor any member of the family have received any pension by reason of the death of the said Judd M. Mott; that the said Judd M. Mott was unmarried and lived with his sister, the beneficiary under the bill.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendments were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MANON VANGORDON.

Mr. YODER. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Manon Vangordon, brother of Jacob Vangordon, late of Company K, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of California) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 330, having considered the same, report it back and recommend its passage, with the following amendment, to wit: Add, after the words "Indiana Volunteer Infantry," where they occur in the bill, the words "and pay him a pension of $18 per month."

Your committee adopt and make part hereof the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 62, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon, have examined the same, and report:

It appears from the papers in this case that Jacob M. Vangordon enlisted September 28, 1862, and served as a private in Company K, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and that while so serving he was killed by a gunshot wound received in the line of duty at or near Atlanta, Ga., in 1864. Manon Vangordon, the sole surviving brother of Jacob, who, except for his age, would be entitled to receive a pension, who is totally blind and helpless and was dependent upon his brother during his lifetime for support, and who is now a subject of charity, applied to the Pension Office for pension, which application was rejected because he was more than sixteen years old when the soldier died. He was forty-five years old in September, 1885, when his claim was presented to the Pension Office.

The record shows Jacob Vangordon to have been a good, true, and brave soldier; that he served about two years, and finally lost his life in the line of duty, and the committee are of the opinion, considering his honorable and useful service and the loss of his life under such circumstances, and the dependent condition of the brother, that the Government can well afford to make an exception in this case.

They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JANE JACKSON.

Mr. McCULLOGH. My name was called this evening before I got here, having been detained on account of the crowds on the street; and I ask leave to take up the bill (H. R. 9178) granting a pension to Jane Jackson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jane Jackson, widow of Nathan Jackson, late a private of Company B, Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9178) granting a pension to Jane Jackson, have considered the same and repor as follows:

The claimant's late husband, Nathan T. Jackson, was a private in Company B, Fifth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and served honorably from the 10th of October, 1861, to the 10th of January, 1863. He was discharged from service on certificate of disability for a severe gunshot wound of the left thigh. By reason of said wound he was a pensioner of the United States until his death, which occurred December 1, 1863. The widow's claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that dropsy, which caused the soldier's death, was not the result of the gunshot wound for which he was pensioned.

Considerable testimony of reliable men has been filed in the claim, and additional testimony has been obtained on a special examination by agents of the bureau, and the preponderance of such testimony seems to establish the fatal disease as attributable to the wound of thigh.

Special Examiner Thomes W. Burke, who personally cross-examined many of the witnesses, states in concluding his report:

"From the evidence now in this claim, I am of the opinion it possesses merit, and recommend further examination."

Special Examiner James B. Ricks also states:

"I think it probable there is merit in the claim, and recommend its submission, and if dropsy can be accepted as a sequela of gunshot wound, that the claim be admitted."

The examining surgeon in June, 1867, reported as follows:

"The ball passed through the middle third of the left thigh from the outer to the inner side, involving the bone, and injuring the sciatic nerve in its course."

Subsequent biennial examinations show that this severe disability continued, and ex-Surgeon J. A. Flippin, in 1877 and 1879, stated as follows:

"The ball entered posteriorly the upper part of middle third, and passing out 4 inches below on inner side of the thigh, partially dividing the muscles of the posterior part of the thigh."

The testimony is conclusive that the soldier suffered severely from the wound of thigh up to the day of his death, often being forced to leave his work, and during the last three years of his life the wound would inflame and cause a swelling of the limb. He had no physician to attend him, but his neighbors and friends characterize the swelling as a dropsical affection. For the few days next preceding death this so-called dropsical affection extended to both legs and to a portion of the body, and undoubtedly was the immediate cause of death. That it was dropsy, and not the result of blood-poisoning or of a disease of the bone at the seat of the wound is asserted only by non-professional witnesses.

It is established by the certificate of the examining surgeons that the wound involved the bone structure, the sciatic nerve, and the muscles of the left leg; the last illness began with a swelling of that leg; no chronic disease existed which would occasion dropsy, and the only exciting cause was the wound of service.

The claimant is seventy-two years of age and in destitute circumstances. The soldier died in a log hut, without windows or proper ventilation.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ANNA LEACH.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 10109) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Leach. This is an old lady eighty-five years of age, whose son died in the service.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension act, the name of Mrs. Anna Leach, dependent mother of Benjamin F. Leach, late of Company I, First Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10109) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Leach, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is the mother of B. F. Leach, late a private of Company I, First Iowa Volunteers, who died in hospital, August 16, 1862, while in service, of typhoid pneumonia.

The claim was rejected in the Pension Office because the claimant could not show, as required by law, that she was dependent on her son at the time of his death. She is now very poor and nearly eighty-five years of age.

Congress has by repeated acts established the rule that present dependence entitles the parents to pension, and your committee therefore report the bill back and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent that the bill that was called up for Mr. MATSON be now considered.

Mr. YODER. I have that bill, and I hope there will be no objection to its consideration at this time.

Mr. CROUSE. There are only three gentlemen present whose names have not been called, and I think it is only fair that the call should be continued until their names are reached.

Mr. SPINOLA. I withdraw the motion until those gentlemen's names are called.

The CHAIRMAN. The call of the list has been completed.

Mr. YODER. I hope there will be no objection to Mr. MATSON'S bill.

Mr. CROUSE. I think the list should be called until the names of those present who have not been called are reached before unanimous consent is asked.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. CROUSE. Until those gentlemen's names are called I do object.

MARY A. M'COOL.

Mr. CHEADLE (when his name was reached). I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 8735) granting a pension to Mary A. McCool.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. McCool, mother of John Stanton, late a private in Company I, of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8735) granting a pension to Mary A. McCool, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The claimant is the mother of John Stanton, who enlisted in July, 1861, as a private in Company I, Twenty-fifth Indiana. He died November 2, 1861, from drinking poisoned water. In 1871 the claimant married William McCool, who, after living with her a few months, deserted her and procured a divorce, leaving her alone and destitute. The claim was rejected "on the ground that claimant remarried in 1871, and did not file her application prior to July 1, 1880; hence there is no period for which pension can be paid."

All the evidence shows that the claimant was dependent on the soldier for support at the time of his enlistment. She was a widow at that time, her husband, the father of the boy, having died in 1848. Up to the time she married McCool she was supported principally by the charity of neighbors and the township trustees. She married McCool, as she alleges, to better her condition and to secure a home, but he deserted her and secured a divorce, and she obtained nothing from him. She is now old and helpless, and, according to the evidence of all who have testified, must go to the poor-house unless the relief asked for be granted. The committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISAAC ROSHON.

Mr. CROUSE. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 6334) for the relief of Isaac Roshon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaac Roshon, at the rate of $36 per month, by reason of a gunshot wound to left knee while a member of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment of Ohio Cavalry; that the pension granted by this act shall be in addition to the one he is now receiving for another disability.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6334) for the relief of Isaac Roshon, make the following report:

The claimant, Isaac Roshon, was a private in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers. He is now receiving a pension of $13 per month for deafness. His application for pension for another disability, gunshot wound in the left knee, which wound he claims to have received while in service and in line of duty, has been rejected on the ground that claimant fails to meet the requirements of Pension Bureau in furnishing proof of origin.

Claimant makes oath that he received a gunshot wound in left knee while on guard in 1864 and in the line of duty.

His comrade, O. Van Orman, makes oath that he (Van Orman) assisted claimant to the hospital; that he had received a wound in left knee.

Dr. R. C. Downey, regimental surgeon, testifies that to the best of his recollection claimant was, in 1864, shot while on picket duty; that the wound was made under the left knee, cutting in parts the cords of the limb.

The surgeon says further: "I remember dressing the wound; made a record of it at the time, but lost it." He says further that the leg is entirely useless from the wound. It would be better for him to have limb amputated.

Salmon Hudson, examining surgeon, says in his certificate:

"The said I. Roshon received gunshot in left knee, ball passed directly through, severing the semitendinosus muscle followed by anchylosis and enlargement of the knee-joint with an atrophied condition of the limb both above and below the knee-joint, rendering the leg entirely useless, he being unable to walk without the aid of crutches."

The committee recommend that the bill be amended in the manner following, to wit: By striking out after the word "directed," where it occurs in the bill, the words "to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaac Roshon at the rate of $36 per month, by reason of a gunshot wound to left knee, while a member of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment of Ohio Cavalry," and insert in lieu thereof the words "to increase the pension of Isaac Roshon, now on the pension-roll at the rate of $13 per month, to such amount as under the provisions and limitations of the pension laws he may be entitled by reason of a gunshot wound to the left knee, received by him while a member of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment of Ohio Cavalry," and that the bill, when so amended, do pass.

There being no objection, the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WASHINGTON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CARUTH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calender having had under consideration various bills, had instructed him to report them with sundry recommendations.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9791) for the relief of Charles W. Geddes.
A bill (H. R. 9296) granting a pension to Bridget Carroll.

Mr. KILGORE. I will insist that each bill shall be taken up and acted upon separately at least, and that the title shall be read and the bill passed in an orderly and formal manner.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 10769) granting a pension to John M. Krunk;
A bill (H. R. 9296) granting a pension to Bridget Carroll;
A bill (H. R. 9791) for the relief of Charles W. Geddes;
A bill (H. R. 7877) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 4649) granting a pension to Daniel Tanner;
A bill (H. R. 210) granting a pension to Ephraim Nye;
A bill (H. R. 9175) granting a pension to George Wallen;
A bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Samuel M. Reese;
A bill (H. R. 308) granting a pension to John Lynn;
A bill (H. R. 7) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh;
A bill (H. R. 7344) granting a pension to Henrietta Waldron;
A bill (H. R. 9178) granting a pension to Jane Jackson;
A bill (H. R. 10109) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Leach; and
A bill (H. R. 8755) granting a pension to Mary A. McCool.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments concurred in, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 7683) granting an increase of pension to Hugh Brady;
A bill (H. R. 5408) granting a pension to Emma F. Read;
A bill (H. R. 2499) increasing the pension of Miss Sarah Mary Carroll;
A bill (H. R. 9668) granting a pension to Joseph Rosier;
A bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of Ida M. Howell;
A bill (H. R. 6334) for the relief of Isaac Roshon; and
A bill (H. R. 9173) granting a pension to Mary J. Drake.

(The title of the latter bill was amended so as to conform to the bill as passed.)

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 122) granting a pension to Samuel Lane;
A bill (S. 2321) granting a pension to John V. Hennessey;
A bill (S. 3306) granting a pension to Mary K. Richards;
A bill (S. 1766) granting a pension to Stephen Butler;
A bill (S. 654) granting a pension to Caroline Motz;
A bill (S. 3208) granting a pension to William S. Bradshaw; and
A bill (S. 2606) granting a pension to John B. Timberman.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments concurred in, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering;
A bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman; and
A bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 having arrived, the House stands adjourned until Monday, October 1, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. C. L. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11526) granting a pension to Sarah McClenachan—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRYCE: A bill (H. R. 11527) to establish lights on the western end of Coney Island, New York—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 11528) for the relief of Alice E. Robertson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. M. A. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 11529) granting to the Montezuma Canal Company the privilege of constructing a reservoir on certain public lands in Arizona, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of 13 citizens of the Thirteenth district of Pennsylvania, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

BUST OF GARIBALDI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received from the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Italian Government a communication requesting the President pro tempore to acquaint the Senate with the action of the prime minister of Italy acknowledging with gratitude on behalf of that nation the preamble and resolution of the Senate accepting the bust of Garibaldi presented by Italian residents of Washington.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of Robert S. Day, residing in Santa Cruz, Cal., praying to be granted relief for losses suffered by his father in the war of 1812 by the confiscation of certain timber and lumber in the province of Quebec. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Mrs. Sarah E. Miller, of Cape Girardeau, Mo., praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of R. B. Reynolds and 35 other citizens of Grand Traverse, Mich., praying for the passage of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10869) to construct a road from Florence, S. C., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1866) for the relief of Enoch Davis, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10073) granting a pension to P. F. Jonte;

A bill (H. R. 724) for the relief of Louisa McLain;

A bill (H. R. 2839) granting a pension to Henry Sommers; and

A bill (H. R. 10494) granting a pension to Emilia Mumm.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 861) for the relief of Joseph Diehl, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9759) granting a pension to John Wallace;

A bill (H. R. 3512) granting a pension to Anthony Shafer;

A bill (H. R. 1152) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza M. Ferris;

A bill (H. R. 10947) for the relief of John Sweeney;

A bill (H. R. 4737) granting a pension to Micah French; and

A bill (H. R. 10694) granting a pension to John W. Ellis.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch; and

A bill (H. R. 8469) for the relief of Michael Pigott.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8053) to extend the time for the redemption of school farms in Beaufort County, South Carolina, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2291) to extend the time for the redemption of school farms in Beaufort County, South Carolina, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 210) authorizing the printing of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 39,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor; 26,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives and 13,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of the publication of said report, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether it is clear, as I suppose it to be, that the appropriation at the end of the clause directing the Public Printer to do this work and appropriating $25,000, or so much as may be necessary to pay for it, is in its expenditure to be limited by the same laws which are now in force regarding the printing of public documents, and the vouchers to undergo the same scrutiny at the Treasury Department. If this were in a general appropriation bill this would be clear enough; but right in connection with the work, directing the Public Printer to do it, and appropriating so much money as may be necessary up to $25,000 for it, led me to make the inquiry. There ought not to be any doubt about it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think any general law would certainly govern this special matter. I do not see why it would not. It is in the usual form where a bill providing for special printing is self-appropriating. It is the language that has been followed from time immemorial.

The joint resolution was passed.

PUBLIC LAND AND PENSION DECISIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. Res. 101) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions, for sale. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to objection.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print from the stereotype plates, and to bind in full sheep, 1,000 copies each of volumes 1 to 7 of decisions of the Department of the Interior relating to public lands, and of volumes 1 and 2 of decisions of the Department of the Interior relating to pensions, to be sold by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of joint resolution approved March 3, 1887, providing for the sale of public documents: Provided, That one copy of such decisions shall be delivered without cost to each member of the present Congress and that such additional number of copies shall be published.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to add at the end of the joint resolution:

And that there be appropriated $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. The amendment makes the joint resolution self-appropriating.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Strike out "United States" before "Treasury." That is not necessary.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is surplusage, I presume. Those words may be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified as suggested, if there be no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 43) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions for sale, to report it back adversely, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed it being of the same character as the House joint resolution just passed.

The report was agreed to, and the joint resolution postponed indefinitely.

SMITHSONIAN AND NATIONAL MUSEUM REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a House concurrent resolution for the printing of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum for the years 1886 and 1887, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum for the years ending June 30, 1886 and 1887, in two octavo volumes for each year, 16,000 extra copies of each, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine Hospital Service of the United States, which has been amended by the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that the Senate refuse to concur in the amendment. I ask that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House and request a conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, with the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The Secretary read the bill.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to add to the bill:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to the office of Supervising Surgeon-General of Marine-Hospital Service, whose appointment shall be as now regulated by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Commerce recommend that the Senate disagree to the amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That subject was before the Senate once heretofore and is a good deal involved. It is a complicated subject as the bill and the amendment have it, and I think it ought to be somewhat considered by the Senate on the House amendment before we go into a conference. Therefore I object to its present consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply desire to say that I have no objection to that course. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who is absent, is very much interested in the bill, and if there is to be any controversy about it, I should rather it would not be considered until he returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and amendment will be placed on the Calendar with the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce.

AMERICAN GROCER ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 5248) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York, and to submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. The Senate passed a similar bill on the 17th of May, and it went to the other House. By some means they sent here their bill and not ours. If the House bill is passed I shall ask to have the Senate bill recalled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be read at length for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be considered subject to objection. I should like to hear the report and see what it is.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the American Grocer Association, of the city of New York, $486, or so much thereof as may be found equitably due, for postage erroneously paid by that association.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report this day submitted, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5248) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York, have examined the same, and report:

A bill precisely similar to this was reported by this committee during the present session and passed the Senate.

The report on which the House bill was passed is approved, and is as follows:

"The law of July 12, 1876, for the transmission of matter through the mails, in section 15 provides 'that transient newspapers and magazines, regular publications, designed primarily for advertising purposes, or free circulation, or circulation at nominal rates,' etc., 'shall be transmitted in the mails at the rate of 1 cent for every 2 ounces, and 1 cent for each 2 additional ounces or fractional part thereof.' By the act of Congress approved June 23, 1874, 'newspapers mailed from a known office of publication, issued weekly or oftener, and addressed to regular subscribers, shall be charged 2 cents a pound or fraction thereof.'

"On the 5th day of July, 1877, the Postmaster-General decided that the paper called 'The American Grocer' was not entitled to the lower rates of postage, to wit, 2 cents per pound, upon the ground that it was 'designed primarily for advertising purposes;' and the company were therefore compelled to pay for the month of July and August, 1877, the sum of $648. Upon a rehearing the Postmaster-General determined that his first decision was erroneous, and that said paper should be subject only to the lower rate of postage, to wit, 2 cents per pound. The amount paid by the American Grocer Association was, as has been stated, $648. Under the lower rates it would have been $162. Deducting that sum from $648, it appears that said publishing association paid $486 over and above what the Postmaster-General finally decided they should pay. It being in accordance, therefore, with the final decision of the Postmaster-General that said company overpaid that sum, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill; and it is understood that if the money had not been covered into the Treasury it would have been reimbursed by the Postmaster-General to the said company."

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 577) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York.

The motion was agreed to.

FORT WALLACE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report an original bill.

The bill (S. 3597) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation, in Kansas, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that order is made I wish to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered now. A bill for the accomplishment of the same purpose has already passed both Houses of Congress and been vetoed by the President. The objections of the President were unimportant, to say the least. The bill has been amended in such a way as to cover them. It is important to a thousand or twelve hundred people who are living on this reservation that the bill should become a law as early as possible. Under the circumstances, I venture to ask the Senate to consent that the bill may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, subject to objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think, as the bill is an original bill, and is not in print in the form in which we now have it, it ought to go on the Calendar and be printed. I shall not object to its being taken up to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. I am going away to-day. There has been no amendment which in any way affects the public interest except favorably according to the decision of the President of the United States. The bill has been considered by both Houses; it has been considered by the President himself. As I said, it concerns the homes of about a thousand or twelve hundred people, and it seems to me that under the circumstances if there is to be anything said against it it may as well be said now as at any other time. Those are the circumstances of the case, and they constitute rather an unusual case, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I greatly regret to be obliged to do anything unkind to a thousand people or even to one, but I think the Senate ought to see the bill as reported now originally, it once having been vetoed or something like it, to know precisely what it contains so that we can see it. Some other member of the committee, if the bill be so urgent, can call it up to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator may have the luxury of bringing up this bill himself hereafter, as far as I am concerned, inasmuch as he is more concerned about these people than I am.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sufficiently concerned about all the people of the United States to feel it to be not only a right but a duty on an important bill to see it before I am asked to vote upon it; and so this may go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection to its consideration being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3539) to amend an act to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State;

An act (S. 2356) to provide a pension for Mrs. Adeline Couzins; and

An act (S. 1078) for the relief of Florida Kennerly.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3598) granting a pension to Sarah E. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3599) granting a pension to Melissa D. Tibbitts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3600) for the relief of David Allen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3601) granting a pension to William H. Hoyt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3602) for the relief of John F. Malo; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 112) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Henry Lecompte, of Switzerland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3306) granting a pension to Mary K. Richards;

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills each with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy;
A bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon;
A bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman; and
A bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNES, Mr. CLEMENTS, and Mr. RYAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

A bill (H. R. 4039) granting a pension to Mary A. Pfeiffer; and
A bill (H. R. 10881) granting a pension to Nancy J. Cotner.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7410) for the relief of settlers upon Old Camp Sheridan military reservation; and
A bill (H. R. 10060) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Congress:

I have this day approved House bill No. 11336, supplementary to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882.

It seems to me that some suggestions and recommendations may properly accompany my approval of this bill.

Its object is to more effectually accomplish by legislation the exclusion from this country of Chinese laborers.

The experiment of blending the social habits and mutual race idiosyncracies of the Chinese laboring classes with those of the great body of the people of the United States has been proved by the experience of twenty years, and ever since the Burlingame treaty of 1868, to be in every sense unwise, impolitic, and injurious to both nations. With the lapse of time the necessity for its abandonment has grown in force, until those having in charge the government of the respective countries have resolved to modify and sufficiently abrogate all those features of prior conventional arrangements which permitted the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States.

In modification of prior conventions the treaty of November 17, 1880, was concluded, whereby, in the first article thereof, it was agreed that the United States should at will regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, but not absolutely prohibit it; and under this article an act of Congress approved on May 6, 1882 (see volume 22, page 54, Statutes at Large), and amended July 5, 1884 (volume 23, page 115, Statutes at Large), suspended for ten years the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, and regulated the going and coming of such Chinese laborers as were at that time in the United States.

It was, however, soon made evident that the mercenary greed of the parties who were trading in the labor of this class of the Chinese population was proving too strong for the just execution of the law, and that the virtual defeat of the object and intent of both law and treaty was being fraudulently accomplished by false pretense and perjury, contrary to the expressed will of both Governments.

To such an extent has the successful violation of the treaty and the laws enacted for its execution progressed that the courts in the Pacific States have been for some time past overwhelmed by the examination of cases of Chinese laborers who are charged with having entered our ports under fraudulent certificates of return or seek to establish by perjury the claim of prior residence.

Such demonstration of the inoperative and inefficient condition of the treaty and law has produced deep-seated and increasing discontent among the people of the United States, and especially with those resident on the Pacific coast. This has induced me to omit no effort to find an effectual remedy for the evils complained of, and to answer the earnest popular demand for the absolute exclusion of Chinese laborers having objects and purposes unlike our own, and wholly disconnected with American citizenship.

Aided by the presence in this country of able and intelligent diplomatic and consular officers of the Chinese Government, and the representations made from time to time by our minister in China under the instructions of the Department of State, the actual condition of public sentiment and the status of affairs in the United States has been fully made known to the Government of China.

The necessity for remedy has been fully appreciated by that Government, and in August, 1886, our minister at Peking received from the Chinese foreign office a communication announcing that China, of her own accord, proposed to establish a system of strict and absolute prohibition of her laborers, under heavy penalties, from coming to the United States, and likewise to prohibit the return to the United States of any Chinese laborer who had at any time gone back to China "in order" (in the words of the communication) "that the Chinese laborers may gradually be reduced in number and causes of danger averted and lives preserved."

This view of the Chinese Government, so completely in harmony with that of the United States, was by my direction speedily formulated in a treaty draught between the two nations, embodying the propositions so presented by the Chinese foreign office.

The deliberations, frequent oral discussions, and correspondence on the general questions that ensued have been fully communicated by me to the Senate at the present session, and, as contained in Senate Executive Document O, parts 1 and 2, and in Senate Executive Document No. 272, may be properly referred to as containing a complete history of the transaction.

It is thus easy to learn how the joint desires and unequivocal mutual understanding of the two Governments were brought into articulated form in the treaty, which, after a mutual exhibition of plenary powers from the respective Governments, was signed and concluded by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and China at this capital on March 12 last.

Being submitted for the advice and consent of the Senate, its confirmation, on the 7th day of May last, was accompanied by two amendments, which that body ingrafted upon it.

On the 12th day of the same month the Chinese minister, who was the plenipotentiary of his Government in the negotiation and the conclusion of the treaty, in a note to the Secretary of State gave his approval to these amendments, "as they did not alter the terms of the treaty," and the amendments were at once telegraphed to China, whither the original treaty had previously been sent immediately after its signature on March 12.

On the 13th day of last month I approved Senate bill No. 3304, "to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States." This bill was intended to supplement the treaty, and was approved in the confident anticipation of an early exchange of ratifications of the treaty and its amendments and the proclamation of the same, upon which event the legislation so approved was by its terms to take effect.

No information of any definite action upon the treaty by the Chinese Government was received until the 21st ultimo—the day the bill which I have just approved was presented to me—when a telegram from our minister at Peking to the Secretary of State announced the refusal of the Chinese Government, to exchange ratifications of the treaty, unless further discussion should be had with a view to shorten the period stipulated in the treaty for the exclusion of Chinese laborers, and to change the conditions agreed on, which should entitle any Chinese laborer who might go back to China to return again to the United States.

By a note from the chargé d'affaires ad interim of China to the Secretary of State, received on the evening of the 25th ultimo (a copy of which is herewith transmitted, together with the reply thereto), a third amendment is proposed, whereby the certificate, under which any departing Chinese laborer alleging the possession of property in the United States would be enabled to return to this country, should be granted by the Chinese consul instead of the United States collector, as had been provided in the treaty.

The obvious and necessary effect of this last proposition would be practically to place the execution of the treaty beyond the control of the United States.

Article I of the treaty proposed to be so materially altered had, in the course of the negotiations, been settled in acquiescence with the request of the Chinese plenipotentiary and to his expressed satisfaction.

In 1886, as appears in the documents heretofore referred to, the Chinese foreign office had formally proposed to our minister strict exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States without limitation; and had otherwise and more definitely stated that no term whatever for exclusion was necessary, for the reason that China would of itself take steps to prevent its laborers from coming to the United States.

In the course of the negotiations that followed suggestions from the same quarter led to the insertion in behalf of the United States of a term of "thirty years," and this term, upon the representations of the Chinese plenipotentiary, was reduced to "twenty years," and finally so agreed upon.

Article II was wholly of Chinese origination, and to that alone owes its presence in the treaty.

And it is here pertinent to remark that everywhere in the United States laws for the collection of debts are equally available to all creditors without respect to race, sex, nationality, or place of residence, and equally with the citizens or subjects of the most favored nations and with the citizens of the United States recovery can be had in any court of justice in the United States by a subject of China, whether of the laboring or any other class.

No disability accrues from non-residence of a plaintiff whose claim can be enforced in the usual way by him or his assignee or attorney in our courts of justice.

In this respect it can not be alleged that there exists the slightest discrimination against Chinese subjects, and it is a notable fact that large trading firms and companies and individual merchants and traders of that nation are profitably established at numerous points throughout the Union, in whose hands every claim transmitted by an absent Chinaman of a just and lawful nature could be completely enforced.

The admitted and paramount right and duty of every government to exclude from its borders all elements of foreign population which for any reason retard its prosperity or are detrimental to the moral and physical health of its people, must be regarded as a recognized canon of international law and intercourse. China herself has not dissented from this doctrine, but has, by the expressions to which I have referred, led us confidently to rely upon such action on her part in co-operation with us as would enforce the exclusion of Chinese laborers from our country.

This co-operation has not, however, been accorded us. Thus from the unexpected and disappointing refusal of the Chinese Government to confirm the acts of its authorized agent and to carry into effect an international agreement, the main feature of which was voluntarily presented by that Government for our acceptance, and which had been the subject of long and careful deliberation, an emergency has arisen, in which the Government of the United States is called upon to act in self-defense by the exercise of its legislative power. I can not but regard the expressed demand on the part of China for a re-examination and renewed discussion of the topics so completely covered by mutual treaty stipulations, as an indefinite postponement and practical abandonment of the objects we have in view, to which the Government of China may justly be considered as pledged.

The facts and circumstances which I have narrated lead me, in the performance of what seems to me to be my official duty, to join the Congress in dealing legislatively with the question of the exclusion of Chinese laborers, in lieu of further attempts to adjust it by international agreement.

But while thus exercising our undoubted right in the interests of our people and for the general welfare of our country, justice and fairness seem to require that some provision should be made by act or joint resolution, under which such Chinese laborers as shall actually have embarked on their return to the United States before the passage of the law this day approved, and are now on their way, may be permitted to land provided they have duly and lawfully obtained and shall present certificates heretofore issued permitting them to return in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

Nor should our recourse to legislative measures of exclusion cause us to retire from the offer we have made to indemnify such Chinese subjects as have suffered damage through violence in the remote and comparatively unsettled portions of our country at the hands of lawless men. Therefore I recommend that without acknowledging legal liability therefor, but because it was stipulated in the treaty which has failed to take effect, and in a spirit of humanity befitting our nation, there be appropriated the sum of $276,619.75, payable to the Chinese minister at this capital, on behalf of his Government, as full indemnity for all losses and injuries sustained by Chinese subjects in the manner and under the circumstances mentioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, October 1, 1888.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the message of the President be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, although I see that the only subject-matter of recommendation for new legislation has been already acted upon in the Senate; that is, a provision has already been made in the deficiency appropriation bill by a very proper appropriation for the payment of damages done to Chinese subjects some time ago. Still I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say in regard to the appropriation by the Senate covering the item referred to in the President's message that that subject is now in controversy in the conference between the two Houses.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course, the Senate having already acted upon that subject favorably, I suppose, in view of the message of the President, it only awaits the consent of the House conferees to make the appropriation complete. I take it as a matter of course, considering the political organization of the House and the strength of the message of the President, that the consent will not be withheld, if it was in doubt before. I hope, however, there will be no controversy about that, as I think both Houses have passed that appropriation, at least the Senate, once or twice before in the treaty, and made provision for an appropriation for paying damages and injuries done to Chinese subjects in the riots in Wyoming and elsewhere.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not rise to say anything on the question of reference. I think, however, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is in error in supposing that the only recommendation of the President is the payment of indemnity to China. I understood the message as it was read to recommend immediate legislation by bill or joint resolution to authorize the landing of Chinese laborers who are now on their way from China to the ports of the United States with certificates which have been issued by the United States to land, notwithstanding the bill. In other words, while the President has approved the bill which cuts off entirely the right of Chinese laborers out of the country with certificates to come into the United States again, although they may be on their way to this country, I understand him to recommend immediate legislation by bill or joint resolution to authorize the landing of such Chinese.

I say this merely to correct what I suppose to be a misunderstanding of the message by the chairman of the committee, not expressing any opinion as to the desirability of the legislation.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to suggest to the Committee on Foreign Relations that there are more urgent matters connected with the importation of Chinese than those suggested by the President. I see by the papers and learn from tourists who have been passing over the Canadian Pacific Railroad it is estimated that about a thousand Chinaman a day are coming into New York by the Canadian Pacific with what they claim to be certificates allowing them to enter the United States, but what are presumably manufactured documents. I also see by the papers that a large number of Chinese are entering the United States daily by way of Mexico through El Paso. For that reason I have introduced a bill which seems to me to be urgent. If we are to have the Chinese excluded we must have a law which will protect our borders on the north and the south, or they will continue to come as they have been coming heretofore.

As to those who have started, there can not be a very large number who have started since the legislation has taken place. It has been over a month since the bill passed the House of Representatives, and it was telegraphed to China undoubtedly, and the steam-ship companies understood that the bill was pending. There ought not to be any Chinese on the way now who were not notified, and I do not think that suggestion needs immediate attention at all.

If we should pass a law of the kind suggested by the President no man can estimate the number of Chinese who would come in under it, because they would be somewhere on the way for a year or two before you could get them stopped. We tried that experiment on the previous-residence business. In 1880 a treaty was adopted restricting Chinese immigration. No law was passed until 1882, two years having intervened. The treaty provided that those who went away might return, and the law allowed all to return who had left the country after 1880 and before 1882, when the law was passed, on the ground of previous residence; and they have been coming in every day. Every steamer has been loaded with previous residents ever since, and I suppose if it went on for fifty years there would be a steamer load of previous residents every time a steamer came from China.

I do not believe that it is necessary to open the door to correct any mistake, to allow any to come in who are on the way, because they have had ample notice. They knew last spring the conditions of the treaty that was adopted. That was published, and it excluded them. That was kept back four months and a half before it was acted upon. It has been more than a month since the bill passed the other House which excluded them; and if they have had the temerity to take the chances of coming in I think they may as well take the chances of staying out.

Mr. DOLPH. The more I think of it, the more it strikes me that it is a very remarkable proposition for a bill to be approved by which I understand the President approves the provision of the bill that cuts off, summarily, positively, and conclusively, the entrance of Chinese with certificates, and at the same time to disapprove of it and ask Congress to amend it by immediate act or resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the President of the United States, with the accompanying documents, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed.

POLITICAL REMOVALS FROM ARMORIES AND ARSENALS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution:

Whereas it is alleged that an order has been issued from the War Department in form and terms as follows:

"[Confidential.]

"ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, D. C., January 4, 1886.

"To the commanding officers of the national armories at Springfield, Mass., and Rock Island, Ill., and of the United States arsenals at New York, West Troy, N. Y., and Philadelphia, Pa., Boston, Mass., Benicia, Cal., etc.:

"SIR: While arsenals and the armories are not intended to be converted into political machines, two political parties in this country are recognized. It is therefore ordered that hereafter in employing and discharging employés of any and all grades, other things being equal and qualifications satisfactory, Democrats will be favored; the object being to divide the force in the different grades gradually between Democrats and Republicans. This rule will apply to women and children as well as to men, and will be strictly enforced.

"Respectfully, your obedient servant,

"S. V. BENÉT,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army;"

And whereas it is further alleged that in pursuance of such order changes and removals of persons employed by the Government in the United States arsenals and armories have been made, and that honorably discharged soldiers of the Union Army and their wives and children have thus been removed: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to forthwith transmit to the Senate full information as to the order above named, and to state fully what necessities of the Department required that said order should be issued; and to further inform the Senate why an order issued from the Military Department of the Government upon public business was marked "confidential;" and also to report fully all changes that have been made of persons employed in the United States arsenals and armories since said order was issued; and especially to inform the Senate whether at the Rock Island arsenal the wife and children of a former Union soldier have been removed under said order.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if there were not some remarkable things connected with this transaction, I should not have brought it before the Senate. It has passed into common acceptation in the public mind that while the present Administration keeps up its claim to administer the Government upon principles of civil-service reform, yet, as everybody knows, the whole administration is being conducted in a partisan and proscriptive fashion. The New York Evening Post, whose editor is one of the ablest and, I am afraid, one of the blindest supporters of the President, declared some months ago that there was not probably in the United States one single sincere believer in civil-service reform who would place any further dependence on the promises and pretenses of the Administration; and the force of incredulity upon this matter could go no further than that expression in the Post.

There are, as the Senate has seen, some remarkable things connected with this transaction. Why is it that in time of peace, upon public business, a circular relating to the administration of public business should be marked "confidential" nobody can tell. I venture to say that in the history of the War Department there is no precedent for this; and to me it has been a wonder that this extreme evidence of proscriptive partisanship should be found in this conservative Department of the Government. I had not believed, and when the matter was first presented to me I expressed immediately my disbelief that there was anything in the rumor.

I had not believed that there would be found in this Department any officer, from the highest to the lowest, who would inaugurate proceedings such as are indicated by this order. There is nothing in the Secretary of War, I may say, or his previous history or record, which would have led me to believe that he would have allowed or permitted or authorized the issuing of a circular like this, not only marked "confidential," as I have stated, showing what its underlying purpose must have been, but also for the first time extending party proscription to women and children.

I do not know in the history of party politics or party contests or party administration of the affairs of the American people, when heretofore the doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils" has been carried to this extent; and it has remained for the American people in this year 1888 to be treated to this order from this conservative War Department, presided over by a conservative Secretary, who has had nothing whatever in his life or experience heretofore that would lead his friends or the American people to believe that he would allow such a thing.

This order has but one explanation, that is the explanation which has been given in the Department, as we are told, that the pressure by Democrats for more places, for more public plunder, for more appointments was so great that even this conservative Department and this conservative Secretary yielded.

To show that I have not introduced this resolution without justification, without warrant, I ask that the Secretary shall read from what is marked in the paper I send to the desk as the explanation given by General Benét to a gentleman who visited him on the first report that this order had been issued. This is General Benét's explanation:

The Secretary read as follows:

A few days before the date of this circular I was called to the office of the Secretary of War. Mr. Endicott stated to me that he had received many urgent requests from very prominent Democrats—one especially prominent and known throughout the country—to have Republicans employed in the arsenals throughout the country dismissed and Democrats appointed in their places. The Secretary said he did not want to turn the service into a political machine, but that something would have to be done to bring about a different condition of affairs in the Ordnance Department. He said that he would like to have Democrats appointed wherever Republicans were dismissed, and that the filling of positions occupied by women and children should be recognized in the same political degree as those filled by men. I replied to Mr. Endicott that I would fix the matter, and immediately I wrote this circular and sent it to Secretary Endicott for inspection. The Secretary approved of it, and I had manifold copies made and sent to all of the commanders of the arsenals. In three or four instances the commanding officers wrote official or private letters to me—I forget which—stating that they had made careful canvasses of the employés, and they found that the majority of them were Democrats, and that if the object of my circular was to equalize between the two parties the positions, there could be no equalization in favor of the Democratic party. So, you will see, this circular, if the spirit of it as well as the letter was observed, the only effect would be in the employment, and not the discharge of employés.

Mr. HALE. There is one thing shown plainly by this explanation, and that is that under the conduct of affairs formerly, before this Administration came into power, the places in the arsenals and armories were never the subject of political reward or political preferment. I know something about those places. They have been an accepted and fitting refuge largely for old soldiers in the armies of the Union and their sons and daughters, and widows, where women could be engaged in the work that is necessary about such public purposes. Nobody has objected; and I venture to say that in the years elapsing between the close of the war and the 4th day of March, 1885, no question was ever asked as to the politics of any one of these old soldiers or his widow or children in these small positions.

They retired and were cared for in a moderate way at small pay by the Government and were leading very peaceful and obscure lives as beneficiaries of a Government that they had helped to save. If in the land anywhere could be found a deserving class, a class that all men would say should not be molested, it was this class. They were outside of the "filthy pool" of politics; they were far beyond the disturbing current that besets political life and political struggles; and essentially every reasonable man would say that no matter how thorough and complete was the effort to remove Republicans and put in Democrats, these were the people who should be left untouched. And yet, in the face of all this and of the statute which declares expressly, not only in such cases but in all appointments of Union soldiers, that they shall have the preference, this most searching, most pitiless quest of the Democratic party for more places has found more scope.

That it may be seen that I am not in this matter acting without proper authority and advice, I ask the Secretary to read, turning over the paper which I have sent to him, what a gentleman over his own name has written to the Indianapolis Journal as to the operation of this order which, by the way, Mr. President, showing the haste with which this matter was conducted, has been in operation since its date in the year 1886. If the Secretary has the extract I have marked, I ask him to read it to show one only of the operations of this civil-service reform order!

The Secretary read as follows:

My sister, the widow of a wounded officer of volunteers, who served faithfully during the war of the rebellion, had employment for herself and two daughters at one of our large arsenals until about six months ago when they were called before the commanding officer and told that they could not have any more work from the Ordnance Department. When my sister asked the reason he informed her that he had learned that she and her daughters were Republicans. "Are we discharged for that reason only?" she asked. He replied, "It is perhaps improper for me to reply to that question; I can only say that I am complying with confidential instructions received from the Chief of Ordnance."

I only learned of this a few days ago as a result of my sister's application to me for means of subsistence, and on visiting her I found the above state of facts. One of the clerks who is in the office of the officer in charge of the arsenal, being an intimate friend of the family, very kindly gave me a copy of this infamous production.

To what depths of meanness may not a man descend who can thus, deliberately and secretly, persecute women and children?

You may publish the circular and the letter, or take any other steps in the matter that may seem best to you.

J. Q. ELLERY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I can not believe, owing to the kindness of heart and the good purposes which animate the Secretary of War, that he could have known of such a marked instance of political proscription as has been disclosed in the extract that has just been read. There is nothing in my acquaintance with him or in my knowledge of him that would lead me to believe that if he had knowledge of this transaction he would have justified it.

But whether that be so or not it has been done under this order issued from his Department. Whether he regrets it now or apologizes for it now I do not know. Such an instance called to his attention must give him more or less reflection and discomfort. I can see no satisfaction that he can derive from the exposure of such a thing occurring in that Department unless it shall be in the way in which he is welcomed to the ranks of the modern Democracy by a leading New York Democratic newspaper, which, in closing the article upon this transaction, has the following words:

The sound Democratic doctrine is that all the posts under a Federal administration should be held by Democrats. Mr. Endicott is now at the half-way house to this position. Perhaps he has got even further than that, since the Benét order was issued. We welcome Hon. William Crowningshield Endicott on his march to the ranks of the great, happy, and invincible army of spoilsmen.

That is the proclamation to-day, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. From what paper is the Senator reading?

Mr. HALE. From the New York Sun. That is the real underlying purpose and practice of the present civil-service reform Administration!

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] gave notice that he desired to address the Senate to-day, and I will only say a word or two, as I understand this resolution is introduced this morning. Am I correct in that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall then ask that it may lie over until to-morrow morning, when we can discuss it a little more fully than we can now, without infringing on the rights of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator was through.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; he has not commenced.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would like the Senator to withdraw his objection for a few moments. I will not take over three minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is to be any discussion it will come from this side. I stated why I would not undertake to consume time this morning in replying to the Senator from Maine, and that was that the Senator from Arkansas had given notice that immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-day he would address the Senate; and now I object to the consideration of this resolution now so as to give an opportunity of talking on it to-morrow morning, and then I will answer fully the Senator from Maine and state for what the Democratic party is responsible and for what it is not and what it ought to have done long ago; but I will not take up the time to do it this morning, for I see that it will lead to discussion and so the Senator from Arkansas will be displaced. So in courtesy to him I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rules.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; we are not going to have any discussion at all unless both sides are heard, and your side has been heard already.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to address a remark to the Senator from Missouri myself if he will withdraw his objection long enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the resolution lies over under the rules, and will be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. That ends it for the present.

IMPORTATION OF CONTAGION AND INFECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CALL on the 27th ultimo:

Resolved That the Committee on Epidemic Diseases are hereby instructed to consider and report before the adjournment of this session of Congress, by bill or otherwise, such additional legislation as may be necessary or useful to prevent the importation of contagious or infectious disease from foreign countries on the coasts and boundaries of the United States, and to prevent and suppress it in the interstate commerce and from passing from one State to another, and for the subsistence of such persons as may be detained by public authority from places where there is danger of infection or contagion to other States.

Mr. CALL. I should be very glad to have the Senate consider this resolution at the present time; but I am informed by the Senator from Arkansas that he is prepared and desires to address the Senate at this moment, and if it be agreeable to the Senator I would like consent that this resolution may be taken up after the conclusion of his remarks, and that he may proceed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the pending resolution may be informally laid aside to enable the Senator from Arkansas to submit remarks on the unfinished business, to be resumed at the close of the observations of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution in relation to the importation of contagious or infectious disease from foreign countries on the coasts and boundaries of the United States, etc.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not like to object to the Senator from Arkansas going on, but I desire to call up the resolution in relation to the Louisiana election, and if there is no one who wishes to speak on it I should like to have it passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the unfinished business was assigned for consideration this morning at the close of the routine morning business. The title of the bill which is the unfinished business will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A resolution offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is in order, and he asks that it may be informally laid aside to enable the Senator from Arkansas to proceed upon the unfinished business, its consideration to be resumed at the close of the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DOLPH. I feel compelled to object, because the unfinished business by unanimous consent was to be taken up, not only for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Arkansas to submit remarks upon it, but for consideration. If it be set aside by unanimous consent now, then we shall be quite at sea again in regard to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which is entitled to consideration at this time.

Mr. PALMER. I ask if the close of the routine morning business has been announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. Routine morning business is now under consideration, being a resolution coming over from the previous day lying on the table for consideration this morning. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senators who have objected to the informal postponement of this resolution to withdraw the objection, so as to allow the Senator from Arkansas to proceed with his remarks.

The only object that I shall have in addressing the Senate on my resolution is to present a number of communications which have been received from a gentleman of intelligence whose thoughts have been directed, by the prevailing epidemic and the danger which is threatened in the future to the country, to some method of suppressing and preventing its recurrence. I have a large number of communications which seem to contain within them subjects of great interest and value to the progress of discovery on the subject of the prevention of epidemic and contagious diseases.

My colleague [Mr. PASCO] desires to offer an amendment to the resolution, being the substance, as I understand, of a resolution formerly offered by me, so as to submit some remarks upon it. The subject is one of very great and urgent importance and interest to the people of this country everywhere. In view of that fact and the interest it is exciting in the public mind throughout the United States and the apprehensions that are felt everywhere, unless some very effective and very unusual methods shall be adopted to prevent its recurrence—in view of these facts and the great importance of the subject, I hope Senators will withdraw their objection to allowing this resolution to be fixed for consideration after the remarks made by the Senator from Arkansas, who is prepared to go on, having given notice, and who requests me to give way for him. I therefore renew the application.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator will permit me to suggest that a week ago to-day the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] called up the Senate bill to forfeit the Northern Pacific Railroad unearned lands and made a speech upon it. It was then laid aside. I ascertained that the Senator from Arkansas desired to make some remarks, and in order to give the Senator from Arkansas time to prepare himself with the remarks he desired to submit on the bill I asked unanimous consent that the bill should go over until to-day, immediately after the morning business to come up for consideration, stating distinctly that it was not only for the purpose of remarks being submitted by the Senator from Arkansas, but of having the bill considered. I do not know that any one else desires to speak upon it. It is substantially the same as the general forfeiture bill which was discussed in the Senate and passed, and perhaps we can vote upon it immediately after the Senator from Arkansas closes.

That was ordered by a unanimous agreement. In the mean time, during the past week, a bill came here from the House of Representatives on the same subject, which was reported back from the Senate Committee on Public Lands this morning. I have no desire to interfere with the Senator from Arkansas, though the fact is that on my own motion the bill was laid aside until to-day, so that he might have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Oregon to say that on Monday last he asked and obtained unanimous consent that this bill should be taken up for consideration immediately after the routine morning business to-day?

Mr. DOLPH. I did, and for the purpose of accommodating the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. And unanimous consent was obtained?

Mr. DOLPH. And unanimous consent was given.

Mr. HARRIS. Then it does seem to me that there can be no doubt about the fact that it was the duty of the Chair immediately upon disposing of the routine morning business to lay that bill before the Senate, and then the Senator from Arkansas would certainly have the right to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inform the Senator from Tennessee that the resolution of the Senator from Florida is morning business, being a resolution coming over for consideration to-day from a previous day when it was offered.

Mr. HARRIS. But the Senator from Florida, I understand, is willing that his resolution shall go over to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Chair asked unanimous consent, at the request of the Senator from Florida, that the resolution might go over until the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas, to be again resumed to-day and not to-morrow, to which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] objected.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Florida?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida himself asked that it might lie over.

Mr. HARRIS. Exactly; but is there objection to its consideration after the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands there is. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has interposed an objection.

Mr. CALL. Then I will allow the resolution to go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BERRY. I will give way to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] and let him deliver his remarks.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Florida consents that his resolution may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution offered by the Senator from Florida will retain its place as current morning business to be laid before the Senate by the Chair to-morrow when that order is reached, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. BERRY. Before that is done, I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that if this matter is connected with the yellow fever and it is important that it should be considered this morning, I will very cheerfully give way until to-morrow morning and allow the resolution to be taken up. I do not wish to interfere with a resolution of that character.

Mr. CALL. I do not think its importance is sufficiently urgent to take the Senator off the floor. I appreciate his kindness.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask the indulgence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to allow me to give notice that as soon as he concludes his remarks I shall make an effort to bring before the Senate the resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] is entitled to the floor on the bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, etc.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate proposes to forfeit all that portion of the public lands which were granted by Congress to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company which lie opposite to the uncompleted portions of the railway. It includes the land from Wallula, in Washington Territory, down to Portland, Oregon, and embraces between five and six millions of acres of the public lands which are proposed to be forfeited to the Government of the United States. This same forfeiture was included in a general forfeiture bill which passed the Senate some time ago. A bill forfeiting those public lands also passed the House of Representatives. These two bills are now in conference and include this with other land. The difference between the House and Senate on this question of the forfeiture of the public lands formerly granted for railroads consists in the amount of land that shall be forfeited and restored to the Government. The Democratic House of Representatives by their bill, the general forfeiture bill, proposes to forfeit all the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad which lie between Bismarck and the city of Portland, in Oregon. The Senate bill proposes to forfeit only the lands from Wallula down to Portland. The amount included in the House bill is about 36,000,000 acres; the amount included in the Senate bill is between five and six million acres, there being about 30,000,000 more acres of land forfeited by the House bill than by the Senate bill.

Since those two bills have been before the conference committee my colleague in the House, Mr. MCRAE, introduced and had passed a bill which is now on the Calendar of the Senate, proposing to forfeit all the lands that were granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad between Bismarck and Portland, being 36,000,000 acres, and some other lands included in the general land bill.

The bill now before us, reported by the Republican majority of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, proposes only to forfeit that part from Wallula to Portland. The difference between the two Houses is that the Senate committee hold that Congress has no power to forfeit any lands save and except those that lie opposite the portions of the uncompleted road at the time of the passage of the act of forfeiture. The proposition of the House of Representatives is that as to all the lands opposite which the road was not completed within the time specified in the granting act, at the expiration of that time, it is the duty of Congress to take from the railroad and restore to the public at large. This is the difference between Mr. MCRAE'S bill and the one now pending.

The majority of the Senate committee are in favor of the bill reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I agree with the Democratic House of Representatives, that it is the duty of Congress not only to forfeit the lands included in this bill but also to forfeit all that portion of the land opposite the road that was not completed within the time specified by the act of Congress.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] said in his speech the other day that the Supreme Court had repeatedly decided that Congress had no power to make this forfeiture. I assert to-day, and I state to the Senator now, that he can not produce any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to that effect. It is true that the circuit court in the district of Oregon, with Judge Field presiding, did decide, as stated by the Senator from Kansas; but the precise question as to whether or not Congress has power to forfeit lands where the roads are not completed within the time specified in the granting act has not been before the Supreme Court of the United States, and my information is that there is no decision whatever upon it.

Mr. President, this bill is brought forward by the Senator from Oregon with a great display of a desire to restore to the public domain the public lands of the country. He seems to take pride in finding one case where he can vote to take from railroad corporations lands to which they were not entitled and give them back to the people of the country without injury to the road; but if any Senator or any citizen of the United States imagines that in the passage of this bill he is taking anything that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company attaches any value to, I wish to disabuse his mind at once. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company long since abandoned this portion of the road. They have long since announced their determination not to build it. Another railroad has been built along the line where this was to have been constructed. There is no intention on the part of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company ever to build the road or claim the lands proposed to be forfeited by the Senator from Oregon. They lay no claim whatever to the land; they do not expect it; and when this bill is passed, although the land is forfeited, it does not deprive them of one dollar or one cent to which they attach any importance whatever, because they do not intend to build the road.

The Senator from Oregon some time since in a speech on this question said that the Republican party and he had for a long time past favored the forfeiture of all the lands opposite the uncompleted portions of railroads. Two years ago a bill to forfeit the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was before the Senate, and at that time the Cascade branch was uncompleted and a considerable number of acres, about three millions, of land lay along that line where it was uncompleted and could have been forfeited; yet on the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate the Senator from Oregon in both cases voted to exempt from that forfeiture those lands lying along the uncompleted portion of the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

I simply refer to this to show that the claim set up by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that the Republican party has been in favor of forfeiting lands that have been granted to these railroads is unfounded, and that whatever credit is due to any party for the forfeiture of these lands is due solely to the Democratic party.

I will insert without reading, as part of my remarks, a table taken from the speech made by my colleague in the House, Mr. MCRAE, in which these forfeitures are set out, showing the amount restored under the Democratic administration:

Land actually restored to the public domain.	Acreage.
Lands in granted railroad limits restored	2,108,417.38
Railroad indemnity lands restored	21,323,600.00
Private land claims; withdrawn lands restored	576,000.00
Entries under pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert, mineral, and timber land laws canceled in regular course of examination and proceedings in General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes	27,460,608.74
Invalid State selections, restored to United States	968,747.52
Total actually restored to the public domain and opened to entry and settlement	52,437,373.59

Mr. President, in the elaborate speech made by the Senator from Kansas some days ago his object and purpose seemed to be to try to convince the country that the Republican party was not only the friend of the people and the enemy of railroads, but that it was the enemy of all class legislation of every character. The entire speech contained those two ideas, and he was seeking upon the question of the disposition of the public lands to show that the Republican party had been the friend of the people and not the friend of the railroads.

That Republican leaders and Republican Senators should come forward to defend the acts and policy of Republican administrations whenever and wherever it is possible to make defense is but natural; but that one so familiar with the history of public lands as the Senator from Kansas—and no one in the Senate is more so—should have the boldness to stand in his place and justify such a record as has been made by his party in the disposition of the public domain is to me a great surprise.

The record of that party upon this question from beginning to end shows a disregard of the rights of the people and a subserviency to corporations that has no parallel even in the history of the Republican party, and that party from its nature, character, and principles has been, and is to-day, the friend, the champion, and the sworn ally of every combination, corporation, and trust that has for its object the accumulation of large fortunes by a few individuals at the expense of the mass of the American people.

And yet the Senator from Kansas does not hesitate to declare that—

The Democratic party has at all times sought to benefit the few at the expense of the many.

Mr. President, the Democratic party was organized to protect and defend the poor, the lowly, and the defenseless, and from that day until the present it has always been the champion and the friend of those who are compelled to labor for their daily bread. And the attempt to place the Republican party, with its record of the past twenty-five years upon the question of public lands, upon the ground always occupied by the Democratic party is beyond even the powers of the Senator from Kansas himself.

The cardinal principle of the Republican party—the fundamental doctrine upon which it is based and without which it could not exist—is that it is the duty of the Government to force by law and by the strong hand of power from the consumers of this country a large donation of money to support in luxury and idleness, to which the great mass of the people are strangers, a comparatively few manufacturers, and the effect is to protect organized corporations and trusts, which, by combining with each other, are rapidly becoming stronger than the Government itself, and which, if not checked, will sooner or later dictate the price of the clothing and food for the entire American people. But in no part of the record of the Republican party has it been more clearly shown that it is a friend of the corporations and not the friend of the people, as asserted by the Senator, than in its dealing with the public lands. But before I present the facts and figures of the two parties upon this question of the disposition of the public lands, I wish to answer some observations made by the Senator from Kansas upon some other points.

The late Commissioner of the General Land Office, General Sparks, seems to have especially aroused not only the wrath of the Senator from Kansas, but that of most of the leaders of the Republican party, and they have applied to him every epithet of abuse that our language commands. I will simply say for General Sparks that while it may be true that he does not possess that judicial temper of mind, and did not always command that patience which is so necessary to the proper discharge of public duties, yet he deserves the lasting gratitude of the American people for the bold and fearless manner in which he placed himself between those who sought to illegally appropriate the public lands and honest home seekers. And thousands of homestead settlers of the West will honor his name, and many of them will no doubt love him, for the enemies he has made.

The Senator from Kansas especially and particularly criticised General Sparks for his order of April 3, 1885, suspending entries in the West. The order is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE.
Order: Washington, April 3, 1885.

Final action in this office upon all entries of the public lands, except private cash entries and such scrip locations as are not dependent upon acts of settlement and cultivation, is suspended in the following locations, namely: All west of the first guide meridian west in Kansas, all west of range 17 in Nebraska, the whole of Colorado, except lands in the late Ute reservation, all of Dakota, Idaho, Utah, Washington, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, and Nevada, and that portion of Minnesota north of the indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad and east of the indemnity limits of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad. In addition, final action in this office will be suspended upon all timber entries under the act of June 3, 1878; also upon all cases of desert-land entries.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

One would infer from the remarks of the Senator from Kansas that this order was without precedent, and that prior to that time no Commissioner had ever issued a general order of suspension. Yet we find Commissioner McFarland, on the 4th day of September, 1884—he being a Republican Commissioner under a Republican administration—issuing the following order:

SEPTEMBER 4, 1884.

Suspend all pre-emption and commuted homestead entries in the Humboldt, Cal., land district.

N. C. MCFARLAND, Commissioner.

And in August, 1883, and September, 1884, suspensions were ordered in California, in Oregon, in Washington Territory, and in New Mexico, which orders I here present:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 17, 1884.

SIR: In view of the fact that all timber-land entries in California which have not been examined by a special agent are suspended, awaiting such examination, I deem it best to give you some instructions in regard to your investigations, so that the work can be facilitated and some action can be taken on the entries by this office at as early date as possible.

S. P. C. STUBBS,
Special Agent General Land Office, Vancouver, Wash.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Olympia, Wash., January 18, 1888.

SIR: I very respectfully request that all the cash entries made upon pre-emption declaratory statements in townships 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 north, ranges 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 west of Willamette meridian be suspended and not patented until I have had an opportunity to examine them. Please place all commuted homestead entries in same situation, as possibly fraudulent. The rainy season here at this time necessitates a postponement of the examination until some time later. Will you please notify, if consistent, the local office of your action, as it will enable me to secure testimony.

Very respectfully,

THOS. H. CAVANAUGH, Special Agent.

Hon. COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C.

Action on within entries and townships may be suspended.

[Telegram.]

LAS CRUCES, N. MEX., August 13.

COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C.:

In my judgment all entries lying along Pecos River should be ordered suspended till examination can be made.

I am satisfied that they need careful investigation.

My address will be Santa Fé. My mail will be forwarded.

EDDY, Special Agent.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., August 16, 1883.

SIR: Referring to your telegram of the 13th instant in relation to fraudulent entries along the Pecos River and recommending suspensions until investigations can be made, I have to inform you that the action suggested by you has been taken.

Very respectfully,

L. HARRISON, Acting Commissioner.

H. H. EDDY,
Special Agent General Land Office, Santa Fé, N. Mex.

In referring to this order of suspension of General Sparks, the Senator from Kansas endeavors to excite sectional feeling and sectional prejudices by saying, and that, too, right in the face of the order, "that the fraudulent line was drawn at the States recently in rebellion," when but a moment before he had read the order making an exception from said suspension of one-half of the Senator's own State of Kansas. I doubt if it will be pleasant to the Senator's constituents in Eastern Kansas to learn that he confounded them in a speech made in the United States Senate as "falling in line with those recently in rebellion."

Another exception in said order embraces very nearly the eastern half of Nebraska, and still the Senator from Kansas stands on this floor and coolly and deliberately charges in effect that the constituents of the honorable Senators from Nebraska who live east of range 17, in said State, "fall within the line of the States recently in rebellion," and yet neither of the honorable Senators feels himself called upon to refute this imputation against their constituents.

The result of the Senator's statement is to show, also, that all that portion of Minnesota lying south of the indemnity limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad and west of the indemnity limits of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad, comprising about two-thirds of the great State of Minnesota (and which was excepted in said order), "falls within the line of the States recently in rebellion." The Senator had this order before him when he made this statement. Why did he make it? He had just read the order; had often read it before, no doubt. Then why stand upon this floor and charge the citizens of two-thirds of the loyal State of Minnesota as "falling within the line of the States recently in rebellion?" It is making false history. The portion of lands open to entry, and excepted in said order, in the States not recently in rebellion, is estimated to be more than equal, if not double, to the public lands in "the States recently in rebellion," and not included in said order; and yet the honorable Senator endeavors to make a sectional point out of this order. But in order to do so it must be accomplished at the expense of the loyalty of one-half of the citizens of his own constituency, one-half of the citizens of Nebraska, and two-thirds of the citizens of Minnesota.

I insert a statement showing the estimate of acres left open to settlement in the States named after the order of April 3, 1885:

APPROXIMATE ESTIMATE OF ACRES LEFT OPEN TO SETTLEMENT IN THE STATES NAMED AFTER THE ORDER OF APRIL 3, 1885.

Late Ute reservation in Colorado	1,175,040
All lands east of first guide meridian in Kansas	24,525,440
All lands east of range 17 west (included), Nebraska	19,682,799
All lands except lands north of indemnity limits of Northern Pacific Railroad and east of indemnity limits of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad, in Minnesota	37,101,440
	82,434,719
Approximate estimate of acres of public lands in five Southern States—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi—undisposed of	12,965,424
Excess of lands open to settlement in Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, and Minnesota over the estimated public lands in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi, or five and one-third times as much	69,519,295

This statement shows that in those States which were loyal to the Union, and of which I have before spoken, 83,484,719 acres were excepted from said order and left open to settlement, while the lands in the Southern States which were excepted only amounted to 12,965,424 acres, leaving an excess open to settlement in these loyal States of 69,519,295 acres.

To what great stress for political campaign material must the Senator be driven when he makes such reckless charges? He further criticises the order because it did not apply to private cash entry, warrant, and scrip locations. The Senator's experience must teach him that frauds in the acquiring of lands are not apt to be perpetrated in these classes of entries, as they amount to a sale by the Government to the citizen. The only question with them is as to the payment of the money or the genuineness of the warrants. No settlement, residence, cultivation, or improvement is required, as is the case in homestead, pre-emption, desert-land, and other entries.

It is in the pretended compliance with these conditions where the frauds are perpetrated, and it was reported by Republican special agents that these conditions were not being complied with in many cases. In some of the instances the entrymen were mythical, in others they were in the employ of large syndicates endeavoring to secure control of large tracts of land in the Northwest for speculative purposes, controlling water privileges, getting possession of the most valuable timber and coal land under the guise of home-seekers, using their paid hirelings to make the applications and do the swearing. Yet the Senator attempts to torture this order into an effort on the part of a Democratic Administration to discriminate against homestead-seekers and in favor of corporations.

Another inconsistency of the Senator is that he dwells upon this order of the late Commissioner of the General Land Office as evidence of his design and of that of the present Administration, to discriminate against the home seeker and in favor of the railroad. And yet before he closes his speech he charges that ex-Commissioner Sparks was deposed by the President, upon the advice of Secretary Lamar, because he was too greatly in favor of home seekers and too much opposed to railroads. This is blowing hot and cold with the same breath. When it is the Senator's purpose to incite the settlers against the present Administration, he charges that they are not fairly treated when in conflict with railroad interests, and when he discovers that such a charge against Sparks can not be sustained, then he charges that the ex-Commissioner was deposed because he was too favorable to private settlers.

Another charge against the Administration upon which the Senator dwells at great length is that special agents of the Land Office are employed—"spies," he calls them—and one would infer from his remarks that the present system originated under a Democratic organization, when as a matter of fact the system was begun under a Republican administration. The charge of widespread fraud in the acquiring of the public land did not originate with the late Commissioner Sparks. And to prove this I only have to refer to Secretary Teller's report to Congress, 1882, page 20; 1883, pages 30, 31, and 32; report of 1884, pages 14, 15, 16, and 17; also Commissioner McFarland's report of 1882, pages 11 to 13.

The special agent system, so unmercifully denounced by the Senator from Kansas, was found in full-fledged condition, and presided over, I believe, by one of the friends of the Senator from Kansas, when the present Administration took control of the General Land Office, and had been so organized because of the representations made by Secretary Teller and Commissioner McFarland of the widespread frauds that prevailed in the acquisition of the public lands by corporations and speculators and the spoliation of valuable timber growing upon the same. This branch of the special service of the General Land Office as to timber stealing was inaugurated in 1882, and was not a device inaugurated by a Democratic executive department to "harass and annoy the poor settlers." At the incoming of the present Administration there were already sixty-nine special agents inspecting these entries.

They were appointed by a Republican administration, not only because they were Republicans, but we will charitably suppose, as a matter of course, because they were thought to be men of honor and integrity. And I now refer you to the several reports made by Republican special agents, appointed by a Republican Secretary. These will be found in the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of 1885, pages 48 to 64. These reports were made by the Senator's political friends—some of whom, no doubt, were appointed upon his recommendation—and I desire to read here a short extract from Commissioner McFarland's report, 1885:

At the outset of my administration I was confronted with overwhelming evidences that the public domain was being made the prey of unscrupulous speculation and the worst forms of land monopoly through systematic frauds carried on and consummated under the public laws. My predecessor had for three years called the attention of Congress to the extent and magnitude of fraudulent appropriation of public land, and, as shown by his general and special reports, had found it necessary to suspend the issue of patents in several States and Territories, either wholly or in certain classes of entries and special districts of this country.

It would, therefore, appear that Commissioner Sparks was not the first Commissioner of the General Land Office to suspend entries in States or Territories wholly or in part. And it was from these agents—appointed by a Republican Commissioner—from whom first came the charge of fraud against the entryman. And because the present Administration credited the former official representation of a Republican Secretary of the Interior, and a Republican Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the reports of Republican special agents, after they had made examinations in the field, and attempted with what means it had at its command to eliminate these fraudulent entries from the genuine ones, and to check such attempts in future, that now the cry is raised by the Senator from Kansas that the whole thing is "a device of this Administration to oppress honest settlers."

Mr. President, it is difficult to reconcile these reckless statements of the Senator from Kansas with the belief that I have always entertained, that the Senator desires to be fair and just.

Having shown the origin of what the Senator from Kansas denominates as the "spy system," having referred to the representations of a Republican Secretary and a Republican Commissioner of the General Land Office, officially made, as the reason for inaugurating the system, having read the official reports of Republican special agents, I now wish to submit and have read a statement compiled from the official records of the General Land Office as to what has been accomplished under the present Administration in the way of correcting fraudulent entries, removing unlawful inclosures of the cattle kings from the people's land, recovering money from wealthy syndicates, and for unlawfully appropriating the people's timber, a record of which any administration may be proud. The statement shows as follows:

Results accomplished in the timber-depredation branch of the special service, General Land Office, since March 4, 1885.

Legal proceedings recommended—	Civil.	Amount involved.	Criminal.
March 4, 1885, to June 30, 1885	41	$215,147.83	61
July 1, 1885, to June 30, 1886	275	5,774,272.84	679
July 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887	222	2,082,236.72	493
July 1, 1887, to June 30, 1888	416	3,795,620.99	*1,419
Total	954	11,867,278.38	2,652

*Seven hundred and sixty-seven of the criminal prosecutions recommended for the last fiscal year were on complaints of individuals.

Amount of judgments recovered:
March 4, 1885, to June 30, 1885 (estimated)	$30,000.00
July 1, 1885, to June 30, 1886 (from official records)	101,086.44
July 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887 (from official records)	128,642.09
July 1, 1887, to June 30, 1888 (from official records)	128,522.64
Total amount recovered	388,251.17

Civil suits pending June 30, 1888, 461; amount involved, $6,332,812.64. Criminal prosecutions pending, 604.

This is but a short statement, but it shows that something at least has been accomplished by these special agents under Democratic rule, so unmercifully denounced by the Senator from Kansas. The statement shows that legal proceedings have been recommended involving $11,867,278.38. It shows that judgments have already been recovered to the amount of $388,251.17. It shows that proceedings are still pending involving $6,332,812.64. And I wish to call the especial attention of the Senator from Kansas to the following statement:

At the beginning of this Administration there were found of the public domain, inclosed by cattle companies and syndicates, without any authority of law, 7,224,070 acres, of which 1,452,060 acres were in Kansas alone.

Commissioner McFarland had called attention to these trespasses on the public lands, but was powerless, it seemed, to remedy them. (See Land Office Reports 1882, 1883, 1884.) His special agents and local officers were given interests in the syndicates and took no action against them.

President Cleveland promptly took hold of the subject, and by his proclamation of 1885 forever broke up this practice, and I ask to insert the proclamation as part of my remarks.

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT.

By the President of the United States of America, a proclamation:

Whereas the public policy demands that the public domain shall be reserved for the occupancy of actual settlers in good faith, and that our people who seek homes upon such domain shall in nowise be prevented by any wrongful interference from the safe and free entry thereon, to which they may be entitled; and

Whereas to secure and maintain this beneficent policy, a statute was passed by the Congress of the United States on the 25th day of February, in the year 1885, which declared to be unlawful all inclosures of any public lands in any State or Territory, to any of which lands included within said inclosure the person, party, association, or corporation making or controlling such inclosure had no claim or color of title, made or acquired in good faith or an asserted right thereto by or under a claim made in good faith, with a view to entry thereof at the proper land office, and which statute also prohibited any person by force, threats, intimidation, or by any fencing or inclosure or other unlawful means preventing or obstructing any person from peaceably entering upon or establishing settlement or residence on any tract of public land, subject to settlement or entry under the public-land laws of the United States, and from preventing or obstructing free passage and transit over or through the public lands; and

Whereas it is by the fifth section of said act provided as follows: That the President is hereby authorized to take such means as shall be necessary to remove and destroy any unlawful inclosure of any of said lands, and to employ civil or military force as may be necessary for that purpose;" and

Whereas it has been brought to my knowledge that unlawful inclosures, and such as are prohibited by the terms of the aforesaid statute, exist upon the public domain, and that actual legal settlement thereon is prevented and obstructed by such inclosures and force, threats, and intimidation:

Now therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby order and direct that any and every unlawfull nclosure of the public lands, maintained by any person, association, or corporation, be immediately removed, and I do hereby forbid any person, association, or corporation from preventing or obstructing, by means of such inclosures, or by force, threats, or intimidation, any person entitled thereto from peaceably entering upon and establishing a settlement or residence on any part of such public land which is subject to entry and settlement under the laws of the United States; and I command and require each and every officer of the United States, upon whom the duty is legally devolved, to cause this order to be obeyed, and all the provisions of the act of Congress herein mentioned to be faithfully enforced.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 7th day of August, 1885, and of the Independence of the United States of America the 110th.

[U. S. SEAL.] GROVER CLEVELAND.

This Democratic Administration was mercilessly denounced by the Senator from Kansas for doing that which its Republican predecessors dared not do. It took by the throat these Western cattle syndicates and removed them from the people's land and restored to the homeseekers of the West almost 5,000,000 acres of land, and yet the Senator says that the Democratic party has been the friend of the few rather than the friend of the many!

I further desire to submit the following responses from some of the registers and receivers of the General Land Office, principally in the Senator's own State of Kansas, in response to a circular letter of inquiry addressed to them by Commissioner Stockslager, June 6, 1888. They speak for themselves and need no comment. The information will not alone prove instructive to the Senator from Kansas, but to many others also, and it will be very gratifying to the lovers of honesty, the enemies of fraud, and to the millions of homeless citizens, to learn that the time when, as under past administrations, wealthy syndicates and powerful corporations could and did monopolize little kingdoms of the people's land intended for homes for the homeless is past, and that under the reform Administration of Grover Cleveland it has been checked, and that it, like many other evils that have grown upon our body politic as so many cancers eating at the vitals of the people, will soon be numbered with the things of the dead past. The following is the letter of the Commissioner, and responses:

Under date of June 6, 1888, I addressed to the registers and receivers of the different land offices throughout the Territories and land States the following letter, to wit:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., June 6, 1888.

"GENTLEMEN: Having commenced the compilation of data and information to be embraced in my next annual report, I desire you to furnish me as soon as practicable all information from your office that in your judgment would be useful knowledge to the public, but especially do I want information upon the following points:

"1. Has the attempt to improperly acquire the public domain, under any of the existing land laws, decreased or increased since your incumbency? And if any change, state causes.

"2. Within your district, under which of the existing laws, by which the public domain may be acquired, are the most attempts made to improperly acquire lands, and what, in your judgment, the cause of same?

"3. In what proportion are the speculative attempts to enter lands as compared with those of home-seekers?

"4. Any and all other useful information touching the land interest in your district, to be furnished in a close and concise form on or before the 1st of August next.

"S. M. STOCKSLAGER, Commissioner.

"REGISTER and RECEIVER."

My object in calling for this report from the local officers was this: The policy of the present Administration in requiring a full and substantial compliance with the various laws for the disposition of the public lands and in vigorously investigating charges of fraud perpetrated against the Government has been enforced now for over three years. I desired to ascertain from those having charge of the actual work of disposing of the lands and coming into direct contact with the people whether any results have been accomplished by these efforts, which had for their object the repression of the evils and abuses which had grown up under former administrations, and which have been fully treated by my predecessor in his reports.

The result of this call has been astonishing as well as gratifying. Responses have been received from fifty-seven offices, in twelve out of the sixteen public-land States and seven out of the eight Territories, to wit: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, Wisconsin, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Washington, Wyoming, and Utah.

In response to the first question, forty-six of the reports indicate a decrease of attempts to improperly acquire the public domain, and most of them do this in most emphatic terms. No report of an increase has been received, although five substantially record no decrease, while six are silent on the point. The reports as to the causes of this marked decrease in such illegal attempts are various. A large majority of the reports ascribe the great improvement in such matters to the rigid rulings of the office and the Department, the closer scrutiny exercised by the local officers under official regulations in taking final proofs, and the use of the new forms for taking proof and the cross-examination provided for. A large percentage of the reports gave as one of the most marked causes of improvement the active and efficient services of the special agents of the office.

It is remarkable how these officers, scattered over all parts of the country, agree in the opinion that the timber-culture and pre-emption laws and the commutation feature of the homestead law furnish the readiest means of acquiring public lands improperly, while in the States and Territories where desert-land entries are allowed that provision of the law is also generally condemned. In these particulars the responses of the local officers very signally support and supplement my reports on pending proposed legislation as to the disposal of the public lands heretofore made to Congress and further treated of elsewhere herein. In this connection I call special attention to the report of the register at the Duluth (Minn.) office with regard to threatened frauds under the recent act of February 8, 1887, allotting lands in severalty to non-reservation Indians. I also call special attention to the language of the register at Wichita, Kans., giving his reasons for believing that the homestead law alone should be retained.

The fifty-seven reports mentioned are printed herewith even at the risk of increasing my report to more than its usual length, for the reason that I think they present a remarkable showing and furnish useful information as to the actual workings of the present laws and regulations, and give many suggestions that may be valuable in shaping legislation and official action in the future.

Said reports are as follows:

WICHITA, KANS.

Frank Dale, register of the land office at Wichita, Kans., on July 21, 1888, writes:

"There is now in this district no organized effort upon the part of individuals or corporations to acquire lands from the Government fraudulently. Prior to the change of Administration there were numerous cattle syndicates organized in the southern portion of this State, many of which were in the district, and such syndicates acquired quite large tracts of land. The methods of their illegal work are now well known, and since we have had charge of this office they have ceased in their illegal attempts. The reasons for such cessation are well known here. The final proofs are carefully scrutinized, and if they appear at all suspicious further proof or special examination of the condition of improvements, settlement, residence, etc., is made. But we think the vigorous prosecution upon the part of the Government as instituted under the system of special agents has probably done more to paralyze the syndicates than all the other causes combined.

"In this district thousands of acres of land fraudulently entered during the years 1883, 1884, and 1885 have been restored to the public domain and held for honest settlers.

"The restoration has been accomplished by the hearings instituted by the General Land Office through the special agent and this office. The only objection that is urged against this work that is worthy of consideration is that it disquiets the title to lands in dispute, and in some instances is a hardship against settlers who desire to sell their land or borrow money upon the same. We therefore suggest that the investigation set on foot for the purpose of inquiring into the character of the entries be conducted as speedily as possible. Under the existing laws, to wit, homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture, the homestead law only should be retained; even the commutation portion of that law should be abrogated. The homestead law requiring five years' residence upon and improvement of the land fulfills the destiny for which it was intended.

"The man who lives for five years upon 160 acres of land usually has the same in such a state of cultivation that he can support himself and family from the proceeds of the farm. They also become attached to the place and have an affectionate regard for their home. They can hardly be induced to sell their land or impair their title by mortgaging the same. Consequently the Government has a cheerful, contented, and self-supporting family, a testimony to the wisdom of the law under which they acquired title to their homes.

"The pre-emption law has long outlived its usefulness. A family settles upon a quarter-section, lives upon the same but a short time, makes final proof, mortgages the land for a few hundred dollars, stays upon the land until its money is exhausted; the interest upon the mortgage falls due, is unable to make payment, sells out for a small premium above the amount named in the mortgage, and the land passes to the mortgagee. As a means of getting a family a home it is a failure.

"The person settling upon the land has not resided on the same long enough to become attached to it; he was compelled to mortgage the land for the purpose of securing money to pay for the same, and had not the land in such a productive condition that he could make a living off of the tract. The rate of interest to new settlers is always usurious. If the pre-emption law is to remain in force it should be amended so that a pre-emptor can not prove up under three years, and he should not be compelled to pay more than one-eighth of the purchase price when final proof is accepted, the remainder of the same due to be paid in installments with a low rate of interest. The timber-culture law should never have been enacted. In nine cases out of ten it is used for speculative purposes, relinquishments are hawked about for sale to the highest bidder, and the cases are very rare where a timber-culture filing is made with the intention of trying to comply with the law. Our records show, in almost all cases, several relinquishments frequently to members of the same family; and, further, that the land is finally entered under the homestead or pre-emption law.

"The writer of this letter settled upon a homestead near this place in 1872 and lived upon the same a number of years. The opportunity for observing the workings of the different laws has been ample, and a firm conclusion reached that all laws except the homestead act should be repealed if we would hold the public domain for those persons who desire to obtain a home.

"From a careful estimate I do not think that 5 per cent. of the lands entered at this office during the past three years have been fraudulently entered."

LARNED, KANS.

Register Henry W. Scott and Receiver H. M. Bickel, of the Larned land office, Kansas, under date of July 27, 1888, report:

"The decrease in attempts to improperly acquire the public domain during the present Administration is almost unprecedented, the principal reasons for which being—

"1. We have had a special agent here in the person of Clarke S. Rowe, who was an indefatigable worker, and the exposures resulting from his investigations have had a wholesome and lasting effect.

"2. The present final proof blanks are far superior to those formerly in use, the forms being a statement of the facts in the case, while the old ones were more of a conclusion of what the law requires. This was particularly true upon the question of residence. The questions in the new forms are so constructed and arranged that bad faith on the part of the claimant is readily discerned from that alone, when final proofs are rejected from this cause. Not more than 5 per cent. of such rejected proofs are appealed from this office, and in the majority of instances the claimant returns to his land, and his next proof shows full compliance with the law.

"3. The fact that notaries public can no longer take final proofs is also an important factor in preventing frauds. While notaries public were taking proofs the competing for this class of business was so great that the officer was often the zealous agent of the claimant, and his worth was measured by his ability to 'get proofs through the local office.' If the law could be so modified that but one officer in each county could be authorized to take final proofs, it would destroy the competitive scramble for this class of business entirely, and instead of an officer being interested in securing favorable action on the proof, he would be more likely to act as an officer, and be just to both the claimant and the Government.

"The most attempts made to improperly acquire the public domain are made under the pre-emption and commutation laws. The principal reason for which results from the fact that the entryman can reside for six months upon the land, the time required by law, and upon proving the same up can secure a loan from Eastern and European capitalists upon his land for a much greater sum than the land will sell for. The money is handled mostly by irresponsible local agents, 90 per cent. of whom have no interest in the matter, except the 2 or 3 per cent. they receive for making such loan. The fruits of these injudicious investments will be reaped when the mortgage becomes due, unless the price of land advances tenfold or more within a few years. Single men and women are induced by these agents to file upon land with the promise of a stipulated sum in the shape of a loan when they have lived upon it the required length of time and have secured their final receipt.

"The claimants in such cases only estimate the amount of money they can earn, calculating the time actually employed in making a satisfactory showing to the register and receiver, whereby they can secure a final receipt from the receiver for their final entry fees. This is particularly true of the Osage trust and diminished reserve Indian lands. We are of the opinion that fully 75 per cent. of these lands are acquired with speculative intent, and the decision of Hon. Acting Secretary Muldrow in the case of the United States vs. Woodbury et al. (volume 5, Land Decisions, page 303) has contributed largely to this. The six weeks required to publish notice of intention to make final proof is often regarded as the maximum period of occupancy, and it is often vehemently argued that residence upon such land is not necessary. We find that most claimants are not aware that they are not complying with the intent and spirit of the law, but inquiry discloses the real speculator to be some loan agent or other person residing in the little villages near the land.

"In making original entry under the timber-culture law the speculation is also great. Fifty per cent. of timber-culture entries are made with a view to holding them for a few years and then selling the relinquishment at an advance. The General Land Office circular of March 19, 1887, holding that speculation in relinquishments is cause for the disbarment of attorneys has done much towards remedying that evil.

"The extreme and unusual drought last year did much to discourage settlers, and many persons who made settlement in the best of faith have been compelled to abandon their claims, and on this account it has been often difficult to determine whether or not individual cases are meritorious or otherwise. It has been understood to be the policy of the General Land Office in such cases to give the claimant the benefit of the doubt. Agreeable to this policy, our course can best be illustrated by our record of rejected proofs. For the year ending June 30, 1887, we rejected 307 final proofs, but for the year ending June 30, 1888, there were only 124 rejected.

"On account of the drought no reliable data can be given as to the probable percentage of speculative attempts to enter lands as compared with those of home-seekers.

"The policy of the Administration to have none but honest, competent men in the land service has been conspicuously demonstrated in this State by the removal of the register of this office for corruption and general unfitness for the discharge of the duties incumbent upon such an officer. The said removal has done much in Kansas to give the people greater confidence in the honest intentions of the Administration and the resolute will of the Chief Executive to put such intentions into the strictest execution.

"This office has been for years surrounded and the district has been infested with an unsavory alliance of pretended land attorneys and loan agents, who have been practicing their piracies upon the unsuspicious settlers. Their conduct has long since become unbearable, and all attempts to subdue them have proved fruitless until the removal of the register aforesaid. Since that event we have inaugurated a reform in this respect. Three land attorneys at Larned have been disbarred, and one at Medicine Lodge, Kans., all of whom are awaiting appeals."

GARDEN CITY, KANS.

Register C. F. M. Niles and Receiver S. Thanhouser, of Garden City land office, Kansas, under date of June 18, 1888, write:

"The operation of the timber-culture laws in this district is a farce. It is almost impossible to raise trees there without irrigation at great expense. We may safely say that 95 per cent. of the timber-culture entries are speculative. It is a difficult matter to ascertain the good faith of many claimants under the pre-emption laws, and who avail themselves of the privileges of the commutation clause under the homestead laws, because many claimants make proof in the shortest possible time, within six months from date of settlement. If good faith means seeking a home, all of these quick, short-time cash entries are speculative.

"Long residence is the only sensible measure of good faith. The greater the improvements the larger the loan obtainable. Thus a settler may live on a tract only six months, have improvements worth $500, and not be a home-seeker. On the other hand, a settler may have improvements worth only $50, live on a tract actually and constructively for two years, and be a genuine home-seeker. The cause of fraud and speculation is wholly short residence. In our opinion the law should be either a downright purchase without residence or a residence without purchase, and the former is objectionable for a multitude of reasons. * * * As a matter of fact, fear of contest causes compliance with the law in many cases.

"We would recommend legislation that would make the attendance of witnesses, particularly in United States cases, compulsory. If this were brought about, in conjunction with the reforms of the Department in the matters of the registration of all notices, the accuracy of rulings, and the strict requirements in the matter of services and posting of notices, the improvement would be complete.

"The attempt to improperly acquire the public domain since our incumbency (two and a half to three years ago) has decreased. The primary cause is the efficiency and rigor in the service and the investigations and requirements of this Administration. [Here they refer to facts showing the general evidence of looseness characteristic of the previous administration.] Affairs were wildly chaotic and strongly lethargic. Here, then, is the cause of causes in the decrease of attempts to improperly acquire the public domain. This Administration tightened up the loose strings, enforced existing legislation, issued new forms of final proof blanks that went to the very bottom of the individual settler's compliance with the law, gave this land district a special agent to personally investigate fraud, rendered decisions that peremptorily insisted upon the meaning of the law, and put to flight many would-be fraudulent entrymen. Energy and system aided the reform, and another cause for decrease in fraudulent entries within the time of our incumbency is the rapid settlement of this land district and the consequent enhancement in value of the lands. Settlers have often been obliged to comply with the law because of fear of a contest. Entrymen have often become actual settlers because of the increased value of the land."

SALINA, KANS.

Receiver O. F. Searl, of the Salina land office, Kansas, under date of July 9, 1888, writes:

"Attempts to improperly acquire title (i. e., to procure patent) to public land is much greater under the pre-emption law and the commuted homestead law, while the law under which lands are mostly held for speculative purposes under original entries is the timber-culture act. The reason for this is that under the timber-culture act any person can hold for $14 a greater section of land for one year; in other words, he gets an option for one year on 160 acres of land for $14. For $10 more (the expense of breaking 5 acres) will extend his option for another year, and for less than $20 more he can hold it for the third year; thus, for less than $50 a greater section can be held for three years, and this in sections of country where lands are rapidly increasing in value is a great temptation to many.

"Attempts to improperly acquire the public domain have decreased since our incumbency in September, 1886, especially under the homestead and pre-emption laws, caused to a great extent by the new and improved blanks used in making final proof, and, we think, to some extent, from the greatly increased number of final proofs rejected by this office for non-compliance with the law. The records show an increase of several hundred per cent. of rejected proofs over former years, and very few are appealed from.

"I am of opinion that 75 per cent. of the timber-culture entries are made with a view of getting the increased value of the land, and not with the intention of acquiring title under the law. The records of this office show the timber-culture entries made up to July 1, 1888, number 4,244; that to same date only 315 final certificates have been issued. Up to July 1, 1879, 2,621 entries were made, all of which were eligible by lapse of time to have made final proof on or before July 1, 1887; but the actual number made was 273. During the six months ending December 31, 1878, 226 entries were made, and of these only 28 remain intact on the books, and only 18 have passed to final certificate. A large majority of the entries now of record, on which final proof has not been made, are now in the hands of second to fifth entrymen. These facts force me to the opinion as stated above.

"The matter of hearing in land entries is of much importance and could be made of great service to the Government in preventing fraudulent entries. Prior to July 1, 1886, but one case is of record in this office. Since then about twelve hearings have been ordered and trial had on most of them. In the first cases the special agent succeeded very well in procuring witnesses, as it was not generally known by the people that when summoned by the special agent that they were not compelled to obey. But this soon became known, and to a great extent by information given by defendants through their attorneys, so that it is almost impossible to procure desirable witnesses. It is a very easy matter for defendants to persuade all witnesses whom they do not desire to have testify against them not to appear. The consequence is that the case must be heard with such witnesses as the defendant may choose shall testify against him, and no others. Trials of this kind are farcical, and unless the Department can be granted some compulsory process it is almost useless to continue the trial of cases on report of special agents."

CONCORDIA, KANS.

Register Samuel Demers and Receiver Carnehan, of the Concordia land office, Kansas, under date of June 11, 1888, state:

"Since our incumbency there has been a marked and distinctive improvement in public sentiment, backed and sustained by the settler on the domain, that none of those who have not honestly complied with the requirements of the several laws shall obtain title to any of the lands This talk about casting a cloud on every settler's home is not heard of among the honest settlers. They rather court investigation, and they want the land speculator to go far hence. * * * It is almost impossible to successfully smuggle a final proof through."

WA KEENEY, KANS.

Register W. C. L. Beard and Receiver John Schuyler, of the Wa Keeney land office, Kansas, under date of July 12, 1888, state:

"The attempt to improperly acquire title to land has decreased since our incumbency, for the following reasons:

"The rulings and requirements of the Department have been so modified that it is now possible to force a more strict compliance with the law.

"The public domain in this district is becoming exhausted, and each settler is in a measure driven to comply with the law from fear of others taking advantage of their failure.

"In the past the most attempts to acquire lands improperly were made under the second section, act of June 15, 1880; but as this kind of entries do not frequently occur now, we believe the most attempts are now made in pre-emption entries and in commutation of homestead entries, the great majority of the above being made at the earliest possible moment, the bare residence of six months being really the only definite requirement of law.

"We believe that 75 per cent. of the entries made are speculative, i. e., those made and proved up under the homestead."

LAS CRUCES, N. MEX.

Edmund G. Shields, register of the land office at Las Cruces, N. Mex., on July 23, 1888, writes:

"There has been but little attempt since my incumbency to acquire title through fraud to the public domain.

"I attribute the decrease to the vigilance of the Administration in protecting the public lands from inroads, and the vigorous examinations made necessary of claimants and witnesses when proofs are made. The change has made the would-be perjurer afraid. Again, I must say that many of the cases which are reported as fraudulent, are so simply from the lax manner in which the former administration permitted entries. The system was so loose that by custom to the people generally it became law. Thousands of acres of land have been held under the desert-land act for three years. This was accomplished by making the first payment of 25 cents, which operated as a lease for three years. This office has notified such claimants and restored to the settlers thousands of acres of such entries."

While the reports of the agents employed for the protection of the public lands are made on each separate individual entry examined, yet the fact is that the greater part of the time of the agents has been spent in investigating groups of entries charged to have been made in the interest of companies or of single individuals who were attempting to acquire title to large tracts of the public domain through the agency of their employés.

For instance, in California last year one agent investigated the methods which had been followed in making timber-land entries in the redwood forests of the Humboldt region. By reason of his careful work Commissioner Stockslager, on March 29, 1888, held forty-one of these entries for cancellation, covering the finest timber lands, of the estimated value of $11,000,000 in one district alone.

Here is one of these cases reported by one of these spies, as the Senator from Kansas calls them. This English company—a foreign company—had invested and had combined through their employés to steal from the Government of the United States the finest timber land in the redwood district of California; and yet this Democratic Administration, which the Senator says has been the friend of the few as against the many, through Commissioner Stockslager, in 1888, restored to the public domain and broke up these entries for lands, amounting to $11,000,000.

It was clearly shown that these entries were made by irresponsible parties, who were paid by the "Humboldt Redwood Company" for their services in making the entries, and who conveyed the lands to said company as soon as final certificate had issued. At the same time suits were also recommended by the Commissioner to vacate patents which had issued on one hundred and fifty-one similar entries prior to the discovery of their fraudulent character, all of which were made in the interest of said company, a corporation organized in Scotland for the purpose of securing a monopoly of the redwood forests of California.

Another agent, in the same State, has investigated a large number of pre-emption and commuted homestead entries made upon lands valuable solely for their timber, made for the purpose of transferring them to speculators. He also examined last year a group of timber-land entries covering 12,000 acres in the Visalia and Stockton districts, and found that they had all been transferred to a San Francisco firm, who, it was charged, had induced the entrymen to take up these lands for the benefit of the firm.

So, in Oregon, a group of eleven desert entries, covering 6,000 acres, were investigated, five of them made in the interest of one man and six in the interest of another.

Six pre-emption, homestead, and desert entries on 2,400 acres were found to have been made by the employés of a firm of stockmen for their benefit.

In Washington Territory one agent was employed in conducting trials in seventeen pre-emption and timber-land entries on 2,700 acres, all made in the interest of a firm of Michigan lumbermen, to whom the lands were all transferred immediately after entry. Twenty-one other entries in the same Territory on 3,360 acres, all made for the benefit of a single land-grabber, were investigated.

In New Mexico a single line of investigation involved forty-five entries on about 7,000 acres, extending 15 or 20 miles along the Arroya Tequexquite. These lands were conveyed to a cattle company in pursuance to contracts made with the company before entry. So, in another instance, in the same Territory, forty-one entries covering 6,500 acres were found to have been made in the names of parties who had no existence, and the lands were subsequently conveyed to a cattle company by deeds purporting to be executed by these mythical entrymen. Ninety-one other entries on 14,500 acres were found to have been made for the benefit of another cattle company, the lands lying along the Rio Grande and its tributaries, and controlling the water-right for 15 or 20 miles. So, along the Rio Pecos for 20 or 25 miles were found eighty-six entries on 10,500 acres, on which the entrymen never lived. Shanties were placed on these lands by the cattle company that sought title, for the use of their employés in making proof, and were removed immediately after proof.

The fraudulent entries investigated in New Mexico last year covered only about 82,000 acres of land, but they actually controlled an immense territory by appropriating all the water in their respective localities, thus enabling the cattle kings to effectually shut out settlers who would otherwise take these lands for homes.

This is the kind of work that these spies, who are abused so greatly, have been engaged on in all parts of the country.

In Colorado the finest coal lands in the world have been taken under the homestead law in the name of fictitious persons; 8,000 acres being thus taken by two men. In other parts of Colorado entries were made for the benefit of cattle men so as to control the streams of water and keep out the so-called "grangers," for whom the cattle barons have a lordly contempt. But thanks to a Democratic Administration, this kind of work has been completely broken up in Colorado, much to the disgust of syndicates and cattle companies, who are loud in their cries of sympathy for the "poor settler;" but this same "poor settler" now has a chance, under the protection of the Administration, to find a spot of 160 acres where he can build his cabin and make a home for his family, which he could not do under Republican administration. Most of this protestation of a loving care for the "honest settler" is inspired by agents of corporations, syndicates, and land-grabbers, whose "occupation is gone."

In the State of Kansas, at the beginning of this Administration, thousands of acres of Government land were fraudulently held by cattle men. But the Senator from Kansas does himself a great injustice and injures that reputation he would seek to maintain for fair and honest dealing when he seeks to convey the impression there are now from 50,000 to 100,000 entries tied up awaiting investigation through special agents. He certainly must know better. On inquiry at the Land Office it is ascertained that there are 13,060 entries in the special service division, a very large proportion of which have already been investigated by the special agents.

Fully one-half the force of special agents is employed in investigating cases of depredation on the public timber.

Yet, Mr. President, in view of these enormous frauds reported to Secretary Teller by a Republican Commissioner, reported by Republican agents, reported by Commissioner McFarland, because this Administration has sought to break up the illegal appropriation of the public land and the public timber of the country and to disperse the cattle companies, who without authority and without law had appropriated them to their own use, General Sparks, the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, is to be denounced by every epithet which the language commands, and the Democratic party is held up to scorn because it has sought to save these lands to the poor settlers and homesteaders of the West.

The letters which I have inserted show not only in the State of Kansas, but in New Mexico, in Washington Territory, and in all the Territories of the West since this Administration came into power, that these fraudulent entries, these illegal combinations to destroy the timber of the United States by corporate companies, some of them foreign and some of them domestic, and by the cattle syndicates which have appropriated more than 5,000,000 acres of land for their own use, have been broken up, and under this Administration there is some hope that the honest settler and home-seeker may have an opportunity to obtain a home upon the public lands of the West.

Having shown that the order of suspension so vigorously attacked by the Senator from Kansas was not sectional and was in the interest of and not to the detriment of the honest settler, and having shown the results accomplished by the special agents under Democratic rule, I wish to refer briefly to the history of the two prominent parties of the country and the connection that they have had with the disposition of the public land.

In the first place, our history shows that every foot of public domain that has ever been acquired by the Government was acquired under Democratic administrations, except alone Alaska. It was the Democratic party that made the Louisiana purchase. It was the Democratic party that acquired the State of Florida. It was the Democratic party that added to our public domain California and the Western Territories. And, as before said, all the public lands which the Government has possessed, save alone those in Alaska, were obtained under Democratic rule.

It is true, Mr. President, that in some instances public lands were granted by the Democratic party to the States, to be used in aid of public improvements. They were not granted directly to corporations, but they were granted to the States in trust for that purpose, thereby enabling the States to attach such terms and conditions as would in some measure protect the people against the greed of the corporations. The wisdom of this policy of granting them to the States rather than directly to the corporations, if they were to be granted at all, is conspicuously shown in the grant made to the State of Illinois for the Central Railroad—one of the grants referred to by the Senator from Kansas as having been made by a Democratic administration. The State was thereby enabled to impose a condition upon the railroad company by which that company is compelled to pay annually 7 per cent. of its gross earnings into the State treasury of Illinois. And I might state in this connection that it was a Whig President, Mr. Fillmore (and not a Democratic President, as stated by the Senator from Kansas), who first established the precedent of withdrawing lands from entry in the interest of railroads. The date of said order of withdrawal is September 9, 1850.

I herewith submit, and will have printed in the RECORD, a statement showing the grants made and the amount of land contained in the grants to the States and corporations prior to 1861 under Democratic rule, and also the grants made and the number of acres of land granted since 1861 to the States and directly to the corporations under Republican rule.

When this table is printed in the RECORD the world can see how much land has been granted to corporations by the Democrats and how much by the Republicans.

All grants made up to this time for military service and education are as follows:

	Acres.
Military services, Revolutionary war	2,165,000

*The figures of this column are approximately correct, being based on the estimate of the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of 1875.

As will be seen by an examination of this statement, the Republican party has donated to the corporations of the country 185,000,000 acres of public land—an area larger than the great empire State of Texas. Not only did they donate these lands directly to those railroads—without any conditions that would secure the rights of the people and the honest settlers of the country—but they supplemented this gift by issuing bonds to the amount of $64,623,512, bearing 6 per cent. interest. These bonds now amount to $122,482,106.32, which is a debt due the Government of the United States.

I call this a gift, or donation, because the Government is practically without security for its repayment. When the bonds were first issued the Government took a first mortgage on the roads, but afterwards the railroad managers came to a Republican Congress and induced the Republican members of that Congress to pass a bill, which was signed by a Republican President, to release this first mortgage and permit the Government to take a second mortgage, and that second mortgage is to-day almost worthless. A more shameless proceeding and greater outrage upon the rights of the people of the country and more palpable violation of all that is right and just can not be found in the history of this great country than this act which released the security that the Government held, and thereby practically gave these corporations this immense amount of money. Yet in the face of this record, made by his own party, the Senator from Kansas boldly asserts that his party has been the friend of the homeless and the home-seeker and the enemy of corporations and the protector of the people's rights.

When the Republican party released the security which secured this $122,000,000 and took a second mortgage and thereby released the railroad, I presume the Senator from Kansas would call that legislation in the interest of the many as against the few; but I imagine that ordinary citizens will say that the Republican party forgot the many and only remembered the corporations to whom this gift was made.

The Senator from Kansas, in order to excuse or justify his own party, which was in power at the time these grants were made, asserts that "they were non-partisan, and received the votes of both Democrats and Republicans." Even if this were true to the extent that he states it, no one knows better than he that his party was in an overwhelming majority and responsible for this legislation. And yet even in this respect the Senator has not made correct statements in regard to the politics of the parties voting. He states, for instance, that—

The vote in the Senate on the passage of the Union and Central Pacific Railroad act of 1862 included such Democrats as Cowan, Davis, Kennedy, Willey, and others.

Now, Mr. President, my information is that Mr. Cowan was a Senator from Pennsylvania, elected as a Republican, and long before and long after the passage of this act uniformly voted and acted with the Republicans. Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, was an old-time Whig, elected, however, as a Union man during the war, and had at no time prior to the passage of this act acted with the Democratic party. Mr. Kennedy I think was elected as a Union American from Maryland, formerly a Whig, and was never classed as a Democrat. Mr. Willey, a Senator from West Virginia, was then and is yet, as I am informed, a strong and leading Republican, and has at all times acted with the Republican party. And yet the Senator classes them as Democrats voting for the bill.

This statement may be of small moment, and I simply assert it here to show that the Senator from Kansas, usually correct in his statements, has been driven by the exigencies of the situation and the political contest that is now pending to forget his former caution and to make statements which are not justified by the facts or the record.

Mr. President, the Senator can not reverse history. He can not convince the American people that the Republican party is not the intimate friend and protector of these corporations. The Republican party to-day, by its platform, by the utterances of its leaders, has made a different record, and neither the eloquence nor the ingenuity of the Senator from Kansas can change it. Their great leader, the man who dominates the party and dictates their policy, their uncrowned king, hailed in New York on Saturday night as the chief, Mr. Blaine, had scarcely set foot upon his native land, returning from a foreign tour, where he had been the honored guest of a foreigner who had been enabled by our high protective system to force from the sweat and labor of the masses an immense fortune—I say that Mr. Blaine had scarcely returned when, true to his instincts and to the Republican party, and true to the record he made in connection with the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railway, he, in a speech made in his own State, came to the defense and rescue of combinations of capital called "trusts."

And there the Republican party stands to-day. The feeble efforts of their candidate for the Presidency, and the stronger and more vigorous efforts of the Senator from Kansas, can not make a different record in the face of the utterances of Mr. Blaine, and the Senator's speech, as I believe, will avail nothing. The people know whose is the master mind and who the followers are, and who dictates the policy of the party.

And what party thus allied with these corporations and these trusts can hope to command the confidence, the esteem, or respect of the American people?

Mr. Blaine has said that these trusts are to a large extent private affairs, over which the Government has no control and with which it has nothing to do. The Speaker of the House, Mr. CARLISLE, is reported to have replied to this in a speech recently made to his constituents, in which he said: "When a man enters your stable at night and steals therefrom your horse, it is certainly to a large extent a private affair; or when a man meets you on the highway and demands your life or your money, he regards it also as a private affair; but yet the public at large and the laws of the land do not permit these wrongs to be perpetrated without feeling that the public, too, has an interest in their suppression." And how insignificant and small is the wrong done by the larceny of the horse or robbery of the money as compared with the wrong perpetrated by the combinations. Take, for instance, those who have recently in the matter of cotton-bagging combined and confederated together, thereby increasing the price from 7 cents to 14 cents per yard, robbing the planters and the poor laborers of the South of millions of their hard-earned dollars. And yet Mr. Blaine says that "this is a private affair with which the Government has nothing to do."

I, Mr. President, belong to that party which has always advocated a strict construction of the Constitution, but if there be power under the Constitution, I for one would use it to the utmost extent to crush out by criminal laws these combinations, under what name or by whomsoever inaugurated, whether they be sugar, coal-oil, or steel-rail trusts. But, Mr. President, these trusts are the direct and legitimate offspring of the protective policy advocated and sustained by the Senator from Kansas and the Republican party, and the only security in the future is, as I conceive, to repeal the high-tariff laws under which they are to-day flourishing. And while these laws remain upon the statute-book, advocated and sustained by the Republican party, and with the record of that party that I have shown it has made in the disposition of the public lands of this country, I can not understand how the Senator from Kansas can stand upon the floor of the United States Senate and assert that his party "has always been the friend of the many as against the few."

Mr. President, there are some things so well known, so thoroughly proved, so deeply impressed upon the American mind that no amount of eloquence, no ingenious array of figures, no distortion of the record, no misrepresentation of the facts can change their belief. One of these beliefs is that the Republican party, in the disposition of the public lands of the West, in the manner in which they were granted to railroads at the time they were extended by the Republican party again and again in disregard of the rights of the settlers along the lines, and not only that, but the granting of these millions of money to railroads, the changing of the security, and the releasing of the first mortgage and placing it upon a second mortgage—I say all this has deeply impressed upon the minds of the American people that these acts of the Republican party inflicted a stain on the name of that party which no time can erase.

Another fact that is known to the people of this country and can not be disguised is that in the matter of the forfeiture of the land grants and restoring the land to the public domain the Democratic party, and not the Republican party, has taken the lead, and it has been under the Democratic party that the great mass of these lands has been recovered. I state to-day that every forfeiture bill which has failed to become a law has failed because the Democratic House of Representatives would desire to forfeit more of the grants of public land than the Republican Senate were willing to concede should be forfeited. I assert to-day that the Supreme Court has not decided that the lands embraced in the bill of my colleague, Mr. MCRAE, which came from the other House, are non-forfeitable. It seems to me that good policy would be to pass a law forfeiting the whole amount, and if the courts do, as they unfortunately sometimes have done, find the law in favor of the railroads against the settlers, then we can submit, but until the act is passed making a forfeiture of the entire land there is no way by which this question can be presented.

These are facts that I say the public know, and they can not be changed by argument here.

Another fact impressed upon the American mind is that the character and the principles and the organization of the Republican party tend to build up classes and to bring about class legislation, by which a few are benefited at the expense of the many. This is shown by various acts, by an act of 1869 by which the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States were allowed to retire on full pay after having served for a certain number of years. It is shown by votes given here every day by which Army officers who long ago resigned and engaged in civil pursuits are reinstated and placed on the retired-list for the sole purpose that they may draw money out of the Treasury of the United States. It is shown in the pension legislation, whereby you give the widow of a private soldier $12 a month and yet you vote to the widow of a general $2,000 and $3,500.

Yet the Senator says that his party is in favor of the masses and not the classes, but it is most strongly shown as the cardinal principle that underlies the Republican party in the assertion that you can by Government power, by the strong hand of the law, take from one citizen his property and his money and confer that property and that money upon another citizen, not to be used for public purposes but to be used for his own private purposes. Could there be a worse principle of class legislation embodied and incorporated in the platform of any party than that you can by Government power take from one man his hard-earned dollars, not for the public good, but in order that you may make richer some other citizen engaged in a different pursuit?

I say these acts of the Republican party show, and the votes show it here day by day, that wherever there is an opportunity to vote for any character of class legislation two-thirds and sometimes nine-tenths of the Republican Senators will be found voting for it.

This is the principle in that party that I think makes it especially and peculiarly dangerous to this Republic. I can think of no principle ingrafted upon the body-politic that is worse to the Republic than the idea that one class of citizens is to be supported in idleness and without toil upon the toil and labor of another class of the community. The worst government, I think, at least the worst civilized government in modern times of which I have ever read, was the French Government under Bourbon rule.

There had been fastened upon the kingdom a large number of citizens, titled individuals, men who would not labor, men who believed that it was a disgrace to labor, men who lived in idleness and great luxury. The evils that follow such idleness and luxury followed as certain as fate. They were foisted upon the French Government and their numbers increased, year by year. As the numbers increased the demands increased and the toiling peasants, half clad and half fed, dazzled by the glory and the wealth that they saw around them, dazzled by the victories gained in war, dazzled by the greatness of the kingdom of the Grand Monarque, for years and generations submitted to this class legislation, such as the Republican party is trying to fasten upon this Republic. But, Mr. President, the day of reckoning came, and the vengeance was only in proportion to the wrongs that had been inflicted by this class legislation.

I say to-day I believe that is the worst injury which threatens our Republic. If the people of this country once get to believe that there is a determined effort and purpose to fasten upon us permanently a part of our citizens who toil not but live alone off the toil of the hard-working classes who can scarcely support themselves and their families—if that idea once gets thoroughly aroused in the American mind, then the discontent, the mutterings of which are now scarcely heard, will rise to be a mighty river, and the Republican party, which called into existence and defended and supported such legislation will neither be able to stay its force nor to change the current of its action.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I have listened somewhat carefully to the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. I do not now recall that he disputed any allegation of fact which I made. He carefully avoided any reference to the original Democratic land grants, to the manner in which they were administered, to the large withdrawals of lands for the purposes of enabling the railroad companies to get them, to the exclusion of American settlers from the granted limits, to the frauds under the swamp-land act, to the fraudulent private land claims in New Mexico, and so on; so that really there is not anything to be said in the way of rejoinder. But in response to his general eulogy of the Democratic party upon the land question, and to his general denunciation of the Republican party upon the same question, I shall utter a few words.

I do not care to go into the bagging trust, nor into matters of that kind which are not germane to this question, although I may have something to say on one other matter.

At the elections of 1874 the Democrats secured a majority of the House of Representatives. From the time Congress met, in December, 1875, until the present moment, with the exception of one single Congress in which the Republicans had a majority of 5, the Democrats have had control of the House of Representatives by a large majority. During two years of that time they also had control of the Senate by 10 majority. If the Senator from Arkansas is anxious to ascertain the record of his party, let him examine the records of the House of Representatives during that period of time, and of the Senate during that time, and see whether a single proposition was seriously made by any Democrat or by the Democratic majority in either House to forfeit a single unearned land grant. Not one such effort was made. So this excess of virtue which afflicts the Democratic party is a late acquisition, and it comes in about election time, when it takes the form of an eruption.

Let us see what the House of Representatives has recently done, if

I can utter what I wish to say without transgressing that rule which forbids us to make mention here of the acts of the co-ordinate legislative branch of the Government. It sent to us as an amendment to the bill which the Senate had passed forfeiting unearned land grants, a proposition to forfeit all the lands that had been granted to any railroad company which were not earned—I use that term in its ordinary significance—prior to the time named in the granting act for the completion of the road; and that carries out the theory of the Senator from Arkansas, upon which he acts consistently and I have no doubt conscientiously; but when we come to section 2 of the House bill what do we find? It provides that the forfeiture hereby declared shall not extend to lands adjacent to or coterminous with any portion of any such railroad which is now completed, which was sold by the State or corporation to which any such grant was made, or by the corporation controlling or owning such land prior to January 1, 1888, to bona fide purchasers for good and valuable consideration, "but the title to such lands is hereby confirmed to such purchasers," etc.

There is no reservation in favor of actual settlers, no reservation in favor of small holders, but a wholesale confirmation of all the title that may have passed from any State or from any railroad company to lands which by the first section of the bill it was pretended to forfeit; and as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] reminds me, in block—the whole thing an absolute giving away of all the case which the Senator from Arkansas has built up with such laborious faithfulness here, not of course nominally in favor of the railroad company, but actually in favor of it, because it cuts off the purchase from the railroad company, no matter how extensive that purchase may have been.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. BERRY. The bill passed by the House proposes to forfeit 36,000,000 acres, in round numbers, of the Northern Pacific Railroad lands, and the bill proposed to be passed by the Republican Senate forfeits 5,000,000 acres. The proposition of the House bill was that where the road had been completed, along the completed portion of it where the lands have been sold to bona fide purchasers and settlers after they had been certified to the railroad company, then it is not proposed that the Government shall disturb those parties who had that title or those lands along that road. That is the bill as proposed by my colleague in the other House, and which is now on the Calendar. I assert that the provision is not, as the Senator says, in the interest of the railroad. I say the Senator does not propose to forfeit any part of the land from Bismarck to Wallula, containing 30,000,000 acres, and to give it to bona fide purchasers, settlers, or anybody else, but leaves it to the railroad. That is the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Arkansas can repeat his argument as often as he pleases. I am dealing now with the facts as found in the House bill. I say that the House provision does not contain the word "settler" at all; there is no reservation in it in favor of any settler, but there is a wholesale reservation in favor of every person or corporation that had purchased from the railroad company, without any reference to the amount of such purchase. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that under that bill every single acre of that land would be ascertained to have been purchased by somebody prior to the 1st day of January, 1888. Therefore the House assumes in the first section to forfeit the land and in the next section to recognize the sales which the railroad company has made covering the entire grant, and it confirms the grant to that extent, and makes the title absolute without any proposition to recover from the railroad company a single dollar of the money that it may have received on account of lands which it conveyed to which it had no title. That was going with a step on the heels and the toes of the shoe, assuming to be going forward while in reality it is going backward.

But, Mr. President, the House of Representatives is not the Democratic party; it is an infinitesimal portion of it. The President of the United States is the Democratic party for all practical purposes; and he has himself patented within the last six months more than 700,000 acres of land to two railroad companies, lands which were earned years and years out of time. The Senator very conveniently omits to note that important fact as bearing upon the credit of his party on the question of land forfeiture. If the Senator will bear with me while I utter a prophesy, I will prophesy that between the 6th day of November, which I believe is election day, and the day when Congress next assembles, another large lot of lands will be conveyed to another railroad company, which were earned out of time too, and that for the benefit of a railroad company the president of which is one of the largest contributors to the campaign fund of the Democratic party. I put that prophesy on record for what it is worth. We shall see what we shall see before Congress again assembles.

While all this time this has been going on the Senate passed a bill which the Senator himself somewhat reluctantly confesses would have forfeited 3,500,000 acres of land lying on the Northern Pacific route between Wallula and Takoma, valuable coal land, valuable timber land, valuable agricultural land, and yet his party, I say, because he is willing to have it that way, prevented the forfeiture of that 3,500,000 acres of land, and now the railroad has been built opposite to those lands, and their character has been changed, and in my opinion the United States has lost all the opportunity it ever had to forfeit them, and they have become the property of the railroad company.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator allude to the Cascade branch?

Mr. PLUMB. I allude to the Cascade branch.

Mr. BERRY. I assert that by Republican votes in the committee, and by Republican votes in the Senate, and over my protest, especially against the able speech made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], the Republican bill expressly excepted those lands. As the bill came from the committee, it excepted the lands on the Cascade branch.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill as passed by the Senate of the United States forfeited those lands so far as they were unearned, and the House of Representatives declined to join with the Senate for forfeiting those lands because it said it wanted to go further. When we said to it, "Let us do what we know we can do," it declined to do that unless it could do what everybody knew was illegal.

Mr. BERRY. But the bill came from the committee here in the Senate, and with the united Democratic vote here, I believe, coupled with a few Republicans, over the protest of the Republican committee, the bill was passed forfeiting that land, but the effort was made continuously to except those lands; speeches were made by the Senator from Oregon, and the Senator from Kansas himself voted to except the lands on the Cascade branch.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is entirely mistaken in regard to my action upon that question.

Mr. BERRY. The report will show that the bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands excepting those lands.

Mr. PLUMB. I am talking about the vote of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. There is not any question about what was shown by the vote of the Committee on Public Lands. The Republicans voted to except from forfeiture the lands on the Cascade branch.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator charges the Republican Senate with acts because it is Republican. Is he going to take away that credit which is due to it because it is Republican? We have heard a good deal about the question of fences on the public domain. The Senator from Arkansas says that the present President of the United States has done what no preceding President was willing to do upon that question. I do not deny that Mr. Cleveland would obey the law. Just ten days before he took his office Congress passed a law requiring him to act. Up to that time there was no law upon that subject. There is not a single acre of land which, in any sense, can be said to have been recovered to the public domain, because it was public land anyway, and these people were simply exercising the right of pasturage illegally, of course, so far as fencing was concerned. It was entirely proper that the bill should have been passed as it was passed, and the President in putting them off simply carried out the law.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that powerful men in his party are to-day enjoying leases of coal lands which never have been touched by the President of the United States, and in my judgment they never will be touched. The President has a keen eye for discrimination apparently, and during all this Administration there have been leases of coal lands in the Indian Territory to the corporation of which Mr. Gould is president, who is now said to be supporting the Democratic campaign fund very liberally. While a good deal of merit is made at the tearing down of a few fences for people who are comparatively poor and lacking in influence, a rough hand has never been put upon the men who were getting coal leases from the Cherokees and the Creeks in the Indian Territory, and who control the railroads that run through that section of the country of which the gentleman I named is the master mind.

The Senator speaks of great merit in the Illinois Central Railroad grant in that it was made to the State of Illinois, which was provident enough to insert a provision for the payment of taxes. That is the only one, however, of all the forty-seven land grants made under Democratic administration where that was done. Not a single one except the Illinois Central Railroad Company was ever accompanied by any provision in regard to the payment of taxes. The Illinois Central Railroad Company pays 7 per cent. of its gross earnings to the exclusion of all other taxes. That is the provision in its favor. I do not know a railroad company in the State of Kansas to-day that does not pay a larger proportion of its earnings in the shape of taxes than the Illinois Central Railroad Company does.

By the same token, what will the Senator say about the grants that were made by the State of Minnesota, then under the control of the Democracy? The Democratic Legislature of the State of Minnesota exempted from taxation every acre of land granted in that State to a railroad company so long as the land remained the property of the railroad company; and there are to-day large areas in that State within the limits of the Hastings and Minnesota Railroad, controlled by a gentleman who is high up in the councils of the Democratic party, that never paid a single dollar of tax into the treasury of that State.

It is true that some of the land officers in Kansas and elsewhere have been blowing the horn of this Administration. They have been telling about the great frauds which have ceased since they came into power and about the frauds which have been torn up by them. But the records of the General Land Office do not show it. It is all in wind, in assertion, without a single fact to back it.

There is not any question that there have been frauds on the public domain. They have been going on all the time, no more now than formerly, no less now than formerly. Republican administrations, with such instrumentalities as were provided by law, were constantly ferreting them out, and they did not make any great outcry about it. They were not claiming any very particular virtue on account of it. They were doing their duty from day to day, and very likely they presumed that that was what they were there for. But this Democratic Administration the moment it came in seemed to doubt its own virtue, and instead of correcting the frauds it went to work to suspend all entries everywhere.

I did not complain of the order of Mr. Sparks, except for the fact that it suspended entries in place of going to work and correcting frauds. I know there were plenty of precedents for that order. Mr. Sparks justified himself by what might be called a defamation of some of his Democratic predecessors. He exhibited in Document 170, which was printed in the Forty-ninth Congress, first session, the orders of Mr. Hendricks and Mr. Wilson, Democratic Commissioners of the General Land Office, who had suspended from pre-emption and other settlement entries for the benefit of railroad companies, so expressed upon the face of the orders, 150,000,000 acres of land. He thought that was a pretty good precedent, and so he said, if they could do that for the benefit of railroad companies I may do as much for the benefit of scrip-holders, and that is what he did. The fact that he assumed that it was for the benefit of the settler was only a pretense. The settler never received any benefit from it, and nobody did get any benefit out of it except the people who drew the fees and the compensation to those in official place and the men whose scrip was increased in value by the process.

The Senator from Arkansas, himself, when he comes to discuss this land question, moves upon a line parallel to that on which the Commissioner of the General Land Office moves. He moves upon the sectional line. He was kind enough to say that I included the eastern half of Kansas, in which there are practically no public lands, among the list of States lately in rebellion. Nothing could have better exhibited the paucity of his argument or the lack of fertility in ideas upon the subject than that statement. Because the Commissioner of the General Land Office did not suspend the operation of the land laws in Illinois, I suppose Illinois might be held to be a State recently in rebellion!

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will allow me I will state that I quoted from his speech, in which he said that the Commissioner of the General Land Office drew the line of suspension at those States recently in rebellion.

Mr. PLUMB. And that I repeat.

Mr. BERRY. That was the statement. I then showed that the line was drawn through the central part of Kansas, and if drawn at the line of those States in rebellion it would include half the Senator's State. That is what I said.

Mr. PLUMB. The land lying east of that line in Kansas was not public land.

Mr. BERRY. None of it?

Mr. PLUMB. Practically none. There was not at that date a single piece of land which was not entered east of the line the Commissioner drew.

Mr. BERRY. That is not the statement of the Commissioner, which I submitted with my remarks.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator himself finds justification for the spy system as applied under this Administration by illustrations drawn from Northern States. He has not a word to say about the frauds that were committed in the Southern States. He himself is doing exactly what the Commissioner did. He is arraigning the Northern people. That is what he is doing. It is the same thing we have had for a long time. It is not a new idea at all, Mr. President. It is that hatred of the Northern people and of Northern institutions and of the movement of Northern civilization from the President down, which was no stronger in the Senator from Arkansas than it was in the Commissioner of the General Land Office. When the Commissioner of the General Land Office went to talk about frauds under the swamp-land laws he found two or three hundred thousand acres in the State of Minnesota that were fraudulent, overlooking the eight or ten million acres of land in the State of Arkansas and the twenty million acres in the State of Florida, of which he made no mention.

So I repeat what I said in my original speech, the order of suspension was drawn practically at the line of States lately in rebellion. There was no objection made to the entry of large tracts of land for speculation in those States. The acquisition of those bodies of land was winked at by the Department without complaint.

The Senator was so hard driven for material that he had to say, in substance as he did, that because Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, was a Union man he could not be a Democrat, and made a similar statement in regard to Mr. Kennedy, of Maryland. He said Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, was a Union man, and consequently was not a Democrat, and Mr. Kennedy, of Maryland, was also elected as a Union man, and consequently he could not have been a Democrat. I am willing to accept the definition. I am ready to admit, if the Senator is willing to do it, that the fact that a man was a Union man excluded him from the ranks of the Democratic party, that there was a distinction there with a difference.

But the Senator very carefully overlooked some men whose Democracy I think he will not question. He overlooked the present Senator from the State of Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], or perhaps he got stuck in the paragraph in which he referred to the names of the Democrats who voted for the Union and Central Pacific Railroad bills, for he overlooked the name of Mr. Hendricks. Certainly those two gentlemen were Democrats. As to whether they were Union men or not, of course the Senator himself can answer.

I say now what I said before, that the passage of those Union and Central Pacific acts was not a partisan measure. I do not know to what branch of Democracy the Senator belonged prior to 1860 or in 1860, but both the Democratic conventions of that year declared in favor of national aid to a line of railroad connecting the Mississippi with the Pacific coast. It was a cardinal tenet of both parties at that time, and the act of Congress which carried into effect that tenet was acquiesced in everywhere, and there was no suggestion that there was anything partisan about it.

I can not follow the Senator into the bagging trust, and so on. He has not seen as much of his party as he will have seen by the time he serves six years longer. He is directly from the wilds of Arkansas, and his horizon has not been as wide, I think, as it should have been.

Let him bear with me while I call his attention to the fact that Mr. August Belmont, the agent on this continent of the Rothschilds, was for twelve years the chairman of the Democratic national committee. When he is talking about the monopoly of manufacturing which he says the law gives to certain people, and about the enormity of the law taking out of one man's pocket in the guise of taxes money which it puts into another's, let him restrain himself while I tell him that the chairman of the national Democratic committee during the last two years has owned more manufacturing stock than any other man in the United States outside of five or six; that he is practically the head of the largest steel-manufacturing concern in the United States, and is the largest manufacturer of iron in all New England—Mr. William H. Barnum.

If I had before me a Directory I could read the statement in which another member of the Democratic national committee, and one who, it is said, more nearly represents the President than anybody else, who was the author of the bill to frighten and scare about the Chinese question, and so on, describes himself as a director of more railroads than any other man in the United States. The present chairman of the executive committee, the man who is running the campaign, is himself a railroad man, pure and simple. The New York Sun, a Democratic newspaper, the other day had a statement of the railroad affiliations of all the leading men of that committee, and it wound up with a very significant statement that it represented more mileage of railroads than any other association of men on this continent, and would undoubtedly give transportation to the White House. I read from the Congressional Directory the following statement in regard to the gentleman to whom I have just referred:

Engaged, in 1850, in the coal and shipping business, owning and running several vessels on the lakes; subsequently became largely interested in the manufacture of iron and the mining of coal, as well as in the construction and operation of railroads, either as president or director of various lines, aggregating over 22,000 miles of completed road, the greatest number of miles of railroad, probably, which any one individual was ever an officer or director of; was a district delegate to the national Democratic convention held in the city of New York in 1868, and a delegate at large from the State of Pennsylvania to the Democratic national convention held in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1880, and also represented the State of Pennsylvania on the Democratic national committee from 1876 to 1884.

Does the Senator find reflected in the mirror which that statement makes anything of the anti-monopolistic tendencies of the party which he so ably champions? As I said, when the Senator has served another term he will come to know more particularly who it is guides and controls the Democratic party, who it is deposits $60,000,000 of the revenues coming into the Treasury in the national banks, who it is, while denouncing the national banks in the country districts, makes a Secretary of the Treasury out of the president of a national bank and a Treasurer of the United States out of another one.

It is robbery, is it, to take money in the shape of a tariff? The Senator is apt in his words. I have here a copy of a bill which recently passed the House of Representatives and for which the Senator would probably vote in toto, voting probably against the erasing of a single line, and what do I find? I find here that on manufactures of woolen goods a duty of 40 per cent. is imposed, while conveniently the duty is taken off the wool which the farmers of Arkansas, I presume, in common with the farmers of other portions of the country produce. I find, too, that the bill actually raises the duty on steel ingots from $8 a ton to $11 a ton. If a duty imposed at the rate of $8 is robbery, what is a duty which raises $3 more by making the tax $11 a ton? The Senator ought to be a little bit nicer in regard to his distinctions. He ought to read the record of his own party in this body, in which he will find that every single member of the Senate on the Democratic side who had an industry in his State has voted either to keep the duties as they were or to increase them under the act of 1883. He will find that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] voted to increase the duty on zinc. He will find that the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] voted to increase the duty on glassware and on earthenware. He will find that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] voted to increase the duty on glassware manufactured in his State. So he will find was the case all the way around; and when he comes to characterize this as a robbery he will find that he will have some settlements to make with members of his own party.

Mr. President, I stand upon every single assertion made in my original speech. I say now, as I said before, that not one single act of forfeiture was passed which originated with the Democrats in either House of Congress. I say that every single one of them was of Republican parentage, and was passed as the result of Republican endeavor; and I say that it is due to the non-action of the last House of Representatives (which could not have been better inspired if it had been directly in the interest of the railroad companies) that three and a half million acres of land have since that time passed out of the entire control of the General Government and have become the property of the railroad companies.

While this declamation is going on here the Democratic Secretary of the Interior is patenting lands to railroad companies earned after the date named in the granting act. He is doing it because he believes that to be the law. He is doing it under the instruction of his chief, in whose behalf the speech of the Senator was made, and for whom he will vote, knowing as he does that the policy of the Administration will be directly adverse to that which he announces here as his policy, and I leave it to his own candor to say which is the Democratic policy, that which he advocates or that which Mr. Cleveland practices.

I say that the Democratic party has never recovered an acre of public land. It has carried on in an administrative way, as it was led to do by Republican administrations, investigations in regard to illegal appropriations of public land. If I am not very much mistaken, in the very case which the Senator mentioned, in which last March Mr. Stockslager set aside certain entries, the order setting aside has been revoked and the entries have been reinstated. It may not be that one; I think it is. I know there is one very important case involving redwood lands in California where the entry was set aside by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. A man, whom I am not permitted to name, but whose connections go near the throne, came here and got that order rescinded, and proceedings have been instituted since to determine whether it should be made again or not.

Mr. President, there are many pertinent facts in connection with this subject which will come out more distinctly the more we discuss this question, which will show the hidden workings of things in the Land Office, how fish is made of one and flesh of another, and how under the cover of recovering lands by oppressing settlers on the frontier large appropriations of land have been allowed to be made by favorite speculators. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

While we have had all this declamation upon the subject the spoliation of public land has been going on. The promises held out by Democratic administration have not been kept, and while a few little men have had their fences taken down under the mandate of a law passed before Mr. Cleveland came into office, that does not interfere with the approval of leases granted of coal lands on the Cherokee reservation which have gone into the hands of powerful capitalists.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, in the face of the assertion made by the Senator from Kansas that no lands have been restored to the public domain by this Administration, I can only state that there is in the remarks I made an official statement showing that it is incorrect. I state that a large number of acres of land, amounting to many millions, have been forfeited and restored to the public domain. Since the Democratic Administration came into power fraudulent entry after fraudulent entry of the public domain has been canceled; and yet when the records of the Land Office are full of it the Senator stands upon the floor of the Senate and says that not one acre has been so restored! I confess that I do not know how to answer such a proposition. I assert that the records show it; they are in speech after speech, and the Senator from Kansas himself must know it to be true.

In regard to Mr. SCOTT and others being Democrats, it was not individual members of the Republican party, except in one instance, that I was discussing, but it was the system which allowed these monopolies. I care not whether it is Mr. SCOTT or any one else, they have grown under Republican rule, and it is the Republican principles and the Republican system by which they are enabled to do it, and it is no justification to say that in some instances they are in politics Democrats.

The Senator says that the forfeiture bills were enacted by Republicans. The fact is that one or two forfeiture bills, and perhaps more than that number, were introduced in the other House by Mr. PAYSON, of Illinois, who is a Republican, but who it is well known was not in accord with the Republican party upon the question of public lands until very recently; and because accidentally the bill that he introduced was taken up by a Democratic committee and passed by a Democratic House the Senator from Kansas insists that therefore it is a Republican measure! It was the Democratic majority that passed the bill, it was a Democratic committee that reported it, and it is wholly immaterial whether it went to the committee from the hands of a Republican or from the hands of a Democrat.

I stated, and I wish to reassert, that these forfeiture bills have failed in every instance because the Democratic House desired to take from the railroads more land and restore it to the public domain than the Republican Senate was willing to concede. That is an assertion the Senator from Kansas has not denied. I wish it to go upon the record that this failure grew out of the fact that the Republican Senate is not willing to pass a law forfeiting so much of the lands granted to the railroad companies as the Democratic House of Representatives insists ought to be forfeited.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, one word. It is a little remarkable that an accident should happen to Mr. PAYSON, a Republican, and no accident should happen to a single Democratic member of the other House. It is a little singular that during fourteen years of Democratic supremacy in the other House not a single Democrat ever rose in his place to offer or promote practically the passage of any such bill.

Mr. BERRY. The record is directly in the face of that statement. A forfeiture bill was introduced by my colleague in the last House of Representatives; and the bill was reported and placed on the Calendar by the order of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Not a single forfeiture bill was passed by the House of Representatives until this session of Congress. During the fourteen years the Senator's party has had control of the House of Representatives it has been there dumb. I know that the pretense of the House is that it wanted to do more, and yet when we propose to it to do that about which there can be no possible question, and in regard to lands the character of which may and would be affected by the construction of a railroad, it refuses to do that. The result is—and I desire to call the attention of the country to it—that 3,500,000 acres of land, by reason of the non-action of the House of Representatives, have passed from the people of the United States to the control of a railroad company.

The Senator, I have no doubt, will justify himself and his party associates in continuing that line of action until the Northern Pacific Railroad earns every acre of land along its route, and when it is all through he will say, "We wanted to do more, and because we could not do more we would not do anything;" and the Government will have lost millions of acres of land in that way. It is the pertinent fact that three and a half million acres have been lost to the Government, coupled with the other fact that while the House has been making all this noise about forfeiting Government lands a Democratic Administration has been certifying those same lands to railroad companies.

AWARDS UNDER MEXICAN TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps it would relieve both the Senators to have a little intervention of cooling time in this debate. I wish to ask the consent of the Senate to set a bill that was made a special order for this day, for the Wednesday after the second Monday in December. It is the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been assigned as a special order for this day, that bill naturally would come up after the unfinished business is disposed of. The Senator from Alabama asks that it may be made a special order for the Wednesday after the second Monday in December next.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has agreed with me upon that arrangement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3504) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into a discussion of the question of railroad land grants or of the power of Congress to forfeit railroad lands. I have on a former occasion discussed the question somewhat at length. I am not physically able to do so to-day, if I were so disposed.

I will only say in regard to the bill which passed the Senate during the Forty-ninth Congress to forfeit the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad, that it contained the following provision, an amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and accepted by myself, in charge of the bill:

> That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure, past or future, of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

Therefore there was offered to the House of Representatives a bill which would have forfeited all the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific at that time, including the lands of the Cascade branch. The House, it is true, claimed that a bill should be passed forfeiting a greater quantity of land, forfeiting all the lands which were earned after the time limited in granting the act for the completion of the road, but they refused to take what was offered them. In the mean time the railroad company earned three million and odd acres of land on the Cascade branch, and all there is left, as has been correctly stated by the Senator from Arkansas, is the land for 214 miles from Wallula to Portland, the uncompleted road of the Northern Pacific.

I understand it to be a rule where the two Houses can not agree that the body insisting on the amendment, which in that case was the House of Representatives, should recede. All agreed as to the power of Congress and the propriety of forfeiting the lands embraced in the Senate bill. The Senate did not believe that Congress had the power, or that it would be honest or just to forfeit more.

Consequently, in addition to the showing which I made at the time before the Senate as to the delay of the House conferees and the loss of the bill, and their neglect to provide a substitute for it, and the efforts which were made to get a conference, I think it is but a just criticism to say that the action of the House of Representatives prevented the forfeiture of lands which might have been forfeited at that time by the provision of the bill, and even without it there was nothing to prevent Congress from passing a bill for a further forfeiture at any time. They had the power. The House could have accepted that bill, and the very next hour could have sent us a bill forfeiting the rest of the lands which they claimed should have been forfeited.

If no Senator desires to discuss the matter further, I move to substitute for the bill under consideration House bill 9151, the bill referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, which has come over from the other House since this bill was last under consideration.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator asks to have it substituted for consideration?

Mr. DOLPH. I ask to have it substituted for consideration, and then I shall offer the amendment reported from the committee thi morning.

Mr. BERRY. I have no objection to substituting the bill. I hope it will be passed after it is substituted.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House bill on the same subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the pending bill may be indefinitely postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes. If there be no objection, the House bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of its line which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting the right of way or station grounds for any portion of said road granted by said acts and joint resolutions: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting the rights granted to purchasers or settlers by "An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887, or as repealing, altering, or amending said act, nor as in any manner affecting any cause of action existing in favor of any purchaser against his grantor for breach of any covenants of title.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where persons are in possession of any of the lands affected by such grant and hereby resumed by and restored to the United States, under deed, written contract with, or license from, the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, executed in good faith prior to January 1, 1886, they shall be entitled to purchase the same from the United States, in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to any one such person, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, at any time within two years from the passage of this act, and on making requisite proofs and payment to receive patents therefor: Provided, That in all cases where parties, persons, or corporations, with the permission of said company, or its assignees, are in the possession of, and have made improvements upon, any of the lands hereby resumed and restored, and are not entitled to enter the same under the provisions of this act, such parties, persons, or corporations shall have six months in which to remove any growing crop and within which time they shall also be entitled to remove all buildings and other movable improvements from said lands.

SEC. 3. That if it shall be found that any lands heretofore granted to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company and so resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain lie north of the line known as the "Harrison line," being a line drawn from Wallula, Wash., easterly to the southeast corner of the northeast one-fourth of the southeast quarter of section 27, in township 7 north, of range 37 east, of the Willamette meridian, all persons who had acquired in good faith the title of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to any portion of said lands prior to July 1, 1885, or who at said date were in possession of any portion of said lands or had improved the same, claiming the same under written contract with said company, executed in good faith, or their heirs or assigns, as the case may be, shall be entitled to purchase the lands so acquired, possessed, or improved from the United States at any time prior to the expiration of one year after it shall be finally determined that such lands are restored to the public domain by the provisions of this act, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, and to receive patents therefor upon proof before the proper land office of the fact of such acquisition, possession, or improvement, and payment therefor, without limitation as to quantity: Provided, That the rights of way and riparian rights heretofore attempted to be conveyed to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Trust Company of New York, by deed of conveyance dated August 8, 1886, and which are described as follows: A strip of land 50 feet in width, being 25 feet on each side of the center line of a water-pipe line as the same is staked out and located, or as it shall be hereafter finally located according to the provisions of an act of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon approved November 25, 1885, providing the means to supply the city of Portland with an abundance of good, pure, and wholesome water over and across the following described tracts of land: Sections 19 and 31, in township 1 south, of range 6 east; sections 25, 31, 33, and 35, in township 1 south, of range 5 east; sections 3 and 5, in township 2 south, of range 5 east; section 1, in township 2 south, of range 4 east; sections 23, 25, and 35, in township 1 south, of range 4 east, of Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, forfeited by this act, are hereby granted and confirmed unto the said city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, its successors and assigns forever, with the right to enter on the hereinbefore described strip of land, over and across the above-described sections, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and repairing a water-pipe line as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure, past or future, of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

Mr. DOLPH. This proposed amendment is the identical bill in every respect reported from the Committee on Public Lands which has just been postponed. It was reported, as I understand it, by the approval and consent of all the members of the committee except the Senator from Arkansas who has just addressed the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to correct one misstatement. I was in favor of including more land in the bill than is included in it; but if we can not include the other land, I am in favor of forfeiting what is included in the bill. I do not wish the Senator to put me in a position as being opposed to forfeiting any lands.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. BERRY. I am in favor of forfeiting all the land proposed to be forfeited in this bill, and in addition to that I am in favor of forfeiting the land provided for in the House bill introduced by my colleague, Mr. MCRAE, the one that is now pending.

Mr. DOLPH. I understand the Senator's position and I have understood it ever since he has been a member of the committee, and therefore in stating that this met the approval of the committee I desire to state also that, as I understand, it had the approval of every member of the committee except the Senator from Arkansas, and it did not have his approval because he desired to make it embrace more land. I understand, however, that the provisions made for settlers meet with his approval and the approval of every member of the committee.

I wish to say further that this bill as reported is identical in its provisions with the general forfeiture bill which passed the Senate. The first section has been changed so as to make it include, instead of all unearned lands of all railroad companies, just the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The other provisions for settlers, etc., are the identical provisions of the general forfeiture bill which passed the Senate, and which was discussed here for days, and which also had the approval of all the members of the Committee except the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what has been read by the Secretary.

Mr. CALL. I understand the bill offered as an amendment is Senate bill 3504. Am I right?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, the bill we have just had under consideration.

Mr. CALL. His bill proposes to forfeit all the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of its line which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act; that is to say, it is a bill of confirmation and not of forfeiture, and should be so designated. It is a bill to assume in favor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company all the favorable constructions that can be made of the grant, that it was a perpetual grant; that its conditions were never required to be complied with; that from now one hundred or two hundred years hence the company may continue to fulfill the conditions of the act, and this vast territory, an empire of the public land, which has been given by the United States, by a pledge of the public faith, to the people for their homes, shall pass to the ownership of a great corporation in defiance of every principle upon which this Government is founded, in violation and in denial of the personal rights of the people of the United States; and that in the midst of all the suffering and all the want and all the hardship that is now penetrating every portion of this country among the people. That which the Government has given to them we are giving away to a few men in the character of corporations, to exercise the powers of an aristocracy, and that in derogation of public right.

Mr. President, for one I shall never vote to grant the lands which the Government has given to the people of this country under any pretenses which are founded upon these supposed decisions of the Supreme Court to one or one hundred men to hold in proprietorship and withhold from the uses of the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. DOLPH. Let us have a division.

The Senate proceeded to divide, and the ayes were 14——

Mr. DOLPH. Under the circumstances, if no one desires to discuss the bill further, I ask that unanimous consent be given that the amendment and the bill may be voted upon at 2 o'clock to-morrow, and I shall not press a vote at this time. There is other business which some Senators desire to transact this afternoon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to letting the bill go over until to-morrow, but I do not think that in the present condition of the Senate we should undertake to make a unanimous agreement. It is not fair to the majority of the Senate, to say nothing more.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill is already up in pursuance of a unanimous agreement.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that, but I do not believe in a unanimous agreement made by a small part of the Senate. Let the Senator simply move to lay the bill over until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish to do that. It went over from last Monday by a unanimous agreement to vote upon it to-day. If anybody desires to discuss the bill, that is another thing; let Senators make speeches if they wish. If they do not, I simply suggest that we shall vote without discussion at an hour when we shall probably have a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the unanimous agreement to be that the vote should be taken to-day at the close of the debate, but that the bill should come up for discussion.

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, the vote was to be taken to-day, I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the part I object to. I say the Senate should not now, in the present condition of the Chamber, make an agreement to vote at all, binding in honor. Of course if there was an unquestioned quorum present in the Senate, we might bind our absent colleagues, but for a minority to do so would not be right. I have no objection to letting the bill go over until to-morrow, and if there is a quorum to-morrow I am perfectly willing that a vote shall be taken.

FORT WALLACE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent, pending the decision of this matter, that there be taken up by the Senate the bill which I reported this morning from the Committee on Public Lands, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] having withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of the bill (S. 3597) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET KENNEDY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment, and ask for a conference thereon with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. STEWART, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

MARTHA V. COLEMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman, which was, in line 4, to strike out "giving her, for life, the sum of twenty-five," and insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of twelve."

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. DOLPH. At the suggestion of several Senators near me, I will modify my request and ask that the unfinished business, the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill, go over until after the conclusion of morning business to-morrow morning, without asking that there shall be a unanimous agreement to vote upon the bill at a particular time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to amend the bill by striking out and inserting what was read by the Secretary, if there be no objection the further consideration of the unfinished business will be postponed until to-morrow morning at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. CALL. I do not consent to that arrangement unless it be understood that the resolution which it was agreed this morning should be taken up to-morrow morning is excepted from it.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Florida repeat his proposition?

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Oregon has asked unanimous consent that the pending bill be taken up to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the routine business. This morning it was agreed that the resolution submitted by me should come up for consideration to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Florida will come up as morning business to-morrow in the morning hour before this bill can be considered.

Mr. CALL. That is all I desire.

MANON VANGORDON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon; which was to add to the bill "and pay him a pension of $18 a month."

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

JONAS DOERING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3141) granting a pension to Jonas Doering; which was, in line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 11227) for the relief of Henry Setzer was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

WRECK OF STEAMER TALLAPOOSA.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 869) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1 of the House, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out from the original bill the words "one thousand" and insert the words "seven hundred and fifty."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 3, line 26, strike out the words "or in case there be not such, then the parent or parents, and if there be no parents the brothers and sisters;" page 3, line 30, strike out the words "Clarence E. Black, passed assistant surgeon," and at the end of the section add: "And provided further, That there shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States to the legal representatives of Clarence E. Black, passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy (deceased), the sum of $750."

J. D. CAMERON,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
T. J. CAMPBELL,
L. F. MCKINNEY,
DANIEL KERR,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PENSACOLA AND MEMPHIS RAILROAD.

Mr. CALL. I ask that Senate bill 3573, Order of Business 2340, being a bill to grant a right of way to a railroad now being built through the naval reservation at Pensacola, may be now considered. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill named by him may be now considered.

Mr. CULLOM. Do I understand that the bill comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. And is unanimously reported favorably?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3573) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES WEITFLE.

Mr. TELLER. I ask consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 3485) restoring the homestead right of Charles Weitfle.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out the preamble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was disagreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Having stricken out the preamble, the words "the said," in line 3 of the bill ought to be stricken out. It may be done by general consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 3258, Order of Business 2026, a bill for the relief of Dr. John B. Read. I believe it is one of the first bills on the Calendar in order, and as I may be going away I should like to have it disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3258) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator how that happens? There has been one bill passed this session for Dr. Read's relief, and this seems to refer to the same matter.

Mr. HAMPTON. This is a bill that has come from the House of Representatives. There were some amendments that were made in the Senate on the Senate bill. I wish to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to look at it. It is a matter I do not want to object to, but I want to look at the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether this is not substantially the same bill as the one which passed the Senate, or whether it has been altered in material particulars?

Mr. HAMPTON. I wish to have the House bill passed in the form in which the Senate Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the Senate bill. The House passed a bill not conforming to the amendments made in the Senate. We struck out some words in the Senate bill and the House did not strike them out in its bill. I propose now to take up the House bill and amend it in accordance with the bill that was reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from South Carolina send to the desk the number of the bill he desires considered? The Chair understands that the Senator desires to have a House bill considered.

Mr. HAMPTON. I send the House bill to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill is before the Committee on Military Affairs and not yet reported.

Mr. HAMPTON. It was reported back. I reported it back with this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill does not appear on the Calendar.

Mr. HAMPTON. I thought it had been reported before. I report it now, if I have not already done so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina reports from the Committee on Military Affairs favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read, and asks that the same be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator I suppose wants to amend the House bill by substituting the Senate bill for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill will now be read.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move to amend the House bill by making it correspond with the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, and the amendment will then be stated.

The bill was read.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were, in line 7, after the word "furnished," to strike out "by R. P. Parrott;" and in the same line, after "United States," to strike out "during the war of 1861 to 1865;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $17,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Dr. John B. Read his compensation as royalty on all rifle projectiles with iron sabots furnished to the United States, said sum of $17,000 to be received by said John B. Read as royalty upon all such projectiles so furnished to the United States, and in full satisfaction of his claim.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. HAMPTON were appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill (S. 3258) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read will be indefinitely postponed, the House bill on that subject having been passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a privileged motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope that the Senator from Ohio will not insist on that motion at this hour. I have a little District bill here that, I am informed by the commissioners, is very important to be passed promptly, to increase slightly the police force of the District.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the motion until 4 o'clock, but it is important that we should have an executive session to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. I am very anxious to get considered this police bill, if I can get the floor by that time; and if not at that time, I shall beg the Senator to let me have an opportunity to ask the Senate to consider the bill.

IMPORTATION OF CONTAGION OR INFECTION.

Mr. PASCO. I ask leave to offer an amendment to the resolution submitted by my colleague [Mr. CALL] on the 27th of September, and I ask that it may be printed to come up with the resolution to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be received and printed.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the resolution relative to the Louisiana election be taken up, and I shall ask that it be made the order for to-morrow during the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been already an order assigned for the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that this resolution be taken from the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the resolution in relation to the recent election in the State of Louisiana. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it by the sound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire have leave to withdraw his motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not certain that I want leave.

A division was called for, and the ayes were 14.

Mr. HARRIS. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire not to ask a further division.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, Mr. President, I stated the object of the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. At some very early day I shall certainly aid the Senator in any way I can to get consideration of the resolution, but at present I hope he will not insist upon a further division on his motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator, but I stated before moving to take up the resolution that I should move to have it postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understood.

Mr. CHANDLER. And I thought, under the circumstances, that the Senate would consent to take up the resolution. If Senators are inclined to vote against it, and there is any objection to taking it up, it seems to me I might as well have a division of the Senate now as at any other time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not suppose that to-morrow there will be a single objection. The resolution is now in such a position that the Senator can move at any time to take it up.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I withdraw the motion to take up the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio renew his motion for an executive session?

Mr. SHERMAN. I said I would do so at 4 o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the Senator will not make the motion just yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not until 4 o'clock.

JOHN J. CROOKE.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 2696, which was reported by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who asked me to call it up and have it considered at some convenient time. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2696) for the relief of John J. Crooke. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,611.44 to John J. Crooke, for services rendered in imprinting internal-revenue stamps upon tin-foil tobacco-wrappers, from the 1st of July, 1884, to the 7th of October, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed at this time to consider Order of Business 2036, being House bill 6677.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6677) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1883, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 10, after the words "Provided that," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifteen;" so as to made the section read:

That the act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1883, is hereby amended so as to authorize the commissioners of said District to increase said force to eleven lieutenants, thirty sergeants, three hundred and forty-five privates, nineteen station clerks, nine laborers, and the number of mounted men to thirty-five, as they may deem necessary, provided that fifteen of the increase in the number of privates hereby authorized shall be appointed to class 1, and forty-five to class 2 of said force; and a sum sufficient for the compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, of the increase force herein authorized, at the rates now paid to like grade and services on said force, and for their equipment, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee the necessity for this bill after the increase of force provided for in the District appropriation bill?

Mr. HARRIS. That increase was wholly inadequate to the necessities of the case, in the opinion of the commissioners of the District, and the increase asked in this bill simply comes up to their recommendation, giving the credit diminished to the extent of those allowed by the appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. It is not in addition to those?

Mr. HARRIS. Not in addition, but it is an increase above what was allowed by the appropriation bill after giving credit by those that were allowed by the appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. That is to say, those in the appropriation bill and what this bill as amended will make the number. What came over from the House originally?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; what the commissioners asked originally.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $15,600 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of a lot and the erection and furnishing of a station-house in northeast Washington by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator from Tennessee state more explicitly the effect of this bill, the extent to which the number of police officers is enlarged, and by whom the appointments of the new police officers are to be made.

Mr. HARRIS. My recollection is that the commissioners recommended—though I have not looked at their report since this bill was reported by the committee—an increase of one hundred men. The District appropriation bill authorized a slight increase. The increase made by the appropriation bill is deducted from the number of policemen asked by the commissioners, and this bill provides for furnishing the additional number. The policemen will be appointed by the commissioners of the District under existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. How many, may I ask the Senator, will be the new appointments?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not remember the number provided for by the appropriation bill. Will the Senator from Massachusetts inform me?

Mr. DAWES. I can not give the number.

Mr. HARRIS. I think fifteen were provided for by the appropriation bill. Hence this bill will provide for, if my recollection is right, about eighty-five.

Mr. CHANDLER. Eighty-five new policemen?

Mr. HARRIS. That is my impression.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I ask the Senator from Tennessee or the Senator from Massachusetts whether the number allowed by the Committee on Appropriations was not deemed to be a sufficient increase at the present time?

Mr. DAWES. What led me to rise was this. After this bill came over from the House increasing the number to such an extent, the commissioners were before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and were heard upon the necessity of an increase, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the subcommittee of the House agreed upon the number of increase that was fixed in the appropriation bill.

This bill had already passed the House and was here and led to that investigation. It was the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and of the Senate itself, the House finally concurring in it, that that increase was sufficient. I have no information as to anything that has transpired since then that would lead to a conclusion that it was not sufficient, and therefore I do not interpose; but that was the result of the investigation before the committees of both branches, and both branches passed ultimately upon the increase which is in the appropriation bill after this bill had gone from the House.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the commissioners of the District of Columbia in their annual report asked for an increase of the police force of the District of Columbia. They know a great deal better than I do what force they need. I deferred in committee and I defer here to their recommendation as to the number of policemen they need to regulate and look after the duties of policemen in the District of Columbia. I am inclined to think that they know better than I, better than the Committee on Appropriations, and better than my friend from New Hampshire, exactly what is necessary to meet the necessities here in respect to that force; and so believing, I favored in committee, as I favor here, the passage of the bill that allows them the amount of force they think they need, my theory being that we ought to give them the men they need and hold them responsible for the good order that a proper police force should enforce in this District.

If, however, the Senate think otherwise, I, of course, have no complaints to make and no discontents to cherish; but I shall follow the recommendations of the District commissioners, two of whom were here to-day endeavoring to impress me with the absolute importance not only of allowing the additional force, but allowing it promptly and at once.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator that he had better let this lie over at least until the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who has charge of the District appropriation bill, is here and can more fully explain it.

The remarkable feature of this thing is, that after the commissioners had appeared before both committees and the result was the judgment of those committees, they come here in the absence of the Senator who had charge of that bill and appeal to the District Committee to carry out a view which they failed to impress upon the appropriations committees of both Houses. I have as much confidence in the judgment of these commissioners as, under all the circumstances, I can have. I do not take it——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to correct a slight mistake into which I think he has fallen?

Mr. DAWES. What is that?

Mr. HARRIS. He states that the commissioners were before the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate, and represented their view, and those committees arrived at a certain conclusion, and that afterwards they appealed to the Committees on the District of Columbia. In that the Senator is slightly mistaken. They had made their report and shown what in their opinion was necessary in this respect long before the Committee on Appropriations of either the House or the Senate considered the matter. They had asked for an increase of about one hundred men, and the House Committee on the District of Columbia (which, if the Senator will pardon me, I think, charged, as it is, with looking to the interests of the people of the District and of the District, is a little more reliable on a question such as that than the Committee on Appropriations) decided to allow the one hundred additional policemen that were needed. After that the Committees of Appropriations of the House and of the Senate agreed upon a slight increase, I think of about fifteen men.

I do not wonder that the House having agreed to give the commissioners an increase of one hundred men would accept the fifteen as the best they could do in the appropriation bill. They would accept fifteen or any number they could get, but the House had declared in favor of allowing the whole hundred, and the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia has also decided that the commissioners need and are entitled to the hundred.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Tennessee is mistaken in saying that I was mistaken in my statement. What I stated was that the peculiarity of this case was that after the commissioners had been before the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses and had been heard there, and the judgment of those committees had been passed upon by both Houses, the commissioners come here to-day and seek out the District Committee in the absence of the Senator who had charge of the bill that fixed the number. Now, I will state that on the strength of two things—the first is that I saw them here, and the next is that the Senator from Tennessee says they have been here.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator might add that when he saw them here, he saw the Senator from Kansas, who was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, in his seat. They did not seek to find that Senator absent, nor did the Senator from Tennessee seek to call up this bill in the absence of the Senator from Kansas or any other Senator.

Mr. DAWES. Then, Mr. President, it is more peculiar than ever that they came here and sought out the Committee on the District of Columbia when they saw the Senator from Kansas in his seat, who had charge of this whole matter and upon whose report both Houses had, after the passage of this bill by the House, fixed upon the number in the appropriation bill. If the Senator from Kansas was in his seat when they came here and sought out another committee, it is more remarkable than I stated before.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts hold that the Senator from Kansas has charge of District affairs? Is he to be consulted in respect to all legislation in relation to District affairs because the Committee on Appropriations has seen proper to make him the chairman of the subcommittee that sits in judgment on appropriations only? I am aware of the fact that that Committee on Appropriations seeks to grapple with and control every question of legislation in this if not in both Houses, but I do not quite yield to it. I have had the vanity to believe that the District Committee had some little control and some little jurisdiction, and ought to have some little influence in controlling such legislation as may be necessary for the District people.

Mr. DAWES. I did not think any such thing or say any such thing. Least of all should I think of charging upon the Senator from Tennessee when he had already announced that he surrendered his judgment entirely to that of the District commissioners——

Mr. HARRIS. In respect to that matter I do.

Mr. DAWES. Now I have an idea, Mr. President, that the committees of these two Houses and the Houses themselves have a responsibility about this matter, and as they have to make the appropriations it is very proper that they should determine what should be done with the appropriations. I may be mistaken about that, but I am not quite prepared myself, as the Senator from Tennessee is, to surrender my entire judgment to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. REAGAN. Before that motion is put I desire permission——

Mr. SHERMAN. If I yield now to the Senator I shall have to yield to others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas desires to give a notice.

Mr. REAGAN. I simply want to give notice that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has reported unanimously a bill which increases to some degree the compensation of fourth-class postmasters, and if I can get the floor for the purpose I desire to get it up to-morrow and have the action of the Senate upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Ohio will allow the Senate to dispose of the pending bill in whatever way it may choose to dispose of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better lie over until to-morrow if the Senator desires to pass it. It is manifest it can not be passed now in the present condition of the Senate. I therefore insist upon my motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I doubt very much whether there is any opposition to the bill. I doubt whether either the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Massachusetts will oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. They indicate that they will, and therefore it had better pass over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, October 2, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, October 1, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. MCCREARY as Speaker pro tempore.

The following letter was read:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., September 29, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I shall be absent from the city on Monday, and hereby designate Hon. JAMES B. MCCREARY to preside as Speaker pro tempore on that day.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Prayer was offered by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D.D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

NAVIGATION OF POTOMAC RIVER.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5697) to provide an ice boat or boats to facilitate the navigation of the Potomac River; and the same was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LIND, indefinitely.

To Mr. BACON, for six days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCULL, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. NORWOOD, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BLOUNT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCCOMAS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HUNTER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. CROUSE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. COBB, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. CRISP, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. CARLTON, indefinitely, on account of urgent and important business.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] asks permission to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 11147) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," passed February 4, 1887.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

SIBLEY CLAIM.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to substitute on the Calendar the Senate bill for the House bill in the case of what is known as the Sibley claim.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are the two bills identical?

Mr. OATES. They are.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] will furnish the Senate bill to the Clerk.

There being no objection, Senate bill 518 was placed on the Private Calendar, and House bill 3007 was laid on the table.

Mr. KERR subsequently, during the call of States and Territories, said: Mr. Speaker, in regard to the Sibley matter called up a few moments ago by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], I ask unanimous consent to substitute the minority report——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request can not be entertained at this time.

Mr. KERR. When will it be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request can be made after the call of States and Territories is concluded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

CAMPS FOR YELLOW-FEVER REFUGEES.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 11530) to establish camps for yellow-fever refugees, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WHEELER. This bill is similar to one which I introduced last Monday, and which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. As that committee is now without a quorum, I have introduced this bill, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE BUSINESS.

Mr. WHEELER introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, First. That the Speaker set apart a day for the consideration of bills and resolutions for each committee of the House which has not had an entire day allotted to it during the present session.

Second. That the chairmen of those committees desiring the benefit of the provisions of this resolution shall apply in writing to the Speaker of the House for such arrangement.

Third. That upon the day set apart for or assigned to any committee said committee may call up for consideration any bill which said committee has reported to the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there will be any objection to this resolution, and I ask that it may be considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request can not be entertained at this time. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Thursday, October 4, and Saturday, October 6, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

QUORUM FOR CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 226) proposing an amendment to the Constitution changing the existing requirements as to the number of members of either House that shall constitute a quorum; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. DOUGHERTY introduced a bill (H. R. 11531) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF YELLOW FEVER.

Mr. DOUGHERTY also introduced a bill (H. R. 11532) to establish a scientific bureau in the city of Jacksonville, Fla., to gather facts in relation to yellow fever, its origin and spread, and the best means of suppressing and preventing it; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACT FOR FEDERAL BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. CHEADLE offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings:

Whereas it is reported in the public prints that the contract for the construction of the Brooklyn Federal building was awarded, after advertisement, to one Gobel, of Chicago, at his bid of $623,000, and that said Gobel failed to comply with the terms of said contract, and that the Supervising Architect has forfeited said Gobel's check for $1,000 deposited with his bid, and that said official has since awarded the contract, without readvertising the same, to Bernard Gallagher, of Brooklyn, at his bid of $860,000; and

Whereas it was reported that said Gobel had undue advantages in the matter of information which other contractors said that with these advantages they would have reduced their bids: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inquire into all the facts in the said award of contracts to said Gobel and Gallagher, and the law relating to the letting of contracts for the construction of public buildings, and to report without delay to the House whether there has been any dereliction of duty on the part of any official in failing to readvertise for proposals to build said building and in awarding the contract to said Gallagher upon the first advertisement and at a figure nearly a quarter of a million dollars more than the lowest offer submitted at said first letting.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced the approval of bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit and district courts for the western district of Missouri;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to continue the provisions of existing laws providing temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;

An act (H. R. 11446) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884;

An act (H. R. 8751) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lakes Superior, Huron, Erie, and Michigan, and range-lights in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River;

An act (H. R. 5059) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Watertown, in the State of New York;

An act (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 223) declaring the meaning of a clause in the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888;

An act (H. R. 1216) for the investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California;

An act (H. R. 10679) to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 2996) to confirm the title of the heirs or legal representatives of Henry Volcker, deceased, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

An act (H. R. 10931) to transfer to the State of Louisiana for quarantine purposes the possession of certain lands on the Mississippi River belonging to the United States, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 11336), a supplement to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882;

An act (H. R. 11391) to authorize the Postmaster-General to advertise for and purchase improved registered-mail locks and keys therefor;

An act (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

TEMPORARY SUPPORT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. MCCOMAS offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Tuesday and Wednesday, January 8 and 9, 1889, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill 371, to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools; this to be a continuing order until two days shall have been occupied.

HARNEY LAND DISTRICT, OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

Whereas this Congress, on May 3, 1888, passed an act (Senate bill 555) creating an additional land district in the State of Oregon, embracing an area of nearly 10,000,000 acres of the public domain, and providing for the creation and establishment of a land office and for the appointment of a register and receiver thereof by the President of the United States; and

Whereas the Public Lands Committee of this House represented to Congress in their report on said bill that said district is 150 miles in length east and west and 102 miles north and south, and that many poor settlers therein have no land office nearer than 160 miles, thus imposing upon them great hardships and expense to reach said office to secure their titles to lands or to contest for their rights in the numerous conflicts between the settlers and certain swamp-land owners and syndicates, rendering it imperatively necessary at the earliest practicable moment that an additional land office be established as provided for in said act; and

Whereas said act was approved by the President of the United States, and the same became a law in the month of June last; and

Whereas a long interval of time has elapsed and no further action has been had in executing the provisions of said law, to the great inconvenience and injury of the large number of settlers residing on the public lands within said land district: Therefore be it hereby

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House what occasion, if any, exists for the delay in the designation and establishment of a public land office in Harney land district, in the State of Oregon, and in the appointment of the necessary officers therefor, as provided by law.

YELLOW-FEVER COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. PHELAN introduced a bill (H. R. 11533) to provide for the appointment of a board of yellow-fever commissioners to investigate the sanitary conditions of foreign infected places and to provide for the co-operation of Spain and Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF TRUSTS.

Mr. LANHAM offered the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, and subsequently ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that appropriate legislation for the prevention and suppression of "trusts" is imperatively demanded in behalf of the great body of the American people, and that the remainder of this session, or so much thereof as may be required, should be devoted to the perfection of such legislation, and to this end all other legislative business except general appropriation and tariff bills should be subordinated until the purpose of this resolution be attained.

Mr. ABBOTT introduced a bill (H. R. 11534) for the prevention of trusts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL CLERK, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. KILGORE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to employ one additional clerk during the remainder of the present session of Congress, at not more than $5 a day; said employment to begin from and including the 27th day of September, 1888.

HENRY H. SIBLEY.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the request I made a few moments ago I now desire to renew; which is to substitute on the Calendar the Senate bill No. 518 for the House bill No. 3007, for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, with the accompanying reports, and to lay the House bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the order requested by the gentleman from Alabama will be made, and the House bill referred to by him will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHICAGO POST-OFFICE.

Mr. SOWDEN submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That a subcommittee of three of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and is hereby, authorized to proceed to the city of Chicago, Ill., for the purpose of inspecting the post-office building at said place, to ascertain the cost, if any, of its enlargement; and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund the necessary expense of said inspection to an amount not exceeding $500.

Mr. DINGLEY. Should not that have been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asked its reference to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DINGLEY. Obviously it can not be a privileged resolution, even if reported by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SOWDEN. That is the committee which has charge of the expenditures out of the contingent fund, and this resolution has reference to that fund.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman desires that reference I do not object, but I only call attention to the fact that it will not give it any privilege in reporting the resolution.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS FOR THE HOUSE, ETC.

Mr. SOWDEN also submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the subcommittee on electric lights for the House wing of the Capitol of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and is hereby, authorized to sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to object for the purpose of hearing the object in view.

Mr. MCKENNA. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What recess is referred to? When is this to commence?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. SOWDEN. This was adopted by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having the matter in charge and investigating the lighting of the Capitol. The committee authorized me for its chairman, he being absent, to present the resolution and ask consent of the House for its adoption. It is not an unusual request.

Mr. OATES. What recess is referred to; during or between the sessions?

Mr. SOWDEN. That depends upon the duration of the present session.

Mr. OATES. I object, if it is an indefinite thing.

Mr. SOWDEN. Then I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Congress:

I have this day approved House bill No. 11336, supplementary to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved the 6th day of May, 1882.

It seems to me that some suggestions and recommendations may properly accompany my approval of this bill.

Its object is to more effectually accomplish by legislation the exclusion from this country of Chinese laborers.

The experiment of blending the social habits and mutual race idiosyncracies of the Chinese laboring classes with those of the great body of the people of the United States has been proved by the experience of twenty years, and ever since the Burlingame treaty of 1868, to be in every sense unwise, impolitic, and injurious to both nations. With the lapse of time the necessity for its abandonment has grown in force, until those having in charge the government of the respective countries have resolved to modify and sufficiently abrogate all those features of prior conventional arrangements which permitted the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States.

In modification of prior conventions the treaty of November 17, 1880, was concluded, whereby, in the first article thereof, it was agreed that the United States should at will regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, but not absolutely prohibit it; and under this article an act of Congress, approved May 6, 1882 (see volume 22, page 58, Statutes at Large), and amended July 5, 1884 (volume 23, page 115, Statutes at Large), suspended for ten years the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, and regulated the going and coming of such Chinese laborers as were at that time in the United States.

It was, however, soon made evident that the mercenary greed of the parties who were trading in the labor of this class of the Chinese population was proving too strong for the just execution of the law, and that the virtual defeat of the object and intent of both law and treaty was being fraudulently accomplished by false pretense and perjury, contrary to the expressed will of both Governments.

To such an extent has the successful violation of the treaty and the laws enacted for its execution progressed that the courts in the Pacific States have been for some time past overwhelmed by the examination of cases of Chinese laborers who are charged with having entered our ports under fraudulent certificates of return or seek to establish by perjury the claim of prior residence.

Such demonstration of the inoperative and inefficient condition of the treaty and law has produced deep-seated and increasing discontent among the people of the United States, and especially with those resident on the Pacific coast. This has induced me to omit no effort to find an effectual remedy for the evils complained of, and to answer the earnest popular demand for the absolute exclusion of Chinese laborers having objects and purposes unlike our own, and wholly disconnected with American citizenship.

Aided by the presence in this country of able and intelligent diplomatic and consular officers of the Chinese Government, and the representations made from time to time by our minister in China under the instructions of the Department of State, the actual condition of public sentiment and the status of affairs in the United States has been fully made known to the Government of China.

The necessity for remedy has been fully appreciated by that Government, and in August, 1886, our minister at Peking received from the Chinese foreign office a communication announcing that China, of her own accord, proposed to establish a system of strict and absolute prohibition of her laborers, under heavy penalties, from coming to the United States, and likewise to prohibit the return to the United States of any Chinese laborer who had at any time gone back to China "in order" (in the words of the communication) "that the Chinese laborers may gradually be reduced in number and causes of danger averted and lives preserved."

This view of the Chinese Government, so completely in harmony with that of the United States, was by my direction speedily formulated in a treaty draught between the two nations, embodying the propositions so presented by the Chinese foreign office.

The deliberations, frequent oral discussions, and correspondence on the general questions that ensued have been fully communicated by me to the Senate at the present session, and, as contained in Senate Executive Document O, parts I and 2, and in Senate Executive Document No. 272, may be properly referred to as containing a complete history of the transaction.

It is thus easy to learn how the joint desires and unequivocal mutual understanding of the two Governments were brought into articulated form in the treaty, which, after a mutual exhibition of plenary powers from the respective Governments, was signed and concluded by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and China at this capital on March 12 last.

Being submitted for the advice and consent of the Senate, its confirmation, on the 7th day of May last, was accompanied by two amendments, which that body ingrafted upon it.

On the 12th day of the same month the Chinese minister, who was the plenipotentiary of his Government in the negotiation and the conclusion of the treaty, in a note to the Secretary of State, gave his approval to these amendments, "as they did not alter the terms of the treaty," and the amendments were at once telegraphed to China, whither the original treaty had previously been sent immediately after its signature on March 12.

On the 13th day of last month I approved Senate bill No. 3304 "to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States." This bill was intended to supplement the treaty, and was approved in the confident anticipation of an early exchange of ratifications of the treaty and its amendments and the proclamation of the same, upon which event the legislation so approved was by its terms to take effect.

No information of any definite action upon the treaty by the Chinese Government was received until the 21st ultimo—the day the bill which I have just approved was presented to me—when a telegram from our minister at Peking to the Secretary of State announced the refusal of the Chinese Government to exchange ratifications of the treaty unless further discussion should be had with a view to shorten the period stipulated in the treaty for the exclusion of Chinese laborers, and to change the conditions agreed on, which should entitle any Chinese laborer who might go back to China to return again to the United States.

By a note from the chargé d'affaires ad interim of China to the Secretary of State, received on the evening of the 25th ultimo (a copy of which is herewith transmitted, together with the reply thereto), a third amendment is proposed, whereby the certificate, under which any departing Chinese laborer alleging the possession of property in the United States would be enabled to return to this country, should be granted by the Chinese consul instead of the United States collector, as had been provided in the treaty.

The obvious and necessary effect of this last proposition would be practically to place the execution of the treaty beyond the control of the United States.

Article I of the treaty proposed to be so materially altered, had, in the course of the negotiations, been settled in acquiescence with the request of the Chinese plenipotentiary, and to his expressed satisfaction.

In 1886, as appears in the documents heretofore referred to, the Chinese foreign office had formally proposed to our minister strict exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States without limitation; and had otherwise and more definitely stated that no term whatever for exclusion was necessary, for the reason that China would of itself take steps to prevent its laborers from coming to the United States.

In the course of negotiations that followed suggestions from the same quarter led to the insertion in behalf of the United States of a term of "thirty years," and this term, upon the representations of the Chinese plenipotentiary, was reduced to "twenty years," and finally so agreed upon.

Article II was wholly of Chinese origination, and to that alone owes its presence in the treaty.

And it is here pertinent to remark that everywhere in the United States laws for the collection of debts are equally available to all creditors without respect to race, sex, nationality, or place of residence, and equally with the citizens or subjects of the most favored nations and with the citizens of the United States recovery can be had in any court of justice in the United States by a subject of China, whether of the laboring or any other class.

No disability accrues from non-residence of a plaintiff, whose claim can be enforced in the usual way by him or his assignee or attorney in our courts of justice.

In this respect it can not be alleged that there exists the slightest discrimination against Chinese subjects, and it is a notable fact that large trading firms and companies and individual merchants and traders of that nation are profitably established at numerous points throughout the Union, in whose hands every claim transmitted by an absent Chinaman of a just and lawful nature could be completely enforced.

The admitted and paramount right and duty of every government to exclude from its borders all elements of foreign population which for any reason retard its prosperity or are detrimental to the moral and physical health of its people, must be regarded as a recognized canon of international law and intercourse. China herself has not dissented from this doctrine, but has, by the expressions to which I have referred, led us confidently to rely upon such action on her part in co-operation with us as would enforce the exclusion of Chinese laborers from our country.

This co-operation has not, however, been accorded us. Thus from the unexpected and disappointing refusal of the Chinese Government to confirm the acts of its authorized agent and to carry into effect an international agreement, the main feature of which was voluntarily presented by that Government for our acceptance, and which had been the subject of long and careful deliberation, an emergency has arisen in which the Government of the United States is called upon to act in self-defense by the exercise of its legislative power. I can not but regard the expressed demand on the part of China for a re-examination and renewed discussion of the topics so completely covered by mutual treaty stipulations as an indefinite postponement and practical abandonment of the objects we have in view, to which the Government of China may justly be considered as pledged.

The facts and circumstances which I have narrated lead me, in the performance of what seems to me to be my official duty, to join the Congress in dealing legislatively with the question of the exclusion of Chinese laborers, in lieu of further attempts to adjust it by international agreement.

But while thus exercising our undoubted right in the interests of our people and for the general welfare of our country, justice and fairness seem to require that some provision should be made by act or joint resolution, under which such Chinese laborers as shall actually have embarked on their return to the United States before the passage of the law this day approved, and are now on their way, may be permitted to land provided they have duly and lawfully obtained and shall present certificates heretofore issued permitting them to return in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

Nor should our recourse to legislative measures of exclusion cause us to retire from the offer we have made to indemnify such Chinese subjects as have suffered damage through violence in the remote and comparatively unsettled portions of our country at the hands of lawless men. Therefore I recommend that, without acknowledging legal liability therefor, but because it was stipulated in the treaty which has failed to take effect, and in a spirit of humanity befitting our nation, there be appropriated the sum of $276,619.75, payable to the Chinese minister at this capital on behalf of his Government as full indemnity for all losses and injuries sustained by Chinese subjects in the manner and under the circumstances mentioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, October 1, 1888.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move to amend by referring it to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to lay that motion on the table, if in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be first taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was agreed to.

NICARAGUA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. DUNN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. Has the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas been stated by the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will remember that this is the first Monday in the month, and the rules provide to-day for what is known as individual suspensions. The gentleman from Arkansas was recognized and sent up a bill to be read. The Chair directed the Clerk to report the bill sent up by the gentleman.

Mr. WARNER. I was waiting for the Chair to state the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas, and supposed that would be done before the reading of the bill was proceeded with.

My purpose, Mr. Speaker, is this: There is now unfinished business pending which comes over from the last suspension day and which takes precedence of any other business of this character.

Mr. DUNN. I think, if it is the opinion of the Chair that the business referred to by the gentleman from Missouri comes over as unfinished business to-day, the gentleman and I can have an understanding about that which will be satisfactory. If it stands as the unfinished business now, I ask unanimous consent that that unfinished business be passed over without prejudice, to stand as the first order of unfinished business of this class hereafter. The gentleman, I understand, will accept that suggestion.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to any arrangement about disposing of the unfinished business until that question comes before the House in its regular way.

Mr. WARNER. The Speaker of this House on two occasions has decided the status of the Oklahoma bill. First, it was called on committee suspension day, and it came over as unfinished business to the individual suspension day. Then it was a question whether or not it had precedence over other business on that day; and the Speaker held that it had, as unfinished business. Now it comes again to the individual suspension day and occupies that status now. It is the regular order, and the only thing that can be called up at this time under a suspension of the rules. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that a quorum will be called at this time on the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, and anxious as I am for the passage of that bill, and while I might be justified in standing in the way of all other legislation until it can be considered in this House, I am not disposed to get in the way of measures that can be acted upon by this House, provided the Oklahoma bill shall not lose its place, but shall remain as unfinished business, and upon the next suspension day shall occupy the same position that it occupies to-day; in other words, should a quorum be called upon and the measure which the gentleman from Arkansas now proposes go over to the next suspension day, that the Oklahoma bill should not lose its place as unfinished business.

If that arrangement can be made, I have no desire to prevent the present consideration of the measure proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas; otherwise I shall demand the regular order.

Mr. DUNN. I distinctly agree to that, with the statement that in my opinion it will not violate the rules of this House, nor will it displace that bill as being the pending unfinished business.

Mr. HOOKER. I want it distinctly understood that I object to any agreement of that kind being made, independent of the question contained in the bill of the gentleman from Arkansas. When the Oklahoma matter arises again I want to raise the question that it has already had its day in court, and that it is not the regular order. Both the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] are in favor of that bill, and I do not want to sit here and permit an agreement to be made which will prevent me from making the point of order on the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. DUNN. I am perfectly satisfied that the friends of the Oklahoma bill can rest safely upon the rules of the House for the rights of that measure whenever a quorum shall appear to consider it, and I do not think that it needs unanimous consent to sanction the understanding between myself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], nor do I think that our understanding will affect the holding of the Chair upon the question; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] can not interpose an objection to the ruling by the Chair on the order of business. That is the province of the Chair, and it does not rest with the House nor with any member of the House on an objection.

Mr. HOOKER. What I rose for, Mr. Speaker, was with the view of stating that I will not sit by and permit an agreement to be made as to what constitutes the order of business or as to whether the Oklahoma bill is the order of business, and whether we will not dispose of that now; but I shall object to any agreement made by these gentlemen so as to give the Oklahoma bill any attitude that it does not occupy; and now I ask the present occupant of the chair as to whether it is the regular order or not?

Mr. WARNER. I presume the present occupant of the chair takes judicial notice, if I might so state, of the rulings of the Speaker of the House. The Speaker of the House has decided the status of the Oklahoma bill without any agreement between the gentleman from Arkansas and myself and against the objection of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. DUNN. I think so.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. When was that done?

Mr. WARNER. On two occasions. But this is the question, Mr. Speaker. The attitude I do not want to put the Oklahoma bill in by consenting to the consideration of the measure of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], should that fail of passage, is the attitude of making the Nicaragua bill come over as unfinished business and have preference over the Oklahoma bill at the next suspension day. That is the attitude in which I do not want the bill to get. If the friends of this measure wish to bring it up and let it take its chances I have no objection, and shall not call the regular order with that understanding; but if that understanding can not be had, Mr. Speaker, I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. DUNN. I ask the Chair to state what the operation of the rule will be without any agreement or understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be the duty of the Chair, if the unfinished business coming over from the last individual suspension day is asked for, to take up that business, but if the gentleman from Missouri or any other member does not ask for the unfinished business that comes over from the last individual suspension day, the Chair will not feel it to be his duty to call up that business, but will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. If it is not called up, is it in any way prejudiced as to its order?

Mr. RYAN. I desire to ask a parliamentary question if it is proper for the Chair to answer it, and the question is this: Suppose a quorum is called on the pending measure, and that should go over as unfinished business because of the want of a quorum, and at the next day proper for the consideration of this class of business the question of priority should come up, which would have priority, the pending question or the Oklahoma bill, which is now pending as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has an opinion on that subject; but as the present occupant will not be in the chair at that time, he thinks it would be improper for him to decide the question now.

Mr. RYAN. I think the opinion of the Chair at this time would relieve the embarrassment.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the ruling of the Speaker on the last day when such a question arose. There were two orders of unfinished business. One was the bill moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], and the other was the Oklahoma bill. The Chair held in that case, when the question came up, that the bill moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] must be first disposed of; and that is the order in which the bills were considered; that is, the bill of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] was disposed of, and the other failed for want of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will direct the Clerk to continue the reading of the bill presented by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. RYAN. I have no doubt that the Oklahoma bill would have priority, as it is the first unfinished business in order.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I would like to ask a question for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has the floor.

Mr. RYAN. The embarrassment that exists in the minds of some of the friends of the Oklahoma bill is this: If we go on to-day accumulating unfinished business of the same class, when that class of business comes up hereafter, will the Oklahoma bill have priority over the other measures?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to ask a question for information. I would like to know what is the status of the Oklahoma bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was considered on the last individual suspension day, but its consideration was not completed.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But, Mr. Speaker, the bill that was considered on the last individual suspension day is not the bill that has been reported from the committee. It is an entirely different bill, resembling, of course, the bill which has been reported to the House by the Committee on Territories, but still a different measure.

Mr. RYAN. That has nothing to do with the pending question.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It is very different in some of its provisions from the bill of the committee.

Mr. RYAN. It does not matter where the bill originated, it is the bill that was pending and is unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand any gentleman to call up the Oklahoma bill. The Chair had already recognized the gentleman from Arkansas, and the Clerk will now report the bill called up by him.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I certainly have no intention of calling up the Oklahoma bill, either now or at any time.

Mr. HOOKER. In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] as to the status of the Oklahoma bill, I would respectfully suggest that it is non est inventus.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. Would it be in the power of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] to withdraw that bill at any time before it is seconded?

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I submit that until the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] proposes to do that it would be premature for the Chair to answer the question.

Mr. WARNER. I am asking my question of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that after the bill is seconded it will be the property of the House, but the Chair is of opinion that until it is seconded the gentleman from Arkansas can withdraw the bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Whereas to facilitate commercial intercourse by water between the Atlantic and the Pacific States, as well as with foreign nations, it is deemed desirable for the public interest of the United States that a ship-canal be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans on what is known as the Nicaragua route: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That Frederick Billings, Charles P. Daly, Daniel Ammen, Francis A. Stout, Horace L. Hotchkiss, Edward F. Beale, Hiram Hitchcock, C. Ridgley Goodwin, A. C. Cheney, J. F. O'Shaughnessy, H. C. Taylor, J. W. Miller, A. S. Crowninshield, A. G. Menocal, Charles H. Stebbins, T. Harrison Garrett, Jules Aldige, R. A. Lancaster, Alfred E. Mills, Gustav E. Kissell, Horace Fairbanks, George H. Robinson, Alfred B. Darling, Joseph E. McDonald, James Roosevelt, Christian Devries, Frederick F. Thompson, Henry A. Parr, and such other persons as may be associated with them and their successors are hereby constituted and created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of "The Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," for the construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, either entirely through the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua or through Nicaragua and in part through the territory of the Republic of Costa Rica, with such collateral, connecting, or cross canals as may be necessary to connect therewith, and to exercise such other powers as have been conferred by the Government of Nicaragua by the concession of that Republic to the Nicaragua Canal Association, through Mr. A. G. Menocal, its representative, and dated the 23d day of March, A. D. 1887, and finally approved by the legislative and executive authority of the Republic on the 20th, 23d, and 24th days of April, A. D. 1887, and such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession; and the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua by that name shall have perpetual succession; may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all courts of law and equity within the United States; may make and have a common seal; and shall have and possess the rights, powers, and privileges usually possessed by similar companies. It may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property, or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act; may issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued shall be declared and taken to be full-paid stock and not liable to any further calls or assessments; may do all lawful things to secure the full enjoyment of the powers, privileges, rights, benefits, and grants contained in any canal concession so made by the Republic of Nicaragua or to be made by the Republic of Costa Rica, as aforesaid; and to aid in the construction of said canal and to carry out the purposes of this act, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, and to secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise to be a corporation. The principal office of said corporation shall be in the city of New York, and all legal process may be served upon the person who may at the time be in charge of said office or upon the attorney of said company, whose name and address shall be certified by the president of the company, and such certificate shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said company shall consist of not less than one million shares of $100 each, with the right to increase the capital stock to two million shares of $100 each, upon the vote of two-thirds of the stock of said company at any time outstanding, which shares shall in all respects be deemed personal property and shall be transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said corporation may provide. Five incorporators, who shall be chosen by a majority of the number from those named in this act, shall have power to open books of subscription to the capital stock of said company in the city of New York, and at such other places in the United States, Nicaragua, or elsewhere as they may designate, who shall receive all subscriptions for stock; and no stock shall be transferable except upon the books of the company provided for that purpose. The said incorporators shall give thirty days' notice of the time and place of the opening of said books by publication in one daily newspaper in New York City, and one newspaper in Managua, Nicaragua, and one in San José, Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic. Sixty days' previous notice shall be given of the payment required, of the time and place of payment by publication in one daily newspaper in the city of New York and in one newspaper in Managua, Nicaragua, and one in San José, Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and in case any stockholder shall neglect or refuse to pay, in pursuance of such notice, the stock held by him may be sold to the highest bidder for cash, according to the regulations to be made therefor in the by-laws of said company. The directors hereinafter provided for may adopt regulations and by-laws not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the said company shall be managed by a board of directors, fifteen in number, who shall hold their office for three years and until their successors are duly chosen and qualified, and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States. At the first election five shall be chosen by the stockholders for one year, five for two years, and five for three years, and at each annual election thereafter five shall be chosen by the stockholders for three years. The said board shall elect from its number a president, who shall be a citizen and resident of the United States, and one or more vice-presidents of the company, who shall hold office for such terms as the by-laws of said board may provide and until their successors are duly elected and shall have qualified.

SEC. 4. That for the management and disposition of the stock, property, estate and effects of the said company the board of directors may make such by-laws, rules, and regulation as may conform to the authority granted in such canal concession or concessions, and not be inconsistent with this act or the laws of the United States or the existing treaty stipulations of the United States with the Government of Nicaragua or of Costa Rica if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and may fix the time for election of directors, and in case of vacancy in said board, caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, may fill the same. No person shall be a director who is not a stockholder, and any one ceasing to be a stockholder shall cease to be a director. All meetings of stockholders shall be held at the office of the company in the city of New York, and at least one such meeting shall be held in each year; but failure to elect directors on the day appointed by said by-laws shall not be deemed to dissolve said company, but such election may be holden on any day appointed thereafter by the directors first giving thirty days' notice thereof, in manner aforesaid. The directors, of whom eight, including the president, shall be a quorum, shall have full power touching the election or appointment of all officers of the company, and said officers shall hold office at the will and pleasure of said board.

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to in any wise restrict or impair any right of the United States under any treaty in force with the Republic of Nicaragua.

SEC. 6. That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act when in its judgment the public good may so require.

Mr. SPINOLA (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, to save time, and in order that the House may not be led astray as to this bill, I desire now to announce that I shall object to its passage unless there is a quorum present.

Mr. DUNN. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. DINGLEY (after the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

The amendment offered by Mr. PHELAN was read, as follows:

Add the following to the preamble:

"And whereas the interests of the United States of America and of the North and South American Governments render it necessary that said ship-canal should be under the control and guaranty of the United States Government; and whereas the said canal, when constructed, will form a part of the coast line which the United States would be compelled to defend in case of war," etc.

Insert the following after section 4 of the bill:

"SEC. 5. That the canal to be constructed under this act shall be under the control and protection of the United States, in order that the representatives of all the North and South American peoples may be guarded against any infringement or aggression on the part of foreign nations.

"SEC. 6. That tolls shall be equal upon the same class of tonnage for the vessels of all nations, except as provided in Article LIV of the concession and decrees of the Republic of Nicaragua to the Nicaragua Canal Association of New York.

"SEC. 7. The United States Government binds itself to protect all the rights of the citizens acquired under said concession and decrees, and guaranties the neutrality of the said canal and its operation under the terms of said concession and decrees, subject to the consent and approval, by treaty or otherwise, of the countries through which the said canal may be constructed."

Mr. LAWLER. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope a second will be considered as ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object.

Mr. DUNN and Mr. LAWLER were appointed tellers.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have no objection to the debate proceeding on this bill if the right to object be reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] has also objected, as the Chair understands.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is obvious that if a division is to be insisted upon on the question of seconding the motion there will not be a quorum.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], who objected to the request that a second be considered as ordered, is willing to withdraw his objection so that a second may be ordered and the debate proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] has also objected.

Mr. LAWLER. I objected to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

The tellers proceeded to count; and reported—ayes 36.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentlemen who would like to get information on this bill I am willing to withdraw my objection, so that its consideration may proceed for thirty minutes or an hour——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection.

Mr. LAWLER. Only so far as debate is concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection can not be withdrawn conditionally.

Mr. RYAN. Can we not have debate on this question by unanimous consent for one hour or two hours? I ask unanimous consent that debate may proceed in an informal way for two hours on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. RYAN. If there is unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asked unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered, and the gentleman from Illinois objected.

Mr. LAWLER. As I understand that several gentlemen are ready to debate this bill, I will withdraw the demand for a second until the debate is over; then I will renew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his objection.

Mr. LAWLER. Until the debate is over.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is willing to withdraw the objection, as I understand, temporarily with the purpose of renewing it. I do not want any misunderstanding——

Mr. LAWLER. I then request to withdraw my demand——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his objection.

Mr. LAWLER. With this understanding, that I shall renew it after the debate has proceeded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to have any understanding about the matter.

Mr. LAWLER. Very well; I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman now withdraws his objection. The Chair will again state the request. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. SPINOLA. I want to reserve the right, if I can do so under the rules, to object to this bill under any circumstances. I am perfectly willing to listen to any discussion upon it, and to hear any statements which may be made in favor of it; but as gentlemen claim that it is principally a New York City matter, I only wish to state that no New York merchant or other New York gentleman has spoken or written to me a single word in favor of the bill; but, on the contrary, I hold in my hand a communication, signed by a number of the most responsible and distinguished gentlemen of that community, protesting against the measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am willing to hear debate; but at the proper time I shall make my objection.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. After a second is ordered, will it be within my power to withdraw the bill, if the point of "no quorum" is made upon the question of its passage?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be kind enough to state his proposition again.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to keep perfect good faith with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], and I do not desire to allow this bill in any contingency to become an obstruction in the way of the Oklahoma bill; but consistently with that purpose, I want to exhaust all the possibilities in favor of passing this bill. What I wish to know is this: If a second be ordered and the House should proceed to vote upon the passage of this bill, and the point of "no quorum" should be made, will it then be within my power to withdraw the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it has been the uniform ruling in the House that after a second has been ordered the bill becomes the property of the House, and can not then be withdrawn except by consent of the House.

Mr. DUNN. Then I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] whether it is their fixed purpose to make the point of "no quorum" against the passage of this bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I certainly shall do so with my present feelings and impressions.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman expect to undergo a change of feeling?

Mr. SPINOLA. The debate may change my views.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] whether it is his fixed purpose to object to this bill or to call a quorum upon its passage.

Mr. LAWLER. I would say yes. I consider it too important a matter to be passed without a quorum to-day.

Mr. DUNN. Then it is my duty to withdraw the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is the way to do it. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs.

Mr. SPINOLA. I will take whatever responsibility may be attached to me, when I am backed up by such names as those appended to this paper.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriations for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. KILGORE. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. I wish to have an understanding, Mr. Speaker, before proceeding, because I feel it my duty to do with reference to this bill what was done in regard to the other by the gentleman from Arkansas. In other words, I do not intend that the bill shall get in the way of other business on this Calendar, and I desire to know of the gentleman from Texas if it is his purpose to object to the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORROW. And I ask the gentleman from Texas if it is his purpose, further, to object to the passage of the bill to the extent of demanding a quorum if a second should be ordered.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; that is my purpose.

Mr. MORROW. In view of that fact, Mr. Speaker, as of course I am helpless, I will have to withdraw the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, some days ago I objected to the passage of Senate bill No. 2, which was called up by the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER], a bill providing for the relief of the Mission Indians of California. I have since examined the bill and find I was mistaken in the main ground of my objection, and that with an amendment, which I have prepared and shown to the gentleman from California, being a substitute for section 7, the bill is perfectly satisfactory to me and a very important one to the public interests as well as to the Indians. I desire now to withdraw that objection to the passage of the bill and allow it to be passed with the substitute for the seventh section, which has been agreed to by the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does this come up under a suspension of the rules in the regular way?

Mr. DUNN. No, sir; I am asking to withdraw an objection I made a few days ago to the request of the gentleman for unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That I do not understand brings the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. DUNN. It simply revives the request for unanimous consent, and I ask to withdraw the objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But all the gentleman can do is to withdraw the objection, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is all. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is all the gentleman can do at present.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT WORTH.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and put upon its passage the bill (S. 1974) for the erection of a public building at Fort Worth, Tex.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before demanding a second, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] if he proposes to raise the point of no quorum on this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I have nothing to do with this bill. [Laughter.] It is not my bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LYMAN. I demand a second.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. LYMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. LYMAN and Mr. ABBOTT were appointed tellers.

Mr. KILGORE. I am willing, Mr. Speaker, to compromise on this thing. They say I am obstructing a very important measure here called up by the gentleman from California. I do not know, but I suppose I ought to give up in view of the statements made to me. I refer to the San Francisco bill of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], and I believe, sir, I will abandon the call for a quorum on that bill and withdraw the demand for a second.

Mr. MORROW. I understand, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is willing now to withdraw the demand——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But another matter is now pending before the House.

Mr. KILGORE. I will not call a quorum or demand a second upon the bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not think we are likely to do much business to-day, so I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. Pending that I rise to make a privileged report.

Mr. VANDEVER. Before that is done I ask unanimous consent to change the reference of a bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be done now by consent of the gentleman who moved an adjournment.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask that the bill S. 3427, referred to the Committee on Commerce, be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws instead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 24, noes 38.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the gentleman from Iowa will consent to withdraw his objection.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, the understanding is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] gives way, and that the bill I called up a few moments ago shall be first taken up and submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw the bill?

Mr. ABBOTT. For the present I will withdraw it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No action has been taken, and the Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas has the right to withdraw the bill, there having been no vote or action by the House upon it.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. MORROW. I now call up the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices, in San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I demand a second.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as a limit of the cost for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices by the United States Government, in San Francisco, Cal., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $850,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as a limit of cost for the purchase of a site at voluntary sale or by condemnation.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners and officers of the United States Government having charge of the purchase of a site are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ANDERSON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] as tellers.

The tellers took their places.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Pending the call for the second, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw that motion until I can ask unanimous consent to have the reference of a bill changed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to that.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask that the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws instead of the Committee on Commerce, to which it has been referred.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3427) to amend section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. OATES. There is a House bill of the same character before that committee, and with the gentleman's permission I will add to his motion a request for unanimous consent that that bill be now considered. I think if the House understood what it was there would be no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can not be done now, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] yielded the floor to the gentleman from California for the purpose of asking a change of reference.

There was no objection; and the change of reference was made as requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BLOUNT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. DORSEY, indefinitely, commencing October 3, on account of important business.

To Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, indefinitely.

To Mr. MCCREARY, indefinitely, commencing October 3, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORNEY. Pending the motion to adjourn, I ask unanimous consent to consider a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge over Coosa River, in Georgia, to facilitate the shipment of lumber from that State to Louisville, Ky.

Objection was made.

The question was put on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker pro tempore was in doubt as to the result.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 33.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers.

The question was put on the ordering of tellers, when the Speaker pro tempore announced that twenty-six members had risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers were refused.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The count of the other side is not required on a demand for tellers.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays, and the Chair announced that twenty gentlemen had risen in support of the demand.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, and that is, Why the request that the other side should be counted on a demand for tellers was not in order? The Chair counted one side and did not count the other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules require that one-fifth of a quorum is required on an order for tellers, and one-fifth did not vote. Twenty gentlemen have voted in favor of ordering the yeas and nays, a sufficient number.

Mr. HOOKER. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the motion before the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, as it is evident that there is not a quorum present.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—yeas 38, nays 60, not voting 226; as follows:

Mr. WASHINGTON and Mr. HIESTAND were announced as paired on all political questions for this day.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, and Mr. PETERS were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice, and especially on the Oklahoma bill. Mr. PETERS would vote for the bill and Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, against it.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, no quorum having voted, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to—ayes 12, noes 36.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I believe the only thing now in order is an adjournment, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion until I can ask leave of absence for the remainder of the session?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If that request is now in order, I shall be very glad to accommodate the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules do not permit the transaction of any business when it is disclosed that no quorum is present.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Obtaining leave of absence is not business, but getting clear of business. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No business is in order in the absence of a quorum, except a motion for a call of the House and a motion to adjourn.

The motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CHEADLE: A bill (H. R. 11535) to correct the military record of Allen L. Ball—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: A bill (H. R. 11536) for the relief of John Baptiste—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOOKER: A bill (H. R. 11537) for the relief of the estate of William H. Sims, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MAISH: A bill (H. R. 11538) for the relief of Charles Koch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 11539) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Samuel C. Vance—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCCREARY: A bill (H. R. 11540) for the relief of Sanford D. Van Pitt—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 11541) granting a pension to Lorain B. Sykes—to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Petition for passage of laws prohibiting transportation of convict-made goods—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of A. Krape, of Madison County, Mississippi, asking reference of his claim for stores and supplies to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of S. R. Safley and 55 others, of Warren County, Tennessee, manufacturers of apple brandy, asking that the time be extended in which the tax upon brandy is required to be paid, the regulations and instructions similar to what are now required in the case of whisky and malt liquors—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAISH: Petition of Charles Kroch, Company H, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, praying for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCCREARY: Petition of Moritz Klump, praying for the allowance of a claim against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MORGAN: Petition of widow of James M. Clark, deceased, late of Tippah County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PHELAN: Petition of citizens of Memphis, Tenn., asking for a seaboard quarantine—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Petition of Dr. Chase A. Hardy, for relief as Mexican veteran—to the Committee on Pension.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of citizens of Sebastian County, Arkansas, praying relief of the family of the late John D. Trammel, who was killed while acting deputy United States marshal engaged in the enforcement of internal-revenue laws—to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, October 2, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to present and have referred to the Committee on Fisheries a letter from John Cross, of Liverpool, Fla., in the nature of a petition. This letter is addressed to Congress, praying that body to do something to keep the Cubans out of the waters of Charlotte Harbor, on the coast of Florida. The letter further states that the Cubans build huts on our islands, send away the fish to Cuba, spend no money here, and introduce the yellow fever.

I move the reference of the letter to the Committee on Fisheries.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3538) granting a pension to Mary Saeger; and

A bill (S. 3042) granting a pension to Mrs. Philena T. Carpenter.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10825) granting a pension to Mary Jane Jelly;

A bill (H. R. 9784) granting a pension to Anna Boppell;

A bill (H. R. 4101) granting a pension to Martha Giddings, formerly Martha Priest;

A bill (H. R. 9388) to increase the pension of Joseph Holmes;

A bill (H. R. 5919) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 5593) granting an increase of pension to Laura L. Wallen;

A bill (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardner, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month;

A bill (H. R. 10911) granting a pension to Ira E. Baldwin; and

A bill (H. R. 10488) granting a pension to Myra Sinclair.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3534) granting a pension to William S. Dean; and

A bill (S. 3555) granting a pension to Albert N. Bradley.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 11333) granting a pension to Mrs. Louise M. Humphrey;

A bill (H. R. 4792) to pension J. W. Porter;

A bill (H. R. 10647) granting a pension to Samuel J. Wright;

A bill (S. 3374) granting an increase of pension to Newton J. Shrake; and

A bill (S. 3556) granting a pension to William H. Mays.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10659) for the relief of Elizabeth C. Cole; and

A bill (H. R. 9252) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Barberick, of Watertown.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3384) to purchase a painting of Abraham Lincoln, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

HENRY LECOMTE.

Mr. HAWLEY. I report favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the joint resolution (S. R. 112) authoring the Secretary of War to receive, for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Henry Lecomte, of Switzerland, and I beg for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Henry Lecomte, of Switzerland, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby: And provided further, That in the case of the said Lecomte the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was about to give a word of explanation. This is not at all an unusual thing. We have now, I think, two young gentlemen from foreign countries admitted to the Military Academy. Their expenses are paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. From what country?

Mr. HAWLEY. One of them is from Venezuela, I think, from one of the South American states, at least, and the other is a Japanese. This young gentleman is from Switzerland. The act whose force is suspended in such cases is the one requiring an oath of allegiance to the United States, which is quite common.

The father of this young gentleman, Colonel Lecomte, served honorably in our war, and is now of the highest rank in the Swiss army. He is quite anxious that his son should be educated at our Academy. The Secretary of War sends the resolution here with a copy of the request of the Swiss Government, and asks that it may be passed as early as convenient.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had elected Hon. JAMES B. MCCREARY, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, as Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3603) granting increase of pension to Joseph Demash; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3604) granting a pension to Sarah J. Alexander; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3605) granting an increase of pension to William Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3606) to authorize the building of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

OCCUPANCY OF PUBLIC GROUND.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire whether or not a private dwelling is being erected in Washington on public land at the intersection of Massachusetts avenue and M street, facing Thomas Circle; and if so, to inquire how much public land is being so occupied, and to ascertain by what legal authority, if any, such erection and occupancy are permitted; said committee to report the facts to the Senate, and also to report a bill, if such is necessary, to prevent any illegal occupancy of public land.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire whether it would not attain his purpose quite as well and be preliminarily, at least, better for him to address his resolution to the commissioners of the District, instructing them to report whether any building is being constructed on public ground. I do not care anything about the matter, but I make that suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I enter an objection to the consideration of the resolution. It affects a private person. The matter is now in controversy between her and the District commissioners. I therefore object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rules until to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it ought to be taken up here.

IMPORTATION OF CONTAGION OR INFECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution in relation to the importation of contagious or infectious disease from foreign countries on the coasts or boundaries of the United States, submitted September 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed to the resolution by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish, if possible, to obtain some action of the Senate and of the House which may assume the form of law without any delay in reference to the epidemic disease that is now prevailing in the State of Florida and elsewhere in Southern States. It has elicited a number of communications from men of thoughtfulness and scientific attainments which I think ought to be put before the public in some form; and without detaining the Senate for any great length of time, I ask leave to print in the RECORD such parts of these communications as may be important without reading the whole at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CALL. I have a letter from Dr. William Miller, 149 East One hundred and twenty-fifth street, New York, as follows:

NEW YORK, September 28, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of transmitting to you a slip from yesterday's Star on the prevention of yellow fever by vaccination.

This note is called out by a resolution offered by you in the Senate appropriating $10,000 for the expenses of the meeting of the Academy of Sciences at Washington, D. C., for investigating the methods for the prevention of yellow fever. For years I have experimented in this direction for the culture of viruses to prevent diseases, and the first who ever vaccinated for hereditary tubercular consumption with success.

I know yellow fever can be prevented or modified with a correctly cultivated animal virus of the disease germ that is safe and harmless. It is now plainly understood it is the multiplying of this poisonous germ in the body and eating up the red part of the blood corpuscles, and shown by Dr. Neal Mitchell, of Jacksonville, Fla., of a case of completely honeycombing the liver. Something ought to be done to prevent this disease, and all I do to stop the progress of the disease is to poison the food or pabulum this little microbe multiplies and feeds upon by vaccination. His career is then cut short. An appropriation for the purpose of testing this method of treatment is of important value.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DR. W. MILLER,
149 East One hundred and twenty-fifth street, New York City.

Hon. Senator CALL,
Washington, D. C.

Dr. Miller states in an article which he incloses to me, as follows:

WHAT YELLOW FEVER IS—A CORRESPONDENT SUGGESTS INOCULATION AS THE BEST PREVENTIVE.

SEPTEMBER 27, 1888.

To the Editor of the Star:

SIR: In view of the grave consequences resulting from the scourge of yellow fever at Jacksonville, Fla., it seems something ought to be done, more than has been done, to prevent the ravages of this contagion. It is now generally understood by medical men and those who have studied the cause or ætiology of the disease, that it is a poison of the blood, and brought about by the inhalation of a distinct disease germ through the currents of the air, and conveyed by the water, food, and possibly by absorption through the pores of the skin.

Whether these poisonous germs are the carriers of an infection, or fasten upon the internal organs of the body and there multiply and reproduce themselves to an unlimited extent, and then die and choke up the venous and arterial circulation, are questions yet to be determined. It has been shown that when this germ is taken into the organism by way of inhalation they pass through the stomach with the food into the lower section of the intestinal canal without harm, until they reach the lower region of the colon, where they find an enlodgment and a condition suitable to their propagation, when, within a few hours, they multiply and reproduce themselves to many millions. This is the real beginning or incipient stage of yellow fever, before the absorption of these germs into the circulation, and to clean out this fermentive compact with Epsom salts or castor oil, followed up with finely powdered charcoal, is very effective treatment to stay the progress of the disease.

In contagious or infectious diseases the virulence depends upon the activity of the poison, and to modify this germ for the prevention or mitigation of disease is now an interesting problem in medical science. That such a thing is possible has been proved, or even shown, that vaccination with a correctly cultivated virus will afford protection from so grave a malady as yellow fever. It would then seem incumbent on the medical profession to test the virtues of this prophylactic without regard to explanations whether it compares strictly with pathology or as to the exact mode which these results come about, and save the lives of thousands who have been or may be exposed to this malignant disease.

To prove the value of an antagonistic poison that is safe and harmless, it is now on record of a medical professor who inoculated 1,438 persons exposed to yellow fever with attenuated adders' poison not one of whom died, though seven were attacked with the disease. This is authentic, and other clinical evidence can be given in support of this theory and treatment of yellow fever by vaccination.

On July 28, 1873, the first vaccination was performed in this country for hereditary tubercular consumption with success, and of later date for other diseases, by this method of practice.

Since the discovery of the disease germ and the relation to disease enough has already been proved to satisfy the public mind, and nothing short of actual tests should be given to show the practicability of preventing yellow fever with a modified form of virus that may be used under certain conditions, not so much for a cure, but a preventive, as small-pox is prevented in man.

Though this fact of preventing disease with an antagonistic poison has long been known, the difficulty has heretofore been in the correct and safe method of attenuation.

The day is not far distant when the application of distinct viruses for different diseases will be generally practiced and perhaps better understood. For this purpose a laboratory should be established for the cultivation and distribution of such viruses to all sections of the country, as vaccine is sent for small-pox. It is then possible great good can be done for the benefit of mankind and the cause of medical science.

W. MILLER.

NEW YORK, September 24.

KILL THE FEVER WITH FROST—A NOVEL PROPOSITION TO CHECK THE SCOURGE BY ARTIFICIAL REFRIGERATION.

A reporter for the Star had a conversation with a gentleman who has made the situation at Jacksonville a study, and who has had a yellow-fever experience of his own, and the following are some of the ideas advanced: He said that instead of blindly fighting a disease which, ever since its advent, had defied the skill and science of the medical men in every quarter of the earth, people would adopt the only means ever known to kill the disease and stop its ravages, frost, there would be a gleam of sense in their method of procedure.

In place of importuning the rules of the universe for frost, the gentleman's plan is to make that chilly disinfectant as occasion requires, and instead of using the large relief fund now pouring in for burying the dead and ameliorating the condition of the survivors, he would appropriate a sum of money for the purchase of an ice machine, which, with the expenditure of three tons of coal daily, would refrigerate the atmosphere of a space equal to the extent of the largest of our city blocks, and in it place every one who showed the first symptom of the disease or permit any one to enter who feared the approach of the malady.

It is a well-known fact that one of our best appointed hospitals has a "chill room" for the same purpose, and there seems no good reason in the gentleman's mind why it should not be applied on a much larger scale.

Of course I have no such knowledge as enables me to express any opinion upon this subject, but I think it very clear that whatever method may furnish, in the judgment of reasonable men, a probable cure or preventive for this disease, which has already caused the loss of so much life and threatens to extend so much further than it has already extended and has cost so much money to the country, it should be tried, and tried upon a scale that is adequate to develop its truth or its falsity.

I have another letter from Mr. J. B. Read, a physician, I am told, of standing and attainments in Tuscaloosa, Ala. He incloses a communication to me, and in inclosing it makes use of these remarks:

TUSCALOOSA, September 28, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find an article of mine on prevention and cure of yellow fever, which I am sure you will read with interest.

Notwithstanding the lateness of the season, the practical suggestions made may prove of great service to your State, especially in southern portion of it, where killing frosts occur late. Parties desiring an early return to Florida will receive aid and comfort from my article, and the prospect of immunity from future visitations of yellow fever will tend to prevent depreciation of property in your State from the present epidemic. Have the kindness to exhibit my article to your colleague, Mr. PASCO, and to have it published where it will be most likely to reach the southern portion of your State, where frosts are tardy. Key West and Havana may yet be soon relieved.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. B. READ.

Hon. W. CALL, United States Senate.

In this article Dr. Read states as follows:

YELLOW FEVER—SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR ITS PREVENTION AND CURE.

The exigencies of the hour lend interest to any propositions giving reasonable promise of relief. There is good ground for the belief that the expectations which will naturally be excited will not be disappointed.

Some years ago one of my old preceptors, Dr. Warren Stone, of New Orleans, of more than thirty years' experience in the treatment of yellow fever, made the following remarks in one of his public lectures in regard to its nature. They will be read with interest at this juncture, and open the way for the suggestions we propose to make.

"Nothing more definite can be said than that it (yellow fever) is a disease incident to warm climates, and induced by a peculiar poison, totally intangible, and disconnected from any known cause of disease. There is no combination of filth, no combination of circumstances, calculated to deteriorate health and excite typhoid or typhus fevers that have anything to do with the generation of yellow fever. * * * The fever has existed upon high and healthy localities, and proved as virulent there as in low regions. Indeed the disease has always been more virulent in the country, when it once prevails there, than in cities."

These clear and authoritative statements form a solid foundation for the now prevalent opinion that this disease is not simply an aggravated form of malarial fever, but that it stands alone, with a cause as specific as small-pox itself. This conclusion encourages the hope that this specific poison may yet be counteracted by some specific remedy.

That yellow fever is gendered by poisonous germs, multiplying with fearful rapidity in the system of the patient, is generally believed, though the demonstration of the germ is not yet accepted by all physicians. However this may be, it is certain that for more than seventy-five years there has been in New Orleans, throughout all the yellow-fever epidemics by which it has been ravaged, one point in the heart of the city where, despite some unfavorable sanitary conditions, no case of yellow fever has ever occurred. That point is the calaboose, or old city prison. Often crowded to its utmost capacity during epidemics, its inmates always escaped the prevailing infection. Still another locality in New Orleans has for about fifty years enjoyed the same immunity with the city prison.

That locality is the city gas-works, not only the employés of which have uniformly escaped yellow fever, but all the families resident in the immediate vicinity. The gas-works in Mobile have also exerted the same protecting influence. The various chemicals employed in gas-works and the very compound odors engendered might well leave even medical men in doubt as to the true antidote to the prevailing yellow-fever poison. But an examination of the calaboose furnished clearer indications. The attics of this old city prison had long been the abodes of countless bats, the dead bodies of which, with their accumulated droppings, had by their decay produced an annoying stench. The predominating odor of ammonia, however, clearly demonstrated it as the successful antagonist of the germ. Soon after the conclusion of the last epidemic in New Orleans a very interesting article was published in the Times by Mr. J. Livingston, an active member of the Howard Association.

He gave a detailed account of the free application of ordinary aqua ammonia, sometimes mixed with equal parts of spirits of camphor, to the bodies of a large number of patients. This was done at first simply with a view to the powerful and grateful cooling influence produced by the rapid evaporation, favored by the heat of the fever. After his experience in several epidemics he was impressed with the fact that the heat and fever once reduced by the application of the ammonia never returned. He became convinced that ammonia as an 'alkaline gas penetrated the body through the pores of the skin, and as the fever did not return, the conclusion was inevitable that the poison in the system was an acid poison, and that the alkali neutralized it.' Doubtless his conclusion was correct; but he appears to have overlooked the very important fact that the ammoniated atmosphere surrounding patients thus treated was freely inhaled by them, and from the extended and very absorbent surface of the air-cells of the lungs had much more influence in destroying the fever poison in the blood than any action through the skin. We have long been impressed with this view of the case, and some valuable expedients for readily bringing into full play the absorbing power of the lungs and air passages generally having just occurred to us, we hasten to make them public for the benefit of our afflicted towns and cities without waiting the slow course of the medical journals.

The general application of ammonia to the bodies of patients, as has been described, should always be practiced when possible; but often from deficiency of materials and of nurses this plan can not be pursued. In such cases aqua ammonia may be sprinkled upon a cloth or handkerchief and laid upon the breast of the patient. In this way inhalation of the ammonia in sufficient quantities to neutralize the poison may readily be secured without the aid of any apparatus, the ammonia, of course, to be renewed at intervals. This plan will prove of great advantage even when free ammoniated applications have been made to the body.

Our next practical suggestion is that the wards of hospitals and the rooms of private dwellings may readily be placed in the same safe condition against yellow fever as the old calaboose at New Orleans. This can readily be accomplished by allowing the proper amount of ammoniacal gas to escape statedly into the hospitals or dwellings to be protected. The gas may be compressed into copper vessels, properly fitted with small adjustable stop-cocks.

For the protection of unacclimated nurses and visitors the air of all sick-rooms should be ammoniated whenever possible. In this connection it is important to remark that the volatile disinfectants, such as chlorine, carbolic acid, etc., will condense or decompose ammonia, and thus destroy its usefulness. Where ammoniacal gas is employed disinfection should be accomplished by non-volatile agents, as copperas and ordinary lime—not the chloride. After all that has been stated, it is clear there is no plan for personal protection against yellow fever which can be compared to that which can readily be secured by ammonia in some form.

Even travelers fearing infection may carry about with them small bottles of aqua-ammonia, so that a handkerchief may be moistened with it from time to time, and worn in the breast pockets of their coats. A still more convenient mode of securing protection will be to provide a small cloth bag that can be conveniently carried in the vest pocket, and place in it half an ounce, or less, of coarsely pulverized carbonate of ammonia. The warmth of the person will liberate an ample amount of gas for enveloping the chest and reaching the lungs, exerting additional influence by inhalation.

It is needless, perhaps, to remind the ladies that the old-style bottles of smelling-salts may be well revived at this juncture, as they give off ammonia in sufficient quantity to be useful, whether traveling or at home, in infected sections. The various modes of using ammonia for antidoting yellow fever and the readiness and economy with which they may be employed certainly give promise of most beneficial results in all localities infested or threatened by yellow fever, and particularly in extreme southern or tropical sections. Carbonate of ammonia, in 5-grain doses, may be usefully employed internally. But it is the part of discretion not to rely exclusively upon ammonia in the treatment of yellow fever; the use of mustard, of foot-baths, etc., should not be neglected.

No prudent physician will, in any serious form of disease in the South, omit the internal use of mercury in some form, and preferably calomel. Of this useful drug a combination of 20 grains with three of bicarbonate of soda should be be made into five pills, and one given every hour from the outset. Quinine being of very questionable utility in yellow fever, we propose in its stead the use of quassia in solid extract or infusion. It is an admirable tonic, and, having little or no exciting power, may be used without damage when the fever is at its height. We would remind our professional brethren of the high reputation acquired by quassia long ago in relieving the putrid and malignant fevers of Surinam. It is a powerful antiseptic and insecticide, and there is little room to doubt that its first high reputation was due to its power as a destroyer of germs in malignant southern fevers. It certainly deserves resuscitation.

We would enforce all that has been claimed for ammonia by reference to the facts that the old Morgan line of steamers that for so many years was engaged in the transportation of cattle to and from Indianola, Galveston, New Orleans, and Havana never had a case of yellow fever to occur among its officers or crews. The filth of the cattle kept the vessel saturated by ammoniacal odors, which by inhalation preserved the health of all employed in that traffic. Let it be remembered that no amount of ordinary disinfection and care will prevail against yellow fever. The heights of Gibraltar, guarded and cleansed with the utmost care by the skill of British garrisons, has suffered as severely as any quarter of the globe, with a few exceptions in our own country. Cleanliness is all important, and disinfectants have their use, but ammonia is claimed as an antidote to yellow fever, and the claim is apparently well founded. Ordinary disinfectants may be safely omitted; ammonia never.

J. B. READ, M. D.

TUSCALOOSA, ALA., September 26, 1888.

This constitutes the substance of the suggestions of Dr. Read upon this subject, the method of using as a disinfectant and a cure and preventive the spirits of ammonia in different forms for this disease, based upon the ascertained fact, as he claims it to be, of the exemption of certain localities where this chemical existed in natural conditions as the only ascertained cause and preventive.

Dr. Read suggests that this should receive an exhaustive examination, and that some public action should be taken by the Government to test this method of cure and prevention. He alludes to the fact that the commerce of the Southern States, the Gulf States of Alabama and Mississippi and a portion of Georgia, is almost entirely suspended, and that a shot-gun quarantine, dangerous to life and very costly to the different localities, is being maintained throughout the entire extent of the country, causing a loss of millions of dollars.

I am also informed that in New York the transportation of cotton from the States which are supposed to be infected with this disease has been prohibited, and that a very large interruption of the commercial relations of the country has been caused already by the apprehension of its importation into the Northern and Eastern cities.

I have another letter from a man who seems to be a man of some thoughtfulness and with a spirit of inquiry and examination into this subject, a Mr. Knickerbocker, of Lawtey, Fla., I believe a citizen of Illinois, who has recently made his home in that State, which is as follows:

Hon. WILKINSON CALL:

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry of 15th, I am happy to say there is no yellow fever in Bradford County, nor fever of any kind in this section. There is now authentic record that there are but two places in the State where yellow fever is epidemic, Jacksonville and McClenny, except Gainesville, which at date of writing is doubtful. In my previous letter to you I inclosed drawings and description of methods to kill the germs and kill the yellow fever. I have inclosed other drawings and description to more fully explain, if any interest or move is made to practically test the plans proposed. The plan inclosed for disinfecting, by superheated steam to spray bichloride of mercury, or other disinfecting solutions, ought to be published in the papers generally, as it is immediately available in most towns of any size that have steam fire-engines. The streets and sewers can by this plan be thoroughly disinfected immediately.

I intensely feel that this epidemic will injure us as a State more than anything that has befallen us since Florida has been a State, and anything that may possibly lead to a method or plan of stamping out or staying the disease before frosts should be resorted to. It is our duty to do all we possibly can, and I hope the plans proposed may at least suggest some plan to scientific men that will at least save us from another visitation of this dread pestilence.

The following additional explanations apply to the balloon plan of drawing down frosty air from high elevations:

First. Just previous to elevating the balloons, to ascertain whether adverse cross-currents are prevailing, pilot balloons can be sent up. These will show whether guy ropes are needed, or the balloon can be made so the lower parts will act like a common kite, and always hold the balloon at an angle of not over forty-five degrees. This may do away with a serious trouble in practice, and the only serious trouble to be apprehended. The record of the amounts of ice-cold air a fan blower of 48 inches diameter will discharge per horse power per minute is 15,000 cubic feet, which will give a faint idea of the immense amount of frosty air that could be spouted on the ground of the streets and forced through the sewers and infected buildings, etc., by this method.

I think the most serious objections to the proposed plan have been answered. Should any move be made towards trying these plans, I would be very much obliged to be notified of the same.

Most respectfully, yours,

M. KNICKERBOCKER.

LAWTEY, BRADFORD COUNTY, FLORIDA, September 23, 1888.

Mr. Knickerbocker incloses drawings of a mechanical contrivance for the purpose of disinfecting by superheated steam in sprays of the bichloride of mercury or other disinfecting solutions by the aid of steam fire-engines in the streets and sewers of cities.

This tendency of the American mind to exhaustive inquiry and examination into every subject that presents any great danger to the country at large is largely among people of limited means, men of enterprise but without money, enthusiasts, perhaps, but still thoughtful men, following the principles of the Baconian system of reasoning, who experiment in facts, who test particular cases, and who reason from an extensive gathering of the observations of reliable persons in relation to the ascertained facts.

This epidemic is becoming more fatal every day in the localities where it exists, and it is only the near approach of frost that will stay its ravages. It is very important, to prevent its recurrence in the coming summer with renewed virulence and vastly extended range, that the subject should be investigated at the present time and without any further delay, when it can be done before the frost shall have exterminated it for the time being.

I also submit the following letter from Dr. Stephen Smith, vice-president of the National Board of Health:

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
New York, 374 Madison avenue, September 25, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I notice that you have introduced a bill creating a commission to study yellow fever as it at present exists in Florida, with a view to its prevention. Perhaps it is not known to you that a similar investigation was made by a competent corps of medical men during the prevalence of the epidemic of 1878, in the Mississippi Valley, which led to the creation of the National Board of Health in 1879. One of the first acts of that board was to send a commission of experts, in the knowledge of yellow fever, to Cuba to study the disease at its home, and determine the best methods of dealing with it. The report of that commission was most exhaustive, and will be found at length in the first and second annual reports of the National Board of Health. Based on that report was all of the subsequent work of the board, and had it been sustained, by even meager appropriations, yellow fever never would have gained a footing in this country.

The National Board of Health still exists, having in its membership the ablest sanitarians in this country, two of whom are eminent Southern physicians, who have personally been through the severest yellow-fever epidemics of the Mississippi Valley. And it is a matter of astonishment to the members of that board that in this great crisis of another visitation of the pestilence the board is not summoned by the President to give its advice and aid as in 1879. Instead, the President relies entirely upon one member of that board, namely, the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, and thus fails to call into the service two of the most competent physicians in the management of yellow fever perhaps in the world. I refer to Dr. Robert W. Mitchell, of Memphis, and Dr. Stanford E. Chaillée, of New Orleans, members of the board. I think if you will confer with Senator HARRIS and Senator GIBSON you will learn much in regard to the board and its work which you ought to be apprised of in this emergency.

The act creating the board was approved March 3, 1879, and is still in force. The act which gave the board its greater powers was approved June 2, 1879, and expired by limitation at the end of four years. This latter law ought, in my opinion, to be revived, and the National Board of Health again empowered to exercise its functions as the sanitary branch of the Government. It is no wish of the members of the board to obtrude themselves upon the President, who now is alone responsible for the use of the funds appropriated to prevent the spread of the epidemic, but they feel and believe that the special knowledge which the board has of yellow fever and the large experience gained of the value of measures of prevention in 1879-'83 would be of great public service in this epidemic. The national board is the lawful branch of the public health service of the General Government, and as such ought of right to perform the duties belonging to that service.

Excuse the freedom with which I have written, but I do so only from a sense of duty and responsibility as an officer of the board.

Very truly, yours,

STEPHEN SMITH, M. D.,
Vice-President of the National Board of Health.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL, Senator.

I am told that it is an ascertained fact that while the frost or a severe degree of cold temporarily suspends the poison or whatever may be the cause of this disease, it reappears under favorable conditions on the first advent of a heated temperature in the next season. Therefore the country where this disease has prevailed is very profoundly impressed with the necessity of an exhaustive examination during the next three or four weeks into the conditions of this disease in the locality where it now is, the methods of its introduction into this country, and all the facts attending it.

I therefore hope that the Senate will take some action. I have almost despaired of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, in the midst of the engagements which the chairman and some other members of the committee have upon other important subjects, giving to this matter the time and attention which is necessary for its immediate passage; but I hope that the resolution will pass without delay, and I trust that if the Committee on Epidemic Diseases can not give to the subject the time and consideration necessary to formulate and report to the Senate a bill by which this method of inquiry may be had, and that all suggestions from all persons not confined to any particular school of medicine or any class of men, be thoroughly and exhaustively examined.

To that end I have introduced a joint resolution, which I hope will receive the favorable consideration of the committee, requesting the President to convene the Academy of Sciences, which, I understand, is composed of a number of learned men who have habits of research into the different sciences, and are eminent for their attainments in some of them, as a nucleus, and to add to them such eminent scientists as may be found in other portions of the country and in other countries, not confining it to the United States alone, to convene and to establish proper modes of proof, of the gathering of facts while this epidemic still prevails, and to give to the subject the profound thought and attention that it deserves.

We must remember that this matter of epidemic disease has been in the past history of the world a fruitful cause of the destruction of entire peoples, more so than even the great wars that have desolated the world. Professor Proctor, whose lamented death has recently occurred, wrongly attributes, I think, to the prevalence of this scourge, in an article which he had prepared, suggested to him by the prevalence of the yellow fever in the Southern States, collated the facts as stated by the different historians upon this subject, and among others he called to mind the fact that the historian, Gibbon, states it as his opinion, from the best data which could be obtained, that the great plague which desolated the Roman Empire and the Oriental nations during the latter days of the empire destroyed not less than one hundred million people.

The wonderful fatality of this peculiar disease, which Dr. Stone describes as something distinct from all other known diseases and having no relation and no resemblance to them—the wonderful fatality with which at times it prevails in different portions of this country, being transported in the clothing, transported apparently in wood and in substances which would seem to have no natural affinity for it, renders it necessary that the very best intellectual capacity the country and the world affords shall be bestowed upon this subject.

We are now almost in daily communication with the coast of Cuba, with the city of Havana, where this terrible disease is almost constantly existing, and where at particular seasons of the year no foreigner can enter the city from the latitudes which we inhabit without great danger of being subjected to it.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any further. My object was to present these suggestions and put them in the RECORD from men who have given much thought to this subject, and whose ideas have been communicated to me for the purpose of being placed before some authority capable of dealing with them.

I call attention, before concluding, to the remarkable features of this epidemic in the city of Jacksonville. With a population of probably not more than nine or ten thousand persons who were left there after the advent of the epidemic, out of 30,000 people living there and in the immediate vicinity of this city, there have been, up to this date, I think, very nearly twenty-nine hundred cases, if I read the figures aright, and two hundred and sixty-three deaths out of that number. The city of Jacksonville is a place the natural conditions of which are remarkably healthful. It is a very sandy, open, porous soil, which readily dispo es of whatever may be placed upon the surface that would engender a bad atmosphere. It is rolling ground; it is washed by the tide-waters of the Atlantic Ocean, which make their entrance and their exit there twice in every twenty-four hours.

It is near the coast, where the sea breezes from the open ocean, unaffected by any intervening land, from the coasts of Africa and Europe, entirely open, render it peculiarly salubrious and wonderfully healthy in ordinary times. This disease has by its very great fatality there shown what it would do if it were located in Washington City or in Norfolk, as it has been, or in any great city where sanitary conditions of a proper character are very difficult to preserve, and it actually threatens the whole of this country, threatens it with a probability that can only be met by the most careful and efficient methods and at this present time.

That is the opinion of the most intelligent and best informed physicians who have communicated with me since the first resolution was introduced asking the aid of Congress upon this subject.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator alludes to a correspondence with physicians. I understand the difficulty to be that there is a portion of the southern extremity of Florida where the disease has already become seated, which is below the frost line, where we can not rely on freezing to extirpate the fever germs. Is that the point at which the Senator would direct his effort?

Mr. CALL. That is one point in the matter.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, the inquiry I want to put to the Senator is this: whether these physicians suggest any tangible, definite thing to be done?

Mr. CALL. Yes, I have a great number of communications which I desire to place upon the record to go before the country.

Mr. BLAIR. There seems to be a vast amount of communications and a great deal of general talk, while the disease is continuing its ravages and spreading over the country. I thought perhaps the Senator had some proposition to bring this to a focus, to give them some money to do something.

Mr. CALL. I have introduced this resolution asking the President of the United States to convene the Academy of Science.

Mr. BLAIR. What object is there in convening the Academy of Science, I ask the Senator?

Mr. CALL. And such other learned men——

Mr. BLAIR. Learned men have worked for ages and ages on this business and have found out nothing.

Mr. CALL. I do not know of any other method except to convene the best intelligence and the best information that can be had on the subject, and ask of that body to adopt the proper methods of investigation and follow it up in the most earnest and scientific method.

Mr. BLAIR. How would it do to appoint a committee of the Senate and let them summon experts? It seems to me to summon the Academy of Science would be wild work. I never yet knew such an academy that could agree that two and two make four. If the Senator will make a proposition to do something, to spend some money, and find out something by a committee of the Senate or a joint committee of both Houses with authority to go to work and summon people who are supposed to know something—two-thirds of them will know nothing, but some of them will know something—we shall get the advantage of what they have to say, and possibly shall get some information that will enable us to buy coffins, if nothing more.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to suggest that the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, of which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is chairman, has taken a great interest in this matter, is now looking into the subject and considering what may best be done, and will no doubt report in the practical direction indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. Would it not be well for them to be armed with some money and some instructions to bring things to a focus, call in the learned men of the Academy of Science and men who do not know so much as they do, out of whom they may get information of some value if they can get it from any source.

Mr. HALE. I never knew a committee intrusted with such works who would not need a liberal supply of money.

Mr. BLAIR. They might be instructed to bring their work to an end before the disease had spread everywhere and the people of the nation had died of the disease, and do the best they can. It seems to me it is a better way than it is to talk so much.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me that the proper action for the two Houses of Congress to take at this time would be to pass the joint resolution which I have introduced and which I was in hopes the Committee on Epidemic Diseases would have considered and reported before this time.

I appreciate the fact of the public engagements which will now occupy the time of Senators and which may have prevented that committee from giving this subject the attention which it deserves. It can not wait. If this investigation is to be had at all, and to be had in the most efficient manner, it must be made within the next three or four weeks while this disease is prevailing with its greatest virulence in the States in the South. Then it will have disappeared, and unless a faithful record shall have been kept, and kept upon a large scale, bringing in the greatest number of cases and the peculiar symptoms and features attending each case and the surroundings and the effect of the different remedies used and experiments made under intelligent direction of all the new suggestions, we can not hope to develop anything new.

This disease has existed for seventy-five years. At times it has desolated the city of Havana and the city of New Orleans and the city of Galveston. It has only occasionally made its appearance upon the coast of Florida, and this year it has come in a shape and with a fatality so widely extended as to threaten in the future very wide areas of country.

The Academy of Science, as I understand, is a corporation of learned men who are devoted to the subject of scientific research, natural research—which Senators are not—who have given their lives to it; such men as Huxley, of England, and some who have not attained equal fame but have approximated it, like the late Mr. Proctor. There are numbers of them, with whose names I am not familiar, in the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. Those are not citizens of the United States. How can the President convene them?

Mr. CALL. He can request their attendance.

Mr. BLAIR. I know a doctor in New Hampshire who will find out more about it than any of them will if you summon him before the committee.

Mr. CALL. I have not the slightest doubt of it.

Mr. BLAIR. I am in favor of exhausting the American doctors before we go abroad.

Mr. CALL. I have no doubt he is a very learned man; learning is not confined to any particular bounds. I acknowledge there are great men in New Hampshire; but there are some elsewhere, and let us have them all, or as many of them as we can conveniently get.

That was the suggestion that occurred to me, that we should have the investigation not only of medical men, but all men of natural research, men of habits, of study, and thought, and experiment. The great trouble of the world has been the want of that continuous scientific practical investigation which Bacon with his wonderful genius indicated so many years ago as the only solid basis of progress and practical information as to natural science and the facts of nature, the order of nature.

If this disease shall evoke and procure that action by the Congress of the United States of an assembly of the great scientists of America—of New Hampshire—of England, of France, of Germany, for the purpose of investigating and determining the true facts which will indicate the character of this disease and the methods of its propagation and prevention, and its cure, it will have accomplished a great good to the world and a great good to ourselves; and I am persuaded from the facts which are exhibited by these scientific men, some physicians and some not physicians, but who have given attention and thought to this subject—I am satisfied something useful will be developed.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to ask the Senator one question before he takes his seat. Suppose this convocation should get together and find out absolutely, beyond all peradventure, a remedy for the yellow fever, and in some way its application would interfere with the doctrine of State rights, what would be the Senator's position?

Mr. CALL. We can discuss that when it comes up.

Mr. BLAIR. Now, unless the Senator is willing to start with the understanding that in some way we can override the doctrine of State rights and take this specific, if it be necessary and the only thing to cure the yellow fever, I am opposed to any further expenditure.

Mr. CALL. I should be very sorry to lose the support of my friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, but he must not allow the doctrine of State rights to interfere with his present action. We can consider that when it comes up.

Mr. BLAIR. Not long since the Senator brought up the subject, which was discussed for a long time and we were all ready to help him out, but when it trenched upon the doctrine of State rights he chose the yellow fever. In view of the prospective destruction and death of this nation by reason of this epidemic, if we find the remedy, it may be at a million dollars' expense, I want to know if the Senator is going to interpose the doctrine of State rights and prevent us taking physic and getting well?

Mr. CALL. I have never found any difficulty in the doctrine of State rights interfering with any national purpose which was really a national purpose; but I will not enter into that discussion with my friend. My idea is that the National Government and the States ought to operate together, the one aiding the other, which is the proper interpretation of the spirit of the Constitution. However, we will not discuss that now.

Mr. BLAIR. That seems to be this, that the State of Florida furnishes the disease and we are called upon to furnish the remedy, and in that way to co-operate together. Now, I want to know whether the Senator will interpose the doctrine of State rights to prevent our helping the people in the State of Florida to prevent the spread and the extension of the disease to other portions of the country?

Mr. CALL. The trouble is that the State of Florida does not furnish the disease. The Constitution furnishes the disease in creating the foreign commerce of the country and placing it under the regulation of Congress.

Mr. BLAIR. If that be so, why does not Congress take control of the whole matter? The Senator's theory of State rights is conceded away, even by the Senator himself.

Mr. CALL. I do not think so. My friend is welcome to that opinion if he thinks so. I see no difficulty in Congress taking such action as will secure the best possible results; and my opinion and my desire are that the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, or the Senate without the committee, will at this present time, during this week, pass this resolution, or some resolution similar, providing for an organism of some kind to investigate at the public expense the methods of the prevention and the cure of this disease which may be suggested by learned and practical men all over the country, and that it may be required to commence the investigation immediately here in the city of Washington, and to obtain such facts as it may be possible to obtain at this time for the prevention of this epidemic. That is the hope I have, and with that hope I have brought the subject before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add:

Resolved, That the committee do further inquire into the introduction of yellow fever into the United States during the present year, and ascertain, if possible, by what means and through what avenues, if any, it has been brought into Florida and other States where it has appeared as an epidemic during the present year.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] wish to speak upon this subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] offered the amendment which has just been read by the Secretary.

Mr. PASCO. I have a few remarks to make touching the amendment I introduced, before the discussion closes.

I have no objection to this inquiry and investigation proposed and suggested by my colleague into this subject of preventing and curing the yellow fever, and shall favor a full consideration of the resolutions and bills he and others have introduced in the Senate on the subject.

The Committee on Epidemic Diseases and Congress and the country have been liberal to our people. They have contributed freely of their money, publicly and privately, and everything that was possible in the way of immediate and substantial relief seems to have been done in order to arrest the progress of the disease and give relief to our suffering people. But if these investigations are to be made, and if this matter is to be thoroughly inquired into by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, as I hope it will be, I should like the investigation to commence a little further back and not simply to consider how we shall meet the disease when it comes into the country, how we shall combat it and stop its ravages, but to inquire further as to the best means of keeping it from getting into the country.

There have been several theories with reference to its coming into Florida during the present year. It has been alleged that it was brought in by smugglers dealing upon the coast of Florida. If so, then there should be an examination into that matter, and additional efforts should be made to protect the commerce of the country against an irregular and illegal traffic with countries where this disease annually appears, and the Treasury Department should be supplied with liberal means to prevent its coming through these avenues of an unlawful trade and commerce.

It has been suggested that it has been brought in by the increase of commerce between Florida and the West India seaports. If that is so, that commerce should be guarded by a stricter quarantine, and all proper means should be taken to prevent the introduction of yellow fever into the country by that channel.

It has been suggested, as referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], that the disease has been brought into the State in former years and that it has remained there during the winters below the frost-line, ready to break out with fresh vigor when the weather and conditions became favorable in another season. The experience of our people for many years at Key West, which is the lowest point in Florida, where this disease makes its visitations, and the history of the epidemics there would seem to prove that the disease does not subsist in the country during the winter. But if there is any foundation to sustain this theory certainly it is a proper subject for investigation, and it is right and proper that the facts should be known.

In whatever way this disease is brought into the country, in whatever way the present epidemic originated in the localities where it has existed during the present year, if it is possible for the Committee on Epidemic Diseases to ascertain that channel, to discover that avenue, then it would seem to be our duty to cut it off and keep it from again invading the country. It is for this purpose that I have offered the amendment, so that these questions may be examined into in order that if the disease is brought in from foreign countries by smugglers or by any lines of trade and travel to and from foreign countries, that stricter guards may be placed at the ports of entry and along the coast, and that the disease may be kept out of our land in that way. Of course, when it once comes in here we have got to resist it; we have got to find the best and most effective means of checking its ravages, and the money of the Federal Government and of the people of the country has been poured out liberally, almost like water, in order to meet and resist this disease during the present year.

If it is to come here year after year, it is our duty to devise means to endeavor to prevent it and to check its progress. But after it comes, our experience has taught us that our efforts, though extended and generous, accomplish but little in comparison with the vast amount of suffering and evil that comes with it. It will still go on with its ravages, and it will only be after years of experiment and years of investigation that we may perhaps chance to come upon some remedy that will cure the disease. But if we can keep it out of the country, if we can meet it at the threshold, if we can stop it at our gates, and keep it from entering through the channels of trade and commerce and travel something effective will be accomplished.

It is for this purpose I have offered the amendment, that it may go to the committee with the resolution and with the bills that have been referred to the committee from other sources, and that the scope of this examination and this investigation may be widened, and that the committee, if possible, may discover the avenues by which it comes into the country; and then let us take means to shut up those avenues.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], is not present, I wish to say that the Committee on Epidemic Diseases have shown a disposition to grant all the money and to grant all the power that may be necessary to crush out this disease; and especially will I say that the Senators on that committee from the Northern and New England States have shown a liberality that is greatly to be commended in regard to their desire and disposition to give all the money to stop this dread disease in the Southern States that they can give, and to grant any power that may be necessary.

Now, in regard to the resolution of the Senator from Florida, if I understand it, it is a proposition to instruct that committee to do a particular thing while that committee is investigating the whole subject. I do not think the resolution ought to pass in that shape, but I think the resolution, with the amendment of the junior Senator from Florida, should go to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. That committee are now investigating it. They are disposed and anxious to do everything that it is possible to do and do the correct thing, and I think it would not be proper to adopt a resolution instructing them to report a particular character of bill when they are investigating the subject, and are perfectly willing and intend to report the best bill that they can possibly frame.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida who introduced the resolution [Mr. CALL] whether he has any objection to modifying the first part of the resolution so as to instruct the committee to consider the subject-matter of the resolution, but omitting the instruction to report. If so, there is no objection to the passage of the resolution, and there is no objection, as it seems to me, to the adoption of the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], which is an amendment instructing an investigation. But it does seem to me, especially in view of what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has said, that after this Committee on Epidemic Diseases, the chairman of which is not here at this time, has shown the disposition it has to give all the money and all the authority that may be needed in the present emergency, and has also been disposed to consider all the many propositions which have been referred to that committee on the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], that it would not be quite wise or right to undertake to limit the committee by affirmative instruction, implying that there is need of the application of some particular stimulant on the part of the Senate to make the committee do that duty in which it has not been derelict, but which I believe it has been very prompt to perform. I hope the Senator will make that modification, and then that the resolution so modified may be adopted. If that modification is not made I shall move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CALL. The resolution proposes a very simple thing, and it does not require any delay. It proposes to instruct the committee to report at this session of Congress—what? Not any particular bill, but some resolution requiring the investigation at this moment in some shape, by somebody, of the proper and best methods for the suppression and prevention of this epidemic. I suppose it contained all the ideas that are contained in the amendment of my colleague, but I have accepted that amendment simply as a matter of courtesy. I presume that when the subject of epidemic diseases, their introduction, and their suppression and prevention, is referred to a committee, it carries with it the methods of their introduction as one of the means of prevention as a necessity.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator if he will yield for a moment to allow the resolution to be read?

Mr. CALL. Certainly I will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment. The resolution and amendment will both be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the resolution and the amendment.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there are two ideas connected with this matter. The one is the prevention of this epidemic, whether it be by preventing its introduction into the United States or by sanitary conditions by some methods of affecting the peculiar substance of which it consists. The learned men whose opinions have been communicated here, the notable instance in New Orleans, if true, which seems not to have come before the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, of seventy-five years' experience of exemption, and yet this terrible plague desolated the city of Memphis and the Mississippi Valley, and there seems never to have been an investigation of that fact, if it be a fact, as is alleged here by a man of high character, of learning and experience upon this subject. That would be one method of preventing it.

The use of this peculiar chemical which is found to exist in that locality, if it be true, and this seems to have the authority more or less of the distinguished physician who was a very learned man and a man of great experience on this subject, Dr. Stone, of New Orleans—I know not whether it be true or not, but I know, coming from this authority, it is deserving of investigation, and I know that the Committee on Epidemic Diseases are not the scientific men to make that investigation. I know that men who are acquainted with the specific subject are better capable of making that investigation than are those men who are engaged in political matters, and whose thoughts are constantly occupied with other subjects than those which require special knowledge of a particular condition of things.

Mr. President, that was the reason why I asked this action, not that it would be any reflection upon the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, but imminence of this plague does not await the convenience of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. A thousand people probably have lost their lives while the Committee on Epidemic Diseases have been considering or not considering what action should be taken. I know they have given attention to it. Here are these bills before them. Of course they are required to examine them and say whether they are correct or not, whether they ought or ought not to be passed; but I think the members of that committee will bear me out in saying that they have not had more than one session of a few minutes or of an hour or two upon the consideration of this great epidemic since it has made its entrance into the United States.

Mr. BERRY. We have had several sessions.

Mr. CALL. How many?

Mr. BERRY. I do not know the number of sessions, but there has been more than one, I am sure.

Mr. CALL. More than one?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I ask whether he has not himself appeared before that committee?

Mr. CALL. I have.

Mr. CHANDLER. And made as full a statement as he desired to make of his views on this subject?

Mr. CALL. I did on the first resolution. Now, I ask the Senator how many other meetings has that committee had pending the prevalence of this epidemic?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not undertake to say that they have spent as much time in considering the measures before them as the Senator has consumed of the time of the Senate in talking about them, but I think that the action of the committee has had quite as good an effect in suppressing the epidemic as the speeches of the Senator from Florida.

If the Senator will allow me, I say he carries an implication in the remarks he has just made that men have been dying of this disease through the fault of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator should use such language. I pardon the Senator for his extreme zeal in this behalf, but while engaged in discussing this subject at such great length he should not do injustice to others; for he knows that from the beginning to the end of this business, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, the Committee on Epidemic Diseases have shown a disposition to do everything that needs to be done and to give all the time that is necessary to this subject, and I think the Senator should refrain from casting imputations upon the committee, particularly when the chairman of the committee is absent from the Senate.

Now I ask the Senator what fault he has to find with the committee?

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have not found any fault with the committee. The Senator from New Hampshire is as fond of fighting a wind-mill as Don Quixote was. He sees things in the air; specters trouble his imagination. I said nothing about the committee. I said the committee have not reported any bill upon this subject, except the appropriation of $200,000 in money to be expended in the city of Jacksonville and elsewhere, and the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]; but as to any bill looking to an investigation of the best means of preventing this epidemic, for curing it, no action has been taken by them. That is no reflection upon the committee.

I know the chairman of that committee has been engaged upon the Finance Committee constantly; he told me so himself. So the suggestions of the Senator from New Hampshire amount to nothing, as they very often do. And I am surprised that the Senator from Arkansas, when I ask the Senate to take action requiring an investigation at this time while it can be had, should construe that into a reflection upon the committee. There has been no consideration, so far as I am advised or have been informed, by any member of preventing or suppressing this disease since the advent of this epidemic in Florida. I did appear before that committee and I did urge the passage of the $200,000 bill, and did urge that it should be so expressed as to authorize and require the destruction of the woolen clothing and other infected articles used by persons who had this disease, and paid for; but the committee refused to approve it, and the result has been that this disease has been conveyed in the clothing of these people throughout the country and is now prevailing in Decatur, according to the very best authority, by the failure to do what I urged in speeches which I made here when that resolution was before the committee. By the opposition of the committee to that provision this disease has been extended into those localities where it has gone.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to remind him that during the debate upon the resolution or bill as it passed his suggestions were fully considered, and the action of the Senate was based upon the understanding that the bill as passed embraced all the Senator desired? It was left in the discretion of the authorities to buy old clothes, to buy old buildings, and extirpate the disease in any way whatever that they might deem it wise and judicious to employ the money for that purpose. So the Senator's suggestion in that regard falls to the ground. The authorities had power to buy the clothes and stop the infection and spread of the disease, and if anything is necessary that can be said or done by the Government we want to do it and have the end accomplished. I do not think, therefore, that the Senator ought to complain of unwillingness on the part of the Government.

Mr. CALL. I have made no complaint of unwillingness on the part of the Government or the committee, or any one else. I stated the fact——

Mr. BLAIR. But does not the Senator understand, as I stated, that under the existing legislation the clothing can be bought and can be destroyed, if necessary?

Mr. CALL. I understand it is not so construed. I understand the language is the same as in the former bill, and I understand, as I stated then, that the construction put upon it did not authorize the purchase and destruction of infected clothing, bedding, and other things.

Mr. BLAIR. Did it not authorize the destruction of the infected clothing, bedding, and other things, whether the purchase was authorized or not?

Mr. CALL. That was voted down in the Senate upon the motion of the committee. Now, I sought to make that plain. I have been endeavoring to procure such legislation as would authorize some competent authority somewhere to investigate this subject, to summon before them the men who had scientific and other knowledge upon this subject, who had experience, to gather the evidence, to convene the best ability in the world, in the United States and out of it, and to give to the subject the dignity and the importance and the patient investigation which the great extent of danger with which it threatens the country requires. That is all; and in asking that it should be done immediately I did it because I knew that if the Senate does not take some action upon the subject now the opportunity will pass away.

I have introduced this resolution at the request of the men who have volunteered their services and endangered their lives in this work of charity in the city of Jacksonville, who have asked that a record under public authority should be made of all the cases and of the conditions of the epidemic existing there, in order that it might be considered by the scientific intellects of the world, and some theory based upon facts observed and recorded which would relieve the country from the visitations of this plague. That is all.

This resolution does not commit the committee to any form of action. It instructs them to act in some way, to consider and report without delay, and we all know, notwithstanding the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from New Hampshire, that with the interest the country feels in the pending election, with the preoccupation of some, the absence of others from the Senate, and the coming discussions upon financial subjects—we know notwithstanding what has been said that all the probabilities are that unless the Senate pass this resolution and give this instruction this body will adjourn and this subject remain where it is, leaving to chance alone the preservation of the evidence and the facts which are important in investigations upon this subject, and leaving the plague to recur without the advantage of experiment and proof and investigation of the various remedies, cures, and preventive methods which learned and thoughtful men have suggested.

Mr. HALE. If the motion has not already been made and is not pending, I move that the resolution and amendment be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the resolution and the amendment be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Alabama will allow me to state that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], the chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, who naturally takes a great interest in the subject-matter, is, I know, necessarily engaged in public business in connection with the tariff, and therefore can not be here. I wish to make that statement, as his absence might not otherwise be accounted for.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am not disposed to delay action on this matter at all, and believing that the Committee on Epidemic Diseases will take every possible step and do all that can be done by Congressional action to arrest and suppress the yellow fever, I shall still vote for the motion of the Senator from Maine to refer this resolution to the committee. I think that that committee has labored as diligently as any committee of this body since it was first organized for the purpose of carrying out the wishes of Congress as far as possible in the suppression of this plague; but my purpose in rising to speak upon this subject is to submit for the consideration of that committee a proposition which has recommended itself to my mind after several years of pretty close observation upon this trouble.

The Southern States are frequently agitated by the appearance of yellow fever, a terrible impediment to commerce and business of every character, aside from the sacrifice of human life that attends the ravages of this disease, and the loss in money is very enormous, and the panic which the people are exposed to is something that is exerutiating. I have observed, having taken part in the debates which occurred at the time this committee was first organized, that there is a sort of periodicity about the appearance of yellow fever in the South, and my observation has been that the periods occur about once in ten years.

Why this is so I am not able to judge, but it is the fact. The first appearance of the yellow fever is usually upon the Southern coast, the coast of the Gulf of Mexico or the South Atlantic; but of late years it is very observable that the cities of New Orleans, of Galveston, and of Mobile, which have heretofore been ravaged by this disease, have practically escaped the infection while other cities in the interior, commencing at Brownsville, Tex., and coming around to Shreveport, La., Memphis, Tenn., and Decatur, Ala., and other interior localities have been very much affected with it. Two or three years ago the yellow fever appeared in Pensacola. I do not now remember exactly whether it was two years or three years ago——

Mr. CALL. Three years.

Mr. MORGAN. Three years ago, and it continued in a certain form during the winter season. I suppose the frost was not strong enough to extirpate it.

It now seems to have found a field at Jacksonville and at other places in Florida, and following the track a good deal that it had ten years ago, only in a reverse direction, it is sweeping around toward Decatur, Ala., and so on. Of course, I am not able to account for these very peculiar visitations of yellow fever, and do not pretend to be able to account for them. I only find a certain state of facts which are repeated on several occasions, which admonish me that the efforts we are to make to prevent the introduction of yellow fever into the United States must be concentrated at the proper time upon the proper locality, the locality where the disease first appears.

Travel between New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, and the Island of Cuba and the other islands of the Caribbean Sea was formerly slow; now it is very rapid. A man can be affected with the virus of the yellow fever in Cuba, for instance, and come on a very rapid passage across the little divide of waters there, and remain three or four or five days in a Florida town or an Alabama town before the disease develops itself, it being contagious as well as infectious, but particularly dangerous as a contagious disease. After the development occurs in one of these towns about the coast, the conditions of temperature and moisture being favorable to the development and spread of the disease, other persons in the vicinity take it probably from contagion, or perhaps from infection, but they take it, and it commences spreading from man to man, and from neighborhood to neighborhood, and is transported by the railroads from place to place until we find it scattered all over the country.

Men are carried into healthy localities where there is no favorable condition for the spread of the disease, and if they get well that is the end of it; but in other localities where the conditions are favorable to the progress and spread of the disease it goes about through the community and kills a great many. I have known a little piny-woods town 50 miles away from the Alabama River during the prevalence of yellow fever at Mobile to be infected with that disease from the bringing home of the clothing of persons who visited there and died in Mobile and leaving it at the village hotel. A town was absolutely depopulated, some ninety deaths occurring out of a population of 130 or 140, on a high ridge in the piny-wood section of the State, and as healthy a place as a person could select.

I think all this proves that the first place in which the yellow fever is developed anywhere in the United States, at whatever time of the year it may be developed, indicates the locality at which there ought to be a concentrated effort to prevent its spread. By what system of quarantine regulation that is to be done I have no advice to offer, because I do not understand that subject; but what I mean to assert is that the power that we intend to oppose to the spread of yellow fever ought to be concentrated upon the particular place where it first appeared in any given season, and we ought to spend as much money as is necessary to be spent there to have a perfect quarantine and introduce such other hygienic remedies as may be thought advisable.

How is this to be accomplished? It must be done in one of two ways, or perhaps by two means that lie within our reach: First, the Congress of the United States should organize a commission with authority to go to any place in any State where the yellow fever first appears, and there have power to enforce the regulations that may be provided and money to carry out the purposes of the commission, to introduce and enforce such a quarantine and such hygienic measures as would be best adapted to the suppression of the disease in that locality and to prevent its spread.

On that proposition we are met with this difficulty: That the Congress of the United States can not invade the States with its quarantine laws and take from them the jurisdiction and right to govern the health of the people and provide for their security. The city of New York would never submit in the world to have a United States commission go to that great place from the city of Washington, or appointed by the President of the United States, and take charge of all local quarantine and sanitary regulations to prevent yellow fever or small-pox, or any other disease; and we have no power to compel her to surrender this ancient right of sovereignty.

So there is a difficulty that occurs in the administration of the law just in that way. But there are powers that we can exert in regard to the yellow fever in the Southern States to which I think we ought to resort. There are nine States in the South that have been heretofore subject to the ravages of the yellow fever. They are Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina. Now, suppose that each of these States should vote $100,000—if they had to vote the money out of their treasury or borrow, it would make no difference—there would be a fund of $900,000 raised by these separate States.

Let each governor of each State appoint a commission and let that board elect its president; let the commissioners be selected with reference to their probity and their reliability and their skill. Let them take the form of a joint commission and have free access to and the right to use any part of this money, with the accumulations, at any place where the fever may appear in the South. Let them go there and use their very best endeavors, guided by science and skill and experience, to stamp out the appearance of the disease in that locality.

The Congress of the United States, in virtue of its interest in the mails, in interstate commerce, international commerce, and in preserving navigation, would have no difficulty at all in voting a subvention to that commission and placing its money in the charge of these State authorities to be expended under the State laws. The States themselves would naturally conform their legislative provisions so as to make this a success at any place in any of these States where the fever might appear. There is no difficulty about the introduction of it into the city of New York or the city of Philadelphia or the city of Boston. There is very little danger of its spread in the present light that scientific men and experience have shed upon the question of the treatment of the disease. So it is not necessary to enlarge this project further than to include the eight or nine Southern States that are liable to the visitation.

I believe if this were done we should get around the constitutional and other difficulties; that we should have a fund available in the hands of the right kind of men, the right kind of a commission to go to the spot, whether it is Jacksonville or wherever it may be in the South where the fever first appears, and there make use of every effort that is possible to human experience and human wisdom to stamp out this disease.

I have thrown out these observations in this crude form, merely for the purpose of bringing them to the attention of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. I desire also that the Legislatures of the different States of the South should devote some attention to this matter, as they doubtless will. I think if we can secure by Congressional advice, and Congressional assistance, and Congressional concurrence a uniformity of action among the different States of the South on this subject, we shall have a power to control the introduction of yellow fever which is equivalent to that which has kept it out of Galveston and New Orleans and Charleston for years. It can be kept out; there is no doubt about it. General Butler kept the yellow fever out of New Orleans when he had military possession of that place. Whether he did it by local hygiene and hygienic treatment or not, I do not know. More likely than not it was in consequence of the blockade enforced against persons from Cuba.

My own opinion is that there is not a native case of yellow fever in the United States. They are all cases which are brought from abroad, in certain cases the fever breaking out and at other times latent and lurking in the system. I do not believe there is a foot of ground in the United States that is native to the yellow fever. It is shown that it is similar to the African fever, and that is found in Africa only in the tropical belt of the coast on the east and west of that continent.

I desired merely to submit these observations in the hope that the Committee on Epidemic Diseases would look into the subject.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I had no idea when I introduced this resolution that anything would come of it. I knew it would be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and that would be the beginning and the end of it. Still I considered it my duty to do it and to urge it so far as I have any power. This committee has lasted here for years. Terrible epidemics have scourged this country, and yet no effective method has been provided by it for either the investigation or the prevention of the disease. Now, I am not blaming the committee. It is a difficult subject, and it is only when plague and pestilence in their worst forms threaten the country that general attention is directed to this subject. The committee have sought to provide quarantine regulations. They are good; but how can you enforce a quarantine over a country with its 5,000 and 6,000 miles of seacoast? How can you prevent smugglers from coming into the country?

You talk about investigating how this disease was brought into Florida. The Surgeon-General says he has positive evidence that it was brought there by smugglers upon the coast of Florida bringing in fine goods, silks, and articles easily transported, cigars and the rum of Cuba. It has been traced with absolute certainty in other cases to woolen clothing brought from Havana. It was carried recently to Decatur in a bundle of clothes by a man who escaped the disease entirely, but left those clothes behind to give death to the family where he was and to all who came in contact with them in that community. As is stated by Dr. Read, giving the opinion of Dr. Stone, it is one of the most deadly and fatal of all the plagues that have ever affected humanity, having a nature peculiar to itself, as to which but little is known after seventy-five years' experience of its deadly power.

In this condition of things, with nothing but a resolution appropriating $200,000, and the subsequent resolution passed upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], appropriating an additional $100,000 for the relief of the sufferers from this disease, there has been no action taken, none whatever, looking toward the prevention of it except the bill which provided a penalty for those who escape the quarantine imposed by the Government.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] talks about the difficulty of enforcing it upon the part of national authority, but the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and the Committee on Epidemic Diseases have introduced and reported favorably a bill, which has passed the Senate, authorizing the Government of the United States to establish a local quarantine, and even providing penalties to be enforced in the courts of the United States against the citizens of a State who, in the interior of that State, shall have violated the quarantine prescribed by the Federal Government. Why talk about the subject of authority when this action has already been taken by the Senate? I see no difficulty in any case of the national authority co-operating with the States and aiding the State authorities in any and all cases whatsoever, the States consenting and requesting the aid of national authority.

Mr. BLAIR. How would it do for the State of Florida to co-operate and assist the National Government in this business?

Mr. CALL. That would be very good. I do not see any difficulty about it. The States north did co-operate and assist the National Government in the late civil war, co-operated and aided them in their State organizations, provided money and provided troops. There is no difficulty in any case, and that is the Constitution. It is the harmony of National and State power, and this is a figment, an idea in the brain of the Senator, and has no existence in reason and can not be defended in argument by the Senator from New Hampshire.

But I am talking now about the duty that I owe to the people of the country, to my own State, and all the States, not only the nine Southern States, including Maryland and Virginia, that have both had this dreadful plague in its worst forms, this African fever, coming from Asia and Africa and finding a domicile in the West Indies, and from thence being carried to the coast of the United States; and it has been in New York and Philadelphia, and has even been in Quebec with wonderful fatality, as Dr. Stone indicated in his opinion as stated by Dr. Read.

That is the condition, that is the position this question occupies, and that is the relation which the Committee on Epidemic Diseases hold to it. I have no fault to find with them, because I know the Senator from Tennessee, who is chairman of that committee, has been occupied laboriously and incessantly in the Committee on Finance; but there is only one intelligent thing to do. The Senate and the committees of this body are non-progressive, they have not yet arrived at that point of knowledge which the rest of the world has reached. They have not yet learned the value of the Baconian theory of the investigation of the order of nature and of the causes of pestilence.

They have not yet perceived, though a disease may destroy thousands and millions of people, that it is of national concern that it be ascertained by scientific research and by convening the best intellects of the world to consider it carefully. I know that, and it is as difficult to get a progressive idea for the progress of science and the advancement of learning through a committee of this body as it is to wrest the stars from the heavens. But I think it my duty, and I know it should be done, to urge that this investigation should be had, and had not by a committee of Congress, but by learned men engaged in and accustomed to natural research; men like Huxley, men like Proctor, men like some of those we have in our own country whose names are not familiar to me, engaged in this direction of thought and experiment; men like Dr. Read, like these other men whose letters I have read; men some of whom perhaps are low down on the ladder of science, but yet are giving their time and their observations to the discovery of some protection for humanity against this great plague.

Mr. President, there is but one thing to do, and I am well aware that the Senate will not do that. It is to pass this resolution, and, if necessary, create a special committee that will have time to investigate and consider this subject, or, at all events, pass this resolution instructing that committee, not merely to refer it to them, for referring means killing it, to refer it means to say that there shall be no investigation and no action by Congress on the subject. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The question is on the motion to refer the resolution and amendment to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN DENVER.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to make a conference report on the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought not to be read now, as the papers are not here. It should be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, and lie on the table for the present.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

Mr. BLAIR. I submit the following order:

Ordered, That the petitions filed in support of the Sunday rest bill, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and for the better observance of the Sabbath by the Post-Office, the Army and Navy Departments, be permitted to be taken from the files of the Senate to be arranged and classified and returned to the Senate.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union are obtaining a very large number of other petitions. These are disarranged, and they wish to arrange the whole together and have them presented to the Senate. It is a matter of convenience, and I suppose nobody will object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order will be made.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I present the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received and read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 13, 14, 19, 23, 26, 28, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 64, 66, 67, 78, 79, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, 90, 91, 93, 103, 116, 117, and 137.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 27, 30, 31, 32, 33, 44, 45, 46, 47, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 65, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 80, 83, 87, 88, 89, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 104, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, and 229, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment, insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To refund to the heirs of C. A. J. Flemister the balance of the proceeds of a sale of certain real estate of said Flemister, covered into the Treasury over and above his indebtedness to the Government, $475."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "To enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to employ counsel in special cases during the fiscal year 1889, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Increase of water supply, Washington, D. C.: That all work heretofore performed upon the Washington aqueduct tunnel, together with the provisions of any contract made for the same or any portion thereof, shall forthwith be fully investigated by a joint select committee of six members, of whom three shall be members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three shall be members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. Said committee shall have authority to employ a clerk and stenographer and such experts as it may deem necessary for the investigation; it may sit during the sessions of Congress or in recess, and shall have full power either in full committee or subcommittee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers and to conduct its investigation either in Washington or in such places as may be deemed necessary; it shall make full report of its proceedings and the conclusions arrived at, with such recommendations as it may deem proper, to Congress on or before January 1, 1889; and for these purposes the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to be disbursed on vouchers approved by said committee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of said amendment strike out the word "sixty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,328.07;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To provide for the payment of the claims enumerated in Senate Executive Document No. 270, Fiftieth Congress, first session, for fees of district attorneys, as follows, namely: Fiscal year 1886, $320; for fiscal year 1887, $4,744.90; in all, $5,064.90."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and insert after line 2, page 2, of the bill, the following:

"To pay out of humane consideration, and without reference to the question of liability therefor, the sum of $276,619.75 to the Chinese Government as full indemnity for all losses and injuries sustained by Chinese subjects within the United States at the hands of residents thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To reimburse the Official Reporter of the Senate for moneys paid for clerical hire during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and for extra clerical services and expenses occasioned by the prolongation of the session, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 138: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To pay all session employés of the House of Representatives authorized by the 'Act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1887, at the several rates of compensation therein allowed from the 5th day of July, 1888, to the end of the present session of Congress, $45,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 230: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 230, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 7. That for the payment of the following claims certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations, the balance of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1886 and prior years, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in House Executive Document No. 455, Fiftieth Congress, first session, there is appropriated as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE SECOND AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

"For pay of two and three year volunteers, 1871 and prior years, $27,708.15.

"For bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, 1871 and prior years, $20,069.46.

"For bounty, act of July 28, 1866, 1880, and prior years, $4,525.89.

"For pay, etc., of the Army, 1886 and prior years, $369.47.

"For pay, etc., of the Army, 1887, $606.20.

"For pay, etc., of the Army, 1888, $225,75.

"INTERIOR DEPARTMENT CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE SECOND AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

"For pay of Indian agents, 1886 and prior years, $206.75.

"WAR DEPARTMENT CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE THIRD AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

"For transportation of the Army and its supplies, 1886 and prior years, $64.81.

"For regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department, 1886 and prior years, $59.25.

"For incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department, 1886 and prior years, $164.62.

"For clothing and camp and garrison equipage, 1886 and prior years, 88 cents.

"For 50 per cent. of arrears of Army transportation due certain land grant railroads, 1886 and prior years, $5.68.

"For commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States and to soldiers on furlough prior to July 1, 1886, $435.

"For contingencies of fortifications, $49.33.

"For pay, transportation, services, and supplies of Oregon and Washington Volunteers in 1855 and 1856, 1871, and prior years, $23.67.

"For horses and other property lost in the military service prior to July 1, 1886, $5,415.16.

"NAVY DEPARTMENT—CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE FOURTH AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

"For pay of the Navy prior to July 1, 1886, $18,798.40.

"For pay, Marine Corps, prior to July 1, 1886, $11.40.

"For provisions, Navy, Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, 1886 and prior years, $2,327.93.

"For enlistment bounties to seamen, prior to July 1, 1886, $100.

"For the payment of claims for difference between actual expenses and mileage allowed under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Graham vs. United States, $135.50."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 41, 100, 112, 113, 114, and 231.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAS. N. BURNES,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. As a result of repeated conferences, the larger portion of this bill has been disposed of by agreement of the conferees. The items upon which no agreement could be reached are those indicated in the report, five in number.

Number 100 is the Senate amendment appropriating the balance of a year's salary to the widow of the late Chief-Justice. The attitude of the conferees on the part of the House in this matter was taken very squarely. It is claimed that there is no precedent for it; that it is a gratuity, and the conferees representing that body declined to yield. The amendment having passed the Senate unanimously, and been put upon the bill by the report of one of the standing committees, the Senate conferees did not feel prepared to yield.

Number 114 is an amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] giving a year's salary to the widow of an employé in the internal-revenue service who died at his post from yellow fever.

Number 231 is the Public Land Strip amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], a provision covering what is known as No Man's Land.

Number 41 is a large claim against the District upon which there is no real difference, but the conferees wanted further opportunity to examine it.

Numbers 112 and 113 cover the proposition embodied in the bill in the Senate amendment which is found upon page 61. I ask the Secretary to read for the information of the Senate these amendments.

The Secretary read as follows:

112. Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah Territory: To further aid the Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah Territory, under its articles of incorporation, in the establishment and maintenance of an industrial and educational institution in Salt Lake City for the benefit of the dependent women and children of Utah and Idaho Territories who desire to sever their allegiance to the Mormon Church, $75,000; and for contingent expenses of the association, $5,000; in all, $80,000.

113. The money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed by the treasurer of said association, who shall give such bonds for the faithful performance of his duties as may be deemed requisite by the Secretary of the Interior. All accounts of expenditures under this appropriation shall be audited by the Utah commission, which shall hereafter act as the board of control for said institution, and shall make an annual report to Congress covering the work of said institution and its expenditures.

Mr. HALE. This provision is in the direction of carrying out a policy that has been adopted by Congress in the last two years, and is in aid of an enterprise which Congress has recognized and adopted. The opposition to the Senate amendments which have just been read has its root in the undying hostility of the Mormon Church and its leaders to a movement in Utah which had its origin and was set on foot by the philanthropic women of America who have, in this, been largely represented by the organizations known as "The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union," of which Miss Frances Willard is president, and "The National Womens' Home Missionary Society," of which Mrs. R. B. Hayes is the president.

These organizations alone, in their membership, represent more than three hundred thousand women in the United States.

They are here by their memorials addressed to Congress, and by their intercession, urged in letters and petitions, in the interest of the Senate amendments which have just failed in conference between the committees of the two Houses.

I do not need to give the names of any of these women or of their leaders. They are found and known throughout the United States wherever law and order are upheld; wherever sobriety and temperance and good morals are maintained; wherever is found the home circle and all of its elevating and ennobling influences.

And, Mr. President, whatever lapses there have been on the part of Congress and the Executive in dealing with the monstrous evil of polygamy in Utah and the adjacent Territories of the United States; however delinquent the Government may have been in dealing with that evil, and however much the Mormon hierarchy may have profited by these lapses and delinquencies, no part of the fault for all this can be laid at the door of the women of America. Early and late they have besieged Congress in the interest of the sanctity of the marriage tie, the virtue of woman, the purity of the household, all of which have been assailed and outraged, both heretofore and now, under the laws which govern and the practices which obtain in the Mormon Church.

The matter is so grave that I feel justified in occupying the time of the Senate for the narration—not, I hope, at great length—of the history of the movement which is represented by the amendments of the Senate to the annual deficiency appropriation bill which have thus far failed to receive the assent of the other branch of Congress.

Previous to the year 1886 the National Woman's Home Missionary Society became interested in the condition of indigent, distressed, and dependent women in Utah, and especially in Salt Lake City, who were seeking to withdraw from polygamous union in the Mormon Church, but who were prevented from so doing by the fact that poverty and want stared them and their children in the face whenever they sought to dissolve their relations with polygamy in the Mormon Church.

The efforts of benevolent women and men in Utah to aid and encourage the women and children who were seeking to escape from polygamy were found to need organized effort, and therefore, under the act of the Utah Legislature of March 13, 1884, there was organized upon the 15th day of March, 1886, at Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, a voluntary association under and bearing the corporate name of "The Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah."

Under the articles of agreement of incorporation the place of business of this association was located at Salt Lake City. It was provided with a board of thirteen directors or trustees, a president, eight vice-presidents, a recording secretary, a corresponding secretary, and a treasurer.

The names of leading business men of respectability and responsibility are found in the list of the board of directors, as well as the names of earnest, philanthropic women.

Elaborate provisions are found in the articles of incorporation, covering in detail provisions regulating the meetings of the incorporators and of the directors, and the manner of doing business.

The objects, pursuits, and business of the association are set out fully in article 5. They are, in short, to found, build, equip, provide for, maintain, and regulate in all necessary and proper ways industrial homes, schools, hospitals, and places of instruction for dependent women and children in Utah; to relieve distress and ameliorate suffering among them, and, generally, to enable such classes, through the industrial pursuits taught by said association, to better maintain for themselves an honest livelihood.

The act of incorporation is formal and explicit, in compliance with the laws, and when organized "The Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah" was ready to engage in its great work.

The applications for relief, from women seeking to escape from polygamous union and representing their own and their children's hard condition, at once became so numerous that the association felt justified in applying to Congress for aid in its work.

Here is a copy of the first memorial which it addressed to the Forty-ninth Congress, setting forth its need for aid and the objects which it sought to accomplish:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress:

We, the undersigned, officers of the Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah Territory, by the authority of the board of trustees of said incorporation, beg leave to present for the consideration of your honorable body the following memorial and petition:

A great philanthropic movement for the relief of the dependent classes of Utah Territory has been in formative operation among civil and ecclesiastical authorities in Utah and the States for the past three years.

On the 15th of March, 1886, a permanent organization was formed in Salt Lake City under the name of the "Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah." The association was incorporated under chapter 45 of the laws of the Territory of Utah of the year 1884.

The officers of the association are Christian women of established character and executive ability.

The board of trustees are gentlemen of known business integrity and financial strength.

The object of the association is the establishment of an educational institution in Salt Lake City, where industrial pursuits shall be taught upon a basis which shall qualify for self-support. The institution will be divided into three distinct departments.

In the first, domestic industries, such as cooking, dress-making, tailoring, cutting and fitting children's clothing, etc., will be taught.

In the second, mechanical industries, including type-writing, telegraphy, stenography, silk-reeling, etc.

In both of these departments competent instructors will be employed.

A bureau of information will be established who shall furnish information as to positions available to graduates in adjacent States.

The graduates in the mechanical department may perform remunerative labor in the institution to the extent of funds for transportation to the positions secured.

Pupils from the domestic department will find immediate employment in the gentile homes of Utah.

The third department will offer temporary shelter to the homeless women and children whose cases are accepted by the board. For this class the bureau may furnish employment in the Territory or adjacent States of such character as the capacity of the individual indicates or opportunity furnishes.

The demand for such an institution is found—

1. In the anomalous social condition of Utah Territory under Mormon régime.

2. In the fact that there is not a single benevolent institution in the Territory for the dependent classes.

Moreover, it is hopeless to expect a Mormon Legislature to appropriate funds to meet a condition of things which the Mormon leaders declare does not exist or to establish an institution which shall contribute towards the disintegration of the Mormon Church.

Hence national obligation is apparent.

The principle is fundamental in a republican government to protect its helpless minorities, especially so when these minorities are women and children.

The question of self-support is basal in the solution of the problem of the disruption of polygamous households.

It is a well-known fact that there are many who would voluntarily abandon polygamous relations if facilities for self-support were provided.

Furthermore, it is futile to legislate against existing relations and make no provision for the terrible exigencies which arise in the execution of law.

Fathers and mothers whose moral nature has survived the wreck of polygamous life will at least hesitate to impose upon their children immediate disaster by either voluntary or enforced obedience to national law.

Therefore it is with confidence in that justice which is the apotheosis of mercy that we, your petitioners, in behalf of those who can not speak for themselves, except by their silent appeal to the nation's God, ask of your honorable body the appropriation of $100,000 to the Industrial Christian Home Association for the construction and equipment of such an institution as is herein specified.

Respectfully submitted.

The subject was brought directly before Congress in a hearing before the Senate Committee on Education based upon this memorial, which, with accompanying facts, were presented by Mrs. Angie F. Newman, who represented the Utah association, as is shown by the following resolution of the board of directors:

At a meeting of the board of directors of the "Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah," held upon due notice at the place of business of the corporation, in Salt Lake City and County, Utah Territory, on Monday, the 22d day of March, 1886, a majority of the whole number of directors composing said board being present, it was by the unanimous vote of the meeting, in substance and effect,

Resolved, That Mrs. Angie F. Newman, of Lincoln, Nebr., one of the vice-presidents of this corporation, be, and she is hereby, appointed and authorized to represent this corporation at Washington, D. C., and at other Eastern places, as its aid and assistant in forwarding all matters pertaining to the business of the corporation; and, among other matters, she may take measures to raise by private subscription for corporate purposes, and may for such purposes receive contributions, moneys, and funds, and may solicit and seek, and adopt and carry out measures to secure, in all proper ways, Congressional action and assistance by way of appropriation, or other measures looking to the pecuniary betterment of the affairs or other advancement of the business of the corporation.

Attest:

H. M. SCOTT,
Secretary pro tempore of the Board of Directors.

To show that other important influences outside of the association were aroused to the importance of the movement, I cite the following testimonials:

The foregoing and within is approved by the undersigned, a majority of the board of directors, said corporation having no seal.

The following paper is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, but was sent to this committee:

OFFICE OF THE UTAH COMMISSION,
Salt Lake City, March 12, 1886.

SIR: An organization under the general incorporation laws of this Territory has been perfected by Christian women of Utah for the establishment of an industrial home for the helpless and dependent of their own sex and their children at or near the city of Salt Lake.

The trustees of the association are prominent business men of known ability, integrity, and good financial standing, resident of this city. The executive officers are representative Christian women, also residing here. We vouch for their high character and cordially indorse and commend the philanthropic movement they have inaugurated.

It is proposed to establish an institution upon a basis broad enough to meet the exigencies that may arise from the exceptional social conditions of this Territory.

It is contemplated not only to provide homes for the indigent and distressed, but to furnish gratuitous domestic and mechanical instruction which shall qualify those who receive it for self-support.

We believe that such a beneficence, supplemental to the enforcement of the laws for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, will effectively aid in accomplishing the result sought through Congressional legislation.

It may be reasonably hoped that this provision for the maintenance and industrial education of polygamous wives and children will induce the withdrawal of many who are now held through fear of the distress and suffering that would inevitably result to them from such separation.

Considering the undoubted usefulness of an institution of this character in aid of the effort of the Federal Government to eradicate the polygamic evil, we believe that it could properly and should receive financial assistance through liberal appropriations by Congress. We desire, therefore, to second the appeal of the association in this behalf.

Very respectfully,

A. B. CARLTON.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Lincoln, April 16, 1886.

To the Congressional delegation of the State of Nebraska:

GENTLEMEN: Mrs. A. F. Newman, of this city, visits Washington for the purpose of securing Government aid in establishing an industrial school at Salt Lake City. I take great pleasure in commending her to your courteous consideration as well as to your kindly offices in the work in which she is engaged.

I remain, respectfully,

JAMES W. DAWES,
Governor of Nebraska.

DENVER, COLO., April 6, 1886.

To the Senators and Representatives of Colorado in Washington, D. C.:

I hereby commend to your thoughtful consideration the plans for an industrial home for the destitute women of Utah, presented by the bearer, Mrs. Angie F. Newman, and indorsed by the leading philanthropists of Salt Lake.

Sincerely, yours,

H. W. WARREN,
Bishop of the M. E. Church and in charge of missions in Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY, April, 1886.

To whom it may concern:

Mrs. Angie F. Newman being duly elected by the directors of the Woman's Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah as their delegate to secure Congressional aid in behalf of this much-needed institution, I take pleasure in commending her to the confidence of all people as a brilliant speaker, an earnest advocate of reform, and a Christian woman whose heart has borne the burden of the cause of Christ in Utah for years.

S. J. CARROLL,
Pastor of M. E. Church and Editor of Utah Christian Advocate.
J. JAY GARVIN,
President of S. Seminary.

The Woman's Industrial Christian Home Association, in their meeting March 22 to reconsider the election of delegates to Washington in their behalf, decided to send but one delegate in place of the two first chosen.

Mrs. Angie F. Newman was elected the one delegate and a committee was appointed to secure funds for her use and forward the same to her at Washington.

JEANNETTE H. FERRY,
President Woman's Industrial Christian Home Association,
Salt Lake, Utah.

To the House Committee on Appropriations:

The Utah Industrial Home Association is an organization whose purpose is to provide a means of self-support for the dependent classes of this Territory. The society have incorporated under the statutes. They have elected Mrs. A. G. Paddock and Mrs. Angie F. Newman as their representatives to your honorable body to ask for Congressional appropriation of $—— to aid in the purchase of lots and the erection of suitable buildings in which domestic and mechanical industries shall be taught and a shelter afforded to helpless women and children. The object is in every sense praiseworthy. There are many women now members of polygamous families who would renounce their present relations if they had any place of shelter or any means of support assured for themselves and their children. There are many more who have renounced polygamy and Mormonism together, and who have nothing but their hands to ward off starvation. The fact that there is not a single public institution in this Territory for the protection of this numerous class makes imperative such action. The ladies selected to make this appeal are trustworthy. The project has the indorsement of—

CHARLES S. ZANE.
W. H. DICKSON.
E. A. IRELAND.

They embrace the names of eminent clergymen and educators in Salt Lake City, the members of the Utah Commission, the judiciary of the Territory, and other well-known and important officials.

As a result of the appeal and the information laid by Mrs. Newman before Congress the following appropriation was made as a provision in the general deficiency bill of 1886, being the act approved August 4, 1886. This bill was under my charge, and I am glad to say that no opposition to the appropriation then arose.

INDUSTRIAL HOME IN UTAH TERRITORY.

To aid in the establishment of an industrial home in the Territory of Utah, to provide employment and means of self-support for the dependent women who renounce polygamy and the children of such women of tender age in said Territory, with a view to aid in the suppression of polygamy therein, $40,000; said sum to be expended upon requisition of and under the management of a board of control to consist of the governor and justices of the supreme court and the district attorney of said Territory; and said board shall duly and properly expend said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes herein indicated, and shall, from time to time, report to the President their acts and doings and expenditures hereunder for transmission to Congress.

It will be noticed that in this provision no reference is made to "The Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah" as an organization through which the appropriation made by Congress should be expended. The general object of the appropriation is given as an "aid in the establishment of an industrial home in the Territory of Utah to provide employment and means of self-support for the dependent women who renounce polygamy, and the children of such women of tender age," in said Territory, with a view to aid in the suppression of polygamy; and the whole management and expenditure of the money is left in charge of a board of control consisting of the governor and the judges of the supreme court and district attorney in said Territory.

By this appropriation Congress embarked in the work of aiding dependent women and children seeking to escape from polygamous relations and added the important words that it was done "with a view to aid in the suppression of polygamy in the Territory."

The menace found in these words was sufficient to arouse the hostility of the Mormon leaders, and when the officers and members of the industrial association in Utah sought to have the money expended in such a way as would most clearly accomplish the object stated by Congress they were met and thwarted in every direction. The new governor of the Territory, who acted as chairman of the board of control, largely took the charge of the matter and by his rulings as to the construction of the language of the appropriation prevented the application of its provisions in very many of the cases where relief was applied for.

Under this construction the first wife, in a family where plural marriage existed, was forbidden relief upon the ground that she was not technically renouncing polygamy; and thus she and her children were shut out from the relief provided by Congress.

Other rulings were made which tended to thwart the object of the appropriation, and although the board of control, with the governor at its head, leased a temporary home and opened it for such inmates as, under the rulings of the board, could be admitted, yet the reports of the Industrial Association, which, under all the discouraging circumstances attending the case, kept up its efforts, show the difficulties under which it labored. I give here quotations from the first report of the association, showing the work of the first ten months:

We are nominally at the close of our first year; practically we have to do with the work and results of but ten months, the two months after Congress appropriated the means for establishing the home having been spent in securing and fitting up a building as a temporary shelter for those who should avail themselves of the comfort offered by such. The strong conviction in the minds of those who founded the home that the time had come for organized effort to avert conditions of dependency or guard against deviations from lawful, domestic, and social relations so prevalent in Utah, and bring around the dependent women and children of the Territory such influences as would promote their best and truest interests caused a few brave men and women to make such personal sacrifices and public effort as brought this industrial home into existence one year ago. As these months have passed the importance and magnitude of the undertaking have been more and more apparent. The labor in the effort to lead these strangely deluded women into lives of self-dependency has opened our eyes to much that we little dreamed of when we began the work ten months ago, making us aware of possibilities, yes, probabilities in its future that were beyond our comprehension at the start.

Yet it is with a sense of this great beyond, of the experience we have not had, of the knowledge we have not gained in this work, that we venture to speak of the past and the needs of the future. The past has had its rejoicings as well as sadness, its days of bright sunshine as well as dark storms. There have been eleven polygamous women and twenty-two children helped to better conditions in life by the home and its influence. Two of this number of women were provided for outside of the home roof. The nine who have had a home within its walls are infinitely better able to battle with and provide for their children and themselves in the future than they were when entering the home. During the ten months we have had sixty-three applications for a temporary home—a shelter until work could be obtained. These come under the care of the "employment bureau," yet, more strictly speaking, under the industrial department of the home, as when places were secured for their services they were found incompetent. We have given nine month's schooling to children, the influence of which will last through coming time. To the women we have taught the duties of general housework, with sewing, only so far as the demands of the home and their families' clothing demanded. In this department there has been some improvement, although not such as should have been procured in the time within the home.

A great hinderance to successful work here has been the impossibility for inmates—or any one else—to pass from the cook stove, dish-pan, wash-tub, or scrub-brush one-half day or week to the needle-work and produce even passably good results. The real and lasting foundation to "provide employment and means of self-support" will have been laid only when we so extend our boundaries as to proffer systematic, practical training in various industrial pursuits to those seeking the help of an industrial home; where, too, the moral, mental, and domestic atmosphere shall fortify them against want and temptations, the co-operative industries which are at once the basis of self-development and independence. The inadequacy of our present conditions and house to the needs and expectation of an industrial institution has been fully demonstrated to those who have interested themselves in visiting the home and seeking to know its needs.

That the class of persons admitted at present by act 221, Congress United States of America, is too limited to reach to the fullest extent its intention, namely, "to aid in suppression of polygamy," the following cases, I think, will illustrate: One woman with five children, left destitute, starving, because she refused to submit to the doctrines taught by Utah Mormonism, she not having been in polygamy, but refusing to go into it, is not now a "legal" applicant, therefore refused admittance. An old woman (eighty-two years of age) who "will not think of the horrid thing," is left homeless, moneyless, and friendless, yet, not having been in polygamy, can not be admitted into the home. Third, a young woman, brought to this Territory by a Mormon mother, but who, when she saw and knew the truth of Utah Mormonism, refused to remain in fellowship with it, and was cast off, a physical wreck, made so through the hardships she has had to go through.

Another class is found in that of children of polygamous relations—either minors or beyond that age—whose lives have been made dependent in the truest sense, by their refusal to become a party to plural marriages. This is a class for which the home should be opened, and through which great results for Utah's future good could be realized.

A recapitulation of the condition of the home, its inmates, work, expenses, with "employment and means of self-support" for the ten months, is hereto attached.

Home opened for inmates November 21, 1886, with two employés, one of which was a polygamous woman with three children, making a family of five during December, 1886. January and February, 1887, there entered three women and nine children, a total during first quarter of sixteen polygamous persons.

Number inmates in ten months, 31; number employés in ten months, 3; number clothed, 26; largest number at any one time during the ten months, 22; smallest number at any one time during the eight months, 9; longest time any one family has been in the home, 10 months; shortest time any one family has been in the home, 4 months; largest family, 5; smallest family, 2.

The following figures represent the ages of women: 49, 42, 32, 52, 45, 39, 74, 51, 27, 37, 31; children, 20, 18, 15, 17, 16, 10, 9, 7, 5, 3, 15, 12, 8, 12, 7, 4, 8, 4, 1½ years, and one born in the home during August; total, 31; two having been aided by, but not supported in, the home. Number of children in school during the ten months, 15, 3 of whom were but one term, the remainder during the scholastic year.

Cost of books, tuition, etc., $88.47.

RUTH M. WOOD, Director.

I can not, Mr. President, so well state the difficulties under which this most needful work was prosecuted, in fuller detail, as by having read at the Secretary's desk the memorial of "The Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah Territory," addressed to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, during the present session of Congress, which forms the basis of the provision inserted by the committee and adopted by the Senate and now antagonized by the House of Representatives.

It is the same provision which I had read at the beginning of my remarks:

To the honorable the Senate Committee on Appropriations:

GENTLEMEN: The Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah Territory authorize me, as their representative, to ask of the national Congress through your committee—

First. An additional appropriation of $75,000.

Second. An expansion of the law to the status defined in the original memorial of the association to the Senate, namely, "the dependent classes of Utah Territory."

Third. That the law shall specify through whom the funds shall be drawn from the national Treasury.

Fourth. That special provision be made in the law for the "contingent" expenses of the association to the amount of $5,000, for use in the transportation of applicants to the home, to the States on leaving the home, for advertising, and such other expenditures as are necessarily incurred "in the establishment of the home."

That the basis of appeal for such aid may seem valid to your committee, I beg leave to submit the following data, which I have endeavored to limit to such facts as are necessary to a correct judgment as to the failure of the association to execute its original purpose.

On the 6th of August, 1886, $40,000 was granted by Congress to "aid in the establishment of an industrial home" in Utah Territory. As the representative of the association, on the adjournment of Congress I devoted six weeks' time to visiting the institutions of the East to ascertain the cost of mechanical appliances, plans for building, to secure teachers, specialists in the various departments. I went to Utah in October, 1887, to lay these plans before the association, and assist them to proceed at once to the erection of a suitable building. At a joint meeting of the board of control and the association, I was met by the ruling of the chairman of the board of control, Governor West, that the appropriation was made to the board of control, that the work of the association ended when the appropriation was secured.

Under this ruling the chairman of the board of control rented and furnished a temporary home.

Determined to do what was possible under existing conditions, the association met monthly and attempted to win the board of control to the recognition of the provisions of the law for industrial education and to the purchase of property and the erection of buildings. We attempted the impossible. To this date both the spirit and letter of the law and intent of the association have been violated by the board of control, in that neither industrial nor mechanical arts have been taught in the home.

The appeal of the association for funds to furnish such facilities has been denied. The intent of the association is defined in the letter of the law, "to provide means of self-support," not to support the pauper element, which alone has been done.

The better element of Mormon society—those whom it would be of value to lift to the grade of intelligent citizenship—will not accept charity. Yet only charity has been provided.

The association have furthermore been most seriously embarrassed by the ruling of the chairman of the board of control that a law to "aid in the suppression of polygamy" could be applied only to those already in polygamy. Hence only plural wives and their children have been admitted to the home.

The first annual report of the president of the association, made October, 1887, states: "One hundred and fifty-four women and children, within the last nine months, have come for help to the doors of the home. Twenty children have gone out well clothed to the best schools of the city. The number of applicants for the benefit of the home which were not admitted, because not strictly in conformity with the letter of the law relating to admission, although all were victims of the evil of polygamy is, during the named nine months, as follows: Forty-eight, besides these sixty-three women, have applied for a temporary home while seeking employment. Among those, were 'first,' or legal wives abandoned by their husbands for other and younger wives; women and girls unwilling to be coerced into polygamy; girls of polygamous parentage anxious to escape from the influences of Mormonism; women and children who are Mormons and came to Utah unaware that polygamy was an established practice here, and who abhorred its adoption, becoming impoverished and needing the very necessities of life, and thus applied for admission: all these have been rejected, although needy applicants." (See list of rejected cases.)

Under these conditions the association delegated me to go to Washington in February, 1887, and get the law amended so as to define the duties of the board of control and the status of the incorporation.

Senator EDMUNDS draughted the following new bill, which passed the committee, and only failed of becoming a law by the failure of the deficiency appropriation bill (of which it was a part) for want of time in the closing hours of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress:

"Industrial Christian Home: To aid the Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah in carrying on, under its articles of incorporation, the work of providing employment and means of self-support for the dependent women who shall have renounced polygamy, and their children of tender age, $40,000; and the unexpended balance of the appropriation for aiding in the establishment of an industrial home in the Territory of Utah, contained in the act of Congress approved August 4, 1886, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," shall be deemed a part of this appropriation; and the board of control mentioned in said former appropriation shall audit the expenditures under this appropriation, and report yearly to the Secretary of the Interior."

The early passage at the present session of the amended bill, lost in the Forty-ninth Congress, restores the management of the home to the association.

Immediately upon the passage of the law I went to Utah and remained a month. The association attempted, during that period, to purchase land and prepare for the immediate erection of suitable buildings in which mechanical and industrial pursuits could be taught, for the home is no longer an experiment.

By the non-action of the board of control as to the purchase of property, in this interval of eighteen months, real estate has quadrupled in value in Salt Lake City, and the appropriation is entirely inadequate to the needs of the present hour, $10,000 having been expended in the temporary home, which is, in the language of the committee (see report), "totally inadequate and deficient in room for the successful or otherwise opening and conducting of any one of the departments."

In view of these facts the association authorize me to ask of your honorable body the additional appropriation.

The expansion of the law to the "relief of the dependent women and children of Utah Territory" would most highly conserve the interests of all women who seek the protection of the institution.

The Mormon press has constantly charged that the Christian men and women of the association have been actuated by bitter hatred of the Mormon people, and only desire to get them within the home to execute vengeance.

I have had personal interviews with editors and leaders of the church, and they insist when we appropriate money for those who renounce polygamy we are buying disloyalty at a price. The same end will be subserved by specifying "dependent women and children whose cases shall be accepted by the board," since the gentile population is only a fraction and that fraction not in the list of "dependents."

For the gracious services of your committee, gentlemen, in the past the association returns most grateful thanks, but begs you to believe polygamy is no more a surrendered tenet of faith or practice than it was two years ago. One lady missionary, in a town of 6,000 inhabitants, last year visited in four hundred polygamous families.

On the second Sunday in March I visited the penitentiary in Salt Lake City and addressed a great host of polygamous brethren. These men are mostly incarcerated for a term of six months, and therefore many such groups have come and gone since the famous Rudger Clausen case, of which JOHN T. CAINE had the temerity to declare before the committee "it was the last of which he had knowledge."

I found in one cell, 10 by 13½, without floor, six women, three of whom had babies under six months of age, who were incarcerated for "contempt of court" in refusing to acknowledge the paternity of their children. When I plead with them to answer the court and be released, they said, "If we do, there are many wives and children to suffer the loss of a father."

In another cell were two girls, one fourteen, one sixteen, each married to her own father, both with babes, and yet polygamy is a lost art!

The editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, Judge C. C. Goodwin, than whom no man has more accurate knowledge of existing facts, states in an editorial May 27, 1888: "Quite 25 per cent. of adult Mormons in Utah are in polygamy, and very many of the best informed believe that 33⅓ per cent. are thus involved."

Gentlemen of the committee, as long as helpless women and innocent babes are in this hellish bondage let us as a nation never declare ourselves a free people until we have offered them possible liberty, through a national medium, which is beyond the control of the hierarchy which enslaves them.

Long years of suffering under the most helpless conditions are before thousands such as I have noted. Let us be as willing to liberate them by humane methods as to deliver them by the sword, which may be the sequel if we trifle, and I sometimes think a just God will ask this Christian nation to pay with its own blood the price of its indifference to the death groans of innocence through the last half century. Confidently do we ask, gentlemen of the committee, that you will strengthen our hands by an appropriation, by the expansion of the law, by the appointment of a disbursing agent from the association, if so your judgment concurs, for reasons which Governor West assigns in his report to the President. (See excerpt.)

We ask, furthermore, your careful attention to the accompanying records of the association in evidence of statements rendered, and to the list of accepted and rejected cases, in which lies the argument for the development of this enterprise.

Respectfully submitted.

ANGIE F. NEWMAN,
In behalf of the Association.

A list of some of the rejected cases referred to in the memorial of the association presented by Mrs. Newman is as follows:

REJECTED CASES.

Cases rejected by Governor West on the ruling of the law that only plural wives were included in its provisions:

First case.—Dolly Mitchell, fifty-third child of Bishop Mitchell; daughter of his seventh wife; mother had died; Dolly living in a polygamous family; was twelve years of age; on being rejected was employed as doorkeeper by the matron.

Second case.—Application made by Judge Henderson, Democratic judge of the Federal court, by letter, in substance as follows:

Mrs. David May; five children; Mr. May was employed in the silk factories of Glasgow, Scotland; was induced by missionaries of the Latter Day to come to Zion; arriving in Salt Lake found things at variance with the representations which had been made by the missionaries; was urged to go into polygamy; then resolved to leave the Territory.

The wife secured employment at the Continental Hotel, Salt Lake City; husband started East on foot by the Denver and Rio Grande Railway. The wife's health failed; took her five children and went to Provo for lighter work; found none; applied to the Morman Church for help; was refused; appealed to Judge Henderson, exclaiming: "Must I starve, and my little ones, in this land of liberty?" Judge Henderson attempted to find the Bishop of Provo. The bishop took the underground, lest this woman had given information concerning his plural relations. Judge Henderson then made application to the Industrial Home for the woman and her five children; case rejected by Governor West.

Third case.—Mount Pleasant—Application made by Grace Murphy, Presbyterian school-teacher. Girl fourteen years old whom I wish to get into the Home, and also a younger sister; have kept them both in my home three months. I sent Emma away with the weight of her soul resting upon me, but I could not keep her longer; I still have the sister. The mother of these girls was left an orphan in her infancy; was brought up by the bishop, a polygamist, who made her marry a sixty-year-old polygamist when she was twelve years old. She now has four husbands.

Fourth case.—Springville.—Application made by Hannah Breckinridge. Case: Second wife, sixty-three years of age, helpless in bed; no one to bring her a drink of water. No liberal has dared to help her but me, for they dread the attacks of the Mormons.

I am a widow, living alone with two daughters, and I am seriously threatened for the service I have rendered her. The Mormons have cut down my wood and drawn it away; they have fenced out the public road so I could not go to town to get supplies—all because I have given help to this Mormon woman. I know three or four other Mormon women for whom my heart is weeping. I wish the governor would send a detachment of soldiers to help them away. My home should shelter them. Ask the governor to assist me now and send commissioners to open the road.

This letter was taken to the governor and he declined to have anything to do about it, and rejected the cases.

Fifth case.—Pleasant Grove. Application made by the postmistress. Case: Old lady eighty-three years of age; came to Utah three years ago by request of Mormon relatives; has been abused and persecuted because she would not adopt Mormon practices. She was refused as not a legal applicant, but the old lady came to the home; said she was so unhappy she had to come, and the must take her. She is aunt to Bishop Brown's third wife. The matron wrote to Bishop Brown and asked what should be done with her. Answer by Mrs. Brown: "The bishop is in exile for polygamy. I don't want the old lady returned to me. The late law has thrown me on my own resources with five children. I can not take the burden." The governor said she could not stay over night in the home. The matron kept her five days; and now the Methodist Church are paying her board elsewhere.

To show further, Mr. President, the kind of work done by this institution, and the imperative need of sustaining it and furthering and extending its work, I give here a list of some of the cases admitted to the home, and the circumstances attendant upon them:

ACCEPTED CASES—INDUSTRIAL HOME—UTAH TERRITORY.

First case.—Amelia Chatterton is the daughter of Bishop Mitchell, who was missionary to England in 1854. Mitchell had seven wives and fifty-three children. Amelia was married at fifteen years of age, by command of her father, to Jonathan Chatterton, as his second plural wife. Chatterton was living with his third wife, to whom he had never been married until after the passage of the Edmunds law; he was then married in order to evade arrest for adultery. Amelia, the second wife, was many times whipped by both Chatterton and the first wife. Chatterton struck her in the face so she bore blackened eyes for days. Just before Lossie's birth Chatterton stood over her with a pick-ax and threatened her life.

Second case.—Mrs. Bross, second wife of William Bross. Had eight children, three living; first wife living; brought three children to the home.

Third case.—Mrs. Lorrenson, first wife, lived two months with Lorrenson after he went into plurality, then left with her four children. During the years she lived with Lorrenson she had to wash, beg, herself and her children go barefooted in cold weather, while he paid the most he could earn to the church. When he took his second wife he mortgaged the home to her because the first wife rebelled against his going into polygamy.

After leaving Lorrenson she lived for weeks on one meal a day—herself and children—and often put her three boys to bed crying for food. And then she sobbed all night because another wife had her home.

Fourth case.—Helen Larsen; twenty-four years of age; plural wife. George Q. Cannon performed the marriage ceremony. Mrs. Larsen earned her own living for nine years, and Larsen appropriated to himself a large portion of her earnings. When Mrs. Larsen was sick in bed Larsen left her alone in the house for days.

Fifth case.—Mrs. Neilson; three children; married in the endowment-house by Brigham Young. Can neither read nor write. Never been in a house of more than one room; oldest child fourteen; never been out of the town in which he was born.

Sixth case.—Lizzie Littgon; third wife; was married by Daniel H. Wells in the endowment-house after the passage of the Edmunds bill. Brought three children to the home, one nineteen months old. Lived with Littgon until the second day before she left. Gave birth to two children in celestial marriage before the legal marriage.

Seventh case.—Mary K. Peterson; came to Utah in 1885 from Sweden with a band of one hundred and fifty. Married in plurality January 1, 1886. Second wife entered the home June 6; daughter born in the home August 14. Later was sent to friends in Wisconsin.

Eighth and ninth cases.—Elizabeth Clawson and Anna Bell, both second wives, were assisted with money and sent to friends in Chicago and Denver.

Tenth case.—Mrs. Jennie Hitches; converted to Mormonism in St. Louis in 1883. Came to Utah and was entertained in the homes of President Taylor and Apostle Woodruff; here the only conversation heard was, in substance: "Marry, marry in plural marriage, and become a high priestess." Was taken in plurality by Hudson. He made application for her admittance to the home, and, on being questioned, said he had never married her.

To come now, Mr. President, more closely to the points in controversy between the two Houses, let me state what further the association has been doing.

In the first deficiency bill passed by the present Congress, approved February 1, 1888, Congress made the following provision, intending to meet the difficulties under which the "Industrial Christian Home Association" was laboring in prosecuting its work.

The provision is as follows:

INDUSTRIAL CHRISTIAN HOME.

To aid the Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah in carrying on, under its articles of incorporation, the work of providing employment and means of self-support for the dependent women who shall have renounced polygamy, and their children of tender age, $40,000; and the unexpended balance of the appropriation for aiding in the establishment of an industrial home in the Territory of Utah contained in the act of Congress approved August 4, 1886, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," shall be deemed a part of this appropriation; and the board of control mentioned in said former appropriation shall audit the expenditures under this appropriation and report yearly to the Secretary of the Interior.

It will be noticed, and this is important as bearing upon the present controversy, that by this provision Congress entirely changed the direction of its appropriation, and, in terms, adopted the "Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah" as the agency through which its appropriation should be expended.

The work of the association is recognized as the fundamental movement, and the appropriation of money is made to further that work and that movement.

Under this appropriation the association has gone on and purchased land upon which to erect a permanent building, to be occupied as a home for the persons received into it, has made a contract for the main building three stories in height, at a cost of $18,000, which contract is now being executed, the foundations of the building already, I think, completed, and the whole structure is expected to be finished by the close of the year.

The work is being prosecuted with a dispatch that is characteristic of private enterprise, and of course has no parallel in any work done by the Government.

The money provided in the two acts of Congress already passed, amounting to $40,000, will be nearly expended when the main building is erected, and the additional appropriation sought in the present bill will be needed under the estimates of the architect employed by the association for the purpose of adding another story to the main building and two wings three stories high, all of which will be needed by the association to develop the industrial part of its work.

The balance of the appropriation will be needed for the next year in fitting up the new building, in the employment of a moderate force to conduct the work of the association, and for the expenses of maintaining it.

As soon as the enterprise is fairly entered upon and the scope of its work can be seen the association will make, through the board of control, detailed reports of its work, and will be able to present definite estimates for future expenditures.

It will be noticed that in the present provision, which I have had read, a change is made covering language which will admit to the home all classes of women and children who are desirous of "severing their relations with the Mormon Church."

This particular language is not essential, and, if other important things could be agreed upon, other words could be adopted to cover the needs of the case.

In a late report made by Governor West, chairman of the board of control, the following statement is made:

The board of control unanimously hold that some other and better agency than the board can and ought to be selected as disbursing agent of the fund. The chief-justice and district attorney residing at the capital have their time fully occupied with the duties of their respective offices.

The other judges hold their courts away from here, and are compelled either to absent themselves from and close their courts or fail in attendance at the board meetings. The board of control recommend that the executive committee of the Woman's Christian Industrial Home Association of Utah be constituted a board for the purpose.

In accordance with this association the amendments now before the Senate provide for a new board of control, and the committee has selected the Utah commission as the most suitable organization to be intrusted with this power.

I have thus given, Mr. President, in a most imperfect fashion, as I am aware, the history of this important enterprise upon which the association referred to, sustained in its work by hundreds of thousands of noble American women, has embarked.

I do not pretend to deny that the amount of money required by this appropriation may seem large to some persons; but when the magnitude of the work is considered the amount appropriated is none too large. Indeed, Mr. President, if the sum were double I should be in favor of giving it.

The United States Government has in its charge the inhabitants of the Territory of Utah in some respects as wards of the nation. It appropriates large sums of money annually for the government of the people of that Territory. It pays for its executive, its judicial officers, and its Legislature. It has permitted for years the monstrous evil of polygamy to fasten itself, as the predominating force, upon the social institutions of the Territory, and when to-day Congress is asked to provide money for the relief of the victims of that institution, it can not shirk the responsibility, and is in duty bound to give money and to give freely.

I do not claim or pretend that this institution will in any great degree be self sustaining.

After it shall have been fully established, and its work known throughout the Territories of Utah and Idaho, which are embraced in its provisions, the women and the children who will apply to it for relief and for protection and for aid to enable them in time to become self-supporting will be numerous.

I notify the Senate that unless hostile influences impede and arrest and break up this great work Congress will be called upon from year to year to further appropriate in aid of the association.

For one, I shall not turn back the hand that I have set to this work so long as I remain here or so long as a single woman, now held in polygamous relation, desires to be encouraged and helped in her efforts to escape from that condition.

Mr. President, I have been stating the actual difficulties that have arisen in conference with the gentlemen who represent the House of Representatives, gentlemen of large experience, competent in every way, of the highest character, and our conferences have been conducted in the most amicable manner notwithstanding the differences we have found; and now I want to state what the real point of trouble is.

I do not know that we can agree as to amount. The House believes the proposition covers too much money. I do not believe and the Senate conferees do not believe it. I hope the Senate will insist upon this amount, and I believe it is all needed.

But an attempt is made here—and that is the vital controversy that stands now between the two committees—to take the management of this fund, the disbursement of the moneys appropriated by Congress, and the work that is going on in the erection of this building, away from this institution. The House conferees proposed and offered a proposition to take this away from the institution, to put it into the control of the Treasury Department, and have this building completed under plans to be devised by that Department, by the Supervising Architect's office, I suppose, and built and completed as a Government work.

Mr. President, that means, first, an indefinite delay. I have adverted to the rapidity with which the work of constructing this building is going on under such influences as surround a private enterprise, and the difference between that and all governmental work in erecting buildings; and I venture to say that if Congress should take away the completion of this building from this institution that has dedicated itself to this noble work, and has but one object in view, the speedy completion of the building—if Congress should take it away from that institution and put it into the Treasury Department, setting aside all the inducements that would be offered for delay, all the attempts of the leaders of the Mormon Church to affect the work of the Department, with an honest purpose under the machinery by which the work is done in that Department, it would be from two to three years before a single person could be admitted into that institution, and I for one, and the Senate conferees, stand on that ground, and will not agree to any such proposition.

It is proper that I should state it, because the Senate wants to know what the real point in controversy is. I should be willing to go to this extent: We furnish the appropriation, as Congress has already done, and the additional appropriations needed, and that this association, with its treasurer under bonds, as is provided here, shall disburse the money and complete the building to be used for this purpose, and that then, upon condition that this association shall go on and do this work and occupy and control the building, the title shall be vested in the Government. That I have no objection to. If the Government is appropriating for it, I have no objection to the title being vested in the Government. But to take away the work now begun by this association and transfer it to any Department of the Government, I do not care what it is, is, in effect, striking a blow in the face of this great enterprise and putting it under the ban of Congress; and every forlorn woman in Utah fluttering in the bars of her cage, seeking to emerge into the light and protection to be given by this institution, may give up at once any hope of anything being done at present.

Therefore it is, Mr. President, that I ask that the Senate in this matter shall agree to the report and insist upon its amendment, in order that a further conference may be had upon this important subject-matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it is due, I think, that I should state a fact which may not have appeared in the remarks of the Senator from Maine, and that is that the Mormons, the Mormon Church, the Mormon organization, or whatever else it may be styled, had no influence, directly or indirectly, in any shape, manner, or form, upon the discussion of this question which took place in the committee of conference, in my judgment—not a particle; and I do not believe that any member of the conference committee on the part of the House or on the part of the Senate was influenced by any such consideration.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any doubt that the Mormon authorities are bitterly hostile to this whole movement?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether they are or not. That they may be hostile to it may be true. If they are, I have no information in regard to that, nor have I ever had any information from any Mormon authority, directly or indirectly, that there was any hostility to it. If they have manifested any hostility to the movement, the influence has been exerted upon others than myself. Even their publications, if any such have been made, have not been furnished to me.

As I understood, the principal grounds of difference were as to how this money for the public building should be expended—whether it should be placed in the hands of this corporation, this benevolent institution, this charitable institution, or whether it should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be expended by him in completing the building. As I understood, that was the point of disagreement; and, further, I understood that so far as the amount of the appropriation for that building is concerned there would be probably no disagreement; and then so far as the management of the institution, the support of the institution after this building is completed under the Treasury Department, there would probably be very little difference of opinion.

I merely state this as a matter of justice and right in the premises.

Mr. TELLER. I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri what he understands the controversy is in this matter?

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator can not understand from what I have stated, and from an hour's speech by the Senator from Maine, I must confess that I despair of enlightening him.

Mr. TELLER. I do not. I confess I have listened with a good deal of attention; but I do not know whether the words which I find here, "who desire to sever their allegiance to the Mormon Church," constitute the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. That I consider as an objection. Yes, that was made an objection.

Mr. TELLER. That might be amended, I suppose.

Mr. COCKRELL. No doubt of it, and as I understand that was not a ground of absolute difference in the end. I will say to the Senator that that matter could be adjusted as far as that was concerned; but so far as the placing of the money to erect this building is concerned, I understood that there was a direct disagreement. The Senate conferees wanted it in the hands of this institution and the House conferees wanted it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. Then the question, according to that, is as to who shall control this fund after it is appropriated?

Mr. COCKRELL. As to the building.

Mr. TELLER. As to the building?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I am in full sympathy with this movement to assist these people in Utah. I can not say that I am in full sympathy with the words of this amendment, and it seems to me that it should be so changed that it would be less objectionable than it may be now to some. I confess that I have such a prejudice, if I may say it, against what I consider the interference with the freedom of religious belief in this country, that I do not care myself about seeing in a statute a provision that says we will enable somebody to leave or go into any church.

I am quite willing and quite anxious to vote for some provision of this kind that shall protect this class of people. Since I have been in public life there have been two very important bills passed with reference to the people of Utah. The last one I thought at the time of its passage, and I think now, trenches upon constitutional grounds. I thought it was harsh, cruel, and wicked, and I so said, and I withheld from it my vote. I complained then, as I had years before when the other bill passed, that we were breaking bonds that were existing between these people not rightfully, but actually, without any provision, without any attention being given to the protection of them when they were broken. For instance, a man has several wives, and each wife has several children. He is maintaining as best he can the relation of father to all these children and husband to these wives, and is enabled to maintain them perhaps in comfort. The moment that relation is broken it may not be possible for him to do this, and if it is, the chances are a thousand to one that he has no inclination to sustain the relation of a protector to those people who have parted with him.

There was every inducement held out to the women to adhere to the man, because there was nothing left for them but poverty and want. Everybody understands that in any country, no matter where, a woman with a few small children is the most dependent and helpless creature in the world. The very necessary care which she must give her children precludes her from earning a living, and we have made no provision whatever for her. Other nations that have dealt with this question, I believe, have always made provision for such a case, but we have made none. We insisted that the relation should be severed; we made it a crime not only for the man, but we made it a crime for the woman, and then we made no possible provision by which the woman could break this connection without meeting starvation and want or something worse.

So I am in favor of this, which I think is the first real—no, I will not say that, because I think the act of 1862 was a proper act; I think the act usually known as the Edmunds act passed later was a proper act, except that it did not go far enough; it ought to have contained some such provision as that; but this is a provision which supplements the other in such a way that I think it will be effective and at the same time merciful and right.

I should much prefer to see those words to which I have referred stricken out.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator was not present when I was discussing that part of the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I was not in. I was called out, and did not hear it all.

Mr. HALE. The words to which the Senator refers, "who desire to sever their allegiance to the Mormon Church," were not insisted upon by the Senate conferees; in fact, I may say that other words, which I think are these—can be agreed upon, and if there is any agreement between the two Houses can be used as the basis instead of the words referred to by the Senator. So there is nothing there that need prevent the Senator giving the amendment his hearty and complete support.

Dependent women and children of Utah and Idaho Territories—

Mr. TELLER. I was about to say that I should vote for the amendment even with these objectionable words in it, but I should prefer not to put them in, because I think the words in a statute of this kind are not good. Still, rather than see this appropriation fail, which, as I said before, I think is a proper step, a right step, and a righteous step, I should vote for it as it is; but if the committee would strike those words out and leave it "the dependent women and children of Utah and Idaho Territories," and leave it to the discretion of this charitable institution, I do not believe there would be any trouble about it. I should be very happy myself to see this amendment adopted, for I believe with the Senator from Maine that this is the true method of proceeding, and one which is in accordance with our ideas of justice and right.

These people, many of them, have formed these connections under circumstances that are quite different from what we usually understand such connections to be formed, and some of them that we do not appreciate and that make them almost, if not entirely, excusable so far as they are concerned, for they are people who have been brought up to believe that it is a religious duty, and we know very well that people can believe the most absurd things in the world, that men have gone willingly and committed murder, supposing they were doing a very meritorious act in the interest of religion; and so we can not account for the religious fanaticism of any people.

I should be very glad to see this amendment adopted, but I should also be very glad to see the words stricken out which I have suggested.

Mr. CALL. I voted for this appropriation, not only as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor when it was first considered, but also as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Senate. I objected to and would now object to and vote against the legislation of this body persecuting these people because they had certain religious views or views on the subject of religion which were opposed to my own and to those of our people generally. I consider that in all that legislation we not only violated the Constitution, but we violated all the principles of civil liberty upon which our institutions are founded. I have never changed that opinion. I think we went back eighteen hundred years in the progress of the world to the days of barbarism, to use the courts, the civil power of the State, to compel by force a change in the opinions of men upon the subject of faith or of their religion.

The Constitution says we shall take no action whatever, exercise no power of Government respecting the establishment of religion, and yet the language of this bill is plain and direct, offering inducements to leave the Mormon Church. We have forgotten even that we have no power to legislate upon the subject of a man's belief on the subject of religion, whether it be true or untrue, and so in all this legislation in which we have prepared a prejudiced jury, in which we have prepared a prejudiced judge, and selected him for the purpose of trying men of different opinions on the subject of religion from himself, we have violated not only the principles of the Constitution, but we have violated all the institutions upon which our present civilization is founded, and we only need to go a few steps further to introduce the power of the State to punish in direct terms a man for being a Methodist or a Catholic or a Presbyterian, or for holding some different form of faith from that which the dominant party in the State may profess.

But, Mr. President, I approve the principle of the legislation in this appropriation. If the Mormons are to be converted, or any other set of people, it is to be in accordance with the divine religion of Christ, by persuasive methods, and not by the exercise of power. The legislation of this body has done more to perpetuate polygamy and establish it by making martyrs of them than any and all other causes and instrumentalities that could have been brought together.

We live in an age in which the principles of Christian tolerance, the teachings of Christ that the sword is not the power to create opinion, to produce conviction, but it is argument, it is the preaching of the divine word, it is the missionary, and not the power of the sword and the power of the civil law. The law by which these courts are established and vested with unusual powers can not be distinguished from the exercise of the power of the state in creating the Spanish Inquisition as an arm of civil power to compel observance of a particular faith. The two are precisely the same, and no argument can distinguish between the legislation of Congress in respect to the Mormons and the exercise of the civil power of the state in the shape of the Inquisition to suppress another religion or faith, either by delegating it to an ecclesiastical body or exercising it directly.

The constructions of law under which these people have been tried and punished, if correctly reported, are a lasting shame and disgrace to our country and to the administration of the law, and to ourselves for permitting it to continue. I have seen it stated by persons said to be reputable in character and truthful that men and women have been convicted and sentenced for unlawful cohabition upon proof alone that they had contributed to the support of the families, the women and children toward whom they had at some former period of time sustained the polygamous relation, and that in other cases women had been sentenced and imprisoned because they thought it proper to refuse to disclose the name of the man towards whom they had sustained these relations.

But this legislation providing a home for the people who may be convinced that they are pursuing a wrong method of life and a criminal one, of providing a home for the women and children who may be left destitute in consequence of a change of life, met the approval of my judgment. It was in the line of persuasion, in the line of the only possible successful policy, of the policy convincing the moral sentiment which the Almighty has provided as the means of reformation for all men everywhere. It can not be that you can change opinion, thought, by power, by oppression, by persecution, by the sword, by compelling men to believe. This is the method of the stake, the iron boot, the fearful implements of the cruelty and crime of the Dark Ages, and these we adopted in place of the gentle persuasion of the divine Christ.

Mr. President, if the statements of the Senator from Maine are true, it is the severest arraignment of this body that could possibly be made. Can it be that the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives have sat here and allowed such a condition of things to exist as the instances described by him represent? Is it true that people convinced of the error of their lives and subjected to extreme cruelty have been compelled to remain in that condition for the want of even the ordinary necessaries of life? Is it true that children of twelve years of age are compelled to enter into polygamous and unlawful marriages and the Senate and the Senators from Maine and Vermont have quietly remained here providing no legislation but these denunciations of the Mormon people? If these statements be true, the evidence should be obtained and prompt legislation provided by which that evil should not exist a day longer—the evil of a people honestly desiring to conform to the laws and yet unable to do it because the laws have provided no efficient methods for their protection and their subsistence.

I am not ready to believe these statements. I do not believe that polygamy, however wrongful it is of necessity and in itself, destroys the natural love and affection which the Divine Being has implanted in the human heart, that charity can not exist where it prevails. We derive our religion from a polygamous people. I have been taught to reverence the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as a divine revelation and the characters they present as the highest types of humanity. And while we believe with the confidence of knowledge that our Christianity is the true and higher civilization and the only true religion, it is not necessary that we should halt and denounce those who differ from us in faith and practice. I do not believe that either amongst the Mormons or any other people surrounded by the influences of modern civilization such cruelties would be permitted.

There are two sides to these statements; the Mormons deny them, their representative denies them in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives. Travelers and men of high standing both in our own and foreign countries profess to have examined carefully into this subject and describe these people as a mild and truthful, industrious and virtuous people, comparing very favorably in many respects with the people of other countries save only in the permission for polygamous life and representing that to be limited in practice. I do not know anything as to the truth of these statements either on the one side or the other, but I am not willing to bear false witness against any one or to condemn without full and fair evidence on both sides.

I have never seen a Mormon except those who have been here before the two Houses of Congress, and it is only just to say that these had the appearance and manner of intelligent, educated, and kindly men. I have never known but one of their faith, and his family life in this community was in all respects like our own, and his charities and personal characteristics such as gave him respectful consideration and regard of excellent persons of our own Christian faith who are themselves of unblemished life and reputation. I am not willing, therefore, that my vote for this appropriation shall be placed upon the ground that these people are destitute of all the moral virtues and all the kindly sympathies of humanity.

I do not believe it. I vote for this appropriation because I wish to provide every possible agency to give full and free influence to the persuasive power of the divine teachings of Christ and furnish the opportunity to all who wish to leave the polygamous life to do so, basing the law to be enforced against the practice of polygamy amongst them as amongst other people in the spirit of fairness and justice, in gentleness and in mercy, and not with the cruelty and violence of either the religious or the political bigot. I have more faith in the persuasive power of the gospel of Christ and the Christian ministry than in all the terms of the law, even when enforced with the thumb-screw and the stake, the dagger of St. Bartholomew's massacre and Coligni's assassin, or all the thousand cruelties which stain the pages of history, and which we are beginning to repeat.

Mr. President, we had better enact some legislation in this direction. We had better ascertain the facts. I am in favor of an appropriation, however large it may be, to provide a home and subsistence and employment for any of these people who may be convinced that their methods of life are improper and unlawful. Opposed as I am to persecution and disgraceful persecution, if I had the power I would remove the judges and the civil officers who have been guilty of crime themselves, if the statements I have read be true, of a distortion of the law by the severity of their punishment of these people. I read an instance in the memorial presented in aid of this very bill of a woman and a child, a woman of eighteen years of age, I think, with an infant of three months, confined in the jail, and that infant dying of measles, because she would not reveal the name of the man with whom she had been led into this improper relation, suffering and dying, the memorial states, and there was no charity, no kindness from the judge or the marshal or any one towards this poor young mother confined there like a common felon, a disgrace to civilization and a disgrace to humanity and to those who have the power to correct it.

But, Mr. President, the question here is whether the public money shall be placed in private hands with no responsibility except by a bond for carrying out these purposes. In the English law it was found necessary to provide a system of visitation even of private foundations of charity. It was found that the abuses which followed these institutions in private hands were so great as to pervert and defeat the purposes of the founder until a power of visitation was exercised by the courts and prescribed by the statutes.

Why, then, should we depart from that course and vest the power of disbursement of this money in the hands of these individuals without any authority on the part of the Treasury officials to supervise or direct it? It seems to me that the answer is clear to those who sincerely desire the conversion of these people, who desire to furnish protection to those who wish to leave, who recognize the power of the Christian religion (which the legislation upon this subject denies) to convert and persuade those people who believe in Christ and Christ's religion and not in the persecutions which this body and the other House have established against these people. Those who believe as I do in Christ's commission "Go ye into all nations and preach the Gospel," and who desire the success of this charity and to protect these people when the power of the Christian faith may convert them, as it will convert them, would have the Government retain its control over the expenditure of this money.

If you choose to give this building or the use of it to this charitable organization, I shall have no objection, and should support a provision of that kind, provided they exercise that charity in the spirit of love and not of denunciation, not of hatred and bitter reproach; provided they remember that the evil of which they complain is not now for the first time known to the civilization of the world, that the Christian religion has been fighting it successfully for eighteen hundred years, not with the sword and the stake, but with the teachings of Christ, and that the religion of Christ alone has reclaimed hundreds of millions of people from the practice of the greater part of the world who have lived in polygamy and with whom it has been an institution—England and those who derive their civilization from her.

Mr. President, there has been too much of political persecution in this matter and too little of Christian faith and Christian practice. Let the Government appropriate its money, let it build this house, let it make ample provision for all who shall be convinced that the Christian system is the true one, and make it ample for the industrial education and subsistence of these people for a reasonable time, that this experiment may be promptly tried, but let it be done by the Government and under the supervision of bonded officers of the Government, and then, if we choose, give the management of this charity to these people whose purposes, I have no reason to doubt, are correct, and those of philanthropy and of good to mankind; but let it be required to be done in the spirit and according to the precepts of the religion of Christ.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I much fear that if for any reason, good or bad it may be in itself, the Senate should yield the point which their conferees hold to in the pending report, the assured and prolonged delay that will result in the completion of this building, whether upon the present plans or upon such new plans as the public architect may see fit to devise, will result in great advantage to Mormonism, and the American people will think this whole movement to be merely a device to accomplish that delay in the interest of the Mormon Church. I think it unnecessary that Congress should place itself at this time in a position which would be open to that misconstruction.

The scheme now being wrought out was adopted with great deliberation and consideration. This association, charitable to be sure, but under the control of as discreet men and women as any in the country, has been intrusted with the construction of this building. Plans have been made and the process of construction has been entered upon. Money has been expended upon these plans and upon the foundation—how many thousands of dollars I do not know, but some portion of the public money has been expended in the execution of the legislation of previous years.

There does not appear to be any reason why this building should be devised by the public architect, and the money expended under his supervision, which did not exist originally. We are but revising the action of a Congress as intelligent as our own, I take it, with the scheme partially perfected, well-nigh approaching completion, after having been long delayed by reprehensible opposition from the Territory of Utah, stimulated by Mormanism, but, as I believe, carried out very largely by the Government officials themselves; and there are many facts which will come to light if the discussion of this matter is prolonged, which will, perhaps, need explanation in the direction of what I suggest.

It seems to me that if we now arrest the progress of what we have entered upon it will come to be understood as done, and will be in fact something done, in the interest of Mormonism. It is what the Mormons want done at all events, and it is the only way in which they can delay the active and efficient operation of this all-essential means of extirpating their erroneous belief and their still worse practices in this country.

The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] for years has labored until we have upon the statute-book as efficient legislation operating by force upon the institution of Mormonism as we can possibly devise. At least I assume that if anything more efficient could be devised the Senator from Vermont would have had it brought to the attention of Congress. But in addition to that measure, supplementing it and indispensable in operation with it, the moral means, the intellectual processes which are absolutely indispensable for the extirpation of the powerful and injurious establishment of Mormonism, we find embodied in the institution which is now being considered by the Senate. Shall we arrest the prosecution of this institution and the benefits to be derived from it?

The Senator from Maine has given us some account of the earlier steps connected with the establishment of this institution. From the first time that I ever saw that great woman, Mrs. Newman, and listened to her exposition of the nature of the problem of Mormonism and of the institution which these women had devised and its relation to the problem and its eradication, it seemed to me that it was after all the great means which we must rely upon for success in the end. After the appropriate hearing before the committee to which Congress sent the resolution a report was made which was placed before the Committee on Appropriations. The cause was placed in the hands of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Maine, and since then under their care and direction it has proceeded thus far on its beneficent mission.

I entreat the Senate not to abandon this movement at the present time, not to consent to the proposition of the House, which, however plausible it may be on the surface, is, as I think, a direct measure of the Mormon Church to defeat the good that is to be accomplished by the destruction of Mormonism through the beneficent and efficient operation of this institution.

It is worth while for the Senate to adhere to its amendment, if need be, till the commencement of another session of Congress. It is better to lose the deficiency bill than to lose the appropriation for this institution. I hope that the Senate will adhere, and I hope that it will make such modifications as will be satisfactory to the Senator from Colorado, such as will enlarge, if need be, the scope of the operations of the institution, making whatsoever amendments in that direction anybody may see fit to suggest, but still adhering to the present plan of the construction of the building in order that it may be soon completed.

We know when Congress sets out to do anything in the way of public architecture the interminable delays which occur in every instance, the changes of plans, the insufficiency of appropriations, the additional appropriations, the controversies and frauds and difficulties of every description that arise. I believe it would be impossible to erect by public architecture a sanctuary in the city of Washington without there being some public scandal connected with it. When will the Library building be done? Is there any certainty that this building, if undertaken by the public architect and under public supervision, will be completed before the Library building will be done?

There is some necessity for the use of this building greater than the necessity for a building for the storage of our books. These destitute women fleeing as to a city of refuge to this institution need that it should be at once enlarged for their accommodation. Polygamy, I believe, is in no such danger from any other source as it is from the efficient operation of the institution that is now asking a slight additional appropriation.

I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate, but I feel earnestly upon this subject. I know that there are millions of the women of this country and of the men of this country who understand this whole problem and the relation of what we are now considering to its solution, who will feel more deeply any thrust at its progress by Congress than almost any other ill thing that we could do.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine to explain why it is and how it is that the disbursement of this money by this particular association is so important and so necessary to the objects of charity.

Mr. BLAIR. Because it would take some time; it might take five years' more time to complete the building by arresting the present plans and the work that is being done and turning it over to the public architect, who may have friends who want him to give them something to do. Who knows anything about the motive that may be at the bottom of this nonsensical proposal to make the change now, when we have got half through with our plan of action? What occasion is there for it? Is this business in the hands of people who are after money? Is there any fraud among these women and these benevolent gentlemen who are devoting their time without pay to the accomplishment of this great purpose? Is there a suspicion of it? There was time earlier to have suspected it. Are there any developments or any accusations or charges or suspicions which induce the suggestion of this change of plan of operations at this time? There can be no earthly cause for it except the delay desired by the Mormon Church and in the interest of the Mormon Church, possibly in the hope that future complications may arise and the whole institution be frittered away and this great effort, born of the purposes of the angels of heaven, may be defeated in furtherance of the purposes of these devils from hell. I do not see any use in it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. PADDOCK. Before the Senator commences, I should like to ask him a question. Has it not been quite usual here in the District of Columbia to make appropriations, to make grants or subventions, to organize private charitable associations, which have been expended by the officers of these associations without intervention on the part of the Government, and why is it that my friend in this case desires to make an exception?

Mr. CALL. I do not think that it ever has been the policy of the Government to appropriate large sums of money and put them in the hands of individuals for the purpose of erecting buildings for charity. There have been a few exceptions; but it is not the policy of the Government to put the public money in the hands of private and irresponsible persons to execute any great public work.

Mr. PADDOCK. These are not private persons. This is an incorporated association similar to those to which subventions have been made in the District of Columbia. The cases are exactly parallel.

Mr. HALE. I can furnish the Senate with forty instances where the Government has appropriated moneys to institutions organized and incorporated like this for benevolent and philanthropic purposes, to maintain them, to keep up their establishments, to repair buildings, and to erect their buildings for them. That has been done repeatedly. Before the discussion closes, and before this subject is ended, if any Senator requires it, I will see that the instances are produced.

Mr. CALL. I agree that that has been done; and I have voted for some instances of repairs and for the maintenance of charities. We give an annual appropriation to the Providence Hospital for taking so many patients and taking care of them, and there are various other institutions in the District of Columbia where that is done. But still I insist it is not the custom nor is it a good practice. When it can be avoided the Government should not establish a public work by putting a large sum of money in the hands of a private corporation. It is not the method in which the Government is usually administered.

I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire why is there a necessity for any change of plans? The money is disbursed from the Treasury Department. Why can not the same plans go on? Why can not the work progress without a moment's delay? Because you change the hands through which the money is disbursed, that has no connection with changing the plans.

Mr. BLAIR. I was led to make that suggestion because I have been informed that this change is desired to be made in order that the public architect may make a new plan, and that this business may be done by friends of other parties, and not by this institution. I do not care to be more specific unless forced to be.

Mr. CALL. I do not know anything about that. I know but one Mormon, I believe, out of the whole number.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not say anything about the Mormons.

Mr. CALL. I do not know what they desire or what they do not desire, but I wish to suggest that every proposition must have some reasonable conclusion to it; it must relate in some kind or degree to the subject under discussion. If it be true that the transfer of the disbursement of the fund for the construction of this building to the proper officers of the Treasury Department will have the effect of postponing this relief and this protection of the converted Mormons who desire to abandon their method of life, why not modify the provision so as to make some of it applicable to the lease and renting of houses in the present before the construction of this building, so as to afford the relief without interruption and without delay?

This building may be constructed according to the plans of this corporation by law, if you see fit to do so, and yet the money may be disbursed by the proper officers of the Government. I submit that there is nothing in the advancement of this work or its continuance in the highest state of efficiency that is in any manner whatever connected with the fact whether the money shall be disbursed by the officers of the Government or by private individuals. There is no connection between those propositions.

Mr. HALE. I have here a very late instance of partially completed legislation, precisely in the direction which the Senator from Florida declares Congress has not hitherto gone. I ask the Secretary to read what has just come to the Senate from the House of Representatives, a bill making an appropriation for the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10873) making an appropriation for the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the benefit of the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia, a corporation incorporated by act of Congress of July 9, 1888.

SEC. 2. That the sum herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the purchase of a site and purchase or erection of a suitable building for the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. It would not be possible to furnish an instance more completely in point than this, of a bill just passed by the House of Representatives, a body that objects to the proposition of the Senate upon the bill we have been discussing, and which has just passed a bill for an incorporation like this, for a benevolent purpose like this, appropriating a large sum of money for the specific purpose of buying a lot and erecting a building.

Mr. DAWES. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. This proposed act was this morning taken from the desk and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There is not any doubt that Congress has done this repeatedly. It never has done it in an instance where there was so much need and cause for action as the present condition in Utah discloses.

Let me say a word on this proposition that the House of Representatives urges to defeat this provision. Without in any way claiming to know what the motives of the conferees are, or laying any imputation upon them in the least, I may say that there can be but one object in diverting the appropriation of money from this association that has already embarked in the work which Congress has committed to it in the construction of this building, and that purpose is delay. It is not claimed that there is any reason why Congress should interpose. It is not claimed that there is any scandal by this association in the expenditure of the money already appropriated. It is not claimed that it is squandering the money. It is not claimed that every stroke of work done under it is not being done in good fashion, and that out of it an economical and suitable building for the purpose is not to be erected. No word of complaint of that sort has been uttered anywhere. Out of the clear sky, because it is not dared or ventured to oppose this appropriation in terms, in order to kill it comes this proposition which has nothing in it but delay. I want the Senate to understand that.

Mr. CALL. As far as I am concerned I have no particular objection to the provision passing in the shape in which the Senator from Maine desires it, but I wish to state that I did not say there was no precedent for such an appropriation of money. I say it is not the custom of the Government. I say it is not a good, wise public policy. It has been done in the District of Columbia, which is under the immediate supervision of Congress. There is some difference between this District and a remote Territory, which has a Territorial government and an autonomy of its own, even though it be subject to the supervising authority of Congress. But be it a precedent or not, except in the case of an established charity it is a bad precedent to appropriate a sum of money and put it in the hands of private individuals for the construction of buildings for a charity. The plan should be prescribed by the Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In whom is the title?

Mr. CALL. The title, I understand, is in this corporation; but it is proposed to place the title in the Government if so desired. Be that as it may, it is surely not a wise public policy, without limitations and conditions, to put a large sum of money in the hands of any number of persons or any corporation, however meritorious they may be.

The point in this matter is that the advancement of this work, this charity, the rescuing and protection of these people, the continuance of the charitable purposes of this corporation in its highest possible efficiency, granting all that is said for it, has nothing whatever to do with the disbursement of the money. The mere hands through which this money shall pass are immaterial to the purposes of the charity. If the building is constructed, and constructed with proper speed and diligence, and in a proper style and with proper conveniences, that is what the charity demands. It is not required that the money shall be disbursed by A or B or any one else. The singular part of it is that it is so insisted, not for the efficiency of the charity, but for the disbursement of the money by particular individuals, and the proposition manifestly has no connection whatever with the purposes of the charity. I myself am in favor of the charity, and I have no great objection to the provision passing in this shape.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me a single word?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. PADDOCK. There has not been a single dollar of the funds that have been used for this charity expended by the association. Every dollar of the money appropriated has been received, controlled, and paid out by the board of audit and control, specially designated by law to perform this duty, which is composed of the governor, the judges of the supreme court, and, I think, the marshal and district attorney of the Territory of Utah, all officials appointed by the Federal power and its representatives in Utah in respect to such duties as may be imposed upon them. Moreover, it is proposed by this amendment, this proposition, that the Utah Commission, which is within its jurisdiction as defined and fixed by law the accredited agency of the Federal Government there, shall hereafter have entire supervision of all contracts and all disbursements for and on behalf of this charity, in respect not only to the construction of the building for the use of the association in furtherance of the objects for which it was organized, but also as to whatever may be done afterwards in the conduct and the operations of the same. Certainly very few, if any, of the appropriations of a similar character in this district to which reference has been made have been more carefully guarded as to their expenditure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments which have not been disposed of by the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate insist upon its remaining amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I understood the conference report to retain for further conference the provision for the widow of Lafayette Dancy?

Mr. HALE. That is one of the items still in conference.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, with an amendment; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 9874) for the relief of administrator of Alfred Alcorn; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

YELLOW-FEVER SUFFERERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives on Senate joint resolution 110.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, October 2, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit from the Senate conferees the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from its amendment to the resolution of the Senate, and agree to the same amended as follows:

In lines 5, 6, and 7 strike out the words "in the relief of the suffering caused by yellow fever now prevailing in the State of Florida, or elsewhere in the United States," and insert the words: "whenever, in his opinion, such expenditure will tend to the eradication of the epidemic of yellow fever now prevailing in the United States, or its spread from State to State."

And the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAS. N. BURNES,
J. C. CLEMENTS,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is proper to explain that the representatives of the other House in this conference insisted that the House could not and would not agree to the use of the phrase adopted in the Senate resolution in direct aid of the sufferers from yellow fever, upon the ground, as they supposed and understood, that it was beyond the constitutional authority of Congress to do a thing of that kind, particularly as illustrated and illuminated and set forth in a message of the President of the United States to the last Congress, sending back without his approval a resolution providing for the distribution of seeds in a certain part of the State of Texas which had been suffering from a drought. In order to accommodate the solicitudes of the House of Representatives upon that subject, the conferees agreed to a paraphrase which means precisely the same thing, if the President of the United States possesses the discretion that we all impute to him. So we think we have accomplished the end without wounding the constitutional sensibilities of anybody.

The report was concurred in.

CIRCUIT COURT POWERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives concerning Senate bill No. 3234.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, October 2, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit the report on that bill.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be, and is hereby, established a circuit court of the United States in and for the western district of Arkansas, for the northern district of Mississippi, and for the western district of South Carolina, respectively, as the said districts are now constituted by law. And terms of said circuit courts, respectively, shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for the holding of the district courts in said districts, respectively, and terms of the circuit court shall be held also at Helena, in the eastern district of Arkansas, at the same times the district court is now required by law to be held; and also at the times and places in West Virginia where the district court is now provided by law to be held.

"SEC. 2. That said circuit courts, respectively, shall have and exercise, within their respective districts, the same original and appellate jurisdiction as is or may be conferred by law upon the other circuit courts of the United States. And all suits, causes, and proceedings now pending in the said several respective district courts, and also in the district court of the district of West Virginia, and also in the district court of the eastern district of Arkansas, held at Helena, in and concerning which the said district courts exercise circuit court powers, shall be transferred to and belong to the jurisdiction of said circuit courts, respectively, and shall be proceeded with accordingly.

"SEC. 3. That there shall be appointed for each of said circuit courts in this act mentioned, by the circuit court judge of the circuit in which said districts are respectively embraced, a clerk, who shall take the oath and give the bond required by law for clerks of circuit courts, who shall discharge all the duties and be entitled to all the fees and emoluments prescribed by general law. And the marshals of the United States in and for said respective districts shall act as marshals of said circuit courts, and the district attorneys of the United States in and for said respective districts shall discharge the duties of district attorneys in said circuit courts. Hereafter all appointments of clerks of circuit courts of the United States shall be made by the circuit judges of the respective circuits in which such circuit courts are or may be hereafter established; and all provisions of law inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 4. That said circuit courts, respectively, shall have power to make such orders and directions as shall be proper for the transfer from said district courts of all cases, proceedings, matters, records, files, and papers as by force of this act should belong to the said circuit courts.

"SEC. 5. That the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to courts in Arkansas and other States,' approved January 31, 1877, conferring upon the district courts named therein circuit-court powers, and section 571 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by said last-mentioned act, and all provisions of law inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

"SEC. 6. That hereafter in all cases of conviction of crime the punishment of which provided by law is death, tried before any court of the United States, the final judgment of such court against the respondent shall, upon the application of the respondent, be re-examined, reversed, or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error, under such rules and regulations as said court may prescribe. Every such writ of error shall be allowed as of right and without the requirement of any security for the prosecution of the same or for costs. Upon the allowance of every such writ of error it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court to which the writ of error shall be directed to forthwith transmit to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States a certified transcript of the record in such case, and it shall be the duty of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States to receive, file, and docket the same. Every such writ of error shall during its pendency operate as a stay of proceedings upon the judgment in respect of which it is sued out. Any such writ of error may be filed and docketed in said Supreme Court at any time in a term held prior to the term named in the citation as well as at the term so named; and all such writs of error shall be advanced to a speedy hearing on motion of either party. When any such judgment shall be either reversed or affirmed the cause shall be remanded to the court from whence it came for further proceedings in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court, and the court to which such cause is so remanded shall have power to cause such judgment of the Supreme Court to be carried into execution. No such writ of error shall be sued out or granted unless a petition therefor shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which the trial shall have been had during the same term or within such time not exceeding sixty days next after the expiration of the term of the court at which the trial shall have been had as the court may for cause allow by order entered of record.

"SEC. 7. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of November, A. D. 1888."

And that the title of said bill be amended to read as follows:

"An act to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and to provide for writs of error in capital cases, and for other purposes."

And that the House agree to the same.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JNO. H. ROGERS,
WM. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry; which was read.

On motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the said amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. BERRY.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9874) for the relief of administrator of Alfred Alcorn was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

LANDS IN DENVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, October 2, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In line 9 of said amendment strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the next nearest."

In line 25 of said amendment, after the word "respects," insert as follows: "saving the rights of any settlers claiming under any of the general land laws of the United States, who may be in possession at the date of the passage of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
L. E. PAYSON,
J. McKENNA,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of August 17, 1888, a report of the amount of lands of the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory, that have never been patented to any of the families or individuals of the Puyallup Indians; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. SMITH.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withhold that motion for a moment while I make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2579) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Andrew J. Smith, late colonel of the Seventh United States Cavalry and a major-general of volunteers, reported it without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withhold his motion for a moment until I can get the bill just reported put on its passage. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it does not require debate I will withhold my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill just read may be taken up for consideration. It will be read at length, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BERRY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

The Senator from Ohio now moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Before submitting that motion the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That, in view of the fact that the presence of Chinese laborers on the North American continent is incompatible with the welfare of the laboring masses of the white race, and inconsistent with the progress of modern civilization, and in view of the international difficulties and embarrassments likely to arise from the entrance or attempted entrance of Chinese laborers from contiguous countries into the United States in contravention and defiance of our laws, the President be requested to negotiate treaties with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and with the Republic of Mexico respectively, which will secure the co-operation of those governments in excluding such laborers from the North American continent and in preventing their entrance into the territory of the United States from the territory of either of such governments or of dependencies thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada desire the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

INVESTIGATION BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] of September 19, 1888, to report the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance have authority to employ a stenographer and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary in connection with matters referred to that committee for investigation, such expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Senator from Nevada to the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee will now be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert:

That the Committee on Finance have authority, in connection with matters referred to that committee for investigation, to summon witnesses, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer and such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers duly approved, and that said committee have leave to print the record and results of such investigations and its report and conclusions thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada desire that this resolution be now considered?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest to the Senator that the Committee on Finance will find it convenient to have the usual addition to that resolution, making any subcommittee of its number a committee of the Senate for the purposes therein indicated; otherwise they can not administer an oath unless the full committee is present.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that that was done soon after the organization of the committee, but there is no harm in doing it again.

Mr. HOAR. But this resolution gives this committee power to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and all that. Now, that can only be done by the full committee under the resolution as it stands.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a resolution to that effect has already been adopted.

Mr. HOAR. Not on this subject. It is none of my especial business, however.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will say that the Committee on Finance obtained all the authority necessary in respect to such investigations a good while ago, but subsequent to that time a subject-matter referred by the Senate to the committee for investigation has been referred to a subcommittee, the matter not having been before the committee at the time the previous authority was given, and the resolution that I offered was simply intended to cover such necessary expenses as might be incurred by the subcommittee in investigating the matter that was referred to it. That subcommittee is composed of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and myself.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses now reports a substitute for the resolution proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is a good one, that the authority should extend to the subcommittee.

Mr. HOAR. Yes. The substitute does not as it stands extend the authority to the subcommittee.

Mr. HARRIS. I think that is a good suggestion, and I hope the Senator from Nevada will adopt it.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest to amend the amendment by adding, after the words "the Committee on Finance," the further words "or any subcommittee of their number."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report being to amend by striking out and inserting, the Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the part proposed to be inserted. The proposed amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Finance" in the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to insert "or any subcommittee of their number;" so as to read:

That the Committee on Finance, or any subcommittee of their number, have authority in connection with matters referred to that committee for investigation to summon witnesses, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONDITION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am further instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] of July 26, 1888, to report it to the Senate with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original resolution will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate the operations of the Civil Service be authorized to continue during the recess of Congress the investigations directed by the resolution of this body of March 13, 1888, with all the powers and privileges conferred by said resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported from the committee will now be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add:

And all necessary expenses of such committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like to ask what investigation is referred to in that resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not want the resolution read. I only asked what the investigation was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the unfinished business.

STEAM-PRESSES IN ENGRAVING BUREAU.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance what progress is being made with the bill coming from the House of Representatives touching the removal of steam printing-presses from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is under examination by a subcommittee, and they are taking testimony constantly. No doubt the investigation has been somewhat delayed by the constant attendance of the members of the committee on the tariff investigation, but a great deal of testimony has been taken pro and con.

Mr. BLAIR. As the Senator is aware, there are reasons why as early a conclusion as possible on that subject-matter should be reached. The subject came to the Senate several months since in the form of a resolution, and now the bill is here and I hope it will be disposed of as soon as possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. That matter was placed in the charge of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. The subject referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire is the one that was intended to be covered by the resolution just passed providing for an investigation.

The matter has been referred by the Committee on Finance to a subcommittee composed of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and myself, for investigation. We have heard a large number of witnesses on one side of the question and are intending to hear at the earliest moment possible such other witnesses as we are informed it is desired to bring before us. The investigation is progressing as rapidly as the time and engagements of the Senator from New York and myself can possibly admit of.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator whether it may not be hoped that the investigation will be concluded and a report of the bill made to the Senate during the present session?

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not be able to answer the Senator until I ascertain something as to the probable number of witnesses that it is desired we should hear. I do not know how many, nor do I know what length of time it will take to hear them. I can only say that the subcommittee will proceed as rapidly as it can, consistent with the duties that devolve on the members of that committee.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that it will do so. I think it will be a subject of general regret if that bill should not be acted on at the present session of Congress.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Pending that bill, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, October 3, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, October 2, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk of the House, who said: The Clerk is in receipt of a telegram from the Speaker of the House dated Lynchburgh, Va., stating that he missed a railroad connection this morning, and is therefore unable to reach the city in time for the meeting of the House to-day. Under these circumstances it is the duty of the Clerk to call the House to order. The only business now before the House is the election of a Speaker pro tempore to preside during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. J. B. MCCREARY, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MCCREARY, on taking the chair as Speaker pro tempore, was greeted with applause.

Prayer was offered by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I offer the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to notify the Senate that the House has elected Hon. JAMES B. MCCREARY, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, as Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was adopted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family and important business.

To Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, for the remainder of the session, on account of ill health.

To Mr. HIRES, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEHLBACH, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILLIAMS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. PATTON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYES, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WISE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

POWERS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to present a privileged report from a committee of conference, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate No. 3234, entitled "A bill to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and agree to the same amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be, and is hereby, established a circuit court of the United States in and for the western district of Arkansas, for the northern district of Mississippi, and for the western district of South Carolina, respectively, as the said districts are now constituted by law. And terms of said circuit courts, respectively, shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for the holding of the district courts in said districts, respectively. And terms of the circuit court shall be held also at Helena, in the eastern district of Arkansas, at the same times the district court is now required by law to be held; and also at the times and places in West Virginia where the district court is now provided by law to be held.

"SEC. 2. That said circuit courts, respectively, shall have and exercise, within their respective districts, the same original and appellate jurisdiction as is or may be conferred by law upon the other circuit courts of the United States. And all suits, causes, and proceedings now pending in the said several respective district courts, and also in the district court of the district of West Virginia, and also in the district court of the eastern district of Arkansas, held at Helena, in and concerning which the said district courts exercise circuit-court powers, shall be transferred to and belong to the jurisdiction of said circuit courts, respectively, and shall be proceeded with accordingly.

"SEC. 3. That there shall be appointed for each of said circuit courts in this act mentioned, by the circuit court judge of the circuit in which said districts are respectively embraced, a clerk, who shall take the oath and give the bond required by law for clerks of circuit courts, who shall discharge all the duties and be entitled to all the fees and emoluments prescribed by general law. And the marshals of the United States in and for said respective districts shall act as marshals of said circuit courts, and the district attorneys of the United States in and for said respective districts shall discharge the duties of district attorneys in said circuit courts. Hereafter all appointments of clerks of circuit courts of the United States shall be made by the circuit judges of the respective circuits in which such circuit courts are or may be hereafter established; and all provisions of law inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 4. That said circuit courts, respectively, shall have power to make such orders and directions as shall be proper for the transfer from said district courts of all causes, proceedings, matters, records, files, and papers as by force of this act should belong to the said circuit courts.

"SEC. 5. That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to courts in Arkansas and other States," approved January 31, 1877, conferring upon the district courts named therein circuit-court powers, and section 571 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by said last-mentioned act, and all provisions of law inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

"SEC. 6. That hereafter in all cases of conviction of crime the punishment of which provided by law is death, tried before any court of the United States, the final judgment of such court against the respondent shall, upon the application of the respondent, be re-examined, reversed, or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error, under such rules and regulations as said court may prescribe. Every such writ of error shall be allowed as of right and without the requirements of any security for the prosecution of the same or for costs. Upon the allowance of every such writ of error, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court to which the writ of error shall be directed to forthwith transmit to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States a certified transcript of the record in such case, and it shall be the duty of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States to receive, file, and docket the same. Every such writ of error shall, during its pendency, operate as a stay of proceedings upon the judgment in respect of which it is sued out. Any such writ of error may be filed and docketed in said Supreme Court at any time in a term held prior to the term named in the citation as well as at the term so named; and all such writs of error shall be advanced to a speedy hearing on motion of either party. When any such judgment shall be either reversed or affirmed the cause shall be remanded to the court from whence it came for further proceedings in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court; and the court to which such cause is so remanded shall have power to cause such judgment of the Supreme Court to be carried into execution. No such writ of error shall be sued out or granted unless a petition therefor shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which the trial shall have been had during the same term or within such time, not exceeding sixty days next after the expiration of the term of the court at which the trial shall have been had, as the court may for cause allow by order entered of record.

"SEC. 7. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of November, A. D. 1888."

And that the title of said bill be amended to read as follows: "An act to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and to provide for writs of error in capital cases, and for other purposes;" and that the House agree to the same.

JOHN H. ROGERS,
WILLIAM E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees, submitted in accordance with the rule, was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the Senate and House on Senate bill 3234, make the following statement of the effect of the report agreed upon by the conference committee.

The effect of the agreement of the conference is to combine the bill of the Senate with the amendment of the House, thus presenting a bill which provides that circuit courts shall be held at Helena, in the eastern district of Arkansas, Fort Smith, in the western district of Arkansas; for the northern district of Mississippi, the western district of South Carolina, the district of West Virginia at Charleston, Clarksburgh, and Wheeling, at all of which places district courts, with circuit court powers, are now held, and at Clarksburgh, where a district court is now held, but which has no circuit court powers, whereby all these courts are put on the same footing with all other courts, and the judicial system in this regard rendered uniform throughout the United States. It also provides for writs of error, in capital cases, to the Supreme Court of the United States, and prescribes the practice in such cases.

A section is added, providing that the act shall go into effect from and after the 1st day of November, A. D. 1888.

JNO. H. ROGERS,
JOHN S. HENDERSON,
WM. E. FULLER.
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the conference report is unanimous, although one member of the Senate and one member of the House was not present at the time it was concluded, and could not sign it. If there is any matter requiring an explanation which is not embraced in the statement accompanying the report, which I do not think is the case, I shall be very glad to answer any question which gentlemen may desire to propound. If not, I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that let me ask a question. I understand this is a unanimous report.

Mr. ROGERS. It is, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. It is the unanimous report, although the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] and Senator VEST were temporarily absent and did not sign the report; but it is agreed upon by all the conferees, and the statement of fact is signed by all of them.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the report was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT TO LAND LAWS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider that bill now. I will state that this is substantially a part of the general land bill already passed by the House, and there is no objection to it. It has passed the Senate in this form, and I ask that it be taken up and considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

That any person who has not heretofore perfected title to a tract of land which he has made filing upon under the pre-emption law or entry of under the homestead law, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding one quarter-section of public land subject to such entry, such previous filing or entry to the contrary notwithstanding; but this right shall not apply to persons who perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws already initiated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. For the purpose of an amendment I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TURNER], retaining the floor except to permit him to do so. He desires to make an amendment, which was also passed upon by our committee, and seems satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 2 of the bill:

"That whenever it shall be made to appear to a register and receiver of any public land office, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, that any settler upon the public domain under existing law is unable by reason of drought, whole or partial destruction of crops, sickness, or other unavoidable casualty to secure a support for himself, herself, or those dependent upon them, then such register and receiver may grant to such settler a leave of absence from the claim upon which they have filed for a period not exceeding one year at any one time; and such settler so granted leave of absence shall forfeit no rights by reason of such absence, provided that the time of such actual absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say simply to the House, in order that it may understand the purport of this amendment, that Congress has recognized from time to time in the past, by the adoption of similar measures of a temporary character, the necessity for granting leave under such conditions as this amendment prescribes. Several times in the past leave has been granted to the homesteaders upon the frontier to be absent from their claims for a certain length of time on account of drought or other casualties. The trouble, however, with temporary measures is that frequently the dry weather comes upon one section of the frontier, which the House will remember extends from the British possessions to the Gulf, when Congress does not meet until the following December; and when dry weather strikes any portion of the frontier and the crops are necessarily destroyed, the homesteader is compelled to abandon his settlement for the time being in order to secure a living. The object of this amendment, therefore, is to give the registers and receivers of the public land office permission to grant these leaves of absence on account of drought or other casualty to the homesteaders; but it also provides that any such time during which the leave of absence is granted shall not be taken from the time that they are required to live upon the homestead before final proof. I apprehend that there is no objection to the provision. It is a permanent instead of a temporary measure.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DORSEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does not the bill which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate, the public-land bill, provide for leave of absence?

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. In reference to that——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HERMANN. I offer the following as section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all public lands heretofore designated as double minimum under the homestead and pre-emption laws are hereby reduced to the uniform price of $1.25 per acre.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act any homestead settler who has entered less than one quarter-section of land may enter other and additional land lying contiguous to the original entry, which shall not, with the land first entered and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 160 acres; or if such person so elect he or she may surrender the lands so entered to the United States for cancellation and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead law the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made; and any person who may make said additional entry, or the new entry after surrender and cancellation, shall be allowed to do so without payment of fees and commissions; and the residence and cultivation of such person upon and of the lands embraced in the original entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land entered in his additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the time of residence and cultivation required by law: Provided, That if final proof of settlement and cultivation has been made for the original entry when the additional or new entry is made, then no further proof shall be required and patent shall issue.

Mr. PEEL. I only desire to say that this amendment has been approved by the committee.

Mr. McRAE. This amendment is substantially one section of the general bill. It is just and proper and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask a question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], who introduced this amendment, and also of the gentleman who called up the bill [Mr. McRAE], and that is, does this allow an additional homestead to be made of land by the homesteader?

Mr. McRAE. It does not unless contiguous or the other is canceled; it gives those outside of the railroad limits the same privilege as those inside.

Mr. NELSON. Because if it does, it would require an addition to the land-scrip.

Mr. McRAE. It does not allow scrip at all. The substance of the amendment has had the approval of the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. McRAE. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McRAE. I ask that a conference with the Senate on the amendments be requested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNN. I think that is scarcely in order at this time. The Senate may agree to these amendments.

Mr. McRAE. I withdraw the request for a conference.

BRIDGE ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11338) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River at Gadsden, in the State of Alabama, and that it be considered at this time. There are some amendments offered by the Committee on Commerce. I ask the adoption of these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Anniston and Cincinnati Railroad, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, having constructed in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary of War a bridge, and approaches thereto, over the Coosa River, at or near Gadsden, in Etowah County, on a direct line from Anniston, in Calhoun County, to Attalla, in Etowah County, in the State of Alabama, said company is hereby authorized to keep and maintain the same. Said bridge shall be maintained so as to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation by which it is built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers upon conditions to be agreed upon between said corporation and the county commissioners' court of the said county of Etowah and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the bridge authorized under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States. That no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mail, troops, and munitions of war of the United States, or for through railway passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile for their transmission over the railroad leading to said bridge, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge for postal-telegraph purposes; that the said bridge shall, either by draw, span, or otherwise, provide and secure a free and unobstructed passage-way to all water-craft navigating said river at the point aforesaid: Provided, That said bridge authorized by this act being constructed as a draw-bridge the draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signals for the passage of boats or vessels, and said corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railway companies, or any one of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters in issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon the hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 4. That the bridge authorized under this act having been built and located under and subject to the regulation for the security of navigation of said river, such as the Secretary of War has prescribed; and to secure that object the said company having submitted to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval the design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the said plan and location of the bridge having been approved by the Secretary of War, it is hereby provided that should any change be made in the plan of said bridge such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and if any litigation shall be had in regard to said bridge, the same shall be in the circuit court of the United States in whose territorial jurisdiction said bridge or any part thereof is located.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and any alterations or changes that may be required by the Secretary of War in the bridge constructed under this act shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same at its own expense.

The amendments proposed by the committtee are in section 4, lines 1 and 2: strike out "having been" and insert "shall be;" also, in lines 2 and 3 of the same section, strike out "the regulation" and insert "such regulations;" in line 4, after the word "river," strike out the word "such;" in the same line, strike out the words "has prescribed" and insert "may prescribe;" in lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "having submitted" and insert the words "shall submit;" in line 11, after the word "and" strike out "the" and insert "until;" in line 12, strike out the word "having" and insert "shall have;" in lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "it is hereby provided that should any" and insert "said bridge shall not be built; and if any;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 4. That the bridge authorized under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval the design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and until said plan and location of the bridge shall have been approved by the Secretary of War, said bridge shall not be built; and if any change be made in the plan of said bridge such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and if any litigation shall be had in regard to said bridge, the same shall be in the circuit court of the United States in whose territorial jurisdiction said bridge or any part thereof is located.

It also proposed to add the following as section 6 of the bill:

SEC. 6. That if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within one year from the passage of this act, and be completed within three years from the same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease, and this act shall be null and void.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 869) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the House concurrent resolution to print the report of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum for 1886 and 1887.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 101) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions for sale.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 210) authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2696) for the relief of John J. Crooke; and

A bill (H. R. 5248) for the relief of the American Grocer Association, of the city of New York.

The message further announced that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 577) for the relief of the American Grocer Association, of the city of New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. HAMPTON as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate non-concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. JONES as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3597) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas;

A bill (S. 3573) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida;

A bill (S. 3485) restoring the homestead right of Charles Weitfle; and Joint resolution (S. R. 112) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy, at West Point, Henry Lecomte, of Switzerland.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon;

A bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman; and

A bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering.

ALFRED ALCORN.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 9874, for the relief of the administrator of Alfred Alcorn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the administrator of Alfred Alcorn, of Lincoln County, Kentucky, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $330, for property taken and used by the United States troops during the late war.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9874) for the relief of the administrater of Alfred Alcorn, report as follows:

In August, 1862, the Eighth Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers took from the decedent, at or near the town of Hustonville, Lincoln County, Kentucky, three horses, assessed at $110 each.

Claimant filed his claim in the office of the Quartermaster-General, under the act of July 4, 1864. The claim was referred to an agent for examination and report; and on June 28, 1884, the agent reported that the horses were taken from the claimant and turned over to Company C, Eighth Kentucky Cavalry, and recommended that the claimant be paid $330, provided the loyalty of the decedent is established.

The claim was disallowed on May 22, 1885, by the Quartermaster-General, for the reason that he was not satisfied as to the loyalty of the decedent.

Your committee are satisfied that great injustice was done the claimant, and that he was a loyal citizen, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROCKWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AID TO SUFFERERS FROM YELLOW FEVER.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report. The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. 110) entitled "Joint resolution in aid of sufferers from yellow fever," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the resolution of the Senate, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words "in the relief of the suffering caused by yellow fever now prevailing in the State of Florida or elsewhere in the United States" and insert the words "whenever in his opinion such expenditure will tend to the eradication of the epidemic of yellow fever now prevailing in the United States, or its spread from State to State;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES N. BURNES,
J. C. CLEMENTS,
THOMAS RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
WM. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KILGORE. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me for a moment. I am not going to make any fight against this resolution, but I want to submit a point of order. If gentlemen have not chosen to pursue the proper rule to get this report before the House, then of course they must take the consequences, and my point of order goes to that question. It will be remembered that the Senate passed a joint resolution authorizing the President to expend $100,000 for the relief of the yellow-fever sufferers. That resolution came to the House, but it was not considered by the House; on the contrary, the House refused to consider it. Subsequently a resolution entirely different in terms and for an entirely different purpose, appropriating $100,000, did pass the House and was sent to the Senate.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Texas is in error as to the facts, and probably I had better correct him at this point.

Mr. KILGORE. I would rather the gentleman would wait until I get through.

Mr. BURNES. Perhaps you had better let me make a correct statement of the facts now.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me make my statement and then you can make yours.

Mr. BURNES. All right.

Mr. KILGORE. That resolution, I say, went to the Senate, and the Senate, on motion of Senator EDMUNDS, I believe, refused to concur in the House resolution and asked for a committee of conference.

Now, the point I desire to submit is that that was not an amendment to the Senate resolution. The Senate could, of course, reject the House resolution; but it was not competent for them to appoint a conference committee upon it, because it was not an amendment to the resolution passed by the Senate. It may be contended that it was in the nature of a substitute, but it was for an entirely different purpose from the Senate resolution, and I raise the point of order that it was not properly before a committee of conference, because there was no disagreement between the two Houses upon any proposition.

Mr. BURNES. My friend from Texas is in error simply with regard to his facts. I presume that his point of order would be good if his facts were good. The Senate resolution came over to the House and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations, after considering the joint resolution sent here from the Senate, reported a resolution as a substitute which was in the nature of an amendment to the original Senate resolution, and the substitute, or the amendment—because it was nothing but an amendment of the joint resolution sent over here by the Senate—was considered in the House and passed, and was sent back to the Senate as an amendment to the Senate joint resolution. Hence the necessity for the conference.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the Senate non-concurred in the substitute adopted by the House and asked for a conference?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] also stated that the House refused to consider the Senate resolution. If my memory serves me right, the gentleman from Texas himself was the only objector to its consideration. I merely suggest that objectors ought to have long memories.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, the position of the joint resolution and the circumstances attending its passage through this House have been correctly stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] is mistaken in his statement that the resolution was not considered by the House. The Senate joint resolution came into this House and, upon a request made by me for unanimous consent for its consideration, the gentleman from Texas objected; whereupon the joint resolution, under the rule, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee reported back an amendment in the nature of a substitute. That substitute passed the House and was sent to the Senate. The Senate non-concurred in the amendment, and hence the conference. So that the resolution is now properly before the House, and the question is upon the adoption of the conference report. I desire to take this opportunity——

Mr. BURNES. I suggest to the gentleman from Florida that he wait until the Chair rules upon the point of order.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] insist upon the point of order?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then I will wait for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I want to make some observations in reply to what has been said here before the Chair rules upon the point of order. I do not disagree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] nor with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] as to the facts in this case, but the understanding was that the Senate resolution was objected to because it was not thought to be in conformity to the Constitution of the United States.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] has stated the facts as I remember them. The matter went to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee reported an original resolution which was supposed to be in harmony with the Constitution—a resolution completely ignoring the proposition contained in the resolution which came from the Senate.

Now, I wish to submit this view of the question: Suppose this resolution had been considered and defeated in the House, then the resolution which was reported by the Appropriations Committee and which passed the House would have been in order, because it was an entirely different proposition from that which came from the Senate. If the Senate resolution had been defeated, and it had been competent to present the resolution reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and it had been found to be in order, then, I submit, it would not have been in order for the Senate to non-concur in it as an amendment or a substitute and ask for a conference committee. I therefore submit that this matter is not properly before the House.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think it necessary to occupy the time of the House in discussing this subject with reference to the understanding as to what transpired when this bill was before the House on a former occasion.

My recollection is very clear that the circumstances have been very accurately stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. That gentleman had charge of the bill, was specially careful to adhere to the rules of the House, and I feel justified in asserting that he does not often make parliamentary mistakes.

I am surprised that any member of this House should attempt to enforce such a point of order at such a time as this, and for the purpose of defeating a bill which I am confident has the approval of the entire country. There can be no doubt that the point of order is not well taken, and should be and will be overruled.

Mr. BURNES. I beg to submit to my friend from Alabama that if he will suspend his remarks upon the merits of the proposition until the point of order shall be settled he shall then have time for discussion.

Mr. WHEELER. I am quite confident the point of order will be overruled, and was afraid I would not have a chance. [Laughter.]

I presumed that after the point of order was settled the gentleman in charge of the resolution would call the previous question, and I desired before that was done to express to the House my views of the great importance of the immediate passage of the measure.

Mr. BURNES. I assure my friend he shall have a chance.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall detain the House but a moment. I wish to disabuse the minds of some gentlemen who appear to regard this measure as solely for the benefit of the locality where yellow fever now exists.

The scope and purpose of the bill is more far-reaching. It is to prevent the spread of this deadly disease. It has for its purpose the protection of the people of New York and Pennsylvania in the East as well as the people of California in the West.

It is to protect the people of all the States, especially including those of the State of Texas.

The sentiment of the country demands immediate action, and I feel confident our constituents will neither countenance nor sanction any further motions of a dilatory character.

I think the resolution should pass by the unanimous vote of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that, even if the point of order could be raised, it comes too late; it should have been raised before the committee of conference was appointed. The committee has been appointed on the part of the House and the Senate, and has made its report. It is now too late to make a point of order upon the report of the committee. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time to my friend from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] as he may desire.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to express to this House the thanks of the people whom I have the honor to represent for the liberal spirit exhibited here by the representatives of the country in amply providing money for combating, as far as possible, the scourge of yellow fever in the State of Florida. Like most of the gentlemen here, I do not know when Congress intends to adjourn——

Mr. WHEELER. After we pass the tariff bill.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will, however, consult with the authorities of the Government and ascertain whether or not sufficient money has been appropriated to carry out during a recess of Congress (if there should be such a thing) the intention of the Government in reference to this subject. If the amount of money should not be deemed sufficient, I will, by bill, resolution, or otherwise, bring the matter again before this House. I feel sure that this body is not disposed to be niggardly on this question; that it appreciates the importance of restricting as far as possible the spread of yellow fever and alleviating the sufferings from it, not only in the State of Florida, but in the other sections of the country which are reported to be infected.

I again return thanks, on behalf of the people I have the honor to represent, for the liberality exhibited by Congress in this matter.

Mr. BURNES. I call the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WARNER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FORAN, indefinitely.

To Mr. KELLEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KERR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

CEMETERY LAND IN DENVER, COLO.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to make a privileged report. I present a conference report upon the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend "An act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In line 9 of said amendment strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the next nearest."

In line 25 of said amendment, after the word "respects," insert as follows: "Saving the rights of any settlers claiming under any of the general land laws of the United States who may be in possession at the date of the passage of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

L. E. PAYSON,
JOSEPH McKENNA,
Managers on the part of the House.
HENRY M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees, submitted in accordance with the rule, was read, as follows:

The effect of the report of the conference committee herein will be:

The first amendment: Strikes out the words "and for such other legitimate and proper purposes," thus limiting the use of the land covered by the section to park purposes if it shall cease to be used as a cemetery.

The second amendment: Perfects method of selecting indemnity lands so they are in harmony with other States.

The third amendment: Merely amends the title.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not care to make any explanation of this matter unless it is called for. The measure has been unanimously recommended by the Committee on Public Lands. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Illinois make a brief explanation of the object of the original bill?

Mr. PAYSON. It was to correct an error in the grant of about 40 acres by a prior Congress to the city of Denver for cemetery purposes. A misdescription of the land was made, and this is to correct that misdescription. It was provided in the original bill that the land should be used for cemetery or other proper purposes under the city council of Denver. It was thought in the Senate that in the lapse of years and by the growth of the city they might not want it for cemetery purposes, and that it might be disposed of to private individuals. The Senate struck that out and provided in its stead that the land should be used for cemetery or park purposes and for that alone.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is there any provision requiring this property to revert to the General Government in case it is not so used—that is, for cemetery or park purposes?

Mr. PAYSON. As I have stated, the original act provided that it should be for cemetery purposes. This bill provides, if not used for that purpose it may be used for park purposes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is there anything in the bill providing for the forfeiture to the Government in case it is used neither for cemetery nor for park purposes?

Mr. PAYSON. Not in terms, but it is restricted to those two uses by the terms of the bill. The original bill provided this land should be used for cemetery purposes, and this is only an amendment of that original act providing it may be used for cemetery or for park purposes.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. There is a bill (S. 423) to enable the State of Colorado to select indemnity school lands, which has been referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and I move that the bill be taken up and laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair). The usual motion in reference to a Senate bill is that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. PAYSON. I will so amend my motion and call up the Senate bill, and move that it be indefinitely postponed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTEAU RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. ROGERS. I move, by unanimous consent, to call up the bill (H. R. 11107) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Arkansas."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.," approved June 18, 1808, be amended as follows:

"That the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, or such other court of the United States as may have jurisdiction over the Indian Territory in which said bridge is located, shall have jurisdiction over all controversies arising between the said Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company and the Choctaw tribe of Indians; and said court shall have like jurisdiction without reference to amount in controversy over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nation or tribe of Indians and said bridge company; and, also, over all controversies which may arise between the stockholders and the company, and among each other; and the civil jurisdiction is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian nation without distinction of citizenship as to parties so far as the same may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I understood the Clerk to read the date in the bill as 1880.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the bill it is 1808.

Mr. ROGERS. It should be 1888; and I move to make that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The report (by Mr. CRISP) was read, as follows:

The bill passed at this session authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, failed to determine what court should have jurisdiction to hear any controversies that might arise between the bridge company and the Choctaw tribe of Indians, between the bridge company and the inhabitants of the Choctaw Nation, and between the stockholders and the bridge company. This bill vests such jurisdiction in the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, or such other court of the United States as may have jurisdiction over the Indian Territory in which such bridge is located.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTRA MONTH'S PAY TO EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask, by unanimous consent, to submit the following joint resolution (H. Res. 228).

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives one month's extra pay.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively, are hereby directed to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives who are now borne on the annual and session rolls of their respective Houses one month's extra pay, at the compensation now paid them by law, and a sum sufficient to pay same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and which sum shall be immediately available.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish the resolution to be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BURNES. It seems to me, if it is to pass, this resolution should cover the Capitol police as well as the others. Let us treat all alike. I offer an amendment to embrace the Capitol police.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will accept that amendment, and would have included it if I had had time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Maine accepts the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not know whether an amendment can be accepted in that way. But I will ask how much money this resolution carries? I should like some member who knows to tell me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the amendment objected to?

Mr. PAYSON. How many policemen are there and how much will it carry? [After a pause.] No one seems to know.

Now, I wish to submit an observation. I have never voted for one of these resolutions since I have been in Congress, and do not propose to.

Mr. LAWLER. I understand there are thirty-three policemen attached to the Capitol.

Mr. PAYSON. How much salary do they get?

Mr. LAWLER. Seven hundred and fifty dollars, I think, each.

Mr. PAYSON. Why not include the policemen? A number of gentlemen about me have been kept here for a long time, and they, too, would be glad to have their salaries increased in the same way.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say in response to my friend from Illinois that the members of Congress of the United States have at least some mileage to pay their way home. This the employés of this body do not get. In the second place, this is a most protracted session, extending already over some ten months. These men have been in attendance here for seventy-three night sessions, and the members of Congress, and not the employés who are to be paid for this service, are responsible for the duration of this session and for the extra work that these men have had imposed upon them.

Now, sir, it has long been a custom, ever since I have been a member of Congress at least, and I do not know how long before, up to the last Congress, to pass a resolution like this to pay an extra month's salary to the employés of the House and Senate, and I believe also to the Capitol police. There are extra reasons now why this should be done the same that I have already suggested. Most of these men have but $1,200 a year, some of them much less; and as I stated before in my remarks, they have been kept here for ten months, have been in attendance here on seventy-three night sessions, and I think it no more than just and equitable that we should pass this resolution in the usual form, such as has been passed by the House in years gone by up to the last Congress.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the position I occupy is one that will not commend itself to a goodly share of the audience about me, particularly those who are designated as the beneficiaries of this gratuity. I have never voted for such a resolution since I have been in public life, and I do not intend to vote for this one. I do not intend, however, to place any obstruction in the way of its passage if it is the sense of the House that it should be adopted; but I do not think it should pass.

There is not a man who will be benefited by it who does not receive a greater salary under the existing law than any one of them could secure in private life or anywhere outside of the public service. The employés of this House, as well as those at the other end of the Capitol, are paid to-day more as a rule than any persons in any of the constituencies of the gentlemen who do me the honor to listen to me in any walk of private life. Besides this, I have not heard of any of these offices going begging because of the insufficiency of salary. On the contrary, when the Republicans were in power in this House it was one of the chief troubles to get rid of applications for employment. The very little boys who sit about me here draw, as I understand it, $2.50, or is it $3, a day?

A MEMBER. Two dollars and a half a day.

Mr. PAYSON. A larger sum than most of the laboring men in my district get, outside of the skilled mechanical trades. Plenty of them all over the country, thousands of able-bodied men, support their families on a salary of from $18 to $20 and $25 a month; and simply because in the performance of a public duty which does not devolve upon them a more protracted attendance than is required of members we are asked to give this gratuity in the shape of one month's extra pay.

The argument that the gentleman from Maine makes has no force in support of this matter, that the duties that these men perform are excessive; because, I repeat, the session does not devolve upon them the necessity for greater attendance upon the House than it does upon the gentlemen who sit around me now, and who are responsible for the legislation of Congress.

Nor is it any argument with me that former Congresses have seen proper to grant such a gratuity. I remember one occasion, if not two, at least, in my own experience when it was not done. It does not meet my approval; it is not right; and there is not a man listening to me now who represents an agricultural or laboring constituency who can go home before his people and justify the vote that he will give in favor of it.

The gentleman from Maine will probably rise in his place and say that he is glad to do it; but I say that it ought not to be done. However, I will content myself with the protest I make here, not wishing to set myself up in opposition to the wishes of the House in this respect. I reserve the remainder of my time, if I shall find occasion to use any portion of it in reply to what may be said.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, permit me to say that it is a notorious fact that our good friend, Judge PAYSON, who has just taken his seat, with other members of Congress, has voted for bills here constantly that carry millions of dollars for the compensation of employés drawing immense salaries as officers of the United States Government.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, but to carry out existing laws and to pay the salary fixed by law. Not as a gratuity.

Mr. LAWLER. And I do not know whether the Judge ever got up and protested against the payment of any large salary or not to men who have not very much to do. But it is a strange fact that just as soon as a provision is made to pay a little sum to some of the hardest worked men in the Government, he is the first to rise on this floor, and I hope will be the only one, in opposition to it.

I say that this has been a long-protracted session, and you can not draw a comparison, as the gentleman seeks to draw, between the cost of living in a little country town and the cost of living here. These little boys, to whom the gentleman has referred, are brought here. It has been the custom both under Republican and Democratic Houses to bring them here, and they are paid a compensation which is somewhat approximate to the cost of living in the city as compared to the country. They have traveling expenses to pay besides, many of these people; and they have all cheerfully attended all of the sessions of the House night after night and day after day, and have as cheerfully sought to do their duty, notwithstanding the fact that a great deal of extra labor has devolved upon them. It has been the usual custom to give this pay, and I think the House owes it to itself and to its employés to make this provision in their behalf for the two months.

A MEMBER. For one month.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, why not make it for two? There is no use of being small about it.

Mr. LAWLER. But let us recognize the fact that these men have done a great deal of hard extra work. I thought it was for two months. It ought to be. I am sure the Judge's constituency will not kick against a vote in behalf of such a proposition. I do not think the press or the people of this country will find fault with him or any objection to this small pittance. I did not think there would be objection to this little matter, in view of the fact that we are in the habit of paying large salaries to people who do not perform half the labor that is done by these few and faithful servants employed by the House and the Senate in their work here day after day and night after night.

Mr. PAYSON. I still have some time at my disposal, and I desire to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] as much time as he may require.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the services of the employés of this body as much as any one. I think they perform their duties worthily; but I think we ought to establish a definite line of policy in this matter. We should not vote money to any of the employés of the House; and they should not be employed without knowing in advance just what they are to receive. The law fixes their compensation, and they accept and serve in their respective positions knowing exactly what the law says they are to receive. The habit of voting additional amounts, dependent upon the whim of this body, is certainly a very unwise policy, which should be stopped. It should be understood that the pay provided under the law shall be the amount that they shall receive, so that they will not be asking for additional pay.

There is a very strong feeling in the agricultural districts in regard to paying unreasonable salaries. The officers of my county, men equal in talent to the majority of the members of this body, work faithfully twelve hours a day for the sum of $1,200 a year—men equal in ability with the average members of this body. [Laughter.] Men of as good talents as the men employed in this House, and who have as good education as the average of the men employed by this House are receiving for their labor $1.50 a day; and out of that salary they are asked to pay taxes to keep boys of twelve and fourteen years of age employed here at $2.50 a day, and other employés at $1,200 a year, who are not expected to work on an average half of the time.

I wish further to say that the "salary grab" which passed in 1873, or a number of years ago, had more to do with putting the Republican party out of power in the House of Representatives than any other one thing; and while it did not hurt the Democratic members who voted for it, it nearly ruined every Republican who voted for it. These facts ought to be borne in mind. I know that gentlemen who have been here for years and have voted for measures of this kind are expected to vote in the same way now, so that they may keep up an appearance of consistency. But those of us who are new members are not forced to do so and ought not to be hampered by their records. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PAYSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking the author of this resolution what amount of money is involved in his proposition to pay the employés of the House an extra month's salary. I think this information ought to be furnished us before we should be called upon to vote upon a question of this character. It is absolutely necessary in order that we may be enabled to vote intelligently upon this subject.

Mr. MILLIKEN. When I get the floor I will make that statement.

Mr. SOWDEN. I yield the floor now to the gentleman for the purpose of answering my question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. As near as I can estimate the amount will be about $40,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. Forty thousand dollars?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is stated to me that it will amount to $31,000.

Mr. PAYSON. By one of the pages. We are called upon to vote $31,000, and you get your information from one of the pages?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I believe I have the floor. My information is that it would be $40,000, but it is enough to say to my friend from Illinois, that if he gets correct information I do not know that it matters where he gets it from, and I am not quite certain but that he might get some information which would be of benefit to him from some of the pages. [Laughter.]

Mr. SOWDEN. Then, as I understand, and as nearly as it can be ascertained now, the amount of money involved is about $40,000.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Oh, no.

Mr. SOWDEN. That is exactly what the gentleman has stated, and if that be correct, I call upon every member of this House to pause before he votes for this additional appropriation of $40,000 of the people's money to be given to the employés of this House as a gratuity. The time has come when we must call a halt upon these extravagant and unlawful expenditures. It seems to me, however smilingly it may be looked upon by our employés, who are all gathered in front of us, that we ought to be brave enough to look them squarely in the face, and say to them that they shall be well paid for the work they perform, but that when they ask us to vote them the people's money for time they never served, they are asking a little too much. We ought to be governed in these matters by the same principles that control us in the management of our own personal affairs. We ought to be willing to pay them a full day's wages for a full day's work, but as my friend from Illinois so aptly remarks, we have hard-working people in our own districts who do not receive one-half the wages paid these little boys [pointing to a very small page who happened to pass the speaker at this time, creating great laughter]. These pages get two dollars and a half per day, while the men who work in our ore-mines, stone-quarries, and coal-mines get from ninety cents to a dollar and a dollar and a quarter per day, with which it would seem they must be content, and many of whom have large families dependent upon them for support. Here we are asked to vote $40,000 of the people's money——

Mr. LAWLER. Not $40,000, $31,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. Thirty-one thousand dollars, then; only $9,000 less than $40,000. [Laughter.] Thirty-one thousand dollars for what? I would like to ask these gentlemen who support this resolution how they would like to give away $31,000 of their own money to people who never had earned a penny of it, and to whom they were neither legally nor equitably indebted a single cent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] will yield to me I will make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is made I desire to say a word, not that I deem it essential for the audience that is around me, but my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER], who frequently addresses a larger audience than this through the RECORD, having taken occasion to say in reference to myself that he had never known the time when the gentleman from Illinois had voted against any increase of salary to persons who were receiving large amounts of money from the Treasury, I desire to say to him, through the same medium, that there has never been a time since I have been a member of the House of Representatives when I have voted for an increase of salary to any person in any instance where, at the time the increase was asked, the man was performing the same duties that were imposed upon him when he entered upon the office. I have always opposed as earnestly and vigorously as I could all such propositions.

The gentleman says he has been in attendance when many of these questions have arisen. It is only about ten days since there was a proposition made here to increase the efficiency of the medical division of the Pension Office by increases of salaries of gentlemen employed there, aggregating some $23,000 per annum, and if my colleague had been here on that occasion he would now remember that I happened to lead the opposition, and I take some pride in having succeeded in defeating that proposed increase. Then, as to the proposition which has been made here to furnish each member of this House with a clerk at the public expense, while I believe that every member ought to have that assistance, yet I have uniformly voted against it. Why? Because when I was elected a member of Congress I understood what the salary was, I understood that it was $5,000 a year and my mileage, to put in my time, first, for the benefit of the people of my district, and then for the benefit of the people of the whole Union; and I have never voted for an increase of the salary or of any perquisite connected with the office. Although, as I have said, I believe that every member of the House ought to have the assistance of a clerk just as much as the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol, I have always opposed it, and I oppose it now for the reason I have stated. So, when these employés about me undertook the performance of the duties that devolve upon them, they did it with the knowledge that they were expected to do certain work, and simply because there is a difference of gradation of position in the public estimate there is no less degree of responsibility in the one case than in the other, and no greater obligation upon the part of the Government.

It is perfectly idle for gentlemen to say, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] has said, that because some of these boys come up here to night sessions therefore there ought to be a donation to them of a month's salary. Their duties are not so extremely onerous. I notice these boys around me, and I do not speak with any disrespect of any of them, because I esteem them all, but I see that quite a number of them are hardly old enough to be in boys' clothes yet. Certainly there is no great amount of physical exertion required for the performance of their duties. Two dollars and a half a day seems to me quite sufficient pay for such work, but the law gives them that amount and I want them to have it; but I do insist that the money which comes into the public treasury, every dollar of which has passed through the hard and horny hand of some laboring man in this country, shall be expended strictly according to law and without regard to this feeling of extra charity or extra liberality which seems to influence the gentleman from Maine and those who agree with him.

I notice another thing about propositions of this kind coming in toward the end of the session. I notice that they come in on the individual motion of some member, without having been recommended or considered by any committee of the House. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] crowds to the front this morning offering this resolution on behalf of all these employés, and states that he is even willing to include the Capitol police. No committee has considered or examined the proposition. We do not know what amount of money will be required. The gentleman tells us that he gets information from one of the pages that the amount will be $31,000. That may be accurate or it may not. I am not questioning its accuracy or the source whence the statement comes, but whenever a gentleman rises here in his representative capacity and proposes, by vote of a minority of the House, to expend several thousand dollars of the people's money, he certainly ought to be able to state, at least approximately, what the proposition is going to cost. It ought not to be done in this way. Their beneficiaries under this resolution understood precisely how much money they were to receive for their services, and they were all anxious to get the employment, and there will be no resignations by any of them even if this resolution does not pass—none whatever.

If the employés of this House do not like their service or think the salary inadequate, why, sir, to use a familiar expression, there is no string tied around any employé to keep him here if he wishes to leave. Resignations would be accepted and the places promptly filled. It has never been charged that the salaries are inadequate. There is no such pretense; but, on the contrary, the fact, as has been heretofore stated, is that for the services rendered at this Capitol every officer, commencing with the Doorkeeper and going down to the humblest employé, receives 25, 50, or 75 per cent. more compensation than is paid for similar service throughout the country. Take the case in the town in which I live, where there are two national banks. The cashier of one of those banks gets a salary of $1,000 a year, and is willing to stay; another gets $1,200. Both of those cashiers are excellent men. How do those salaries compare with the salaries paid employés in this Capitol?

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman should remember that bank cashiers have great opportunities.

Mr. PAYSON. But the population in my neighborhood has never been reduced up to the present time by any emigration to Canada.

Mr. LAWLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYSON. With pleasure.

Mr. LAWLER. I find that Congress appropriates for the mileage of members of Congress $112,000 a year, while this resolution only carries about $31,000.

Mr. PAYSON. What has that to do with this matter? Does the gentleman insist that the mileage is too large?

Mr. LAWLER. No, that is not the point I make.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman insist that members ought not to receive as mileage any greater sum than is actually expended by them for travel to and from Washington in connection with the discharge of their official duties? If so, my colleague [Mr. LAWLER], instead of accepting the two hundred and twenty-odd dollars which he now receives annually as mileage, can subtract from that sum the price of passage on a limited train and can cover the rest into the Treasury, if he has any conscientious scruples about the matter. [Laughter.] I have not heard that he has ever done so, and I do not think he ever will.

Mr. LAWLER. The gentleman seems to be making an appeal to the tax-payers of the country in favor of retrenching expenditures; yet it is a notorious fact that while members of Congress receive $5,000 a year they also take from the tax-payers $112,000 as mileage, while this resolution carries only $31,000.

Mr. PAYSON. I will answer the gentleman. I accept the mileage to which the gentleman refers because the law as it existed when I was elected gives it to me; because that amount of money was involved in the contract between the people of the United States and myself. It was a part of the contract that in addition to the salary of $5,000 a year

I should receive mileage at the rate allowed between the little town in which I live and the city of Washington for coming here and returning once a year. If the mileage is too large I will vote for a resolution to cut it down. If the salary paid to members of Congress is deemed too large—I do not believe it is—gentlemen who may think so can vote to cut it down. I hope my colleague understands the distinction. The law existing at the time of our election fixed the salary and allowances of a member of Congress, and the people, when they voted for him and me, understood precisely what was the compensation we were to receive.

Why should we not vote ourselves double the mileage already allowed by law? My colleague and I have had to go to Illinois two or three times for the good of the country during the present summer. [Laughter.] Why should we not vote for a resolution doubling the mileage? Because the statute of the United States has fixed this allowance; and for the further reason (let me be understood) that no member of Congress, if he is a candidate for re-election, dares to vote himself money that is not allowed him by existing law. That is the reason.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] assumes it is not honor but fear which keeps members from so voting.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman may take whichever horn of the dilemma he chooses. I assert again that no matter how many trips members may make on business or pleasure between this capital and their homes, no member of the House would dare to vote himself additional mileage, because the law fixes our compensation. The law also fixes the compensation of these Congressional employés and of the Capitol police. Why should we vote an extra month's salary to these officers simply because this has been a protracted session? Will any gentleman tell me the logic of it? The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] is willing to accept the amendment in favor of Capitol police. Now, why should the policemen about the Capitol have an extra month's pay because this Congress has been in session sixty days longer than we expected when we came here last December? These employés are paid by the year. They are all anxious to hold their positions. The salaries are remunerative. The places are considered desirable; and plenty of men would gladly take them at the present salaries. Why, then, should extra compensation be voted? Nobody can state any reason except simply that we have the power to do so; that is all.

But in voting away the people's money, with reference to this as with reference to everything else, I insist (I speak for myself only) that it is my duty to see that legislation here is prudent and careful, such as my constituents would approve. I believe the judgment of my people would be that these salaries are sufficient. If the performance of duty by these employés is not onerous, and no one can assert that it is——

Mr. LAWLER. It has been this session.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, no; it has not been.

Mr. LAWLER. Yes, it has.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not want any one to tell me that the duties of these gentlemen who sit about these doors opening and shutting them as members and visitors enter or leave, or that the duties of these boys engaged here as pages, are onerous. It is all wind; it is all stuff. [Laughter.] If that is not parliamentary, I withdraw the expression. [Laughter.]

It does not seem so to me. It is not what I called work when I was engaged in making a living by the sweat of my brow and the labor of my arms. I do not regard the work here as laborious.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How long ago was that?

Mr. PAYSON. Up to when I was twenty-one years of age.

But the point I wish to make, and I am not to be diverted from it by pleasantries, is this: Why should we change existing law as to these salaries, which are said to be sufficient for the duties performed and for the labor, which is not laborious or excessive? No gentleman can give any reason except that in past years it has been done in some instances. It is a bad precedent and ought not to be followed, and particularly on the meager information we have of how much will be required to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution if it becomes a law.

I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I have always had great admiration for gentlemen who seem to be loud in announcing their efforts to save the country and to save the Treasury by economizing on the pay of clerks and pages—that is, by saving at some little spigot while they let it run out at the bung. [Laughter.]

I have no interest politically in this joint resolution. There is not a beneficiary in the House under it I have an interest in. I believe they are all on the other side of the House in politics. I have not introduced the resolution because my constituents would look on it in one way or the other, because I had anything for home consumption in my district, or because I hoped to get votes by doing it or not doing it. But, sir, I have done it because it is a just and proper thing to do.

Mr. LAWLER. And you are right, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Illinois has iterated and reiterated and reiterated over and over again one single point which he attempts to make before this House, and that is that these clerks, that these employés, who are to be the beneficiaries under the resolution, knew when they accepted their places what their salaries were to be. I said when up before, Mr. Speaker, that ever since I have been here, and for a good many years before, such a resolution has been passed except at the last Congress, and it has been done so many times it has become a custom, and a custom for so long a time it has almost become a law. And these employés, when they accepted their places, had as much right to believe the custom which has existed so long would be carried out in their cases as that their fees as established by law would be paid to them. So far as that is concerned, therefore, the gentleman's point goes to the wall. As he said, there is nothing but wind in it. [Laughter.] But I will retract that expression, as the gentleman said he would if it were unparliamentary. But, sir, there is nothing in it at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been done by past Congresses, because it was believed by them to be just and proper, until it has become a precedent established by long usage, and I repeat that these employés had the right to expect under that precedent which was established they would have the same allowance made to them as was made to those who have preceded them.

My friend talks of how cheaply these places might all be filled by somebody up in his district.

Mr. PAYSON. I have not said that at all.

Mr. MILLIKEN. He said for how little we could get others to come here to take these places and receive the pay established by law. You can not fix any man's salary on that theory or on that principle. I can find many gentlemen in this country who would be glad to serve as President of the United States without charging one dollar in the way of salary. They would like the honor of it. Shall we therefore say, because of that fact, the President of the United States shall serve without pay? Shall we say that, because some one would be glad to serve simply because of the honor of the office and charge nothing for salary? I have no doubt my friend has some one in his own district who would be glad to come down here and fill his place on this floor without charging $5,000 a year or any mileage at all.

But shall we on this account abolish the pay of members of Congress? The gentleman would reduce the whole Government service to this point, that no man should fill a Government office unless he had wealth enough to enable him to fill it without charging any salary at all. The question is what is just, what is right in regard to these men.

I have further to say this: The gentleman talks about what a member dares to do and what he does not dare to do. I can say truthfully that I have never yet given a vote in this House under fear of what penalty might be inflicted upon me by my constituency or by anybody else.

I am satisfied to vote here in this House for what I believe to be right, sensible, and just, and then submit to my constituents and take the results.

I now move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair desires to lay before the House certain requests of members.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Logan N. Dishman.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WICKHAM indefinitely, on account of important business.

YANKTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion to adjourn, I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7547) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri River Railway Company through the Yankton reservation in Dakota, and to ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked thereon.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 38, noes 27.

Mr. LAWLER. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. HITT: Joint resolution (H. Res. 227) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Henry Lecomte, of Switzerland—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. J. A. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11542) granting a pension to Jeremiah Malcolm—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11543) for the relief of William T. Hopkins—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAISH: A bill (H. R. 11544) for the relief of the Standard Under-ground Cable Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. McSHANE: A bill (H. R. 11545) granting a pension to James M. Simeral—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: A bill (H. R. 11546) for the relief of the St. Louis and Mississippi Transportation Company—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of Henry T. Deaver, of Frederick County, Maryland, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FORAN: Petition of Local Assembly No. 9353, Knights of Labor, of Cleveland, Ohio, to protect free labor from convict labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. LANDES: Petition of Eunice J. Smith, of West Salem, Ill., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAISH: Petition of Elizabeth Hoffacker, mother of William Hoffacker, for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: Petition of the St. Louis and Mississippi Valley Transportation Company, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, October 3, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of J. Nelson Trask, of Massachusetts, praying for the total repeal of all naturalization laws; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of 11,088 citizens of Massachusetts, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will prohibit the appropriation of public funds for the support of sectarian schools; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1959) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3336) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue to the governor of the Territory of Montana military stores for the use of the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10023) to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5408) granting a pension to Emma F. Read;

A bill (H. R. 4649) granting a pension to Daniel Tanner;

A bill (H. R. 10109) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Leach;

A bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Samuel M. Reese;

A bill (H. R. 10769) granting a pension to John M. Krunk; and

A bill (H. R. 8735) granting a pension to Mary A. McCool.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5349) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 300) for the relief of the trustees of the First Baptist Church, at Smithland, Ky., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, have directed me to report it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I ask that the bill may be placed on the Calendar, and I give notice that on Monday morning I shall ask for its consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Meanwhile it will be printed in the regular way.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall move to take up the bill on Monday morning for consideration. I also move that 1,000 copies be printed in bill form for the use of the folding-room in addition to the usual number. I think that can be done without reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HARRIS. What number of extra copies does the Senator suggest?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies be printed in bill form for the folding-room.

Mr. SHERMAN. There should be copies for the use of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. One thousand copies in addition to the usual number?

Mr. ALLISON. In addition to the usual number. I think there ought to be perhaps 500 printed also for the use of the Committee on Finance, as there are so many requests made to that committee for the measure agreed on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the motion as the Senator from Iowa presents it.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the folding-room of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the Finance Committee. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the bill H. R. No. 9051, as reported to the Senate, be printed in pamphlet form, 9,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that to-morrow, or on Friday morning at the farthest, majority and minority reports will be filed to accompany this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have section 3793 of the Revised Statutes read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3793. All motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other public document, shall be referred to the Committee on Printing of the House in which such motion is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The operation of a rule of the Senate can be waived by unanimous consent, but the direction of a statute can not. The Chair therefore thinks that the order agreeing to the resolution to print extra copies of the bill reported by the Committee on Finance this morning should be reconsidered, and that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Printing. It is so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. That relates to the printing of the 1,500 copies of the tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The 1,500 copies.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to make the number 2,000, 1,000 for the committee and 1,000 for the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be reported immediately. It is a mere question of accounting at the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the consideration of the tariff bill passes from the Senate, as I am compelled to leave at 3.40 this afternoon, I should like, with the indulgence of the Senate, to make a few remarks in regard to it. I think it is proper for me to do so, but if it will be more convenient to Senators to go through with the ordinary morning business I shall be very glad to do it then.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to the Senator proceeding now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will go on now if it is the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The morning business can follow the remarks of the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the grave importance attached, not only by the people of our country, but by the people of all countries with whom we have connection, to the tariff bill which is now presented to the Senate for consideration, perhaps justifies a few remarks to be made by me.

Although at this time the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I have not been able to give to the detailed investigation of this subject the care and attention that I probably ought to have done, but my time has been fully occupied in other duties imposed on me by the Senate. Still, on account of the very grave importance of this bill, which involves the interest of every citizen of the United States, I have kept pace with its examination; I have read it over and over, again and again, so that I am familiar with all the details and provisions of the bill, but the work and labor performed upon this bill has been done by others.

Early, even before the House bill came to us, a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, composed of seven members, four of them Republicans and three Democrats, were appointed to take charge of this important measure, even before it came here; and they have devoted all their time since then, and especially since the passage of the bill by the other House, to the consideration of this subject. As a matter of course, the Democratic members of the committee being satisfied with the Mills bill did not give the same attention to the matter that the Republican members did, but they attended off and on in the examination of witnesses, and no doubt kept themselves advised as to the progress of the bill. But the bill itself, the substitute as reported, is substantially the work of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who reports it to-day, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. In making these comments now, I wish to give these Senators not only all the credit for the merits of the bill, but for the manner in which they did the immense labor in preparing the bill. My part was simply that of a looker-on and an advisory member.

The subcommittee quickly came to the conclusion that the bill sent by the other House was not a sufficient bill to answer the purposes demanded, that it was totally inadequate, that it was not a revision of the tariff law. It was only an amendment of the tariff law. It only affected a portion of the paragraphs or schedules of the tariff law. It did not aim to be a revision of the law nor to provide machinery to carry into execution the law, but cut here and there—I was about to say at random—at the various provisions of existing law. When it came to be examined in detail, as Senators will see by the report of the committee, there were many incongruities in the bill, provisions that were totally inconsistent with each other, taxes levied on raw materials at a higher rate than on the finished article, and many other incongruities and uncertainties necessarily involved in the framing of the bill owing to the manner in which it was framed, however honest may have been the intention. These will all be pointed out fully in the report of the committee.

The Republican members, the majority of the committee, felt it necessary to provide for an entire revision of the revenue law. They therefore, as a foundation for that, took the testimony of a great number of witnesses. Over 2,000 printed pages of testimony in the form of statements or representations or petitions will be laid before the Senate to guide their action, to inform them upon the various interests involved in this proposed tariff law. Among this information are some very able and instructive treatises, I may say, upon different branches of the subject-matter.

The bill is thus reported after this examination. If there are defects in the bill they will no doubt be pointed out. As I shall show hereafter, in my judgment there will be but few defects except differences of honest opinion in regard to what duties ought to be levied upon different articles; but so far as the frame-work of the bill is concerned it will be found to be a very perfect bill.

The general merits of this bill as compared with the Mills bill, I shall not go into in detail. I will briefly state that the bill contains all there is left and all that is needed of laws regulating the rates of duty and providing machinery for the collection of both internal and external taxes. Although in a much less mass than one would suppose, it is a substantial compendium of every provision of law made necessary for the collection of either internal-revenue or customs duties, so that it is practically the revenue laws of the United States. It is the only one that I know of that has ever been made, for it not only contains the rates of duty, but the manner in which the duties shall be collected.

With this measure a custom-house officer or any citizen may inform himself of every provision of law which affects the public revenue of the United States derived from these sources, exclusive of the public-land laws.

Not only that, but this bill for the first time provides safeguards against frauds and undervaluations, remedies for which have been sought by committees of the Senate and of the House without respect to party. These have been formulated by a committee composed of members of both parties into a bill early reported to the Senate, which passed the Senate without a division, receiving every vote of the Senate, a bill framed, as I say, by a committee of both parties, who went to New York and examined there the machinery and method of collections, and that has become a part of this codification.

In my judgment that alone and the legislative provisions thus reported will do more to secure a fair and just collection of customs than any other provisions in this bill, or in any bill that has preceded it. It was shown clearly to the committee that extent of undervaluations went, in many cases, to 30, 40, and 50 per cent.; that it was habitual and universal, especially in the larger ports; that custom-house oaths were disregarded without question or inquiry, and that arrangements and combinations were made by which goods were introduced into this country at an undervaluation through commission merchants and by various arrangements. That proposed law has been ingrafted in the bill.

The bill contains a positive, unquestionable reduction of revenues to the extent of about $70,000,000; to state it more clearly, $73,668,000. These are upon a few items, so that there can be no question about it. Upon sugar there is the reduction of one-half, amounting to $27,000,000. There is an entire repeal of the tax on manufactured tobacco, leaving a duty on cigars to a certain extent, making a reduction of duties of $24,370,000. There is a repeal of the internal tax on alcohol used in the arts, which is further estimated to reduce the revenue $7,000,000. I doubt very much whether we can prevent the fraud that will undoubtedly occur in pretending to use alcohol in the arts when it is used for drinking purposes. I have no doubt that the ingenuity of man will evade any provisions of law that can be made upon this subject. But the scheme is a just one, agreed to by all, that there ought to be no tax on alcohol used in ordinary medicines and for manufacturing purposes. Where it is used, sometimes as a lubricator and sometimes as a solvent; sometimes for one purpose and sometimes for another, no one questions the propriety of repealing the tax if it can be done safely; but I doubt very much whether it can be done.

There is also an addition to the free-list of articles heretofore subject to duty which will reduce the revenue $6,428,000; and there are changes of rates of duty, the reduction of duties on other articles, reducing the revenue $8,100,000, making the total of $73,668,000.

This is a positive, certain reduction of taxation. The objection to the Mills bill is that no man can say with any certainty that it is a reduction, except so far as that bill adds articles to the free-list. Every effort heretofore since the close of the war to reduce taxes by reducing duties on imported goods has resulted in an increase of the revenue unless the repeal of the duty made the article duty free. In my judgment, the Mills bill, the main object of which as set out is to reduce the revenue, will in some portions of it, at least in those portions which reduce the duty on imported goods, rather increase the revenues than otherwise.

The substitute bill contains another novel device, and I give the committee great credit for it. It groups all the articles subject to duties on imported goods into fifteen different schedules, properly headed, as the iron or metal schedule, cotton manufactures, and woolen manufactures. There are fifteen different schedules, each of which is separate and distinct. Besides that, it divides the whole into seven hundred and ninety-five paragraphs, each paragraph relating to a single article, thus dissipating the idea which is so common in this country that the tariff affects three thousand or four thousand articles, because seven hundred and ninety-five paragraphs describe every article, not only on the dutiable list, but on the free-list as well, and they are grouped in paragraphs so that they can be referred to, and one can be repealed or modified without changing others. Hitherto the trouble in changing our revenue laws was that any modification made might affect a great many different subjects-matter not intended by the framers of the law. This classification and division will avoid that difficulty.

This bill also enlarges, as I said a moment ago, the free-list by adding certain articles to the free-list, but unlike the Mills bill it only adds those articles which can not be produced in this country, to which our country by reason of climate or otherwise is not adapted. All such articles, therefore, without exception, on the dutiable-list, except some articles of extreme luxury that can not with ordinary care and skill be produced in this country, have been placed on the free-list.

The Mills bill, as it is called, or the House bill, went upon a different principle. It did not regard the principle that is acted upon by the committee of the Senate, but put on the free-list some of the most important articles which come directly into competition with the most valuable American productions. For instance, the Mills bill put wool upon the free-list, so that the wool from all the countries of the world, from the uncivilized plains, I may say, from new countries occupied by savage tribes, the wool grown on native or wild sheep, would be brought into competition with our own people, and thus endanger, as I think, the most important industry of mankind, the one necessary to provide warm clothing for the people.

The Mills bill did select a multitude of articles that can be and ought to be produced in this country and placed them on the free-list, thus compelling our people to a sharp and hard competition with all classes of labor and with all classes of people in foreign countries. But this bill puts nothing on the free-list except it is an article that can not be produced here, and it puts on the free-list every article that can not be produced here by ordinary means and facilities.

Not only that, but this bill is impartial in its dealing with sections. There is no discrimination, and I challenge gentlemen to show any discrimination in rates of duty on account of the sectional locality of the production. It is true the bill reduces one-half the duty on sugar, which can only be grown in a warm climate; but the present duty on sugar is 83 per cent.—more than double the duty on any other agricultural production except that of rice. The committee in dealing with these two articles, which now yield the enormous revenue from sugar of fifty-odd million dollars, placed them at a higher rate of duty than is levied on any article grown in the North, and left a duty on sugar of 41 per cent., when the duty on wheat is 20 per cent. and on other articles grown in the North from 20 to 30 or 40 per cent. On rice the duty is still left at over 50 per cent. while now it is over 100 per cent.

I challenge Senators again to point to a single item in this bill which discriminates against any industry because it is produced in the South or in the North, or in the East or in the West; while the Mills bill was marked in its discriminations. As is shown by the report, of the duties modified in the Mills bill to the injury of American production $1,200,000,000 of the competing domestic articles were grown in the North, and I believe it was but $60,000,000 that were grown in the South. So that the Mills bill is a wide and general discrimination, as we think, against Northern industries; while this bill avoids that and makes a fair and impartial reduction of revenues and a fair and impartial classification of the revenues.

This bill does increase the duties on several things, and here there will be an honest difference of opinion as to whether the increased duties involve cases of right or not. Probably that will be one of the controversies before the Senate when we come to the details of the bill. But the principle which has always been followed in this increase of duties is that where the tables show that an article which ought to be produced in this country is very largely imported, in such a case it is an evidence that there ought to be increased encouragement given to our own manufacturers in order to diversify our industry and make everything essential to human life in this country, rather than to depend upon foreign nations. That principle has prevailed, so far as I know, in every increase of duties as proposed by this bill.

While the bill lowers the rates of duty on certain woolen and cotton goods, it increases the rates on others. There are two or three proposed increases on cotton goods in the bill that will be the subject of remark, but at the same time they are based upon that distinct rule as a rule.

The cotton industry of this country is growing not only in the North, but in the South. One of the happiest signs of the times is that there were thirty-six cotton mills, according to the statement in the papers, erected within the last year in the South. So far as the cheaper forms of cotton goods are concerned, undoubtedly the cotton manufacture is well established, but in regard to that class which enters more or less as articles of luxury into the consumption of the rich there are still enormous amounts of cotton goods manufactured abroad and brought from foreign countries into this country which ought to be manufactured here. What is the amount of importations of cotton goods?

Mr. ALDRICH. Twenty-nine millions of dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. Twenty-nine million dollars' worth of cotton goods are brought into this country, every part of which, except probably those of the finer grades, where the great cost is in the skilled labor, can be manufactured in this country. The committee have recommended a slight increase of duty on two or three grades of these goods in order to induce our people to engage in the finer manufacture of cotton goods; and so I might say of woolen goods.

There was another difficulty in the old law and one of the things that required an absolute revision of the tariff. Formerly there was a wide disparity in market value between iron and steel. Steel was worth in many cases three or four times as much as iron. But by recent discoveries made only within the last four or five years the price of steel is no higher than the price of iron. By new processes, familiar to every Senator, which have been adopted not only in this country but in other countries, in many cases steel is cheaper than iron. Therefore it became necessary to entirely revolutionize the whole metal schedule. As a general rule iron and steel would have about the same value, and they are classified together instead of being classified at different and distinct rates. It was the necessity of making this classification that was one of the strongest arguments in favor of the passage of any bill reducing the tariff. This has been done, and I think it has been done satisfactorily even to both sides of the Chamber. I think if Senators will examine the iron schedule they will see that it has been done so justly and fairly, in some cases reducing the duty, in a very few cases increasing it, and classifying it in such a way that I believe it will be satisfactory to the people of the country without respect to party.

There is also a slight increase on wool, and there has been some provision made to prevent frauds in the importation of wools, frauds that are confessed on all hands. Under one pretense or another yarns, noils, waste, worsteds, etc., were classified at a different rate from wool. These were admitted to be evasions of the intent of the law and created inequality and injustice.

There was another reason why it became necessary to have a complete revision of the tariff laws. Most of these decisions have been made during the present Administration, since the passage of the law of 1883, and probably grew out of the uncertain language of that law; but still they had to be corrected.

It was found that instead of some 40,000,000 pounds of wool being imported there were last year imported 114,000,000 pounds of wool, and much of this of high value, imported in the name of carpet wool. The most expensive of all wools, the finer grades of certain wools, were brought in at 2½ cents a pound, and thus defeated the plain intention of the law to give to the farmer a reasonable protection on his product as well as to give the manufacturer a protection on his. This has been changed, and the rate of duty has been added to 1 cent a pound on three grades of wool, leaving the cheaper forms of wool which enter into the manufacture of carpet at 2½ cents a pound.

It is true that nominally one rate, the highest rate, is abolished, but the fact is the law was so construed that there was no wool imported under the high grade, and consequently under the law of 1883 no wool paid 12 cents a pound. When I say "no wool," I mean none but a few thousand pounds, practically none; so that all the wool is to be introduced at the rate of 10 cents per pound, and on those two classes the rate is increased to 11 cents a pound, and I think wisely.

I regret myself that the committee did not go further in this direction. If I did not hope against hope I should hope that the Senate would correct that by giving the farmers 1 cent more, but I fear, with the ideas which prevail on the other side of the Chamber, that it will not be done.

At any rate we have at least recognized in this bill this great important farming interest, so that a man may, from Texas to Maine, have a more careful protection of this great and important agricultural industry. If we did not go further, it is better to take half a loaf than to get no bread.

There was another trouble in the Mills bill growing out of the admitted discriminations against particular items because the article produced was an article of universal use. Take cotton-ties, strap-iron. Why should a distinction be made in favor of cotton-ties simply because cotton-ties had so many friends in Congress? So many people wanted to have cheap cotton-ties that they were not willing to pay upon cotton-ties the same rate of duty that was paid upon hoop-iron or other forms of iron all over the country. That has been corrected by this bill, as it ought to be. No section, no community, and no interest ought to seek to evade its fair share according to the general rule of the taxes levied upon imported goods.

There was a much more difficult problem, however, which the committee had in dealing with the question of tin-plate. There is no question about the power of our people to make cotton-ties at a very low rate, but there was some question as to the power of the American people to make tin-plate. We have no tin in this country in sufficient quantities to enter into the commerce of the country. It had to be obtained mainly from Wales, and the question with this committee, as I understood, which they fairly considered, was whether or not they would put tin-plate upon the same rate of duty that they put sheet-iron. In justice it ought to be a little higher on tin-plate, but as no tin-plate was made in this country, there was some doubt whether the experiment had better be tried until it was absolutely demonstrated that tin-plate could be made in this country. It turns out from the investigation—a fact that I have known a long time, because I saw the process of making tin-plate in England—that the sheet-iron is simply what I would call dipped, a kind of chemical process by which the sheet-iron is charged with about 5 per cent. of tin, coated by a kind of chemical process, and the committee were assured that it could be easily made in this country, and that there were facilities now to make 100,000 tons of tin-plate here.

But still the committee thought that at present they had better leave it where it is now, but would further consider the subject and report a proper amendment. In my judgment the Senate ought to go further and put this industry of tin-plate upon the same footing as any other industry. There are 250,000 tons of this article imported from abroad. We consume, it is said, three-fifths of all that is made in the world, and there is no reason why this important industry, which would give employment to vast capital and a great number of men, should not be started here. There are reductions on other articles, as copper, nickel, and others, and we have established industries, all of which will be more fully shown by the bill.

I wish to say—because I do not in saying it flatter myself at all—that this is a very conservative measure. If anybody is alarmed at its provisions, or expects to see any large increase of duties, or any sudden changes proposed, he will be greatly mistaken. It has been prepared with great care. It embraces protection to every article of domestic industry that by possibility can come into contact or competition with foreign productions. Therefore it is a complete bill.

I am bound to say to both sides of the Chamber that I believe the measure now presented to the Senate is the best revenue bill that was ever introduced into the Congress of the United States. I believe if it was taken up free from the party asperities, free from party feelings and prejudices that necessarily attend a Presidential election, and if it could be considered on its merits with such amendments as might be proposed and debated and considered and adopted, after full investigation, it could be made the most perfect revenue measure ever placed upon the statute-books of the United States. It has received great care and skill, and is subject to the scrutiny of the Senate. When I examined it, I saw that great care had been taken, but, as a matter of course, suggestions arose and were always fairly considered, and they ought to be here when they are made in the Senate.

If this bill could be considered without respect to the election and its influence on party politics, I have no doubt it would, with very slight changes, be made the basis of a permanent system of revenue, changed only from time to time as the value of articles changed, and would then become something in the nature of a permanent system of revenue.

The issue now is fairly made before the people of the United States. I do not wish to engage in that now. I thought it was necessary for me to make these statements in regard to this bill. The issue is to be tried by the people, a plain, fair, square issue between a tariff for revenue only and a tariff for revenue and protection. It is a question whether the articles necessary for human life in our country shall be made by American labor or by foreign labor, whether the wages of American laborers should depend upon the wages of European laborers or should depend upon the American policy of protecting all forms of labor and production.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLODGETT introduced a bill (S. 3607) for the relief of Harry S. Kellogg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3608) for the relief of Mary E. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3610) to provide for the issuance of coin certificates to circulate as money; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3611) granting a pension to Anna W. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11107) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.;" and

A bill (H. R. 11338) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River at Gadsden, in the State of Alabama.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of John B. Read; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 101) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions for sale.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3390) to create the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico.

Joint resolution (S. R. 10) relating to the inclosure of certain points of especial interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh.

PROGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ART.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, for the use of Congress, 10,000 additional copies of the work known as "Progress of Industrial Art," of which 3,500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,500 for the House of Representatives.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "Progress" and inserting "Growth," that being the correct title of the work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 104) to print additional copies of the United States map of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands, to report it without amendment and ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be printed 7,500 copies of the United States map prepared by the General Land Office of the edition of 1887, at a rate not exceeding $1 each; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and 1,000 copies printed and mounted, to be sold under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at $1.25 each.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON ADDITIONAL LIBRARY ACCOMMODATIONS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the coming recess of Congress, and any necessary expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. That, I think, has not been the usage heretofore. I do not know what the necessity may be, but I prefer that the committee have power to sit during the recess, however short it may be under the present circumstances. Heretofore resolutions of this character have been acted upon without reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state to the Senator from Indiana that the rule required expressly that all resolutions imposing a charge upon the contingent funds of the Senate must be referred to that committee for action.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate taken day before yesterday—so that I am exactly in time—by which it passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read, and I make a motion at the same time that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate. I think we have been acting under a misapprehension about that bill. We ought to look at it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The motion to reconsider the bill will be entered and the order requesting the return of the bill from the House of Representatives will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ELECTORAL MESSENGERS.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3609) supplementary to the act approved February 3, 1887, entitled "An act to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. It is important to have the bill printed at once, and I desire to make a brief statement in regard to it, which will take but a moment.

The secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has called my attention to the fact that in the law passed during the last Congress for regulating the proceedings of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, the provision which requires the messengers to bring the certificates of the electors to the President of the Senate before the first Tuesday in January remains unchanged, so that the messengers are required to get the certificates here at a date before the votes are actually cast and the certificates made; and it is necessary to remedy that defect by simply changing "the first Monday in January" to "the fourth Monday in January."

I drew a bill for that purpose and spoke to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] about it, who has given great study to that subject, and he has also drawn a bill for the same purpose which I like better than my own. The bill which I introduce, therefore, is his. I thought it would be more convenient for the Senate, and especially for members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to introduce the bill and have it put upon the Calendar and printed without being referred, and have it examined by the individual members of the committee and by individual Senators, and if an objection shall be found to it after it has been printed and examined, it will be of course a very simple matter to have it referred to and considered by the committee. If no objection shall be found to it, I will in the course of a few days or a week, perhaps, call it up for passage. I move that the bill be printed and placed on the Calendar without reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Ballard;
A bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell; and
A bill (H. R. 10098) to refer the claims of Richard H. Parham, administrator of George Gorman, deceased, and Robert S. McDonald to the Court of Claims.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3573) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7547) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri River Railway through the Yankton reservation in Dakota, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, and Mr. NELSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. 869) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa; and
A bill (S. 2742) to incorporate the Brightwood Railway Company in the District of Columbia.

POLITICAL REMOVALS FROM ARMORIES AND ARSENALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A resolution in relation to political removals from armories and arsenals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the resolution that has just been stated by the Secretary.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Missouri desired that the resolution should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall it now be considered or go over until to-morrow?

Mr. HALE. He asked that it go over on the day it was offered. I do not know whether the Senator desires to make any remarks on the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood that my good friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] was exceedingly anxious to make some remarks upon this resolution, and I deferred to him, trusting that he would now deliver them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I took the floor the other day and I intended to speak a few moments; but the Senator from Missouri objected, and in response to an appeal from me said, "If there is to be discussion it is to come from this side." The Senator will find that remark of his in the RECORD, and therefore in the face of that announcement I defer to him if he desires to go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] seems to be the especial champion of civil-service reform, and I must confess that he is a model exemplar in that line; and to remind him of his most earnest and pathetic efforts in behalf of and devotion to genuine civil-service reform, I will read a very interesting circular which was issued in 1882. It reads thus:

The Republican Congressional committee, the organ of the Republican party, instructs its executive officers, Chairman Hubbell and Secretary Henderson, to address the usual circular—

Mark you, "the usual circular"— to the employés of the Executive Government, etc., requesting contributions for campaign purposes.

Here is the circular:

Jay A. Hubbell—

In great big flaming letters—

Jay A. Hubbell, chairman; D. B. Henderson, secretary.
Executive committee: Hon. W. B. Allison, Hon. Eugene Hale—

The same identical individual now in the Senate; the same identical Senator now in the Senate—

Hon. Nelson W. Aldrich, Hon. Frank Hiscock, Hon. George M. Robeson, Hon. William McKinley, jr., Hon. George R. Davis, Hon. Horatio G. Fisher, Hon. Horace F. Page, Hon. W. H. Calkins, Hon. Thomas Ryan, Hon. William D. Washburn, Hon. L. C. Houk, Hon. R. T. Van Horn, Hon. Orlando Hubbs.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE, 1882,
520 Thirteenth Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., May 15, 1882.

SIR: This committee is organized for the protection of the interests of the Republican party in each of the Congressional districts of the Union. In order that it may prepare, print, and circulate suitable documents illustrating the issues which distinguish the Republican party from any other, and may meet all proper expenses incident to the campaign, the committee feels authorized to apply to all citizens whose principles or interests are involved in the struggle. Under the circumstances in which the country finds itself placed, the committee believes that you will esteem it both a privilege and a pleasure to make to its fund a contribution which, it is hoped, may not be less than $—. The committee is authorized to state that such voluntary contribution from persons employed in the service of the United States will not be objected to in any official quarter.

The labors of the committee will affect the result of the Presidential election in 1884, as well as the Congressional struggle; and it may therefore reasonably hope to have the sympathy and assistance of all who look with dread—upon the possibility of the restoration of the Democratic party to the control of the Government.

"With dread!"—

Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter by bank check or draft, or postal money-order, payable to the order of Jay A. Hubbell, acting treasurer, post-office lock-box 589, Washington, D. C.

By order of the committee.

D. B. HENDERSON, Secretary.

Mr. President, we find that there was a session of the Cabinet of President Arthur on the 25th of July, 1882:

The session of the Cabinet of July 25 was an unusually long one. All the members were present except Secretary of War Lincoln, and the question of partisan contributions was pretty thoroughly canvassed. President Arthur gave his judgment in the matter. He said, in effect:

"No person in any one of the Executive Departments declining to contribute shall, on that account, be subjected to discharge or criticism, and no attempt to injure him, on this ground, will be countenanced or tolerated." These conclusions are in accordance with the views expressed by him in his letter of acceptance of July 15, 1880, in which he says: "I will add that by the acceptance of public office, whether high or low, one does not, in my judgment, escape any of his responsibilities as a citizen, or lose or impair any of his rights as a citizen, and that he should enjoy absolute liberty to think and speak and act in political matters according to his own will and conscience, provided only that he honorably and faithfully discharge all his official duties."

General James A. Garfield is often quoted by the so-called civil-service reformers as opposed to or reprobating political contributions for partisan purposes. The quotation is a characteristic fraud of the bogus reformer. To arbitrary or compulsory assessments General Garfield was no doubt opposed, as are Jay A. Hubbell and D. B. Henderson—as indeed are all Republicans. But the general was too sensible a man, too experienced, practical, and just, to oppose or reprobate voluntary contributions, or requests from responsible organs of the party for contributions, in support of the cause he himself so ably sustained. Were there any doubt in the matter the following letter from General Garfield during the late Presidential election, when he was himself a candidate, would authoritatively settle it:

"MENTOR, OHIO, August 23, 1880.

"MY DEAR HUBBELL: Yours of the 19th instant is received. Please say to Brady I hope he will give us all the assistance possible. I think he can help effectively. Please tell me how the Departments are generally doing.

"As ever yours,

"J. A. GARFIELD.

"Hon. JAY A. HUBBELL,
"Chairman Republican Congressional
"Committee, Washington, D. C."

Brady was Assistant Postmaster-General, from Muncie, Ind., a constituent of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] sitting near me. This refers back to the contest of 1880. Here is another letter from General Garfield at that time, addressed to General Arthur, the nominee for Vice-President:

MENTOR, OHIO, August 30, 1880.

DEAR GENERAL: It is clear to me that we are now at the most critical point of the campaign, and the victory will be made certainly possible or seriously imperiled by our management of Indiana during the next fortnight On what I now write I assume we shall carry Maine in September.

If we carry Indiana in October the rest is comparatively easy. We shall make a very serious, perhaps a fatal mistake if we do not throw all our available strength into that State.

* * * * * * *

And this brings me to the chief point. It is indispensably necessary that the means for putting these plans into vigorous execution be furnished at once.

The work has been started and must be supported promptly to insure success.

I have written thus fully because I understand that our friends in New York are in doubt about the wisdom of making much effort for Indiana. I am certain this is erroneous. Success in Indiana will be an immense help to New York and all other close States.

* * * * * * *

Please let me hear the result of your conference with Morton as soon as possible.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. GARFIELD.

Hon. C. A. ARTHUR, New York.

It does not say there who "Morton" is, but I suppose there is no question of the fact that he is the author of the next letter I shall read:

NEWPORT, September 7, 1880.

DEAR MR. DORSEY: I have just received yours of the 3d instant and have read with great interest your plan of action.

I wrote you on the 1st (on receipt of yours of the 29th), inclosing my check for the amount you asked ($5,000), and now inclose my check for $5,000 additional.

This makes my personal advances $30,000, without having collected a dollar from any one. Several of the gentlemen we asked to serve upon the finance committee declined; others were out of town; so that it has seemed worse than useless to call a meeting before Thursday of this week, when I hope to have a committee of some fifteen (or more) members present.

I go back to-morrow at 1 o'clock, and you may count upon my cordial co-operation. He said Mr. New must stop short unless Mr. Jewell could send him $10,000. I finally gave him a check for $4,000 (to Mr. New's order), and also sent $5,000 more to Senator Blaine, who was in distress.

* * * * * * *

Yours, very truly,

L. P. MORTON.

That is a very familiar name—Levi P. Morton, the nominee of the Republican party for Vice-President of the United States in the contest of 1888. This is a very affectionate letter to "Dear Mr. Dorsey," ex-Senator Dorsey of somewhat "star-route" notoriety. This was a very liberal contribution, and the name of some gentleman, Mr. New, seems to be brought into this letter. I believe he was another distinguished citizen of Indiana, and he must have money for Indiana, and Dorsey had laid out the plan of operations. Here I will read a letter from the private secretary of Mr. Morton:

1880—NEW YORK STATE COMMITTEE, REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN, STATE OF NEW YORK
(Fifth Avenue Hotel),
New York, September 30, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Morton desires me to inform you that he arrived this morning and has had conferences with Senator ALLISON, Mr. Hubbell, and others.

He does not see any prospect for securing any money in time for your use from Mr. Gould—

That is rather a familiar name.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very, just now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Jay Gould.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the Senator quoting from now?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am quoting from a letter of Mr. W. F. Peddrick, private secretary to one Levi P. Morton.

He does not see any prospect for securing any money in time for your use from Mr. Gould, but as he has a telegram from Senator CAMERON saying that his father goes to Philadelphia to-day, and that he goes to Pittsburgh himself, Mr. Morton feels confident that we shall be able to certainly send you altogether $100,000 (including the $10,000 he sent from Cleveland), and he hopes to increase this amount.

Very truly, yours,

W. F. PEDDRICK,
Private Secretary.

P. S.—Mr. Morton was assured by Mr. Bosler that he would collect and send him $20,000 or $25,000, in which expectation Mr. Bosler has been disappointed.

W. F. P., P. S.

Please address care Morton, Bliss & Co., 25 Nassau street, New York.

Here is a letter from General Garfield to "my dear Dorsey:"

MENTOR, OHIO, October 14, 1880—

This was after the State election in October, 1880, in Indiana—

MENTOR, OHIO, October 14, 1880.

MY DEAR DORSEY: I have waited till the dispatches leave me no longer in doubt of the result in Indiana. I have firmly believed in the effectiveness of our organization and work in that State, and have expected good results, but the crushing defeat that has been inflicted upon the Democracy at all points has far exceeded my expectations. I especially congratulate you on your masterful management of the campaign and the thoroughness with which you have watched all the details and incidents of the fight. Let me counsel you now to take some much needed rest and save yourself for the final struggle soon to come on. We shall need all our powers during the last two weeks of the contest, but just now go to bed and sleep two or three days and when you are sufficiently rested come here and make me a visit, or, better still, come here and sleep. Swaim joins me in kindest regards.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. GARFIELD.

Hon. S. W. DORSEY,
Indianapolis, Ind.

MENTOR, OHIO, January 28, 1881.

MY DEAR DORSEY: Yours of the 15th came while I was away. Believe me, I am glad "clear down in my boots" at the fitting and merited compliment you are to receive, and were it not simply impossible we would be there. The disappointment was as great at this end of the line as that when the general had to say "no." I am still hanging in the Senate, as you see. When that is over I will run on East and have a chat with you. What a mess our people made in Tennessee! You were not there! Will it hurt Gorham? Keep us posted in New York matters.

With kind regards, in which the general joins, I am, very truly, yours,

D. G. SWAIM.

This was January 28, 1881, upon the eve of the magnificent and celebrated dinner that was given in compliment to Hon. S. W. Dorsey for his effective services during the campaign of 1880. Here is something more about that complimentary dinner:

MENTOR, January 17, 1881.

DEAR SENATOR: Yours of the 15th instant is received. I am glad to know that you are to be complimented by such gentlemen. I wish it were possible for me to be present, but I can not.

My work is crowding more and more every day, and I fear I shall not be able to go anywhere until I leave for Washington.

Major Swaim is here again after three weeks' absence.

What new phase has the situation in New York assumed since it is found that "three can not become one?"

Very truly, yours,

J. A. GARFIELD.

Hon. S. W. DORSEY, New York, N. Y.

Mr. President, I have simply read these papers to refresh the memory of the distinguished Senator from Maine, and to show the depths of degradation to which the civil service of this Government was brought under Republican administration in 1880 and in 1882. It can never sink to a lower depth than it was brought then. It had become so utterly degraded that the Republican party was forced to take up the Pendleton civil-service bill and pass it, and it became a law January 16, 1883. This law has been held up variously; it has been criticised by some; it has been praised by others; it has been misrepresented by nearly all; and the Senator from Maine in his pretense of adherence to the civil-service law is giving it the most dangerous stabs it can be given. His is the stab of a pretended friend.

I hold the law in my hand, and there is not one line nor one word nor one letter in the civil-service law which retains or keeps in office any employé of the Government, high or low. The civil-service law does not guard ejection from office, but singly and solely the entrance to office. The civil-service law has nothing to do with the removal of any officer of the Government, from a Cabinet officer down to a charwoman.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the civil-service law very strongly diminish the temptation to turn out officers for partisan reasons?

Mr. COCKRELL. No doubt about that.

Mr. HOAR. And does it not in that way guard the exit from office?

Mr. COCKRELL. No question about that, and I will show its effects since it has been enforced by a Democratic administration.

Mr. HOAR. Then is it not true that it does guard the exit very much?

Mr. COCKRELL. The law, I say, does not. The law has nothing to do with it. The incidental effect of it is to reduce the number of removals; there is doubt about that; but I am speaking of the law, and I say there is nothing in the civil-service law which attempts to keep in office, to retain in office, to hold in office any officer of the Government from Cabinet minister down to charwoman. What did we say when the President removed a United States district attorney, an officer nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate? A howl was made that the President was violating the civil-service law. When the Secretary of War removes employés in any branch of the public service, in the Ordnance Department or elsewhere, employés whose position is not affected by the civil-service law, another howl is raised that the President is violating the civil-service law, that the Administration is violating the civil-service law.

Now, I simply desire to make these points prominent that there is nothing in that law which retains or holds in position any officer of the Government, high or low. The law was not made to guard the exit from office; the door of removal is wide open, and is kept so; but the civil-service law guards the entrance to official positions of what class? The civil-service law does not affect any appointment which is to be confirmed by the Senate. The civil-service law does not affect any of the officers whose nomination must be confirmed by the Senate. It includes no United States judges, no Territorial judges, no United States district attorneys, no United States marshals, no United States land officers, no Indian agents, no heads of departments, no heads of bureaus, no chiefs of divisions; and there are other officers who are not affected directly or indirectly by the civil-service law. The civil-service law has no reference to them at all. The civil-service law operates upon employés, almost all of whom are appointed by the heads of departments, or by the heads of bureaus, under the acts of Congress. It applies to those holding departmental positions in the departments in Washington, and in the large custom-houses and post-offices of the United States, and only such of these come within the protection of the civil-service law as to appointment therein after they have been classified by the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, approved by the President, and thereby made subject to that law.

The administration of President Cleveland has enforced the civil-service law, and I say frankly that, in my judgment, in the Departments and in some of the principal offices the supposed spirit of the law has been too strictly adhered to. I hold in my hand the fourth report of the United States Civil Service Commission, which was transmitted to Congress by the President, on January 23, 1888. The President says in the message transmitting it:

Concerning separations from the classified service, the report only informs us of such as have occurred among employés in the public service who had been appointed from eligible lists under civil-service rules. When these rules took effect they did not apply to the persons then in the service, comprising a full complement of employés, who obtained their positions independently of the new law.

When this law took effect in 1883, every office in the gift of the Government was filled by a Republican administration, and ninety-nine out of every hundred of all the employés were Republicans.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him I will say that I have heard him make that statement once or twice before, and I have taken occasion to assert from personal experience that he was mistaken, and I can prove it. A very large percentage of the clerks in all the Departments of the Government have been Democrats for many years. I can show the Senator Democrats who have been in, and are in now, that were in when the war began. I can show the Senator more than five times the number that he says were in who were appointed under a Republican administration while I was the head of a Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know the Senator from Colorado is sincere in his statement, but he is mistaken. That is all there is about it.

Mr. TELLER. I am not.

Mr. COCKRELL. You can find now scarcely a solitary Republican in office. All became Democrats as soon as it was known that Grover Cleveland was elected, and a premium of $5 was offered in the War Department, where the employés were all Republicans, to find one solitary one who was a Republican after that election.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me I will say that I do not make my statement based upon what employés claim that they are now, but upon what they claimed to be when I was in office. I would like to be allowed to say what I have said before.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I assert that in making appointments before the civil-service law went into effect I never inquired, when a man was certified to be a soldier, what his politics was, and a Democratic soldier had just as good a show of getting into that Department as a Republican if he was otherwise competent. I never inquired and did not know the politics of a single woman or minor that was ever appointed in my Department while I was Secretary.

I know now, and I knew after they were appointed, that quite a number of those appointed were Democrats, but no inquiry was ever made—and I believe that was true of my predecessors—as to the politics of a woman or a minor or a soldier; and the Senator could, if he would inquire, find that while preference was usually given of course to widows and daughters of soldiers who had served in our Army, there was a very large sprinkling of widows and daughters of men who had served in the Confederate army before this Administration came into power.

Mr. COCKRELL. No question about that, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. And were Democrats, or at least they were not Republicans.

Mr. COCKRELL. And there were a large number of distinguished ex-Confederate soldiers who were appointed to positions by the Republican party. Nobody denies that General Grant appointed as his Attorney-General, his confidential legal adviser, General Akerman, a man who had been in the rebel army; and he took the fiery Southerner from South Carolina, Orr, and sent him to represent this great country at the court of Russia; and he took the distinguished guerrilla, called during the war a bushwhacker, Mosby, and sent him to represent the honor, glory, power, and majesty of the United States in the Celestial Empire; and there were hundreds of others who were taken, but they were taken almost exclusively because they acknowledged political allegiance to the Republican party.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to make a further statement?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. These daughters and widows of Confederate soldiers, who were none of them put in because of their politics, not a single one; they were not put in because they were Democrats; they were not put in because they were Republicans; they were put in because they were worthy women who were capable of discharging the duties imposed on them as clerks, and because of the misfortunes which had compelled them to seek some method of making a living, so few opportunities being open to women; and it was deemed proper that the Government should provide where it could without detriment to itself for these women without reference to their politics.

I repeat again, Mr. President, that so far as my observation goes the selection of women in the public offices in this capital has been without reference to politics at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I appreciate the liberality and fair-mindedness of the distinguished Senator from Colorado. I acknowledge that he probably more than any other Republican Cabinet officer who has ever served——

Mr. TELLER. I think not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was liberal and not partisan in the administration of his office. He succeeded shortly—I believe there was one incumbent between them—Carl Schurz, and probably a more liberal rule existed in the Interior Department than in any other. Now, I say frankly that I know the widows of Confederate soldiers were appointed in several instances; there is no doubt about that; but the question was, upon whose indorsement were they appointed? Was it not upon General Mosby's? Was it not upon General Longstreet's? Was it not upon General Wickham's? Was it not upon Mr. Orr's? And was it not upon the recommendation of Republican ex-Confederates who solicited these appointments, and were they not practically Republican appointments just as much as if they had been made upon the solicitation of a Republican who had been in the Union Army?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator desires that I should answer him I would like to do so at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. Go on.

Mr. TELLER. I would like to say that none of the distinguished gentlemen the Senator has spoken of ever recommended anybody to me.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe they had all been furnished with positions elsewhere at the time the Senator was Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. I do not remember that any ex-Confederate who was a Republican ever recommended anybody to me, although that very likely may have been true. I do remember that many ex-Confederates and Democrats were recommended to me on the score of humanity, not of politics, and that such appeals always found a ready response.

Mr. COCKRELL. No question about that. I am not doubting that. I give the Senator credit for what he did.

Mr. TELLER. I will say, without naming the Senator, that one Senator, not the Senator from Missouri, but another member of this body, put in while I was there at least a dozen people whose politics I never asked about, except to say, jokingly, to him one day, "Of course I suppose all these applicants are Republicans," and they were not confined to women.

I believe myself when the Republican party was in power that a sprinkling, and a considerable sprinkling, of the other political party was no more than fair and right. I never have insisted myself that all the public officials should be of one political faith; but I have insisted, and I believe that now, and I yield that to the party in power, the officials who shape the policy of the Government should be in harmony with the head of the Government; but the clerk who does simply the work that is assigned to him in the way of copying, or matters of that kind, ought not to be selected, in my judgment, because of his political affiliations.

Mr. COCKRELL. We all know that the Senator was kind and liberal, and he acknowledges the principle, which I shall discuss very soon, that all the subordinate positions should not be filled by appointees from one political party.

The civil-service law was approved January 16, 1883, when, as I maintain, nearly all the subordinate offices were in the hands of the Republican party. The President referred to this in the quotation I have read from his message. The President says:

The path of civil-service reform has not at all times been pleasant nor easy. The scope and purpose of the reform have been much misapprehended; and this has not only given rise to strong opposition, but has led to its invocation by its friends to compass objects not in the least related to it. Thus partisans of the patronage system have naturally condemned it. Those who do not understand its meaning either mistrust it or, when disappointed because in its present stage it is not applied to every real or imaginary ill, accuse those charged with its enforcement with faithlessness to civil-service reform. Its importance has frequently been underestimated; and the support of good men has thus been lost by their lack of interest in its success. Besides all these difficulties, those responsible for the administration of the Government and its executive branches have been and still are often annoyed and irritated by the disloyalty to the service and the insolence of employés who remain in place as the beneficiaries and the relics and reminders of the vicious system of appointment which civil-service reform was intended to displace.

Yes, sir; one of the greatest hinderances to the success of true, genuine civil-service reform has been the mutinous conduct of those who were appointed under the spoils system and appointed upon mere political influence as rewards for imaginary service.

And yet—

The President says—

these are but the incidents of an advance movement, which is radical and far-reaching. The people are, notwithstanding, to be congratulated upon the progress which has been made, and upon the firm, practical, and sensible foundation upon which this reform now rests.

I say no man living could have more faithfully and efficiently enforced the civil-service law in its spirit and meaning than has Grover Cleveland, President of the United States.

Now, I want to go a little further. As I said awhile ago, the number of persons who were brought under the operation of the civil-service law depended upon the rules and regulations made by the Departments and submitted to the Civil Service Commission, approved by them, and then approved by the President. The service had to be classified by the heads of Departments, that classification reported to the President and approved by him, and then they could be included within the civil-service law. As I have said, and I want to put particular stress on this fact, the civil-service act became a law on January 16, 1883. When was that law extended to the Departments by the Republican administration? This is a very important point. There are some very strange things connected with the administration of the civil-service law by the Republican party. The Senator from Maine would make the country believe that all that was necessary for the millennial administration of the civil-service law would be the restoration of the Republican party to power. It was passed under a Republican administration, and what did they do?

When did the election occur? In November, 1884, when it was known that Grover Cleveland was elected President of the United States, and scarcely had that fact been settled when the Republican Secretaries under a Republican administration began the extension of the classified civil service. Let us see. I read from the fourth annual report of the Civil Service Commission, on page 107:

On November 19, 1884—

Just on the heels of the election, just after the election—

the Secretary of War revised the classification made by section 163 of the Revised Statutes, by declaring in a "circular order," issued on that day, that the classification for the purposes of the civil-service act in the Department of War included all civilian employés subordinate to the Secretary, except those employed merely as laborers or workmen, messengers and watchmen being considered as so employed. By this "circular order" the classification of the Department of War was revised so that all employés embraced therein would be classed as follows:

Class A, those having an annual compensation exceeding $2,000.
Class B, those having an annual compensation of $2,000.
Class 4, those having an annual compensation of $1,800.
Class 3, those having an annual compensation of $1,600.
Class 2, those having an annual compensation of $1,400.
Class 1, those having an annual compensation of $1,200.
Class C, those having an annual compensation of $1,000.
Class D, those having an annual compensation of $900 and under.

On November 25, 1884—

Five days afterwards—

the commission received from the Secretary of the Navy, in a communication dated November 22, 1884, a revision of the classification of that Department, dated November 1, 1884.

Received on the 25th of November, but dated November 1, 1884. That is remarkable, is it not? Both the Secretary of the Navy and the commission were right here in this city, and yet it took twenty-four days to get notice of this requisition from the Secretary of the Navy to the Civil Service Commission.

In this revision the Secretary gives the number of "clerks and employés in the Department of the Navy and bureaus" classified (subject to examination), classified (exempted from examination), and not classified under the law and the regulations of the United States Civil-Service Commission. The classified as subject to examination and the classified as exempted from examination are as follows:

Subject to examination:
Clerks of class 4, $1,800 per annum.
Clerks of class 3, $1,600 per annum.
Clerks of class 2, $1,400 per annum.
Clerks of class 1, $1,200 per annum.
Clerks of $1,000 per annum.
$900 per annum copyists.
$720 per annum copyists.
Exempted from examination:
Chief clerks, 9; 1 at $2,500 and 8 at $1,800 per annum.
Disbursing clerk, at $2,250.
Stenographers, 2; 1 at $1,400 and 1 at $1,000.
Chief draughtsman, at $2,250.
Draughtsmen, 23, at from $1,000 to $1,800.
Assistant draughtsmen, 2, at $1,400.
Telegraph operator, at $1,000.
Carpenter, at $1,000.
Plate printers, 2; 1 at $1,252 and 1 at $1,560; apprentice, at $600.
Engravers, 10, at from $1,200 to $1,800.
Assistant engravers, 10, at from $1,000 to $1,600.
Assistant astronomers, 3, at from $1,500 to $1,900.
Instrument maker, a $1,500.

The unclassified were 111, including messengers, assistant messengers, messenger boys, janitor, office attendant, watchmen, firemen, skilled laborers, laborers, elevator conductors, and charwomen.

By what authority the Secretary classified certain employés of his Department and then himself exempted them from examination is not stated; but the revision thus made was then accepted, and is now recognized by the commission in making examinations for that Department. Under this classification only 84 places in the Department of the Navy are covered by the civil-service act.

On January 2, 1885—

Only a little over two months before the inauguration of President Cleveland—

On January 2, 1885, the Secretary of the Treasury revised the classification of the officers, clerks, and employés of that Department. This was done by a "circular order" addressed "To whom it may concern."

The "circular order" is printed in the appendix.

The existing classification of those in the Treasury Department under the civil-service act, as heretofore construed and applied in all cases, includes all officers, clerks, and employés with annual salaries fixed by law, except those subject to confirmation by the Senate, and those merely employed as laborers or workmen, messengers and watchmen being considered as so employed.

After making this sweeping declaration, the Secretary arranged the following classes:

Class 4, $1,800 or more, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class 3, $1,600, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class 2, $1,400, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class 1, $1,200, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class B, $1,000, annual salary, fixed by law.
Class A, $900, annual salary, fixed by law.

On February 6, 1885—

Nearly a month preceding the inauguration of President Cleveland—

On February 6, 1885, the Postmaster-General, by "Order No. 83," revised the classification of the Post-Office Department, by arranging the officers, clerks, and other employés thereof into the following classes:

Class A, those having an annual compensation exceeding $2,000.
Class B, those having an annual compensation of $2,000.
Class 4, those having an annual compensation of $1,800.
Class 3, those having an annual compensation of $1,600.
Class 2, those having an annual compensation of $1,400.
Class 1, those having an annual compensation of $1,200.
Class C, those having an annual compensation of $1,000.
Class D, those having an annual compensation of $900.
Class E, those having an annual compensation of $720.

It was provided by this order that messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and laborers should not be included within the classification.

The records of the commission do not show that either the Secretary of State or the Attorney-General has yet revised the classification of his Department; but it appears that on October 6, 1883, the commission requested the Attorney-General to make a statement of the number of officials, including copyists and clerks, and excluding laborers, workmen, and appointments confirmed by the Senate, employed in the Department of Justice. To this request the Attorney-General replied on November 12, 1883, furnishing the information desired. This list of officials included the following: Assistant attorneys, law clerk and examiner of titles, law clerks, chief clerks, disbursing and appointment clerk, pardon clerk, stenographer, fourth-class clerks, third-class clerks, second-class clerks, first-class clerks, copyists, telegraph operator, and engineer.

The commission seems to have accepted this statement of the Attorney-General as a revision of the classification of the Department of Justice.

In a written communication, bearing no date, addressed to the commission, and received November 24, 1884—

Received November 24, 1884, but not dated; it was prepared, doubtless, in anticipation of the emergency which occurred, the election of President Cleveland.

The Commissioner of Agriculture submitted a "list of clerks in the United States Department of Agriculture classified in accordance with the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883." By this list the employés of the Department of Agriculture were arranged into the following classes:

1. Clerks of class 1, $1,200 per annum.
2. Clerks of class 2, $1,400 per annum.
3. Clerks of class 3, $1,600 per annum.
4. Clerks of class 4, $1,800 per annum.
5. Clerks at $1,000 per annum, each.
6. Clerks at $840 per annum, each.
7. Clerks at $720 per annum, each.
8. Clerk to Bureau of Animal Industry.
9. Disbursing officer.
10. Assistant to disbursing officer.
11. Librarian.
12. Superintendent of folding-room.
13. Employés in the Chemical Bureau.
14. Employés in the laboratory.
15. Employés in the Botanical Bureau.
16. Employés in the Bureau of Entomology.
17. Employés in the museum.
18. Foreman in the grounds.

On December 10, 1884, the President by telephonic message—

The day of retirement from authority was speedily drawing nigh, and business had to be transacted by telephonic communication by the Departments—

On December 10, 1884, the President, by telephonic message, informed the commission of the receipt by him of this classification of the Department of Agriculture, and asked the attention of the commission to the same. In reply the commission, on December 11, informed the President that the classification had been made in pursuance of his views as expressed to the commission in an interview in October, 1884, and which had been communicated to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

On December 16, 1884, the commission received from the President, by his private secretary, a communication dated December 12, in which the information was given that this classification of the Department of Agriculture had been accepted and approved.

Since that date the Department of Agriculture has been regarded and treated by the commission as a department operated upon by the civil-service act and rules.

It will be observed that the classification of the Department of Agriculture is entitled, "List of clerks in the United States Department of Agriculture classified in accordance with the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883."

Now, Mr. President, we see how long it was after this law was passed before it was put into practical operation, and its provisions were enlarged and extended. What was the object of that? As commonsense, practical men, what was the object of that extension of the civil-service law so as to include numerous employés of the Government just after to the election of 1884 brought within the purview and protection of the civil-service law? It was to retain in office Republican incumbents appointed under the patronage system of public spoils. That must have been the only reason.

The present Executive has had all the rules examined and made to conform, made harmonious, and has extended very largely the operations of the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission and the number of persons who are brought within the purview of that law. But it would be supposed from the remarks of the Senator from Maine that the Democratic party had trampled under its feet the civil-service law, had turned out good, competent, and efficient employés to make way for spoilsmen, and had utterly disregarded the civil-service law and regulations. This is the view that is intended to be spread abroad through this country by the resolution of the Senator from Maine, and also by his Senate select committee examining the civil service. He is trying to make the country believe that the Democratic administration under Grover Cleveland has disregarded the civil-service law, has turned out employés without any cause, and at the same time he undertakes to make the country believe that this civil-service law was intended and does hold in position the old employés, and that to discharge them, to dismiss them, to turn them out, to accept their resignations voluntarily or involuntarily, is a violation of the civil-service law. Why, Mr. President, according to his views and his efforts in this behalf it would almost be a violation of the civil-service law for the Democratic administration to acknowledge the death of a Republican incumbent in office and put somebody else in.

Let us analyze this matter and see whether these great violations have occurred or not. I read from the forty-fourth page of the report of the Civil Service Commission:

It will be observed that during the two periods covered by the above table, 547 appointments were made to the classified departmental service, 392 during the twelve months that commenced January 16, 1886, and 155 during the five months and a half that commenced January 16, 1887. During the nearly eighteen months included within the two periods covered by Table 16 only 3 appointments were made to the classified departmental service in the Department of State, 7 in the Department of the Navy, and 6 in the Department of Agriculture. None were made in the Department of Justice. Of the 547 appointments, all but 146 were made in the Department of the Interior and the Treasury—251 in the Interior and 150 in the Treasury.

* * * * * * *

Since July 16, 1883, the date on which the system of making appointments upon examination went into effect, 1,266 appointments have been made in the classified departmental service to places that are not excepted from examination. Of this number, 1,095 have been of men and 171 of women, the proportion of men to women being more than 6 to 1.

* * * * * * *

Of the appointments made during the period covered by this report 20 were claimants of the right of preference in civil appointments accorded to honorably-discharged soldiers and sailors; and this is about the total number of such claimants who, during the period referred to, passed examinations for the classified departmental service.

During the period that commenced July 16, 1883, and ended June 30, 1887, 31 persons, claiming preference in civil appointments under section 1754, Revised Statutes, were appointed to the classified departmental service.

In the appendix hereto will be found tables showing all the appointments made to the classified departmental service during the period that commenced July 16, 1883, and ended June 30, 1887. This table gives the name of each appointee in the order of appointment, with the date of probational appointment, the grade to which appointed, and every change that has occurred since appointment in his relation to the service; and in supplementary tables are given the names of the persons appointed from each State, the number appointed to each Department, the number appointed from each State to each Department from each examination, and the number appointed to each Department from each examination. These tables show the number of appointments made, under the apportionment of the commission, from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia.

They then give the table. There is the list, there is the name of every one, and no question about it. Any Senator can take it and examine it, and if there are any inaccuracies, if there are any mistakes, they can be pointed out, for the whole thing is given here fully and fairly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Let that be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, if there be no objection, the unfinished business will be informally laid aside and the consideration of the resolution continued.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I quote now from page 51 of the report:

The number of appointments to the classified departmental service during each of the periods covered by the several reports of the commission was as follows:

Appointments made to the classified departmental service during the several periods covered by the reports of the commission.

Periods.	Apportioned by the commission.	Not apportioned by the commission.	Total.
July 16, 1883, to January 15, 1884, both inclusive	48	.....	48
January 16, 1884, to January 15, 1885, both inclusive	342	90	432
January 16, 1885, to January 15, 1886, both inclusive	171	68	239
January 16, 1886, to January 15, 1887, both inclusive	367	25	392
January 16, 1887, to June 30, 1887, both inclusive	150	5	155
Total	1,078	188	1,266

Now, mark you, Mr. President, here are the total appointments made by a Republican administration during the first year practically of the application of the civil-service law from January 16, 1884, to January 15, 1885. We have no other basis on which to make comparison than from January to January of each year. I now make the comparison from January 16, 1885, nearly two months under a Republican administration and ten and a half months under a Democratic administration, to January 15, 1886, both inclusive.

The apportionment by the commission was 171, whereas in the year preceding, under a Republican administration, it was 342. The appointments not apportioned by the commission were 68, whereas during the year of Republican administration preceding they were 90. The total was 239. In the first year of Democratic administration under the civil-service law as compared with the first year under the Republican administration, the Republican administration appointed 432 under the civil-service law, while the Democratic administration only appointed 239.

The appointments from January 16, 1886, to January 15, 1887, were 367 (apportioned) and 25 (not apportioned), total 392; January 16, 1887, to June 30, 1887, 150 (apportioned)—there is a period of six months—and 5 (not apportioned), making a total of 155, so that the total result is 1,266. Take the 48 appointed prior to January, 1884, and it leaves 1,218. Of that number of 1,218, 432 were appointed under a Republican administration for one year, while under the present Administration in two years and a half, or nearly three years, only 786 have been appointed, a much less ratio than under Republican administration; and yet we are told that the Democratic administration is trampling under its feet the civil-service law!

Mr. President, the Democratic administration, coming into power when all the offices comparatively were filled by Republicans, did not in the first year of its administration appoint as many persons under the civil-service law as the Republican administration had the preceding year; and mark you, Mr. President, under the civil-service law wherever there was an appointment there must previously have been a death, resignation, or removal, so that the appointments under the civil-service law represent deaths, resignations, and removals.

I could quote much more extensively from this report of the Civil Service Commission, giving facts and figures about which there can be no controversy. They are statements every one of which can be verified by the record and about which there can be no question at all, and I say that the comparison is decidedly in favor of the administration of Grover Cleveland. But the Republican party is in a strait; it is in an emergency; it is in a trying position; and it must, if possible, make those who are sneeringly stigmatized as the Mugwumps believe that Grover Cleveland has violated the civil-service law; and therefore ever since the beginning of this session the Senator from Maine has been picking, picking, picking at the Administration and attempting to show that the Administration has violated the civil-service law, and therefore is no longer entitled to the confidence and support of the independent voters or what he calls Mugwump Republicans. That is the whole of it.

I have brought before him and before the country a comparison, and shown that under the Republican administration of President Arthur from January 16, 1884, to January 15, 1885, four hundred and thirty-two places under the civil-service law were filled by new appointments, and for every one of these places a vacancy had to be made by death, resignation, or removal; and I have shown that under the Democratic administration of Mr. Cleveland for the first year, from January, 1885, counting that time as under his administration, to January, 1886, only two hundred and thirty-nine such changes were made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask my honorable friend from Missouri as a friend of real civil-service reform, what he would think of, I will not say a device, but an arrangement by which inspectors of customs, being in the classified service, were dismissed because they were no longer necessary, and deputy collectors of customs who were not in the classified service were immediately appointed and more to fill their places? While it would not be a violation of the civil-service laws, if I am right in my supposition that the inspectors are within it and deputy collectors are not, I wish to ask the Senator whether it would not be a rather grave abuse of the spirit and intent of that law and open to fair criticism, however improper the conduct of some previous administration had been?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not believe in any system of mere avoidance. In my judgment the best interest of genuine civil-service reform in the administration of this Government requires that the departmental and subordinate positions shall be filled in somewhat equal proportion by the two great political parties of the country; and I believe that if when this Administration came into power the Republicans, instead of attempting to stigmatize it every time a Republican official was removed or resigned or anything of that kind happened, had said to the country, "It is just, it is fair, it is honest, it is right that one-half of these positions as nearly as practicable shall be in the hands of the Democratic party, and let removals be made until that equalization is brought about," it would have been far better than it is to-day. The Republicans have held on to the offices with a death-like grasp. They have held on to them as if they did not believe anybody else was entitled to fill an office. High officers have been forced to resign, and when they would not resign they have had to be removed. I do not think the precedent has ever occurred under any former administration of any political party. No, Mr. President, every office that has been taken from the grasp of a Republican holding office when this Democratic Administration came into power, has been taken, as it were, by force. Such men did not resign, or very few of them did so, and removals had to be made to place the chief offices in friendly hands to co-operate with the Administration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will allow me to say that I do not know whether that is true or not; but upon the principle of the civil-service reform or improvement, whatever you call it, the idea was that the largest part of the officers of the United States being limited for terms of four years, excepting mere clerks, every person in position would be allowed to serve out his term without regard to the question of his religious creed or his political creed, if he behaved himself and did his duty. The consequence would be, as there are four-year terms, that within the existence of a single administration of four years—to say nothing of its repetition if it should be re-elected—every office in the four years' class (which covers the great mass) would have terminated in respect to its particular incumbent by the lapse of time, and the new man, other things being equal, as the famous circular of the War Department says, was to be chosen on account of a different political faith. So, other things being equal, we will put it in its best possible light, following out the principle, if this administration had shown that fairly and truly and naturally—and I make no observation whether it has or not—a Democratic gentleman coming into office as marshal or collector or postmaster or district attorney for Missouri or Vermont or wherever would hold on his four years whether the Administration in its political character changed by the election of General Harrison or not; and then when the time came when his time was out, he of course had no further claim on the office.

But upon the principle of the Benét circular the choice of the new Administration, other things being perfectly equal, would be to find somebody of a different creed to take the place.

How much that would amount to in the end it is not necessary to take up my friend's time to say. But in reference to what he has just now said—if I do not interrupt him too much—which ought to be borne in mind, I think that before any of these high officers, or many of them, so far as I know or believe were asked even to resign, a famous confidential circular was issued by the then Postmaster-General as the chief manager of that part of the affair, inviting everybody who wished to get into office or wished his friends to get into office, or to get out somebody who was in office, to get up proofs of misconduct in the form of affidavits to be sent forward to the proper department as furnishing the ground of making a change. That may be all very well on the face of it; but an affidavit is a public thing. It must be taken before a magistrate, or in a public court of justice, or in a public character certainly, whether it is taken at chambers or in term time. Those affidavits were to be forwarded.

Now, I wish to ask my friend from Missouri, supposing he were a Democratic or Republican, or whatever political creed he had, office-holder, and he was asked to resign on charges of misconduct in office based upon affidavits furnished and sworn to by somebody, whether he would not think it was a fundamental right of his to know who swore to such an affidavit and to show, if he could, that he was innocent of that particular charge, whether he might resign the next day or not, and if the man who signed such an affidavit and swore to it had committed perjury to see to it that he was punished? I know what the answer of my friend would be, for every honorable man must answer it one way.

In a great many cases that have come to the knowledge of the Senate—and how many more there are I do not know—affidavits thus obtained and thus filed were refused to the Senate of the United States called upon to assist in the removal of the man charged, and he was never permitted to know who was the maker of the affidavit or what the precise thing that was stated in the affidavit was. Can that be called civil-service reform?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, Mr. President, the letter of the Postmaster-General only referred to a few holders of post-offices. It did not refer to the general body of the offices.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was a universal scheme.

Mr. COCKRELL. It only referred to the offices under his Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was instantly applied everywhere, as I happen to know personally, to collectors of customs and everybody else.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. It was not a general order. The Postmaster-General had nothing to do with other Departments in any shape, manner, or form; and I say that letter was issued long after the time when the heads of bureaus and the important offices of the country should have been placed in the hands of Democratic officials under a Democratic President.

These things do not break the force of the facts I have given. They have nothing to do with them. There may have been some mismanagement, there may have been some dereliction of duty here and there. These are incidents to fallen humanity. But the Senator from Vermont tries to take particular exception to the customs service, as he says. I want to read about the New York custom-house from page 73 of this report of the Civil Service Commission:

> As stated above, no other amendments of the rules than those specified were made during the period covered by this report, but the regulations governing promotions in the customs service of New York, promulgated by President Cleveland on January 4, 1887, were in effect an important addition to those rules, and led to the amendments, that relate to promotions, of Rules IV, VI, XIX, and XXI, of May 5, 1887.

After quoting many facts in regard to the custom-house there, the Civil Service Commission say:

> Besides, promotion examinations were conducted in an uncertain manner. For these reasons the registers of persons eligible to promotion were not well supplied. Many of the vacancies in the higher grades could not therefore be filled; and persons in the lower grades had to be detailed to do the work of the higher grades, and these persons were compelled to do this work without receiving the compensation attached to those grades. During the investigation made under the commission's order of December 9, 1886, Collector Magone stated that up to that time only three persons had been promoted in regular manner since the passage of the civil-service act in 1883, and that the office of the collector had, in consequence of this condition, come to his hands utterly disorganized. The same causes that embarrassed the collector also embarrassed the other officers of the district, and demoralized the service.

And will then certify to the head of the office the names standing at the head of such list not exceeding three. When more than one appointment is to be made the vacancies will be numbered, and the first three names will be certified for the first vacancy, the remaining two and the fourth for the second vacancy, the remaining two and the fifth for the third vacancy, and so on, for the whole number of vacancies; but if, after selecting one of any three certified for appointment, the head of an office shall object to another presentation of either of the remaining names, it shall not be again certified.

I do not know the instance to which the Senator from Vermont refers. I presume it was a matter of necessity for the better administration of the public service, as frequently happens in such cases.

I have made the comparison of the last year of the administration of the Republican party and the first and all subsequent years of the administration of the Democratic party. It shows that, notwithstanding the glaring fact that nearly all the positions were filled by Republican incumbents who had been appointed before the civil-service law took effect, and who were consequently never examined as to their fitness and qualifications, the Republican administration in its last year made more removals and consequently more appointments within the classified civil service than the Democratic administration has in any one year of its existence, almost in any two years of its existence. That is the fact and that is the record.

The Senator from Maine has made much fuss over the order of General Benét, recited in his resolution, which is marked "confidential." By the way, "S. V. Benét, Brigadier-General and Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army," I believe, is a distinguished Republican, in sympathy with the distinguished Senator from Maine. That has always been my understanding. I have never heard it disputed or questioned. But, Mr. President, the Senator read what purported to be an explanation given by General Benét in regard to this order, and it reads as follows:

A few days before the date of this circular I was called to the office of the Secretary of War. Mr. Endicott stated to me that he had received many urgent requests from very prominent Democrats—one especially prominent and known throughout the country—to have Republicans employed in the arsenals throughout the country dismissed and Democrats appointed in their places. The Secretary said he did not want to turn the service into a political machine, but that something would have to be done to bring about a different condition of affairs in the Ordnance Department. He said that he would like to have Democrats appointed wherever Republicans were dismissed, and that the filling of positions occupied by women and children should be recognized in the same political degree as those filled by men.

Is there any crime in that? Is there any crime in a Democratic administration filling vacancies by the appointment of Democrats, making the appointments to vacancies by giving preference to Democratic women instead of Republican women?

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator explain how he can ascertain the politics of women and children. What is the Democratic method?

Mr. COCKRELL. Who knows the politics of Mrs. Ellen Foster? Does anybody know her politics?

Mr. HALE. She is not in an arsenal.

Mr. COCKRELL. She is the hired champion taken from the Prohibition ranks to draw back Prohibitionists to the Republican party, now canvassing the United States. Has she any politics? Take that other distinguished lady—I have forgotten her name—who is now out in Indiana.

Mr. HALE. Miss Anna Dickinson.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not believe that is the name.

Mr. TELLER. Mrs. Calvert?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not the name.

Mr. TELLER. No; she is working for the Democratic ticket.

Mr. COCKRELL. It may be Miss Anna Dickinson, I am not sure; but a very eminent lady who is a woman-suffragist is out there now in the employ of the Republican party championing for the same object, to try to draw over to the Republican party in its desperate condition those men who favor woman suffrage.

Mr. HALE. The women the Senator names are not in office. They are not holding place.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were these women that the Democratic officials were to appoint holding office?

Mr. HALE. They were to displace others.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were to take office, and they were simply to displace Republicans, and I fail to see any crime or any ground of censure or criticism for a Democratic administration to put in the place of a Republican incumbent whose office has become vacant, whether that incumbent was a male or a female Republican, a Democrat to fill it. There is nothing in it; and it is precisely what the Senator from Maine would do if he were the Chief Executive of this country, and he would make every one of his Cabinet officers toe the dead line in that respect.

This is the coloring given to this by a Republican correspondent I suppose:

He said that he would like to have Democrats appointed wherever Republicans were dismissed, and that the filling of positions occupied by women and children should be recognized in the same political degrees as those filled by men. I replied to Mr. Endicott that I would fix the matter, and immediately I wrote this circular and sent it to Secretary Endicott for inspection. The Secretary approved of it, and I had manifold copies made and sent to all of the commanders of the arsenals. In three or four instances the commanding officers wrote official or private letters to me—I forget which—stating that they had made careful canvasses of the employés, and they found that the majority of them were Democrats.

A wonderful discovery! They must have used microscopes in making that discovery. Three or four of them reported that—they found that the majority of them were Democrats, and that if the object of my circular was to equalize between the two parties the positions, there could be no equalization in favor of the Democratic party.

This was nearly a year after the Democratic Administration had come into power, but it was ample time for nearly every Republican incumbent to become thoroughly converted and regenerated from fallen Republicanism to sanctified Democracy. Oh, yes, Mr. President, I have no doubt that you will find thousands of those in the Government service who in November, 1884, would have sworn to their loyalty and allegiance to the Republican party, who in January, 1886, would have done the same thing to the Democratic party. Let me say to my friends here that you know this. You know it right here in the Departments. Some of the most blatant demagogues that have exercised subordinate positions here in the Departments became the mildest and meekest submissionists to Democratic authority after Cleveland was elected, and they were the ones who attempted to ingratiate themselves into the favor of the Democratic officials in order to retain place and power; and the Senator from Colorado knows some of them, and so do other Senators.

I say that, in my judgment, the very best interests of a true, genuine civil service would have been promoted and subserved if, when this Administration came into power, the rules could have been relaxed until there was an equalization between the Republican and Democratic incumbents in the offices. It was but fair and just and right, and, so far as I am concerned individually, instead of censuring the Administration and the heads of Departments for removing Republican incumbents and supplying their places under the civil-service law, where the door is open to Republicans as well as Democrats and Mugwumps and all classes of people—instead of censuring them for making the few removals they have made, I think the criticism is, if any, that they have not made enough of such removals.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question just there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; but not to make a speech. I will yield if the Senator wants to ask a question. I am nearly through, and I do not want to be detained any longer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I never make a speech. I think the Senator, perhaps, can inform us, and it will be interesting to know, in respect of the appointments which have been made ostensibly under the civil-service law on competitive examinations, what percentage have been Democrats and what percentage Republicans. I have no doubt the Senator has the means at hand of telling us at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not, except my general knowledge of those matters. I have been watching them with some little interest. My judgment is that during the preceding administration of the Republican Executive, four-fifths if not nine-tenths of the applicants who passed the civil-service examination, and probably more, were Republicans. I think very few Democrats ever applied under the law prior to 1885. I think even after that time, until the provisions of the law became more thoroughly known and understood, and it was found that there was no discrimination actually existing, a large majority of the applicants were still Republicans. I base this statement upon the belief that prevailed among Democrats that notwithstanding they might pass the civil-service examination, by some means or other not known to them, not understanding fully the provisions of the civil-service law and regulations, they would stand very little chance of an appointment, and therefore they did not apply.

I think after it was known that there was no discrimination, and there being a Democratic administration, and probably Democrats thinking that they might have a little better chance under a Democratic administration than under a Republican administration, the number of Democratic applicants increased and multiplied, until now, in all probability, a considerable majority of the applicants for civil-service examinations are Democrats. I think that for probably the first six months or perhaps the first year of the Democratic administration a majority of the appointees under the civil-service law were Republicans. This is my belief from the fact that they were the only ones who could be certified until the time expired for the certification. The names of Republicans were still upon the lists, and they were certified by the Civil Service Commission when a call was made from the Departments for appointees.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield.

Mr. TELLER. I did not want to interrupt the Senator until he got through with his statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be no interruption.

Mr. TELLER. I wished to ask the Senator if he recollected the testimony of one of the bureau officers that out of 85 appointments 83 of them were Democrats.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under the civil-service law?

Mr. TELLER. Under the civil-service law. That was, I suppose, in the first year of the Administration.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the testimony of what officer?

Mr. TELLER. That was in the Pension Office. I am not criticising it. I am simply stating the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. What officer was it?

Mr. TELLER. The Commissioner of Pensions. There was a statement of that kind which came out in some examination.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it was true in that office.

Mr. TELLER. It never was doubted. Nobody doubted it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it was true. There were, I think, 150 who had to be appointed, and the Commissioner of Pensions aimed to divide them, and he did divide them, and from 70 to 80 Democrats were appointed.

Mr. TELLER. Eighty-five were appointed, and, as I recollect, 82 or 83—I am not certain which—Democrats were appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I expect that was true. I hope it was.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator, as he has been engaged in examining the service of the Government in the Departments, if he can tell me how, without a plain violation of that law, the appointing power would know whether a man was a Democrat or not until after he was appointed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I must confess that I am perfectly astonished that a former Secretary of the Interior, a distinguished Senator prior to his service as Secretary, and now again on this floor, should ask such a question as that. I think if he will go home and ask any of his children they can explain it to him very easily.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to explain it. I do not want to go home for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I said on the floor of the Senate when I was advocating the passage of the civil-service law, that I could go in as Secretary of the Treasury under that civil-service law, and I could turn out every solitary Republican in the Treasury Department, and I could appoint only Democrats, and not violate the civil-service law; and I can do it.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say, if the Senator will yield to me, after nearly two years of administration under this law, that could not be done without a plain violation of the law. Of course it is possible under the stimulus the Senator mentions that the Democrats, knowing they had a friendly administration, may have come in such numbers to the examining committee that they have got in, but no officer is justified in inquiring or knowing what the politics of the man is who is certified to him.

I never heard during my administration a suggestion from any living person as to the politics of those who were certified. I should myself have regarded it as a great breach of public duty if anybody had come to me and said, "Mr. So-and-so is certified to you, and he is a Republican," or "he is a Democrat." I do not charge that now upon any officer of this Administration. I am bound to give the reason the Senator did, that knowing it is a Democratic Administration the Democrats are all now making a rush to get in, and in that way they get through the civil-service examination, and then of course, the Administration never looking to ascertain their politics, they having gone through the examination and been certified to, they go into office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend is mistaken about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. The innocence of the Senator from Colorado is truly commendable and refreshing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is, too, in his last statement.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Missouri wants to dispute my last statement, I shall be prepared to hear him do so, and very likely I may give some credence to his objection to that statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. The idea that the Departments can not know anything about whom the appointees are, or anything of the kind!

Mr. TELLER. Oh, I do not say the Departments can not know, but I say the Departments under the law ought not to know, and no officer who properly administers the law will know or allow himself to know.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say frankly for myself that I believe in a genuine practical civil service reform.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Such as we now have. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRELL. If I had been at the head of one of the Executive Departments I would have felt it to be my duty to see that the Department was weeded out and cleaned out of all those who had been appointed under the spoils system and were inefficient and inattentive and negligent; and I would have done my best to see that honest, competent, and well-qualified persons, examined by the Civil Service Commission and certified, were appointed to their places; and I would have prayed that ninety-nine out of every one hundred of them might be Democrats until there were as many Democrats in the Department as there were Republicans; and then, when there was an equality, I should have disapproved of any discrimination; and I should have hoped and prayed that thereafter the service might be maintained for all time to come in that proportion.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Missouri has not answered my question yet, and if I may be pardoned I will ask my friend again the question, because he is familiar with this modern reform.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator refers to his question about the number of appointees. I thought I had answered it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; only as to one Department, eighty-three to eighty-five, or whatever the number. What proportion in the last four years of new appointments under civil-service examinations out of the three certified have been Democrats and what proportion Republicans?

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought I had answered that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not understand it. Perhaps the Senator did.

Mr. COCKRELL. Of the 432 appointed in the last year of Mr. Arthur's administration, from January 16, 1884, to January 15, 1885, my judgment is that over 400 of them were Republicans. We come to the next year, or the first year under the Democratic Administration, and find there were only 239 appointed. My judgment is that half of them were Republicans. Then we come to the second year of the Democratic administration. From January 16, 1886, to January 15, 1887, inclusive, there were 392 appointed. I should say that three-fourths of them, and probably more, were Democrats. From January 16, 1887, to June 30, 1887, the same proportion, 155. I take this from what I know has occurred in regard to the certification of the eligibles from the various States, and the length of time their names remain on the eligible roll before they have to be examined a second time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think three are certified.

Mr. COCKRELL. Four were certified under the Republican administration, but the present Administration has reduced the number to three.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is reduced now to three?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if I understand the Senator, under the present Administration, about three-quarters of those selected from the three certified are Democrats.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the last eighteen months I should say from one-half to three-fourths.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it would happen either that one Democrat out of the three certified, standing at the foot of the three, was selected, or that two out of three certified were Democrats, and so the selection might fall naturally on the Democratic side; or how did it work out? How did it happen that this difference of selection should have occurred? Was it from the high moral purpose that my friend advocates, of introducing an equality of political opinions among the people who are doing the work of the Government, or was it mere accident of circumstance in some way?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am astonished that the Senator did not catch the answer I made to that. I said that during that time probably from three-fourths to four-fifths of the applicants for examination, and of those who passed the examination and had their names placed upon the list of eligibles for certification, were Democrats. Therefore, necessarily that number of Democrats had to be certified in proportion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would of course naturally follow, but how is it, under a civil-service reform administration, that a large and hungry part of the community, of Republicans, as it has been stated already by my friend, should decline to submit to a competitive examination, which they had been submitting to before in order to get into the public service, and that all the persons who applied should be Democrats? I can not understand that.

I think in the State of Vermont, where of course the appointments are very few and much less from the circumstances that I referred to a little while ago, the inspectors of customs were dismissed because they were supposed not to be needed, and their places were immediately supplied by deputy collectors who did not need to be examined at all. Among those who have applied in the State of Vermont I am under the impression (but I am not speaking by the book, as the phrase is) that young persons who felt themselves able and wanted employment, without regard to their politics, would apply and would be examined, and some three at the top of all of course would be certified, if they got up to a certain standard, as they always did. But I have never yet heard—it may be that such a case exists—of anybody employed in the service of the United States in the State of Vermont under the civil-service law since this Administration began who was a Republican. Perhaps their knowledge, school information, etc., have suddenly diminished.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the time the Senator awhile ago asked me the question about the inspectors, I did not catch the exact point he was making. In my judgment the inspectors to whom he refers did not come under the classified civil service. I have not examined carefully, but the inspectors of the internal-revenue service did not, I know, and my judgment is, and I think I am right, that the inspectors in the customs service did not come under the regulations of the civil service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With great respect to my friend, if he will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not believe in interrupting a Senator without his consent and going on before I get it. That is why I waited. With the consent of my friend I will say that I think the Department held, overruling the collector of customs for the district of Vermont, that inspectors of customs were within the civil-service provision. Of course it is not within my personal knowledge, for I have not gone through the custom-house to look at the books, but my information is, and I never heard it disputed, that inspectors of customs, being understood by the Department and by the Civil Service Commission and by everybody to be within the civil-service law, and therefore in filling up a vacancy that they must be examined, and the best man out of three selected, were dismissed in large numbers, for that small district, of course the force is not very great, on the ostensible ground that their services were no longer needed for the public service, and that immediately following, I do not mean the very next day, but in substance, their places in numbers and character were supplied by deputy collectors, another name for the identical class of servants and individuals who were called inspectors before, who did not fall within the civil-service rules and were never examined. That may be all right. I only speak of it as a historic fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator is mistaken. I have been quite confident that the customs inspectors and the internal-revenue inspectors did not come within the civil-service law and regulations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not speaking of the internal-revenue inspectors.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the case, unless the regulations have been extended to include them since the last order of the President. I have not had time to examine the last order of the President, to see to what great length he has extended the law over new classes of individuals; but a large number of new classes of officers have been included within the classification.

I hope every Democratic official, every Democratic Senator and Representative who was applied to by his Democratic constituents for appointment in the various departmental branches of the service did what I did. I sent to them a copy of the Civil Service Commission report, containing the laws and the regulations, and told them to go and stand the civil-service examination, and Missouri being a large State and entitled to her full proportion of appointments would have a fair chance of getting the appointments, and I think Missouri has gotten her fair share.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so. We agree to that all around.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope every other Democrat did the same thing. I find a table here which gives the number of appointments from the various States under the civil-service law from July 16, 1883, to June 30, 1887. I see the distinguished Senator from Vermont has two male and five female appointees. He gives preference to the females. I find that Missouri has thirty-five male appointments and eight of females, making a total of forty-three.

There is the list from all the States; there is no secret about it. It shows the exact number who were appointed in proportion to population without any evasion or attempt at evasion. The appointments for the last eighteen months must necessarily have been of more Democrats than Republicans, because of the large preponderance of Democratic applicants. Prior to March, 1885, and up to about a year after that time, the majority was largely in favor of the Republicans. When this law took effect the Republicans had comparatively all the offices, and it was their administration. As a matter of course, there was a feeling that they would retain the offices under the law, and, therefore, there were not as many Democratic applications for examination as have been made since. This is perfectly plain.

I only regret that more Democrats have not succeeded. I think it would have been far better for the public service, as I have stated frankly and candidly. I think there ought to be a greater equalization than now exists. I think it would be for the interest of all political parties and of every patriot citizen in this land if the subordinate positions were nearly equally divided between the great political parties, and then leave them open to the honest, fair competition of Democrats and Republicans, Republicans and Democrats, under a Democratic or a Republican administration, and let them be selected because of their qualifications and fitness for the position, and let them understand that once being selected under the civil-service law does not give them a life tenure to that office, and that they may be removed, as the law does not guard the exit from office. It leaves that door wide open, justly so and properly so, because then the appointees under the law always have some incentive to the performance of their duties. They know that there is no law to hold them in places which they unworthily fill.

I do not believe in retaining employés in the Government service for life and pensioning them on the Government. I do not believe in a civil pension-list in any shape, manner, or form. I believe that the Government pays its employés a full equivalent for all the service they render to the Government, and that the Government is in no manner in debt to them; that it is under no obligation to them. They voluntarily seek the office; they voluntarily take the office; they voluntarily and gladly take the salary; and when their length of service is completed by being turned out or being disabled, or in any other manner, they have no claim upon the bounty of the Government for pensions or any other kind of remuneration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will pardon me——

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the philosophical principle he is speaking about, there being no check on the power of removal, which is the present law clearly, and which I think is a great defect if what we call civil service in respect of minor offices and places is really good for anything, suppose I, being the Secretary of the Treasury, have certified to me to-day a list of the three highest persons for three places, and it happens by accident that they are all Democrats. By "accident," I mean by the event of a fair and impartial scrutiny.

Mr. COCKRELL. They may all be Democrats or all Republicans. It is unavoidable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am supposing this case to illustrate the philosophy of this thing to my friend and get his opinion about it. Suppose I am a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, and the three people to fill the vacancies that exist, which were made to exist by my removing three Democrats the day before, are Democrats. I find on looking over the list below, who almost came up to the standard, there are three Republicans. I am supposing myself to be a Republican Secretary of the Treasury. I must appoint these three men who are certified. They are Democrats, but they are not the kind I want for that reason merely. I must appoint them. Day after to-morrow I cause my secretary to send them a notice that "your services will be no longer required after the 1st of the month," treating them with perfect fairness. I give them a month's pay. On the 1st of the month they will go out. The next three are my political friends; I do not mean my personal friends, but gentlemen who think there ought to be a protective tariff, or there ought to be this thing or that which is my political opinion.

Then by a mere act of my will and my political prejudice, if you call it that, my political opinion, I get rid, conformably to law, of the three best men on the list of the one hundred who were examined, who happened to be Democrats and not Republicans, and at the end of that month I get three men of my political persuasion. That can go on from day to day, from month to month, without violating any law, because, as the Senator says, the power of the heads of the Departments in the case of these departmental appointments, and if there be any that fall under the President his power to dismiss from office with reason or without reason is absolute and complete.

In the end, in my opinion, if we go on with this business, as I hope we shall, in its true and right way, it will be necessary to correct that evil, just as in every State where the people are sovereigns, and elect and appoint their officers in the municipalities and in the State, the term for which officers hold is a fixed term, and no governor, no judge of a county, no supervisor, no anybody can turn them out until they have a chance to be heard, and are turned out for a cause which is made manifest upon a trial in some way. In my opinion, there is not a State in this Union that would stand any such system as we have now in respect of these minor appointments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am sorry that the Senator has been led into a mistake in the supposition which he has made. The case he has supposed can not occur under the civil-service law. He supposes that a long list is certified; that three are put at the head of it; that the Secretary of the Treasury, he being the Secretary and a Republican, could find out that the three first from whom the selections had to be made were Democrats, and the three next were Republicans; and therefore he would reject the three Democrats, or appoint them for a month, and then discharge them and select the other three. That is not the law, and that is not the regulation, and that is never done. It never has been done. The Senator is entirely mistaken if he supposes that that kind of lists has ever been sent to the Departments under a Democratic administration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I remember, if my friend will pardon me, one rather notable instance. I think it was in the city of New York, where for some reason (I shall not characterize it, because it may have been a good one or a bad one) the whole list was directed to be certified. That is a mere matter of regulation with the President, who has control of the whole thing. Out of that whole list the surveyor, or whoever the officer was, was authorized to make his choice. So it is merely in the power of the President or the head of Department, be he Republican or Democrat, to get rid of anybody who is in. We all agree to that. Then it is in his power, by his regulations, to so adjust matters that his particular penny will come face up, to use a boyish illustration of our school days.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; the Senator is mistaken entirely. Under the Republican administration, when a vacancy occurred in the Interior Department or in any other Department, the head of the Department notified the Civil Service Commission to certify the names of eligibles for appointment, and the Civil Service Commission certified four names for the place. The Secretary of the Interior could not tell who would be certified. The Secretary of the Interior could not control the certification. They had to be certified in a regular routine around through the States, in accordance with population. The Secretary could not know who were the next four names on the list of eligibles, or from what State they were. All that the Department knew was the four names that were certified to it. The Department does not know, the Civil Service Commission will not let it be known, who are on the list of eligibles on their books. Therefore the Secretary does not have before him all these names; he has the three and only the three, and there are sent to the Department in a great big beautiful square paper box all the papers showing the examination. There is the grading; there is the classification. The Democratic Administration has reduced the number to three; now there are three names.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator that I think they do not send the examination grading except upon the call of the appointing officers.

Mr. COCKRELL. They always call for them, necessarily.

Mr. TELLER. No, I think not.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a rule, I apprehend they do, because the appointing power wants to know the grading in the different branches of the examination in order to determine which one to take.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that they must certify the highest in that study. Consequently the appointing officer knows he will get no higher grade.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have gone over it all, and I understand it thoroughly. The highest may be the best in one branch of the service and he may be the lowest in another. The grading is given, and the average is given. A man may be in history 100; he may be in mathematics 60; he may be in some other branch only 75; but the average is above the limit of 65, as it used to be; I believe it is 70 or 75 now; it has been increased. However, his average grading is above that. It is this average grading that is sent. It is absolutely necessary for the appointing power to know the grading in order to make an intelligent selection. He might just as well cast heads and tails if he does not have the grading before him. He must know the relative standing in the different studies in order to determine the fitness of the applicant for the particular place. For example, you want a clerk in an auditor's office where there are constant calculations being made from day to day. The work required is a mere matter of calculation. Whom do you want? You want a man who writes a good hand and who is an adept in figures. You have a certification of three names. One man stands 90 in his average, another stands 80, and another one stands 70, supposing that 65 is the minimum of the standard. When you examine these three you find the man whose average is only 70 is better in mathematics and writes a fairer hand than either of the other two. For your purpose he is the man you want, although his grading is 20 below the highest one. Therefore you select him. It is for that purpose that the papers are sent to the head of the Department. You may in another place want simple writing, where there are no great intellectual qualifications called into play. You make your examination and you find that a man who stands very low yet writes a beautiful, legible hand. He is way below, he is only 50, or he may be only 60 in mathematics; but he is very high in writing. You take him because that is the kind of work you want him for. This is absolutely necessary in the selection.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate much longer than I intended when I rose. I intended simply to show these laws, but I have been gratified at the great interest my Republican friends are taking in this matter, and I am gratified that I have had the opportunity of laying the subject before them in the light that others see it, and in the light that the country sees it. President Cleveland has redeemed and sacredly kept every pledge ever made in regard to the civil service and its administration, and this constant picking here and there by this one and that one is only to divert attention from the great cardinal policy which he has pursued in the matter, and from the great contrast of his administration with the previous Republican administration under the civil-service law.

Think of it, Mr. President. A Republican President, in possession of all the offices, having everything in his own hands, and operating under the civil-service law which he has approved, turns out and discharges 432 Republican incumbents during the last year of his administration, and a Democratic successor coming in and following him displaces only 239 in the first year, only 392 in the second year, and in the second half of the third year only 155.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. He should bear in mind that about that time there was a very large number of new appointments made by an act of Congress, especially with reference to the pension laws. One hundred and fifty were appointed at one time, which must come out of the number stated. They were new offices.

Mr. COCKRELL. But these were not removals where the vacancies were not filled. These were removals where the appointments were made of those certified under the civil-service law. They were not removals made because the officers were no longer needed. They were removals made and the vacancies filled.

Mr. TELLER. To what year does the Senator refer now?

Mr. COCKRELL. I refer to the period from January, 1884, to January, 1885.

Mr. TELLER. In that year there was a very great number of additional clerks provided for, and they are included in the Senator's statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Four hundred and thirty-two was the number removed in the last year of the Republican administration.

Mr. TELLER. Those were new appointments.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Maine makes a great parade about the Secretary of War. I do not know whether the Secretary of War ever gave such instructions or not. This is all hearsay. I have no objection in the world to the passage of the resolution. I hope the Secretary of War will answer it, as he doubtless will, fully and fairly. The complaint is made that he directed General Benét to tell the officers in the various armories and arsenals that on the dismissal of Republicans he wanted Democrats given the preference in appointments. Mr. President, that was right; it was morally right; it was politically right. I see no crime, I see no wrong in turning out a Republican soldier and putting in a Democratic soldier. I see no wrong in a Democratic administration finding twenty Republican soldiers in office in a certain bureau or Department and turning out ten of them and putting in ten Democratic soldiers just as deserving and meritorious. I fail to see any crime in that. I do not understand the law that requires preference to be given to the ex-soldiers of our country to be that preference is to be given to Republican soldiers. The Democratic soldier is just as much entitled to precedence and recognition as the Republican. If Republican soldiers under Republican administrations have been placed in all these positions, it is right and just and the duty of a Democratic administration to displace enough of them to equalize the offices and to give one-half of them to Democratic soldiers.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. What would the Senator think of the propriety of appointing some of these Democratic soldiers instead of ex-Confederate soldiers?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, that has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not know but that it might have something to do with it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Hampshire need not concern himself so much about the ex-Confederates. They will take care of themselves.

Mr. BLAIR. Being in control of the Government, they are likely to do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will take care of themselves.

Mr. BLAIR. But it does seem to me that if the Senator is anxious about the men who were soldiers, and Democratic soldiers, it would be well to consider their claims when they come in competition with the appointment of ex-Confederate soldiers. That was simply the suggestion I made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I state again that when the Democratic administration came into power and found in a certain Department twenty Republican soldiers it was the duty of the Democratic administration to turn out ten Republican soldiers and put in ten Democratic soldiers so as to equalize them, and no man has any right to complain of that. It is a matter of justice and fair dealing and right. The preference is given to Union soldiers, soldiers of our country, soldiers who bore the heat and burden of the greatest conflict that was ever waged in this world; and when they are Democrats and Republicans, because the law requires preference to be given to the soldier, is no reason why preference should be given to Republican soldiers alone. The Democrats are entitled to their full recognition and share in these matters.

Even if the Secretary of War directed that circular to be issued and directed that preference should be given to Democrats in the Departments, he simply did what I believe was his duty. There is no apology necessary for it. As a matter of course, the Secretary of War, in my judgment, never directed any confidential circular to be issued. How did that confidential circular get out if there are so many Democrats in these Departments? How do all these things leak out? How do the confidential papers of the Assistant Postmaster-General and other heads of Departments get into the newspaper press of the country if all the employés in the Departments are Democrats? How did this confidential circular find publicity in a Republican newspaper if all the employés in that Department are Democrats?

No, Mr. President, there is no harm in the even distribution of the offices, and it is right and fair and just. It is right and fair and just under the civil-service law, and I have no apologies to make, no excuses to offer for any Democratic official who has tried to equalize the appointments of the subordinates under him between Democrats and Republicans, and who therefore always gives preference to Democrats in the appointments.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment that I may submit a report from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

PRINTING OF REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the bill (H. R. 9051) "to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue," as reported to the Senate; 1,000 for the use of the folding-room of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print 10,000 copies of House bill 9051, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the bill H. R. No. 9051 as reported to the Senate be printed in pamphlet form; 9,000 for the use of the Senate and 1,000 for the use of the Committee on Finance.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to add to the resolution:

And that the Public Printer insert at the beginning of said bill the following note of explanation:

"The part of the bill stricken out, being the first forty-one sections, is the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. The part following, being new sections, from 1 to 43, inclusive, is the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senate Committee on Finance."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ALIEN MINING CORPORATIONS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be instructed to ascertain and report to the Senate at the beginning of the next session of Congress the number of aliens, foreign companies, and corporations owning or working mines in the Territories of the United States, together with the length of time they have been so engaged, the amount of capital invested by them in mining operations, as near as practicable, the amount of dividends paid, and the amount or money expended by them in such mining operations, and what effect the owning and operating of mines by aliens, foreign companies, and corporations has had upon the growth and prosperity of the Territories; and for that purpose the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may hold its sessions at such times and places as it may deem proper, and employ such clerical assistance as may be necessary. The expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

REDUCTION OF LETTER POSTAGE.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to give notice that on Friday morning, if the Senate is in session on that day, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit a few remarks in support of the bill I introduced a few days since, being the bill (S. 3558) to reduce letter-postage to 1 cent per ounce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STONE of Kentucky, Mr. LAWLER, and Mr. BROWER the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 330) granting a pension to Manon Vangordon;

A bill (S. 1264) granting a pension to Martha V. Coleman;

A bill (S. 3141) granting an increase of pension to Jonas Doering;

A bill (H. R. 2696) for the relief of John J. Crooke;

A bill (H. R. 5248) for the relief of the American Grocer Association;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 210) authorizing the printing of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor; and Joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of the sufferers from yellow fever.

POLITICAL REMOVALS FROM ARMORIES AND ARSENALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is the thick-and-thin defender of the present Administration, and for long months after that Administration came in was almost the only thick-and-thin defender of it on that side of the Chamber, has not been able in two hours of speech to say one single word in defense of this rough order, in which the War Department proclaims its war of extermination on women and children. All that he has said goes wide of that mark, and the reason is that he, with all his ingenuity, is not able to defend the order. When he says that it is simply in the direction of dividing the offices, he does not strike at the brutal force of that order.

I said the other day that the American people had been obliged to wait until this year before a department of the Government was found seeking out women and children in humble places and making them the subject of political proscription. Since then I have been looking at the records to see who are the class of people, the women and children, who are to be reached by the Secretary of War in this confidential order, which was not proclaimed to the public, but was sent out under the stamp of confidence to the officers to enforce.

Those women and children occupy very humble places. These arsenals are scattered from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and all but two or three are in Northern States. The women and children who have found refuge there and who have lived upon the small pay that they gain in these places are largely made up of the representatives of Union soldiers. The work that they do is not important. Here and there in these arsenals is found a woman who, doing some kind of clerical duty, receives as pay perhaps as much as $40 per month; in a few cases, $60 a month. There are none that I can find beyond that sum, but below that are found the poor women who keep the gates, who do the sweeping, who care for the cleanliness and general management inside doors of these public buildings, and receive not more than $20 or $30 per month. Here and there is found a boy, the child of an ex-soldier, who is engaged in the running of errands and carrying of messages, receiving a little pay, a few dollars a week, in order perhaps to eke out the subsistence gained by his mother, who may be there or elsewhere.

It was reserved for this civil-service reform Administration, which came into office upon pledges that the public service should be divorced from politics, and thereby gained votes enough to secure its election, to send out such an order, making this war upon women and children; and if that were not sufficient, the order winds up by declaring, lest some poor woman or boy or girl should escape, that this order "will be strictly enforced."

Nothing can be said in favor of such an order, and yet nobody will be called to account for it. Nobody will be summoned before the Executive and asked in stern fashion why it was that this scandal and shame has been visited not only upon this Administration but upon the American people. Nobody will be removed because of the order. Uneasy as the Administration may be about it, like everything else of this sort that has happened, nobody will be called to account and be punished because of it.

The investigation is likely to show that this is not the only order of the kind that has been issued touching just such cases as this, touching persons in the lower grades of employment in the War Department and perhaps in other Departments. It will be shown quite likely (and I purpose that this investigation shall be extended so that we may get at all the facts) that just such orders as this have been issued elsewhere than in the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department.

The Senator from Missouri has consumed much time in defending the Administration generally. He has declared that the arraignment which has been made by myself and others has been that the President has violated the civil-service act. The civil-service law is the narrowest phase of this subject on which the Administration stands to-day charged before the American people with pretenses that it has not carried out, with hypocrisy in conducting the Administration differently from what it had pledged itself to conduct it.

The number of employés of the Government who come under the classified grades is small compared with the entire official force of the Government. I venture to say that in all the army of office-holders—I use the words that the President himself has used—in the horde of office-holders seeking for partisan favors and desiring to render service to it because of those favors, not one in five of this great army of office-holders is included in the classified grades. They constitute a more limited portion of the patronage of the Administration. In the arraignment I have made here of the Administration heretofore I have never once suggested that the charge was simply that the President had violated the civil-service law. It is much more than that.

The President came into power because of his declarations, not made in a modest way, that Congress had passed a civil-service act and he would endeavor to administer it, but going far beyond and outside of that, and declaring that the public service was a public trust and must be divorced from politics. In the letters that he wrote, in the interviews that he had with civil-service reformers, in his letter of acceptance, in his first and other messages, he iterates and reiterates this declaration, never in any way confining it to the narrow class that is included in the classified grades under the civil-service law.

His assertions in this matter have been read time and time again. I shall not take up much of the time of the Senate upon them, or perhaps not any. Everybody recalls them. They apply not to the classified grades alone, but to all grades of offices in and out of that class. Everybody knows, setting aside and paying no attention to the figures the Senator has given about this narrow class, largely here in Washington, that the great army of office-holders outside, in the different Departments of the Government, have been made the subject of almost a clean sweep in defiance of the declaration of the President that appointments should be made upon merit.

How is it with that great army of officers throughout the country in the Internal-Revenue Department of the Government who are not subject to the classification of the civil-service law? There is hardly a man left who is anything except a Democrat. How is it with the customs service, except in a few of the larger offices, from the collectors down to the tide-waiters and the smaller officers? Every man has been removed. How is it with that larger army under the Post-Office Department, nearly sixty thousand in all? You may search with a microscope, as the Senator from Missouri has said, throughout the country in a post-office that is worth the holding, in his State or mine, or in any other State, and the ruthless sweep has gone on, the Republicans have gone out and the Democrats have come in.

To-day, throughout the country, this army of office-holders thus appointed by the President is doing its political work, fighting its battles and taking charge of its local organizations and leading, being the captains of tens and the captains of hundreds and of thousands in the great political battle.

As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has suggested to me, take the offices which are judicial, which ought not to be political, and there has been the same clean sweep in the Territories of the United States.

Let it be understood once for all that I am not complaining of this as a Republican. I am not complaining of this as a civil-service reformer. I have never posed in any way as a civil-service reformer. What I am seeking to do, and what it is legitimate and right to do, is to arraign the Administration for its hypocrisy with regard to these things. Had the President come in and not begun to preach of his superior virtue, had he not begun to set up a standard that no other Presidential candidate or President has ever set up, he would not have been subjected to these strictures; but from the beginning, from the day of his nomination down to the present time, he has been preaching his own superior virtue, and has been claiming that his administration is run better, and more justly, and more fairly, and more upon civil-service rules, than any other Administration. It is because every one of those things has been violated that I have arraigned the Administration.

No Republican complains that he has been turned out of office; but when it has been said that he shall not be turned out, and on some pretense and on some charge which he has never been allowed to see, he has been removed from office and a Democrat put in his place, and in that way he is attacked in his personal character, it may be, he has a right to complain.

It is not surprising to me that this army of office-holders is to-day engaged in fighting the battles of the President. It has excited no wonder. It is nothing more than what has been expected. But what should be kept before the American people constantly, and what a great many of the American people are thinking of a good deal, is that another thing has been promised; that it has been declared that this is a reform administration; that it is proceeding under different rules and under different principles, and that, to use the language of the Senator from Missouri, Grover Cleveland is a true and sincere reformer. If he is, and if the declarations that he has made and the claims that are set up for his Administration are true, somebody ought to be punished under his Administration for violating every single principle that he has advanced as the guide and rule of his Administration. I have waited and I have looked forward and expected to see somebody disciplined. No punishment has been visited upon anybody thus far.

I have here an instance of the present campaign in the State of New York of the kind of circulars that are sent by the Democratic committee to office-holders who have been appointed by the President. I do not believe that we shall hear that anybody has been punished for writing a letter like the following:

> DEAR SIR: You will kindly contribute $25 towards the expense of the Democratic campaign this fall. Remittances should be made to the undersigned on or before October 1, and will be duly acknowledged.
>
> Yours, truly,

It is said that in the same kind of a circular the sum demanded is increased to $40 in the case of railway-postal clerks and from thirty to fifty-five dollars for the clerks in the city office.

A great deal has been said about voluntary contributions. The Senator from Missouri has read an old circular issued by a Republican committee long before the civil-service act became a law, in the days when all parties were engaged in such things. That circular, which I knew something about, was submitted to no less an authority on civil-service reform than Carl Schurz, who approved it, declaring that it simply called for voluntary contributions if anybody sent anything under that notice. But here is something imperative. Here is the declaration that "you will contribute $25 towards the expense of the Democratic campaign."

Every man who receives a circular of that kind from the authorities of the Democratic party knows what it means. It will be seen that if any man holding office, after getting a circular of that kind, refuses or declines or fails to pay, he will be the man who will be disciplined. The committee that sends out this circular will not be disciplined. The national committee, composed partly as it is of members of the House and Senators, will not in any way be disciplined. Why should the head of the Administration, who has himself contributed, as everybody says and nobody denies, $10,000 to the national committee, made up in part of office-holders, discipline others for contributing in reply to a circular of that kind?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask just one question. Where was that circular published, and what is it? I did not catch the name.

Mr. HALE. It is dated 87 Genesee street, Utica, September 19, 1888—two weeks ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the date of the paper?

Mr. HALE. I have not the date of the paper.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what paper was it published?

Mr. HALE. I do not know that, even.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the date of the letter itself?

Mr. HALE. September 19. It is evidently a genuine document because the date and place are given, 87 Genesee street, Utica, September 19, 1888.

Mr. COCKRELL. By whom is it signed?

Mr. HALE. S. A. Beardsley.

Mr. COCKRELL. To whom is it addressed?

Mr. HALE. It was sent to all the mail-carriers in that city. That is the statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the city of Utica?

Mr. HALE. In the city of Utica.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was sent to the letter-carriers?

Mr. HALE. It was sent to the letter-carriers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Who is Mr. Beardsley?

Mr. HALE. That I do not know. He signs his name, and adds "chairman." I never heard of him before.

Mr. COCKRELL. He is chairman of what?

Mr. HALE. I do not know that, even.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is he chairman of the Republican committee up there?

Mr. HALE. It is the Democratic committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. HALE. The circular is headed "Democratic county committee-room." I am not identifying these men. Here appears in public print a circular with a date, the location, with the signature. I do not know that any such man as this Beardsley ever lived, but I am quoting from the records as they appear in the public newspapers, where the names and date and everything are given. If the Senator believes that somebody has made this up, he is at liberty to investigate it. I have no doubt that it is true; that any investigation will show it to be true; and not only that, but if anybody cared to rake and haul over the things that are now being done under this civil-service reform Administration in the way of circulars that are being sent around to clerks, both women and men, the applications that are being made in person, showing that the whole army is to be taxed and tithed over and over again, evidence enough would be accumulated to take up the rest of the time of this session of the Senate.

Everybody knows it, Mr. President. I have seen the circulars myself. I have seen the cards that are distributed here in Washington. Some of them have come to Senate employés by the order of the Democratic national committee that has taken an office here and announced it by advertisements in Washington. I have seen those circulars here to-day, sent to Senate employés. There is nothing surprising in it. The surprising thing is that a candid man like the Senator from Missouri dares to get up here and declare that Grover Cleveland is an honest reformer and that the Administration is a better reform administration than any preceding administration has been.

The order that is now the subject of this controversy in the Senate is only a natural emanation from all the things that are going on. The War Department could not stand the pressure, conservative as that Department is, outside largely of political currents, with a Secretary who has not been engaged in active politics either here or in the country or in his own State, as the Senator from Massachusetts knows. He could not stand the pressure.

What is the foundation of the order as shown? Not that it was declared that removals were needed, not that women and children were not performing their duty, but the Secretary told the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance that the pressure upon him was so great for new Democratic appointments that he had to make this war upon women and children; nothing else would satisfy the Democratic party in its eager search for more places.

That is all there is in this circular. The country should know it; and it has been brought forward only that it may be an additional piece of evidence to show that the pretenses of the Administration are nothing but pretenses; that the whole thing is conducted in the old-fashioned Democratic way, and will be until after the election.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, when the circular which is the subject-matter of the resolution now before the Senate was shown to me several days ago, I refused to believe that it was genuine, and advised the correspondent of the Indianapolis Journal to call upon General Benét and ask him whether it was genuine or a forgery. It was not until I was informed that General Benét acknowledged the circular and stated the circumstances under which it was issued that I believed it possible that even the partisanship of this Administration had sought out the women and the children at work in the arsenals of the country in order to drive them from their employment.

The Senator from Missouri justifies this order. He does it with vigor and with boldness, and asserts that it is legitimate politics to inquire whether the women engaged in the arsenals are Republicans or Democrats, whether the children engaged in the arsenals of the country are Republicans or Democrats, and to turn them out if the character of Republican can be attributed to them, and to seek out other women and other children and attach to them the character of Democratic, and then employ them in the places of the women and children who have been ejected.

But it seems to me that this circular is the most discreditable of all the emanations in violation of the civil-service reform professions of the President and of the Democratic party. There have been one hundred years of the Government under this Constitution, and I believe that never before have the politics of female employés or of children in the workshops of the Government been ascertained as a reason either for discharging or employing them.

I supposed when I first realized that this was a genuine circular that it was an unlawful order. I thought that there were laws forbidding the discharge of War Department employés on account of their politics; but I do not find them. If there are such laws I hope that attention may be called to them. But although my search with reference to the Army has not shown me any such statutes, I do find that there are explicit laws in reference to the Navy of the United States. Section 1546 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

No officer or employé of the Government shall require or request any workingman in any navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any workingman be removed or discharged for political opinion; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be dismissed from the service of the United States.

In section 1544 we further have the rule declared that ought to prevail in the employment of laborers in the several navy-yards:

SEC. 1544. Laborers shall be employed in the several navy-yards by the proper officers in charge with reference to skill and efficiency, and without regard to other considerations.

These two statutes make the rule which is to govern the Navy Department, and under them a circular of the kind which has been issued by General Benét would be punishable as a violation of law. Yet the Senator from Missouri boldly justifies an order issued by the War Department which if issued as to Navy employés would be a deliberate violation of an express statute!

In view of the law which I have quoted in reference to the Navy Department, it seems impossible to believe that the Secretary of the Navy, who has suddenly discovered that the needs of the public service require a large increase in the number of employés at the Brooklyn navy-yard, intends in making the new employments to pay any attention to the politics of the laborers who may be taken on in pursuance of his recent order. There is a statute of the United States, enacted on the 30th of June, 1876, to be found in volume 19, page 69, of the statutes, as follows:

And no increase of the force at any navy-yard shall be made at any time within sixty days next before any election to take place for President of the United States or member of Congress, except when the Secretary of the Navy shall certify that the needs of the public service make such increase necessary at that time, which certificate shall be immediately published when made.

I find that the Secretary of the Navy has issued a certificate, which has been published in the newspapers of New York, and I will read an extract from the New York Press of Sunday morning, September 30, 1888, which contains the certificate. It is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY NEEDS MANY LABORERS.

The people of the United States have become accustomed to seeing the laws of the country violated by the Democratic authorities in Washington and the South, but it has remained for Secretary Whitney to show the utter contempt which the Democrats have for the laws of Congress when such laws interfere with the possible success of that party at the polls.

Several years ago the Republican Congress, realizing how powerful a factor patronage was in the determination of a political contest, passed a law prohibiting the employment of new men in the public Departments within sixty days of an election. The law was passed with especial reference to the abuse of the appointing of hundreds of new men in the navy-yards a few days prior to election as a bribe to secure their votes.

Owing to tardiness in the preparation of requisitions, which are made the basis of appropriations, it was found this year that the men could not be employed two months before the election, and for a time the Democratic managers were disconsolate at losing such a powerful lever as the patronage of the navy-yard. Secretary Whitney was appealed to, and the following notice was issued yesterday:

"[Certificate.]

"In compliance with an act of Congress, approved June 30, 1876, I hereby certify that the needs of the public service make it necessary to increase at this time the force of the navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the prosecution of the work upon the Yantic, Galena, Miantonomoh, and Terror, and for other necessary purposes.

"W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy."

Secretary Whitney's order is, of course, a mere evasion of the provisions of the sixty days' law. The law upon which the order is based has never been utilized before, and was placed upon the statute-books simply to anticipate any possible trouble with foreign nations which would necessitate the rapid fitting out of war vessels.

While the intention and effect of the order was and will be to fill the navy-yard with Democratic voters, the local Democratic gang has already served notice that no one who has been identified with the labor movement need apply. The latest victim to the rapacity of the gang is Daniel Downey, of 75 Duffield street, Brooklyn, who was discharged from the navy-yard a few days ago because of his active participation in the labor movement in Brooklyn last year.

It is said Alderman Divver and all the other ward bosses have been given fifteen tickets each, by which that number of men will obtain employment at the navy-yard.

In the Standard-Union, of Brooklyn, of the 29th of September, 1888, the following statement is made in connection with the dismissal of Daniel Downey, mentioned in the extract from the Press which I have read:

THE GRAND BOUNCE—LOST A PLACE IN THE NAVY-YARD FOR SUPPORTING THE LABOR PARTY—"JACK" FROST'S BOLD HANDIWORK—PATRONAGE-MONGERING AT THE CITY HALL—HINTS FOR MAYOR CHAPIN AND CONTROLLER LIVINGSTON.

Several of the workingmen's unions at the lower end of the city are very much excited over the summary dismissal from the navy-yard last week of a laborer named Daniel Downey. Not that there is anything unusual or exciting about the dismissal of one laborer or a hundred from the yard. Either is a common occurrence enough; but the circumstances surrounding Downey's dismissal were of a peculiarly brutal character and an outrage on associated labor everywhere.

Downey lives in a room on the top floor of 72 Duffield street, and is evidently in a dire state of poverty. Last week, in blissful ignorance of his impending fate, while he was at work in the yard, where he had been fortunate enough to secure a job only a few days before, a sub-boss of Boss Furey suddenly appeared before him.

"Sa-ay, Downey!" came from the apparition.

"Oh, good morning, Mr. Frost! How do you do?" Downey replied with forced cheerfulness.

"Sa-ay, didn't you peddle the United Labor party ticket in the Fifth ward last fall?"

"Well-er, yes, I did; but it was only for my friend Brown."

Then Frost, in harsh tones, passed this sentence on the poverty-stricken laboring man: "Now, look here, Downey, we don't want anybody but Democrats in the yard, and you'll have to get out."

Out Downey was put accordingly. His neighbors said to-day that he was in New York trying to get work. The Brown he referred to was J. Vincent Brown, of Gold street, who was the United Labor party's candidate last year for assembly, fourth district, with a Republican indorsement. He is a member of Mackenzie Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of which George R. Baldwin, of Revenue Collector Black's office, is commander. The Frost who paid him the visit is a character and known as Jack Frost. His full name is John F. Frost, and he holds the position under Comptroller Livingston of chief clerk of the bureau of taxes and assessments at a salary of $1,900 a year. He appears to have a supervisory power over navy-yard patronage, as far as laborers and mechanics are concerned, and undoubtedly bosses the fifth ward and perhaps some of the surrounding districts. What he does relieves Democratic leaders like John McCarty from numerous petty annoyances, and it is always understood that the supreme arbitrator, if any dispute arises, is William A. Furey, the commissioner of jurors. Years ago Frost served his time in the yard as a blacksmith's apprentice under a Republican administration, and is tolerably familiar with the phases of work and of political life within its walls.

There is another disgraceful side to this subject, and one with which frequenters of the city hall are only too familiar. It is one in which every tax-payer of the city, too, has a direct personal interest. Mr. Frost holds a very responsible position under the city government, and by far too much of his time is taken up by navy-yard patronage matters. Sometimes a dozen or a score of men stand for hours in the rotunda of the city hall waiting to get a note from Frost to this or that boss in the yard. It is certainly a violation of the spirit of the civil-service law—this spending of the time, which is the money of the public, in partisan politics. Mayor Chapin frequently brushes against the crowds of men who want to get into the yard as he goes to or returns from his office in the hall. His natural instinct would revolt against the turning of a city government department into a patronage broker's office; but his recent severe castigation by the Democratic general committee seems to have tamed his spirit. And so of Comptroller Livingston. He has a splendid reputation, but he is a candidate for renomination, which he can not get without the consent of the Willoughby street gang whose members are the patrons of Mr. Frost. Is it possible that Walter L. Livingston knowingly permits an office over which he has control to be so degraded? Perhaps, after all, his control of the office is only nominal.

Here we have the charge made by a well known and respectable newspaper that two navy-yard bosses have been created by the Secretary of the Navy, that they control the discharge and employment of men in the Brooklyn navy-yard, and that Mr. Downey and others have been discharged for political reasons. If that is the case, the discharges are in direct defiance of a clear and distinct law of Congress, and if employments are made in this way the employments are made in distinct violation of the act of Congress which I have read, which says that laborers shall be employed in the several navy-yards by the proper officers in charge with reference to skill and efficiency and without regard to other considerations.

The New York Tribune of October 1, 1888, published the following:

THE EMERGENCY ORDER RATHER LATE—NO DOUBT ABOUT THE REAL REASON FOR EXTRA MEN AT THE NAVY-YARD.

"You will observe that Secretary Whitney has issued his emergency order, which, under the law, permits him to increase the force at the navy-yard," said one of the officers there yesterday. He continued: "The Tribune was the first and only Republican paper to call attention to the increase of the force by one hundred and thirty-two men in one day a week ago, and not one of the Democratic papers had the honesty or independence to refer to this clear violation of the law which prohibits an increase of the force within sixty days of an election. That sixty days' limit began on September 7, and the one hundred and thirty-two employés were put on on September 20. But since then there have been men discharged because they were Labor party adherents and good Democrats put on in their places, and others in addition. For instance, on September 21 there were 1,589 workmen of all kinds employed, and on Friday the number was above 1,600, but not until Saturday did the Secretary publish his emergency order. Now, then, is he not liable for a violation of the law before he issued his emergency order? In this Mr. Whitney says that the emergency arises in the fitting out of the Galena, Yantic, Miantonomoh, and Terror. Is there any emergency that requires haste in completing the two big ironclads, the Terror and Miantonomoh? Are we on the eve of war? But he says nothing about the new cruiser Maine, upon which additional men are being employed from day to day. The fact is that when the Secretary was at the navy-yard a few days ago Furey and other politicians impressed upon him the political emergency which could only be relieved by employing more men in the navy-yard."

Upon these statements it is hard to resist the conclusion that the Secretary of the Navy has declared an emergency at the Brooklyn navy-yard at this time and published this certificate in compliance with the statute more for the purpose of having a large force in that navy-yard on the 6th of November, at the time of the Presidential election, than on account of any necessity of fitting out the North Atlantic squadron. It is understood that this squadron is to be ready for sea on the 10th of November. By that time we may infer that there will be necessary more discharges of men from the Brooklyn navy-yard.

It is to be hoped that the Secretary of the Navy will, when he makes such discharges, at least then regard the provisions of the statute, and discharge no man because of his political opinion.

Mr. President, there is not only some reason to fear that the laws in reference to the employment of men in the navy-yards are being disregarded by this Administration, but I think it is very clear that the civil-service law forbidding contributions from one public officer to another public officer is being openly and boldly violated. The statute of the 16th of January, 1883, concerning which the Senator from Missouri has had a great deal to say, contains three sections to which I ask the attention of Democratic Senators, and also Democratic officials, those who are now members of political committees and those who are making contributions to political committees. These sections are 11, 14, and 15 of the act of January 16. The law is found in the statutes of 1882–'83, page 406:

SEC. 11. That no Senator, or Representative, or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator, Representative, or Delegate elect, or any officer or employé of either of said Houses, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employé of any Department, branch, or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military or naval service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States, or any department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 14. That no officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, give or hand over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, or Territorial Delegate, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever.

SEC. 15. That any person who shall be guilty of violating any provision of the four foregoing sections shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or by such fine and imprisonment both, in the discretion of the court.

The meaning of this law is very clear. No Senator or Representative can solicit or receive or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any contribution for political purposes from any officer, clerk, or employé under the Government of the United States. No officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States can give a contribution to any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives for the promotion of any political object whatever; and offenses against these two sections are made penal. They are punishable by fine and imprisonment.

I wish now to place upon the records of the Senate a statement of the view taken of this statute by Republican officials and members of Republican committees. I first read the circular to which the Senator from Maine has referred, two copies of which have been handed me to-day, addressed to clerks of the Senate. It must be admitted that in making these solicitations of employés of the United States in violation of law the Democrats who are sending out the circulars are impartial, for they appear to have sent them to Republican and Democratic employés of the Senate alike. I ask the Secretary to read the circular and also the communication of Edward McPherson, secretary of the Republican Congressional committee, published in the Washington Post of September 20.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

The rooms of the advisory committee and treasurer for the District of Columbia are at 939 F street northwest, second floor.

Maj. Charles S. Jones will be in attendance from 8 a. m. until 11 p. m., and has authority to receipt for all contributions made to him.

Remittances by mail should be addressed to James L. Norris, advisory committee and treasurer, lock drawer 322, Washington, D. C., and will receive prompt acknowledgment.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE—POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

To the Editor of the Washington Post:

Mr. James L. Norris announces himself in your paper of this date as the "authorized representative in Washington of the national Democratic committee." As such he states that he will be glad to receive contributions of encouragement from Democrats and all citizens and office-holders wishing Democratic success, and the same shall be promptly remitted to the national committee.

So far as this invitation applies to office-holders of the United States it is a transaction forbidden by the laws of the United States. Section 11, civil-service act, January 16, 1883, forbids any officer or employé of the United States from directly or indirectly soliciting or receiving or being in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving contributions for any political purpose whatever from any other officer or employé of the United States.

Section 14 of the same act prohibits any person in the service of the United States from directly or indirectly giving to another person in the service of the United States any money "to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever."

Section 15 makes a violation of these provisions a misdemeanor, punishable on conviction by both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

What the Democratic national committee can not do by itself it can not lawfully do by another. Upon the national committee as members there are both Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States. A gift to the committee is a gift to each member of the committee, and it is clearly within the prohibition of the law, and was so intended.

Undoubtedly officials of the United States have a right to contribute their funds to political purposes, but they can not lawfully do so to committees composed in whole or in part of persons in the service of the United States. The plain object of the act was to break up and forever prohibit all political commerce between classes of United States officials.

Mr. Norris further states in the interview that "Government officials and some others of very high position have given liberally." This may refer to the announced contributions of the President and certain members of his Cabinet. If these officials have made such contributions to the Democratic national committee, it is plain that they have thereby rendered themselves liable to punishment under this act, and public decency requires that this flagrant case shall be considered by the officers of the law in this District. If this law is fit only to be violated, it ought to be repealed. If it is fit to stand upon the statute-book it ought to be faithfully enforced.

EDWARD McPHERSON.

WASHINGTON, September 19.

Mr. CHANDLER. I also desire the Secretary to read a subsequent letter of Mr. McPherson, published in the Capital of September 30.

The Secretary read as follows:

ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS BY UNITED STATES OFFICIALS.

To the Editor:

SIR: Since the passage of the act of 1883 I have in every way discouraged its violation, and any statement to the contrary in your article of the 23d is incorrect.

The Clapp committee of 1884, to which you refer, was the agent of a committee on which there were no office-holders of the United States, and which, therefore, had a right to receive contributions. This year both of the national committees contain United States office-holders, and contributions can not be lawfully made to either by any officials of the United States. Private citizens have, of course, the right to contribute to either. The Republican Congressional committee, of which I have been secretary for many years, has to my certain knowledge not received one cent from any office-holder of the United States since the passage of the act of 1883. Upon the other hand I have uniformly refused such contributions when tendered, as they sometimes were in ignorance of the law.

Your point that Senators and Representatives are not included in the prohibitions of the civil-service act is met by the fact that in the eleventh and fourteenth sections they are specifically brought within them. This is a marked point of difference between the act of 1876 and the act of 1883. The eleventh section of the act of 1883 provides that "no Senator or Representative or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator or Representative or Delegate elect shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive contributions or subscriptions." The fourteenth section prohibits "any officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States from giving or handing over to any other officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator, Representative, or Territorial Delegate any money or other valuable thing to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever." These provisions are very searching and sweeping, and reach every executive, judicial, military, or naval officer. They are more searching than met the views of the Democratic Senators, who wanted to restrict the prohibitions to "executive officers, clerks, and employés of the United States." The act of 1876 did not include Senators or Representatives, but the act of 1883 does distinctly include them.

Personally, I care not whether the President or his Cabinet, or his subordinates give or do not give to the Democratic national committee, except as I care to see the law regarded by those charged with its enforcement.

As for indictments, you appear to have forgotten that it required one conviction to vindicate the act of 1876. That act was sneered at as the act of 1883 is sneered at. General Curtis, of New York, an office-holder of the United States, became, while it was law, the treasurer of a political committee. To that committee another United States office-holder made a payment. General Curtis did not receive the money, and did not personally know of the payment. A subordinate, acting for the treasurer, received the money and gave the receipt. But General Curtis was indicted for the act; and he was convicted, on the ground that the act of his agent was his act, and that the payment was in violation of law. He was fined $1,000. The Supreme Court of the United States on appeal (volume 106, page 371) held the statute to be constitutional, and General Curtis paid the fine. It may require an example like unto this to vindicate in the District of Columbia the act of 1883.

Very respectfully, yours,

EDWARD McPHERSON.

WASHINGTON, September 28.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in order to ascertain whether or not members of Congress or Government officials are members of the Democratic National Committee, I purchased at Brentano's, in this city, yesterday, "The Campaign Text-Book of the Democratic Party of the United States for the Presidential Election of 1888," which states upon the title page that it is "prepared by direction of the National Democratic Committee." I invested $1 in this publication, largely attracted by the headline on the first page, which identifies it as a Democratic document:

"Public office is a public trust."

On the second page is given the list of the Democratic National Committee, headed:

William H. Barnum, chairman; S. P. Sheerin, secretary; Edward B. Dickinson, assistant secretary and official stenographer; Charles J. Canda, treasurer.

And as members of the committee are the following, who will be recognized as members of the Fiftieth Congress:

Florida, SAMUEL PASCO.
Maryland, A. P. GORMAN.
North Carolina, M. W. RANSOM.
Pennsylvania, WILLIAM L. SCOTT.

On the executive committee, also, are the names of Messrs. PASCO, GORMAN, and SCOTT. Upon the campaign committee there are the names, GORMAN, RANSOM, and SCOTT. And Mr. Canda, the treasurer, in a slip, which is pasted within the book headed "National Democratic Committee, Campaign of 1888, 10 West Twenty-ninth street, New York City, William H. Barnum, chairman, Calvin S. Brice, chairman campaign committee," asks that the person receiving this book will remit to him $1 by mail, which will cover the cost of the same and postage.

Now, Mr. President, if Government officials of any character have been contributing money to this national Democratic committee, I understand they have been violating the statutes to which I have called attention.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask the Senator if the Mr. Canda referred to is the United States treasurer at New York?

Mr. CHANDLER. He is the treasurer of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is he in charge of the subtreasury in New York?

Mr. CHANDLER. That I am not able to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that is the name of the officer who was Treasurer of the United States and is now assistant treasurer at New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not sure as to that.

I have in my hand a slip from the New York Sun of September 25, 1888, which says:

All doubt has been removed, if any has recently existed, that the President contributed $10,000 to the campaign fund by the check being presented for payment. The check was drawn on one of Riggs & Co.'s regular check blanks to the order of Charles J. Canda. It did not specify that Mr. Canda was treasurer of the national Democratic committee, but simply used the name "Charles J. Canda." The $10,000 was written out in words and put in figures. The check was presented to Riggs & Co. for payment last week. It had passed through the Western National Bank of New York, of which Conrad N. Jordan, formerly United States Treasurer, is president, and with which Charles J. Canda is now connected.

Another article from the New York Sun reads as follows:

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

When President Cleveland gave his magnificent contribution of $10,000 to the funds of the Democratic campaign committee, he was not alone in that work of national beneficence.

At the same time with the President's check the committee received a check for $10,000 from Hon. Thomas F. Bayard; a check of $10,000 from Hon. Charles S. Fairchild; a check for $10,000 from Hon. William C. Whitney; a check for $10,000 from Hon. Don M. Dickinson; in all, from the President and Cabinet, the handsome sum of $50,000. But three members of the Cabinet, Secretary Endicott, Secretary Vilas, and the Pan-Electric Attorney-General gave nothing.

However, to make good every deficiency, Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, gave $20,000; Mr. Sidney T. Fairchild, Secretary Fairchild's father, and Mr. J. J. Hill, the Democratic hustler of Minnesota, gave $10,000 apiece; the Paynes, of Cleveland, gave liberally, and other personal friends of President Cleveland clubbed in, swelling the aggregate contribution to the impressive total of $150,000.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask my colleague a question. I have been out of the Chamber, and I wish to inquire whether he understands that these several contributions are money that these officers had collected in their several Departments or whether they were personal contributions of their own funds?

Mr. CHANDLER. My colleague must ask somebody other than myself where these funds come from. I am only giving current history, and I am not vouching for the truth of the averment that these contributions have been made. But I will say that although it has been published for many days in the newspapers that they have been made there has been no contradiction whatever of the assertion.

I have, however, in a copy of a New York dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer, a Democratic paper, what is said to be a true account of President Cleveland's contribution to the Democratic campaign fund, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CLEVELAND'S $10,000 CHECK.—IS THIS THE TRUE STORY OF HIS CONTRIBUTION TO THE DEMOCRATIC CAMPAIGN FUND?

[New York dispatch to Cincinnati Enquirer, Democratic.]

Some hints of facts concerning the alleged contribution by President Cleveland of $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund came to my ears to-day. It will be remembered that there was great consternation at Democratic national headquarters when the statement was given out that Mr. Cleveland had sent a $10,000 check to its treasurer. Shortly afterward the statement was denied in a semi-official way. At the same time it was announced that Myron H. Bangs had given the committee a check for $10,000. These two announcements are now put together in a curious way. Mr. Bangs was formerly a banker at Fayetteville, where Mr. Cleveland once lived. His bank suspended several years ago, and up to 1884 Mr. Bangs was not able to have contributed 10,000 cents to any campaign fund. He had been a Republican, but, purely from friendship, voted for Mr. Cleveland.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago Mr. Bangs was interested in a profitable Government dredging contract in the Mississippi River. Immediately after Mr. Cleveland went into office Mr. Bangs began to hustle around Washington to get another dredging contract, and through White House influence he was finally awarded the contract for dredging Charleston harbor, out of which he made $160,000 in a single year. Last year he got another profitable contract, and the report is that it was part of the understanding when he secured these fat Government slices that he should put up for President Cleveland in this campaign, and that when his check for $10,000 was received it was understood to be the President's contribution.

Mr. CHANDLER. All the extracts which I have read are from Democratic newspapers. The suggestion thus comes that the President has not made this $10,000 contribution, but that the alleged remittance has been confused with a contribution sent by Mr. Bangs. It does seem that the President ought not to be expected to make any such large contribution, because it is stated in one of the extracts I have had read that Mr. SCOTT and Mr. Brice have each given $20,000, and it certainly would be a large contribution for the Democratic party to expect or to exact from their President when they have men of such wealth as Messrs. SCOTT and Brice possess in charge of their national committee.

I have here a description of the gentlemen who are members of the national campaign committee of the Democratic party, and this, like all the other extracts, is taken from a Democratic newspaper, the Democrat, of Dover, N. H., published by Joshua L. Foster, a life-long Democrat, who, I must, however, confess, is not very well pleased with the present leaders of the Democratic party or with the present Democratic Administration. I ask the Secretary to read the article.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I believe the immediate question is on the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine, which has given rise to a very desultory discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware rise to object to the reading of the extract sent to the desk by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; I thought the Senator from New Hampshire was through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire had asked that an extract be read by the Secretary.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I beg pardon.

The Secretary read as follows:

CORPORATION MONOPOLISTS AT THE HEAD.

If there is one thing on earth that the Democracy of this country have denounced and pledged themselves against, over and over again, times without number and in the most emphatic terms, it is oppressive corporation monopoly. And now, since they have resolved themselves into a Cleveland party, in discussing the tariff question their chief argument is that a protective tariff promotes, builds up, and maintains monopoly, and they paint monopoly and its agents and tools as the most horrid enemies of liberty and the most ferocious and soulless tyrants and oppressors of labor ever known or heard of in this country. This is the talk and chatter of the Clevelandites continually. Now, let us see how their talk and their conduct agree.

The Cleveland canvass this year is to be controlled and managed wholly by corporation monopolists. It is a railroad management exclusively. The four principal figures in their national executive committee are: Calvin Stewart Brice, of Lima, Ohio, and New York City; Arthur Sewall, of Bath, Me.; William L. Scott, of Erie, Pa., and William H. Barnum, of Lime Rock, Conn.

Mr. Barnum is president of the Housatonic, and a director of the Housatonic, the Danbury and Norwalk, the Hartford and Connecticut Western, the Jacksonville, Tampa and Key West, the Richmond and Alleghany, and the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh—six railroads.

Mr. Sewall is president of the Maine Central, president of the Eastern, president of the Portland, Saco and Portsmouth, president of the Portsmouth, Great Falls and Conway, president of the Chelsea Beach Railway, and director in those companies, besides the Portland and Rochester and the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company—seven railroads.

Calvin S. Brice is vice-president of the Lake Erie and Western, vice-president of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, vice-president of the Memphis and Charleston, vice-president of the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic, vice-president of the Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon, and a director of all three companies, and also of the Richmond and Alleghany, the Richmond and West Point Terminal, the Kentucky Central, and the Denver, Utah and Pacific—nine railroads.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT is president of the Erie and Pittsburgh, and a director in the Erie and Pittsburgh, the Sharpsville, the Newcastle and Beaver Valley, the New York, Philadelphia and Norfolk, the Chicago and Northwestern, the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Michigan Central, the Chicago and Canada Southern, the Michigan Midland and Canada, the Toledo, Canada Southern and Detroit, the Richmond and Alleghany, and the Canadian Pacific—thirteen railroads.

ARTHUR P. GORMAN, of Maryland, is a director of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railroad.

John S. Barbour, of Virginia, is vice-president of the Virginia railroad.

The other members of the campaign committee are Senator RANSOM, of North Carolina, E. M. Phelps, of Illinois, and Miles Ross, of New Jersey, all railroad directors.

These are not all of the members of the Cleveland national committee, but they are the men of the committee to whom has been intrusted the whole and entire control and management of the campaign.

It will be readily seen that it is a corporation monopolistic concern from end to end, and we pity the man who is so green as to suppose they will not look out for their own corporate interests first, last, and all the time. Isn't this Cleveland party, which has not a particle of true Democracy about it, a pretty lot of fellows to be prattling about the abominations of what they call tariff monopoly? Well, we should say so.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly if this Democratic editor in New Hampshire is correct in his narrative it is a most undue exaction of this Democratic national committee to call for or to receive a $10,000 contribution from their candidate for President, particularly when he is now an officer of the United States, who if he makes the contribution, giving the money to a national committee composed of members of the Congress of the United States, thereby possibly subjects himself to the penalties of the statute which I have read. It is therefore most devoutly to be hoped that the check about which so much has been said in the newspapers is not the check of the President, but is the check of Mr. Bangs.

Mr. President, I commend to the Senator from Missouri a more careful study of the civil-service-reform statute. He has given a great deal of attention to alleged malfeasances of recent Republican administrations, but I think the existing statute more needs his attention in connection with the acts of Democratic Federal officials. Instead of worrying over the delinquencies of the Republican party in the past, he had better give his attention to the delinquencies of the Democratic party in the present, those which have been called to his attention by the Senator from Maine, and those which I have now placed upon the records of the Senate.

I do not stand here to defend anything which happened during the twenty-four years of Republican administration that can not be justified. I do not intend to try to excuse any act that was Republican misconduct in office, but I simply say that the present issue before the American people is what has been the conduct of this civil-service-reform Administration of the Democratic party which came into power with such loud pretenses that it would reform the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I wish here again to quote from Democratic authority. Formerly in the Senate of the United States was General Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, afterwards President, and in Hawthorne's Life of Pierce there appears a statement, which I wish to read.

Mr. Hawthorne says of General Pierce, in connection with the extra session of 1841:

In the course of this session he made a very powerful speech in favor of Mr. Buchanan's resolution calling on the President to furnish the names of persons removed from office since the 4th of March, 1841. The Whigs in 1840, as in the subsequent canvass of 1848, had professed a purpose to abolish the system of official removals on account of political opinion, but immediately on coming into power had commenced a proscription infinitely beyond the example of the Democratic party. This course, with an army of office-seekers besieging the Departments, was unquestionably difficult to avoid, and perhaps, on the whole, not desirable to be avoided.

But it was rendered astounding by the sturdy effrontery with which the gentlemen in power denied that their present practice had falsified any of their past professions. A few of the closing paragraphs of Senator Pierce's highly effective speech, being more easily separable than the rest, may here be cited.

One word more and I leave this subject—a painful one to me from the beginning to the end. The Senator from North Carolina, in the course of his remarks the other day, asked, "Do gentlemen expect that their friends are to be retained in office against the will of the nation? Are they so unreasonable as to expect what the circumstances and the necessity of the case forbid?"

Then Senator Pierce said:

What our expectations were is not the question now; but what were your pledges and promises before the people. On a previous occasion, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky made a similar remark: "An ungracious task, but the nation demands it!" Sir, this demand of the nation—this plea of state necessity—let me tell gentlemen, is as old as the history of wrong and oppression. It has been the standing plea, the never-failing resort of despotism.

I also wish to quote from yet another distinguished Democratic President of the United States, Mr. Buchanan, who made a speech on Monday, February 4, 1828, attacking the administration of President Adams, and I beg the Senator from Missouri, who justifies the spoils system of President Cleveland, notwithstanding the pledges and promises by means of which he came into power, to consider Mr. Buchanan's description of the extent to which the possession of power changes men.

Mr. Buchanan said:

The very possession of power has a strong—a natural tendency, to corrupt the heart. The lust of dominion grows with its possession, and the man who in humble life was pure, and innocent, and just, has often been transformed by the long possession of power into a monster. In the Sacred Book, which contains lessons of wisdom for the politician, as well as for the Christian, we find a happy illustration of the corrupting influence of power upon the human heart. When Hazael came to consult Elisha, whether his master, the King of Syria, would recover from a dangerous illness, the prophet, looking through the vista of futurity, saw the crimes of which the messenger who stood before him would be guilty, and he wept. Hazael asked, why weepest my lord? The prophet then recounted to him the murders and the cruelties of which he should be guilty towards the children of Israel. Hazael, in the spirit of virtuous indignation, replied: "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this great thing?" And Elisha answered, the Lord hath shewed me, that thou shalt be king over Syria.

And Mr. Buchanan adds:

This man afterwards became king, by the murder of his master, and was guilty of enormities, the bare recital of which would make us shudder.

I commend to all Democrats when studying the civil-service conduct of the administration of President Cleveland the warning words of Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 373) for the relief of women enrolled as Army nurses.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the pending resolution disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. I am willing to let the vote be taken on the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment in the form of an additional resolution, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as an additional resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is further directed to transmit to the Senate copies of any further orders or circulars relating to the employment of persons in any part of said Department since March 4, 1885, together with copies of all correspondence between the Department and any of its officers or subordinates or any other person relating to the politics of any of its employés.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, so much has been placed upon record in this matter, taken from letters, public and private, newspapers and public documents, that I wish to add just a few words of testimony.

I beg, by the way, in the first place, to invite the earnest attention of our Democratic friends to the facts disclosed at length with great particularity by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] concerning the President's pecuniary contribution to the campaign.

The civil-service law does not pretend to interfere with contributions made by any civilian to any other civilian. It does not forbid any civilian to ask an office-holder for money, provided he does not go into any navy-yard, arsenal, or other public building or ground to do it. The discriminations of the law are made with very great care. It does forbid with particularity any person holding any office of any description under the United States, any person drawing a salary from the United States, to solicit or receive, in any way, directly or indirectly, from any other such person holding any office or drawing a salary, a subscription or contribution for political objects. It gets at them all by its sweeping clauses. It forbids the one from asking or receiving in any form anything for political purposes from the other. This is the eleventh section.

The fourteenth section forbids any person in the service of the United States to give to any other person in like service, or to any Senator or Member of the House or Territorial Delegate, any money or other valuable thing for any political object whatever.

I do not know the facts in this case, but if it be true, as is alleged by the Democratic papers, that the President of the United States has sent $10,000 to a political committee, upon which committee are prominent and eminent officers of the United States Government, or members of the Senate or House, it is inevitably to be concluded that he has committed an offense punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment for not exceeding three years, or both. So the fifteenth section of the act says, and says constitutionally. That precisely was decided in the famous General R. M. Curtis case, which was carried to the Supreme Court, and the constitutionality of the judgment below was affirmed by said court.

Now I ask Senators who believe in the civil-service-reform professions of this Administration to make a feeble endeavor to explain this matter. I say if the President has sent his $10,000 to that committee, unquestionably the other terms of the problem are there. There are United States Senators upon that committee. It may be said that Mr. GORMAN and others who are members of the committee were not aware of this contribution. Neither did Mr. Curtis know that his subordinate received the money in question. Yet he was convicted and he paid his fine of $1,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will allow me to suggest that Mr. Curtis never received the money. It was some subordinate who received the money.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was paid in to the committee by a custom-house employé, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Curtis knew nothing of it whatever.

Mr. HAWLEY. And yet he was convicted.

Mr. CHANDLER. Being a member of the political committee, the organization which received the money, he was held to be guilty under this statute.

Mr. HAWLEY. He indirectly received the money for political purposes.

One thing more. I do not ask the Senator from Missouri to accept my judgment that the Democratic party has proved unfaithful to the civil-service law. The judgment of the country is that it is not only unfaithful to that law, but there is nothing that will provoke a louder roar of laughter in a Democratic conference than to pretend that it is. It is only in the Senate that a man makes that pretense without its being received with unbounded ridicule—received either with pity for his credulity or contempt for his audacity.

But the Senator from Missouri need not take my evidence at all upon the matter. I can not give him higher evidence than I am now about to present.

Four years ago a class of honorable and cultivated and able gentlemen attained the title of Mugwumps, otherwise Big Indians. They were among the best men in our party, but they were greatly dissatisfied with a certain nomination, and they supported the Democratic ticket. Many of them being in reality free traders, stay with the Democracy, but some of them assume the title of Independents.

There were no more valuable champions of Mr. Cleveland four years ago than these same gentlemen. They carried, no doubt, a considerable number of Republicans with them. They pledged themselves to the men they brought to accompany them that Mr. Cleveland was devoted heart and soul to this law and would enforce it entire, in letter, spirit, and truth.

This is the famous Christmas-gift letter of Mr. Cleveland to Mr. George William Curtis, and it is printed day by day in many Republican newspapers. I will read it:

I know that they (abuses in the civil service) are deeply rooted, and that the spoils system has been supposed to be intimately related to success in the maintenance of party organization, and I am not sure that all those who profess to be the friends of this reform will stand firmly among its advocates when they find it obstructing their way to patronage and place. But fully appreciating the trust committed to my charge, no such consideration shall cause a relaxation on my part of an earnest effort to enforce this law.

Mr. Curtis called that—a Christmas gift of the best omen to the American people, a new emancipation proclamation of the freedom of the people from mere partisan enslavement.

In the address of the Independents of July 22, 1884, is this:

His—

Mr. Cleveland's—

personal convictions proved by his official acts, more decisive than any platform declaration, are the guaranty that in its spirit and in its letter the reform would be enforced in the national Administration.

The famous Evening Post, a valuable champion of that party, nominally independent, but with unexampled persistence and I may say ferocity attacking the Republicans and supporting the Democrats—the Evening Post of February 6, 1885, said:

No President since the era of emancipation has had a grander opportunity to be useful in his day and generation, and no one has formed a clearer conception of the duty which he owes to his country.

Presto, change, in two and three years.

The following is from a resolution of the National Civil Service League passed in August, 1887:

The change in the unclassified civil service is so great as to forebode its complete partisan reconstruction by the close of the Administration.

I leave it to Senators generally, of either party, to say whether it is not true that outside of the twelve or fourteen thousand reached by the civil-service law, there is little or no regard—no regard I ought truthfully to say—paid to any spirit or letter or rule of civil-service reform. I know that in my region of country just as fast as the postal-railway clerks could be changed without absolutely throwing the mails into fatal confusion they were changed, until now about five out of six of them are Democrats. Many experiments were made with unfit men who abandoned the attempt to make themselves postal-railway clerks. Persistent attempts have been made to educate at the expense of the Government enough Democrats to conduct the railway postal service, and similar industry has been employed in various and all other branches outside of the classes strictly covered by the law. Save where that law commands, there is no regard paid to the ideas of the reformers.

The New York Evening Post of May 28, 1888—and this is worth reading—says:

The painful truth is, that we doubt if a single independent voter in this State, of the thousands who supported President Cleveland in 1884, any longer attaches any importance to the utterances of the members of the administration on the subject of civil-service reform, or any longer refuses to believe that the President's promises and professions have been violated or disregarded, on a great scale, with the utmost boldness, in sundry places and in divers manners, and that men like Judge Maynard and Surveyor Beattie have actually been detailed or told off to practice as much civil service abuse as can be readily concealed or disguised when they are found out and exposed.

And I will add that that same Post is to-day, nevertheless, supporting Mr. Cleveland, having frankly owned within six months that there are other subjects of great importance besides civil-service reform. The Post is a determined free-trader.

Harper's Weekly of September 17, 1887, says, referring to office-holders in the Democratic State convention of Pennsylvania:

This defiance (by office-holders in the Pennsylvania Democratic convention), like the notorious conduct of Higgins, Rasin, and Thomas, in Baltimore, if it should pass without notice or reproof from the President—

And, sir, it has never been reproved or rebuked—

could be interpreted but in one way, as showing a want of the very independence and courage, belief in which not only elected the President, but which has given him great public confidence.

I believe that these staunch friends of Governor Cleveland in 1884 are telling the truth about his abandonment of their pet doctrine of civil-service reform, and I believe they are telling the truth as it appears to them when they say that, in their judgment, after all, there are other matters of as much or more consequence, and they will continue to support Cleveland.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SABIN. I beg the Senator to withhold the motion just a moment while I ask leave to call up Order of Business 2375, being House bill 7935. It is a short bill and I ask its consideration now, as I shall be obliged to leave the city before the Senate meets again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. SABIN. The bill has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs since last March waiting the adjustment of differences between the committee and the Department, and has been unanimously agreed on and reported. I want to get it into the House of Representatives for a conference, if possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Minnesota is obliged to go away to-morrow, I suppose I can hardly object, but it is not a good time of day to pass a bill. I withdraw the motion to adjourn subject to objection to the bill when we hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length, subject to objection.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that, instead of reading the original bill, the amendment, which is a substitute for the whole bill, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, within sixty days after the passage of this act, to designate and appoint three commissioners, one of whom shall be a citizen of Minnesota, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable after their appointment, to negotiate with all the different bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota for the complete cession and relinquishment in writing of all their title and interest in and to all the reservations of said Indians in the State of Minnesota, except the White Earth and Red Lake reservations, and to all and so much of these two reservations as in the judgment of said commission is not required to make and fill the allotments required by this and existing acts, and shall not have been reserved by the commissioners for said purposes, for the purposes and upon the terms hereinafter stated; and such cession and relinquishment shall be deemed sufficient as to each of said several reservations, except as to the Red Lake reservation, if made and assented to in writing by two-thirds of the male adults over eighteen years of age of the band or tribe of Indians occupying and belonging to such reservations; and as to the Red Lake reservation the cession and relinquishment shall be deemed sufficient if made and assented to in like manner by two-thirds of the male adults of all the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; and provided that all agreements therefor shall be ratified by Congress before taking effect. And for the purpose of ascertaining whether the proper number of Indians yield and give their assent as aforesaid, and for the purpose of making the allotments and payments hereinafter mentioned, the said commissioners shall, while engaged in securing such cession and relinquishment as aforesaid and before completing the same, make an accurate census of each tribe or band, classifying them into male and female adults, and male and female minors; and the minors into those who are orphans and those who are not orphans, giving the exact numbers of each class, and making such census in duplicate lists, one of which shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior, and the other with the official head of the band or tribe; and the acceptance and approval of such cession and relinquishment by the Secretary of the Interior shall, after said agreements of cession shall have been ratified by Congress, and not before, be deemed full and ample proof of the assent of the Indians, and shall operate as a complete extinguishment of the Indian title without any other or further act or ceremony whatsoever for the purposes and upon the terms in this act provided.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, each give a bond to the United States in the sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties under this act; and they shall also each take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully discharge the duties of their office, which bonds and oaths shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior. Said commissioners shall be entitled to a compensation of $10 per day for each day actually employed in the discharge of their duties, and for their actual traveling expenses and board, not exceeding $3 per day. Said commissioners shall also be authorized to employ a competent interpreter while engaged in the performance of their duties at a compensation and allowance to be fixed by them, not in excess of that allowed to each of them under this act.

SEC. 3. That as soon as the census has been taken, and the cession and relinquishment has been obtained, approved, and ratified, as specified in section 1 of this act, all of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, except those on the Red Lake reservation, shall, under the direction of said commissioners, be removed to and take up their residence on the White Earth reservation, and thereupon there shall, as soon as practicable, under the direction of said commissioners, be allotted lands in severalty to the Red Lake Indians on Red Lake reservation, and to all the other of said Indians on White Earth reservation, in conformity with the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes;" and all allotments heretofore made to any of said Indians on the White Earth reservation are hereby ratified and confirmed with the like tenure and condition prescribed for all allotments under this act: Provided, however, That the amount heretofore allotted to any Indian on Whith Earth reservation shall be deducted from the amount of allotment to which he or she is entitled under this act: Provided further, That any of the Indians residing on any of said reservations may, in his discretion, take his allotment in severalty under this act on the reservation where he lives at the time of the removal herein provided for is effected, instead of being removed to and taking such allotment on White Earth reservation.

SEC. 4. That as soon as the cession and relinquishment of said Indian title has been obtained and approved as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause the lands so ceded to the United States to be surveyed in the manner provided by law for the survey of public lands, and as soon as practicable after such survey has been made, and the report, field-notes, and plats thereof filed in the General Land Office, and duly approved by the Commissioner thereof, the said Secretary of the Interior, upon notice of the completion of such surveys, shall appoint a sufficient number of competent and experienced examiners, in order that the work may be done within a reasonable time, who shall go upon said lands thus surveyed and personally make a careful, complete, and thorough examination of the same by 40-acre lots, for the purpose of ascertaining on which lots or tracts there is standing or growing pine timber, which tracts on which pine timber is standing or growing for the purposes of this act shall be termed "pine lands," the minutes of such examination to be at the time entered in books provided for that purpose, showing with particularity the amount and quality of all pine timber standing or growing on any lot or tract, the amount of such pine timber to be estimated by feet in the manner usual in estimating such timber, which estimates and reports of all such examinations shall be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office as a part of the permanent records thereof, and thereupon that officer shall cause to be made a list of all such pine lands, describing each 40-acre lot or tract thereof separately, and opposite each such description he shall place the actual cash value of the same, according to his best judgment and information, but such valuation shall not be at a rate of less than $3 per thousand feet, and thereupon such lists of lands so appraised shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, modification, or rejection, as he may deem proper. If the appraisals are rejected as a whole, then the Secretary of the Interior shall substitute a new appraisal and the same or original list as approved or modified shall be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office as the appraisal of said lands, and as constituting the minimum price for which said lands may be sold, as hereinafter provided, but in no event shall said pine lands be appraised at a rate of less than $3 per thousand feet. Duplicate lists of said lands as appraised, together with copies of the field-notes, surveys, and minutes of examinations shall be filed and kept in the office of the register of the land office of the district within which said lands may be situated, and copies of said lists with the appraisals shall be furnished to any person desiring the same upon application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office or to the register of said local land office.

The compensation of the examiners so provided for in this section shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but in no event shall exceed the sum of $6 per day for each person so employed, including all expenses.

All other lands acquired from the said Indians on said reservations other than pine lands are for the purposes of this act termed "agricultural lands."

SEC. 5. That after the survey, examination, and appraisals of said pine lands has been fully completed they shall be proclaimed as in market and offered for sale in the following manner: The Commissioner of the General Land Office shall cause notices to be inserted once in each week for four successive weeks in one newspaper of general circulation published in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, and Crookston, Minn.; Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Detroit, Mich.; Philadelphia and Williamsport, Pa., and Boston, Mass., of the sale of said lands at public auction to the highest bidder for cash at the local land office of the district within which said lands are located, said notice to state the time and place and terms of such sale. At such sale said lands shall be offered in 40-acre parcels, except in case of fractions containing either more or less than 40 acres, which shall be sold entire. In no event shall any parcel be sold for a less sum than its appraised value. The residue of such lands remaining unsold after such public offering shall thereafter be subject to private sale for cash at the appraised value of the same upon application at the local land office.

SEC. 6. That when any of the agricultural lands on said reservation not allotted under this act nor reserved for the future use of said Indians have been surveyed, the Secretary of the Interior shall give thirty days' notice thereof through at least one newspaper published at St. Paul and Crookston, in the State of Minnesota, and, at the expiration of thirty days, the said agricultural lands so surveyed shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him the sum of $1.25 for each and every acre, in five equal annual payments, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor only at the expiration of five years from the date of entry, according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said $1.25 per acre therefor, and due proof of occupancy for said period of five years; and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same, prior to the date of final entry, shall be null and void: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to authorize the sale or other disposal under its provision of any tract upon which there is a subsisting valid pre-emption or homestead entry, but any such entry shall be proceeded with under the regulations and decisions in force at the date of its allowance, and if found regular and valid patents shall issue thereon: Provided, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption law, and who has failed from any cause to perfect the title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under either of said laws may make a second homestead entry under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands in conformity with the provisions of this act shall, after deducting all the expenses of making the census, of obtaining the cession and relinquishment, of making the removal and allotments, and of completing the surveys and appraisals, in this act provided, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable annually for the period of fifty years, after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in manner following: One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years, except in the cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use; and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with the like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians; and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians, in their midst and for their benefit; and at the expiration of the said fifty years, the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living, in cash, in equal shares: Provided, That Congress may, in its discretion, from time to time, during the said period of fifty years, appropriate, for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, a portion of said principal sum, not exceeding 5 per cent. thereof. The United States shall, for the benefit of said Indians, advance to them as such interest as aforesaid the sum of $90,000 annually, counting from the time when the removal and allotments provided for in this act shall have been made, until such time as said permanent fund, exclusive of the deductions hereinbefore provided for, shall equal or exceed the sum of $3,000,000, less any actual interest that may in the mean time accrue from accumulations of said permanent fund; the payments of such interest to be made yearly in advance, and, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, may, as to three-fourths thereof, during the first five years be expended in procuring live-stock, teams, farming implements, and seed for such of the Indians to the extent of their shares as are fit and desire to engage in farming, but as to the rest, in cash; and whenever said permanent fund shall exceed the sum of $3,000,000 the United States shall be fully reimbursed out of such excess for all the advances of interest made as herein contemplated and other expenses hereunder.

SEC. 8. That the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for procuring the cession and relinquishment, making the census surveys, appraisals, removal and allotments, and the first annual payment of interest herein contemplated and provided for, which money shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in conformity with the provisions of this act. A detailed statement of which expenses, except the interest aforesaid, shall be reported to Congress when the expenditures shall be completed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to explain this bill. It seems to me to be a very important one.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] reported it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was asking the chairman who I knew had charge of the Indians, the head mugwump, to tell us what he knew about it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, this is quite an elaborate bill. It is an attempt to bring into one enactment plans that have been undertaken in different ways to manage and finally dispose of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, one of the greatest bodies of Indians that remain on the continent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How extensive are these lands?

Mr. DAWES. These Indians occupy at the present time quite a number of reservations in Minnesota. The White Earth reservation is thirty-six townships. The Red Lake reservation is about 3,000,000 acres. The other reservations are one million and odd acres. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] says there are in all 4,010,000 acres.

The greatest value of all these reservations, except the White Earth reservation, is in the pine timber, which has become of immense value. The land upon which this pine timber grows is of scarcely any value to anybody, least of all to Indians.

The idea of the bill originally was to bring these Indians down on to the White Earth reservation, which is in the central part of Minnesota, and contains, as I said, thirty-six townships, which is as fine a tract of land, I suppose, as there is in all Minnesota.

Mr. PLATT. Have the Indians in any way signified their willingness to go there?

Mr. DAWES. That is embodied in the bill. There was an attempt two years ago by a commission authorized by act of Congress and appointed by the Interior Department, to go out and negotiate with all these Indians for this ultimate purpose. They made an agreement with them, all except the Turtle Mountain and another band of Indians, small bands, who held by such a peculiar title that they could not be negotiated with successfully.

The agreement which was brought here was reported to both Houses of Congress for ratification. It did not meet the approval of the Representatives and Senators from Minnesota, nor of either committee for different reasons, the committee of the Senate having objections to it for one reason and the committee of the House for another reason.

In the mean time there sprang up in one or two of these reservations opposition to this agreement which had been entered into. I thought myself it was a good agreement, although it did not cope with the main trouble, the disposition of the pine lands, but as far as it went I thought it was a good agreement. One of the Senators from Minnesota, the Senator not present, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and myself went there, and we found these reservations in a very demoralized state.

Out of this grew a bill reported to the House of Representatives from the Indian Committee, drawn by a member of that committee from Minnesota, which passed the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate; but it did not meet the views of the Indian Committee of the Senate.

They have been trying to devise a measure all along; they have been endeavoring to get some method to dispose of the pine timber upon these reservations for the benefit of the Indians—in other words, to capitalize it—and they have brought into this bill a plan for that purpose, which is the result of consultations with lumbermen of the West who have no interest in this matter, and who could not possibly in any way derive any benefit from the sale of this timber; but their experience in the lumber business and the confidence the committee have in the authors of that part of this bill have led them to adopt it as it has been mapped out by those to whom the committee appealed for their experience. That is a part of this bill which involves probably five or six and it may be ten million dollars' worth of pine timber. If it can be capitalized honestly, it will provide a fund for these Indians probably larger than any fund ever provided for any Indians heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are the Indians to go in case of giving up these lands?

Mr. DAWES. I was going to say that in the meantime this measure provides for the removal of all the Chippewa Indians to the White Earth reservation and to the Red Lake reservation, not being able to bring them all down to the White Earth reservation, and also provides for the allotment to all these Indians of agricultural lands under the severalty law upon these two reservations, and then provides for the sale, for the benefit of the Indians, of the balance of the agricultural lands upon these two reservations which the commission provided for shall deem not necessary for the future use of the Indians. That is the general plan. Then the whole of this plan is to be submitted to all of these Indians for their approval; two-thirds of the Indians upon the White Earth reservation and all the other reservations but the Red Lake to signify their assent to it in writing.

As to the Red Lake reservation, which the Indians of Minnesota claim that all of them have a right to, although that is not admitted by the Indians upon the Red Lake reservation, it is required that there shall be the assent of all the Chippewa Indians to the transfer of that property to the United States for this purpose.

The plan is, first, to transfer the title of all this land to the United States, except so much as is to be allotted, and then the United States are to take it and capitalize it as pine land for the benefit of the Indians. That is the general plan. There is a great deal in it.

I will say, as the Senator from Minnesota reminds me of it, that, after all, these agreements are to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and proposed to Congress for ratification before they take effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I notice; but we find that these ratifications, the first step being taken, go almost as a matter of course. What I wish to ask is whether these Indians are to be removed from where they are now to these two reservations except by their consent? The Senator used the word "meantime."

Mr. DAWES. They are not to be removed until they consent to this general arrangement, part of which is that they shall go to these reservations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask further what is the nature of the title which these Indians now have to these lands?

Mr. DAWES. The title to the White Earth reservation is an act of Congress setting apart for the sole use of these Indians thirty-six townships of land. The title to the Red Lake reservation is the old original title of the Indians, the title of occupancy, recognized by Congress and supplemented by treaties in which, without using words of grant, it has been covenanted that they shall forever have the use or forever occupy, free from disturbance by white men, these lands, which is equivalent in point of fact, substantially, to a fee, though not exactly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then do I understand my honorable friend from Massachusetts to mean that, according to his observation of acts of Congress and treaties and so on, the title of these Indians is merely a corporate title in the whole body of them as a band or tribe, or whether there is anything in any of these acts of Congress which gives the individual members of these tribes a property right in the land? If the answer is affirmative to the first inquiry, then, of course, it would be competent for Congress to provide that these tribes in their corporate character, by a majority or two-thirds or whatever Congress may think fit, may dispose of them. If, on the other hand, any individual Indian of these tribes on any of these reservations is in the attitude of having a private property right, then it would seem to be somewhat difficult for Congress to say that two-thirds of his neighbors may take it away from him. I should like to know how that is.

Mr. DAWES. The treaties with all these Indians contain a stipulation that any Indian may have an allotment in severalty on these lands and shall have a certificate—they do not call it a patent, but a certificate—that he has taken an allotment under the treaty. They are treated by the United States as sole owners; but there has been, so far as I know, no allotments actually taken under the treaty.

The White Earth Indians, whose reservation is a beautiful square of thirty-six townships, claim that that was set apart for their sole use, and that they own it, and that, therefore, the United States have no business to bring other Indians on there; and hence it is provided that they, with the others, shall consent to all this arrangement before it shall take effect.

They have, in point of fact, all of them had allotments. They did, in anticipation of the passage of the severalty act, go out voluntarily themselves, under the advice of their agent, and have allotments all over the White Earth reservation, which have never gone through the formalities either of ratification by Congress or of ratification under the severalty act; but they are substantially themselves occupying tracts in severalty. It is a very complicated arrangement; it is very difficult of solution. The Indians there are in a sad state. The Committees on Indian Affairs in the House and in the Senate have labored with this thing very much. Whether this is a wise provision or not will depend upon the future. I would not guaranty that it will work without friction; but in so far as our committee is able to see this is about as wise a solution of the trouble up there as it can recommend.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this takes the land of the Fond du Lac, the Cœur d'Oreille, the Flambeau, and the Bad River reservations.

Mr. SABIN. They are in another State.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that the reservations named by the Senator from Connecticut are in the State of Wisconsin. I will not assert positively that they are.

Mr. PLATT. Not all.

Mr. DAWES. I have gone on the supposition that they are in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. PLATT. I think not all of them. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether any of the following reservations are in the State of Wisconsin: Fond du Lac, Cœur d'Oreille, Flambeau, and Bad River, and whether some of these reservations are not in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Fond du Lac reservation is in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. PLATT. And the others are in Wisconsin?

Mr. CHANDLER. The other three are in Wisconsin.

Mr. DAWES. I have been largely influenced in giving my consent to this bill by the fact that any possible arrangement which may be made has to be reported here for revision and for ratification before it becomes effective.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make this further inquiry, whether upon all the reservations which I have named there have not been considerable portions of the land already allotted to portions of the Indians?

Mr. DAWES. In the Fond du Lac and the other French names that I can not speak, there has been a curious operation going on for the last six or eight months, which has possibly stimulated the committee to do something.

Under their old treaty, as I stated the other day, the privilege of taking allotments and having certificates of allotments has been exercised. Although the severalty act has been a law for two years, within the last year there has been a process going on in those reservations of alloting land under the treaty rather than under the law, and giving a certificate, because the men who held it under the treaty they thought had the power to sell the pine timber on it; so they were allotted all over that pine region most valuable pine lands which were good for nothing under heaven but for the pine that was on them, and then before the certificates got here to Washington for approval the poor Indian had sold all the pine on his 160 acres, and he had nothing in the world but stumps.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator understand that these same Indians, who have received their allotments or certificates and sold their lands, are to be treated just like all the rest of the Indians that are removed to the White Earth reservation and are to get their share of this fund over again?

Mr. DAWES. Well, I am a little stumped by that interrogatory, Mr. President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is all stumps. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. I have trusted to the future revision of this contract by Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my colleague whether, considering the unusual importance of this transaction, which, I suppose, is the most important one bearing upon Indian interests we have had for many years here, as I judge from his statement, it would not be well to vest the power of personal responsibility of advising and assenting to it before it is reported to Congress in the President of the United States instead of the Secretary of the Interior? I think if the personal responsibility were upon the President, it would give the transaction a dignity which it would not possess through a Department officer.

As I understand the bill, the scheme which is to be reported by this commission to consist of three persons, one of whom is to be a citizen of Minnesota, is to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior before it is reported to Congress. My question is whether it would not be well, considering the great importance of the affair, to clothe the President of the United States himself with that responsibility in this case? Of course he would have the benefit of the advice of the Secretary of the Interior, but where Congress pursued the unusual course of imposing that duty upon the President in person, the transaction would be pretty sure to receive an unusual scrutiny before it came back to us here.

Mr. DAWES. I think there is force in the suggestion of my colleague. As this bill came from the House of Representatives the agreement for all this disposition, involving so many millions of dollars and so many acres of land, was to take effect upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, without any report whatever to Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I will move the amendment I have suggested, if my colleague has no objection.

Mr. DAWES. And it was in order to keep it under the control of Congress that it was modified so as to require the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. I think it will be further improved by requiring the approval of the President instead of the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the words "Secretary of the Interior," in line 3 of the first section, on page 11 of the amendment, be stricken out, and the words "President of the United States" inserted.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Minnesota has charge of the bill, and I do not consider myself authorized to indicate what would be the voice of the committee. I should rather the Senator from Minnesota would speak. It was only at his request that I have explained it.

Mr. SABIN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] being the author of the bill as it stands, I prefer to have him make his explanation. He has disemboweled the original bill and substituted one of his own.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, in section 1, line 3, on page 11, by striking out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and substituting "President of the United States;" and then, in the same section, in lines 41 and 42, I move to strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and substitute "President of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 3, of the amendment, after the words "that the," it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1 of the amendment, line 41, after the words "relinquishment by the," strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if this bill is unanimously recommended and adopted by the committee?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] can answer better than myself. So far as I know, it has received the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I will say, as the Senator from Minnesota was kind enough to remark that it was my bill, that I drew the bill. I have been trying to make something out of the House bill for a good while, and I have been at work upon this bill, but the Senator from Minnesota has taken charge of the bill, and I believe honestly that it is the best bill that can be made to dispose of this whole matter.

Mr. PLATT. I ought to say perhaps that this bill might have been considered at some meeting of the committee when I was not present; I think so; at any rate I do not remember to have heard of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Connecticut was in Connecticut during the last meeting of the committee, but it has been before the committee several times.

Mr. PLATT. I think it would have struck me, because I know something about the land of some of the Indians, and something of the operations which have been going on up there, but I feel quite delicate about saying anything in relation to the bill, because I am on the committee. Still, if I can have the attention of the chairman for a moment, I want to make a suggestion as to whether this is the best thing that can be done for the civilization and the development of the Indians of that race. I have a very decided feeling myself that the worst thing you can do for a tribe of Indians is to make a great fund for them and pay them the interest upon it, and these Indians up there are now somewhat advanced on the road towards civilization. A good many of them wear citizens' clothes.

Mr. DAWES. Every Indian on the White Earth reservation wears citizens' clothes, except the medicine man, who goes there to see if he can not make a little money out of them.

Mr. PLATT. These Indians have already advanced somewhat towards civilization. My judgment, without thinking a great deal on the subject, is that to make a fund of $10,000,000 for these Indians will be, for the bands on the Fond du Lac reservation and the other reservations I have been talking about, more than $2,000,000.

Mr. SABIN. They are not included in this.

Mr. PLATT. I think they are all included. If they get the worth of the timber this fund will run up to a very considerable sum. It will be more than $5,000,000, I think.

Now, I believe the very worst thing that can be done for these Indians is to sell their land and put the proceeds into a fund and have them paid the interest regularly on that fund for fifty years, and possibly, as the bill provides, 5 per cent. of the principal in an emergency.

Mr. SABIN. Make it 3 per cent., then.

Mr. PLATT. I think the result will be that at the end of fifty years these Indians will not be a particle more advanced toward civilization than they are to-day. The truth is that the hardest Indians in the United States to civilize are the richest ones, and in proportion to the amount of their riches. You can not break up the tribal relation in a rich tribe of Indians with one-half the ease that you can among Indians that have no money. Riches bring a kind of aristocracy among them, and they maintain their manners and their customs and resist every possible attempt to civilize them. You may take their children and send them to school at Carlisle, and when they go back to the tribe they have either to be driven out or to go and adopt the customs and submit themselves to the regulations of the tribe.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Admit all that to be true, and then admit that this pine timber belongs to these Indians, and I ask the Senator what is he going to do? Is he going to let this timber lie until the solution of this question, or is he going to take this money upon the principle that it is going to hurt its owner and do something else with it? What would he do with it? If he will enlighten me on that subject, he will help me in this business.

Mr. PLATT. I know the difficulties of this problem, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. PLATT. I will, if you will permit me to say one other word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will.

Mr. PLATT. I say this, Mr. President, as my judgment of a general principle, you are never going to elevate any human being in this world very much or advance him very far along the road to social development unless he has the spending of his own money.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill is very important, and the Senate is thin, and as I am not ready at this present moment to vote for it, although I may be when I consider it more, I think I ought to insist on my motion to adjourn; but I will state, as my friend from Minnesota wishes to go away to-morrow, that I will vote, if he wishes it, immediately after the morning business to-morrow morning to take the bill up and we can consider it with a full Senate. And now, subject to the Chair's desire to lay some papers before the Senate, I renew my motion to adjourn.

PENSACOLA AND MEMPHIS RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion the Chair will lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3573) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 22, strike out "eighteen" and insert "three."

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that amendment mean, Mr. President? I wish to hear it explained.

Mr. CALL. The original bill as passed by the Senate gave to the Pensacola and Memphis Railway Company, a corporation organized under the States of Alabama and Tennessee, which is now building a railroad to Pensacola, the right of way through the naval reservation, or rather the use of 1,800 feet of the water-front for their wharves, subject to its value to be appraised by the Secretary. The House amendment limits it to 300 feet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 11107) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.;" and

A bill (H. R. 11338) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River, at Gadsden, in the State of Alabama.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Ballard; and

A bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell.

The bill (H. R. 10098) to refer the claims of Richard H. Parkam, administrator of George Gorman, deceased, and Robert S. McDonald to the Court of Claims, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions that were not concluded to-day, if there be no objection, will be considered as in the order of current business for to-morrow morning. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair announces the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 4, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, October 3, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PUBLIC-LAND DECISIONS, ETC., INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the Senate amendments to the joint resolution (H. Res. 101) providing for the printing of decisions of the Interior Department with regard to public lands and pensions for sale.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate amendments now and concur in them. They are only formal amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, subject to objection.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not require any money eventually, for it goes back into the Treasury. It is simply to sell the decisions.

There being no objection, the amendments were considered, and agreed to.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, subject to objection.

The amendments were read at length.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were considered, and agreed to.

LINCOLN LAND DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3390) to create the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Delegate from New Mexico, who is temporarily absent, I ask leave to consider that bill now. It has been favorably reported upon by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that portion of the Territory of New Mexico embraced within the boundaries of the county of Lincoln shall be constituted a separate land district, to be known as the Lincoln land district, the office of which said land district shall be located at the town of Roswell, Territory of New Mexico.

SEC. 2. That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and receiver of the public moneys of the United States for said district; and said officers shall reside in the place where the land office is located, and they shall have the same power and receive the same emoluments as are or may be prescribed by law in relation to other land officers in the Territories of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I would like to inquire if a similar bill has been reported by the House committee?

Mr. MCRAE. It has.

Mr. DINGLEY. And meets the approval of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MCRAE. It has the approval of the Land Commissioner.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; and it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES WEITFLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bill 3485, restoring the homestead right of Charles Weitfle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET KENNEDY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 307) for the relief of Margaret Kennedy, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will insist upon its disagreement and agree to the conference asked. The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, Mr. LAWLER, and Mr. BROWER as conferees on the part of the House.

PENSACOLA AND MEMPHIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3573) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider that bill at the present time. The Committee on Naval Affairs have instructed me to report favorably a bill exactly like that excepting one word, and I shall ask that in that respect the bill be amended.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company, a company organized under the laws of the States of Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi, is hereby granted the right of way, 100 feet wide, through the lands belonging to the United States lying near Pensacola, in the State of Florida, known as the naval reservation, be, and hereby is, granted to the Pensacola and Memphis Railroad Company, a corporation organized, etc., to be located to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, evidenced by his written consent: Provided, That the said railroad company, on notification by the Secretary of the Navy, shall, within a reasonable time thereafter, construct, maintain, and operate at its own expense a spur track or tracks to enter into and be located at such place or places within the present limits of the navy-yard inclosure on said reservation as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to allow the use by said company, in the accommodation of its general traffic and the maintenance of a coaling station, of so much of the land and water-front of the said reservation lying west of and outside the present navy-yard inclosure as in his judgment will not be required for naval purposes, and as will not be a hinderance to the public defense nor prejudicial to the health of those residing on the Government reservation, and not to exceed in any case 1,800 feet of water-front, which width may extend back along the line of said road not more than 1,000 feet; the value of the use of land to be appraised by a board of naval officers, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That said company shall reimburse the residents of said reservation for any damage to their property or tenements caused by the construction, excavation, or operation of said road, such damage in all cases to be fixed by said board: And provided further, That the right of way and other privileges granted in this section shall become inoperative and null and void, unless the said railroad company shall complete the construction of and have in use its tracks across said reservation within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

The Secretary of the Navy may at any time when he shall deem it necessary for the public good cause to be removed or destroyed all or any of the structures hereby permitted, without subjecting the Government to damages, and Congress may at any time alter or repeal this act.

And the said company shall not erect or allow the use of any residences on said reservation, nor shall it erect any structures of any kind thereon, except such as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve, and all approvals in this act required shall be in writing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to amend that bill, in accordance with instructions from the Committee on Naval Affairs, by striking out, in line 22 of the first section, the words "eighteen hundred," and in lieu thereof inserting the words "three hundred;" so it will read "300 feet."

I will state that the purpose is to give the railroad company a sufficiency of water front, but not to authorize them to monopolize all the front. There is room enough for several other railroads if they desire it.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY LECOMTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House joint resolution (S. R. 112) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy, at West Point, Henry Lecomte, of Switzerland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following request of the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, October 1, 1888.

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to ask the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 577) for the relief of the American Grocer Association, of the city of New York.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request will be complied with and the Clerk will return the bill to the Senate.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. MAISH, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. FELTON, indefinitely, on account of important and pressing personal business.

To Mr. PAYSON, indefinitely, on account of business.

To Mr. BYNUM, indefinitely, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, providing for printing for the use of Congress 10,000 additional copies of the work known as "Growth of Industrial Art;" 3,500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 6,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 104), in which the concurrence of the House was requested, to print additional copies of the United States map, of the edition of 1887, prepared by the Commissioner of Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9182) granting a pension to Ransom Riley;

A bill (H. R. 9148) granting a pension to Jane Robinson;

A bill (H. R. 9106) granting a pension to Peter Liner;

A bill (H. R. 8993) for the relief of Shadrach W. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 10122) granting a pension to Margaret Quinton;

A bill (H. R. 10121) granting a pension to Sarah A. Mason;

A bill (H. R. 10106) to place the name of Matilda Spangler on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 10103) granting a pension to William Fairbanks;

A bill (H. R. 10017) granting a pension to Samuel Anderson;

RICHARD H. PARHAM, ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10098) to refer the claims of Richard H. Parham, administrator of George Gorman, deceased, and Robert S. McDonald to the Court of Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of Richard H. Parham, administrator of George Gorman, deceased, and of Robert S. McDonald, of Marshall County, Mississippi, for stores and supplies taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I would like to know whether any committee has reported this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; it has been reported by the Committee on War Claims with a favorable recommendation. The claim involves only nine or ten thousand dollars, and the bill simply provides for a reference of it to the Court of Claims for inquiry and ascertainment of the facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to reserve the right to object until I hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. CROUSE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bills (H. R. 825 and 829) for the relief of Richard H. Parham, administrator of George Gorman, deceased, and Robert S. McDonald, report as follows:

It appears from the proof submitted that the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress transmitted these claims to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the provisions of the Bowman act. The loyalty has been favorably determined by the court, but the cases were dismissed by that tribunal for want of jurisdiction.

Your committee are of opinion that the court should have jurisdiction so as to pass upon the merits of the claims, and report herewith a bill conferring authority upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims, and recommend its passage.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to have the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] explain why these cases were dismissed by the court for want of jurisdiction.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know exactly, but I think there was some statute intervening. I believe the claim was not presented in time, through some inadvertence on the part of the attorneys employed.

Mr. DINGLEY. Simply a statute of limitation?

Mr. MORGAN. Simply a statute of limitation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Can the gentleman state whether these supplies were furnished by order of the proper officers?

Mr. MORGAN. The supplies were furnished to the Army, but I can not say by whose order. All these questions, however, will be investigated by the court.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand the gentleman to say that the bill only provides for a reference of the claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MORGAN. Simply a reference for the ascertainment of the facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DR. DAVID BELL.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Dr. David Bell, of Limestone Cove, Unicoi County, Tennessee, his pay as assistant surgeon of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry, from the 15th day of May, 1864, to the 1st day of January, 1865; he having discharged the duties as such surgeon by the request and direction of the colonel of said regiment and General Gillem, commander of the brigade in which said regiment belonged. His services were required on account of an unusual amount of sickness in said regiment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER]?

Several MEMBERS. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BROWER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill 8557, report as follows:

This is a claim for services as assistant surgeon of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry from the 16th of May, 1864, to 1st of June, 1865.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] why it is that this claim has never been presented before. Twenty-five years have elapsed since it accrued, and it seems to me it ought to have been presented and disposed of long ago.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know the reason. The claimant has made efforts here through his Representatives for years, but I suppose he could never get anybody to attend to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. I believe I shall have to object.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the gentleman will not object until he hears my statement.

Mr. KILGORE. How much money is involved?

Mr. BUTLER. Four or five hundred dollars.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. This is only about six months' pay altogether.

Mr. KILGORE. A little thing may be as far out of the way as a big thing.

Mr. BUTLER. The claimant is an old man and is now on his back with paralysis.

Mr. KILGORE. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES BALLARD.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Ballard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paymaster-General of the Army of the United States, out of any money in his hands for the payment of the Army, is hereby authorized and directed to pay to James Ballard, late of Company —, Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry, an amount equal to the pay and allowances of a —— lieutenant, from the —— day of ——-, 186—, to —— day of ——,186—.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from North Carolina state the character and amount of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The report is very brief and it explains the character of the bill. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BROWER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6782) for the relief of James Ballard, report as follows:

James Ballard was mustered into service as a private in Company A, Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry Volunteers, June 11, 1864, to serve three years. For some reason he was transferred to Company G, same regiment, and in March and April, 1865, he is reported as second lieutenant, present for duty, "promoted from the ranks per special order dated Headquarters Department of the Cumberland, Nashville, Tenn., March 21, 1865."

Muster-out roll of said company, dated August 8, 1865, reports him second lieutenant, "promoted from private to second lieutenant, February 16, 1865."

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendments:

In line 6, insert "G" after "Company;" in line 7, insert "second" before "lieutenant;" in line 8, insert "sixteenth" before "day," and "February" after "of," and "five" after "sixty."

In line 9, insert "eighth" before "day," "August" after "of," and "five" after "sixty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

YANKTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, and Mr. NELSON as conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7547) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri River Railway Company through the Yankton reservation, in Dakota.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and prior years, and for other purposes; also that the Senate further insisted on its amendments numbered 41, 100, 112, 113, 114, and 231 to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to reports of committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (S. 3234) to abolish circuit-court powers of certain district courts of the United States, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes; and Joint resolution (S. R. 110) in aid of sufferers from yellow fever.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homesteads to make another entry, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. BERRY.

JAMES E. ANDREWS.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 8847) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certain duplicate bonds to James E. Andrews, in place of certain bonds destroyed by fire, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask leave to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, as the Chair understands, asks leave to make a statement, reserving the right to object.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, during the early part of this session the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who now calls up this bill, asked unanimous consent for the passage of a bill which, as I considered, affected injuriously my constituents. I exercised my privilege of objecting to that bill. On Friday last I called up a bill which in no wise affected the interests of any constituent of the gentleman from Minnesota; but he saw fit to apply to me the lex talionis, and to object to the consideration of that bill, at the same time serving notice upon me that I should pass no bill here until I consented to the passage of the bill of his which I considered injurious to the interests of my district. I shall therefore apply to the gentleman the same rule which he applied to me. I object to the consideration of this bill.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, asks the adoption of a resolution designed to facilitate the work of that committee, all the members of the committee, except himself, being now absent from the city. The Clerk will read the resolution, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to employ one additional clerk at the rate of $6 per day, for the remainder of this session of Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.

SUFFERERS BY WRECK OF TALLAPOOSA.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I rise to make a privileged report—the report of a committee of conference. I will state that the original copy of the amendments was mislaid or lost; and the Clerk has prepared another copy to conform to the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL], who desires to present the report of a committee of conference, states that the original engrossed copy of the House amendments was mislaid, and that the Clerk of the House has made a duplicate copy of those amendments, upon which this report is based. If there be no objection, the House will proceed to act upon the report. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 869) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1 of the House, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out from the original bill the words "one thousand" and insert the words "seven hundred and fifty."

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 3, line 26, strike out the words "or in case there be not such, then the parent or parents, and if there be no parents the brothers and sisters;" page 3, line 30, strike out the words "Clarence E. Black, passed assistant surgeon," and at the end of the section add: "And provided further, That there shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States to the legal representatives of Clarence E. Black, passed assistant surgeon United States Navy (deceased), the sum of $750."

T. J. CAMPBELL,
L. F. MCKINNEY,
DANIEL KERR,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. D. CAMERON,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that that body requested the return of the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2742) to incorporate the Brightwood Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "single or," in line 8, insert "with the approval of the commissioners of the District, a;" so as to read: "And by that name may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, with authority to construct and lay down a single or, with the approval of the commissioners of the District, a double track, etc."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, inserting, after the words "cents," in line 12, page 2, the words "Provided, If electric wires or cables are used, the same shall be placed underground."

That the Senate insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and the House recede from the same, the amendment being to insert, after the word "jurisdiction," in line 7, page 6, the words "Provided, That the full amount of the capital stock subscribed shall be paid in full in cash before said company shall operate said road."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, inserting, after the word "instruction," in line 16, page 9, the words "Provided, That it shall exercise no powers not herein expressly granted."

B. COMPTON,
JOHN T. HEARD,
M. S. BREWER,
Managers on the part of the House.

I. G. HARRIS,
C. B. FARWELL,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees, which, under the rules, accompanies the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT OF CONFEREES.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the House, appointed to confer with the Senate conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 2742 to incorporate the Brightwood Railway Company of the District of Columbia, respectfully submit the following statement relative to said conference, and in explanation of the report herewith presented:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to amendment numbered 1, and agrees to the amendment with an amendment. The amendment of the House proposed to strike out the word "double," in line 8 of section 1, so as to limit said company to the privilege of building a single track. The amendment to the amendment qualifies the restriction so that with the approval of the District commissioners a double track may be laid.

Amendment numbered 2, the disagreement to which is receded from by the Senate, requires said company, in case it uses electric wires or cables, to place the same under the ground, which the House conferees regarded as important, and successfully urged its adoption.

Amendment numbered 3, from which your conferees recommend that the House recede, was designed to compel the stockholders to pay in full the par value of the entire capital stock authorized to be issued by the company before said company should operate said road. This amendment is not regarded as important, for the reason that said company is not authorized to issue any bonds or other obligations in which the public could become interested, and while the amount of the capital stock authorized to be issued is just what your committee thought necessary, if paid in full, to build said road. Still, if the road can be built for less, we see no reason why any more money should be paid into the treasury of said company than would be necessary to construct the road, which is the only thing in which the outside public is really interested.

Amendment numbered 4, from which your conferees recommend that the House recede, is in the nature of a proviso, which reads as follows: "Provided, That it shall exercise no powers not herein expressly granted." This being considered surplusage by your conferees, and it being objected to by the Senate conferees on the ground that the absence from other similar charters of any such language, and its adoption here, might be held by implication to be intended to curtail in an unusual measure the powers and privileges of this company, and your conferees being of the opinion that it is entirely unnecessary to protect the public, they therefore make the recommendation to recede.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HEARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BURNES. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 13, 14, 19, 23, 26, 28, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 64, 66, 67, 78, 79, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, 90, 91, 93, 103, 116, 117, and 137.

JAS. N. BURNES,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

During the reading,

Mr. SPINOLA said: Is this the proper time to object to an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair). It is not.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not hear read or it escaped my attention what provision has been made in reference to the investigation of the aqueduct construction, or, in other words, what appropriation has been made for that work?

Mr. BURNES. I will take that up the first item.

Mr. HOOKER. I heard something read in reference to No Man's Land, and as this matter is akin to the Oklahoma question, I wish to know whether the committee has given any attention to that matter.

Mr. BURNES. I will refer to it before I get through.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not feel justified in calling up the Oklahoma question during the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. It would annoy the gentleman from Missouri less if I should ask him now to state precisely what was done with the Utah matter.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, the amendment numbered 42 is a provision legislative in its character, extending the time provided by law for the completion of the aqueduct to supply water to the city of Washington. Pending the consideration of that amendment in conference, it was suggested that instead of extending the time for the completion of the work we should provide for a thorough, full, and complete investigation of all the facts concerning the entire work done under the War Department by the Corps of Engineers. So the Senate amendment was changed in conference to a provision simply to raise a committee to consist of three Senators and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the respective presiding officers of the two Houses, to make the investigation. The condition in which the work now is, its character, and the conduct of all parties engaged in it we think should be rigidly investigated, including, of course, all the contracts that have been made and reported to Congress by the 1st day of January next.

That is all we have done with regard to the aqueduct.

Mr. ROGERS. No appropriation whatever?

Mr. BURNES. Yes; an appropriation to pay the expense of the investigation—$5,000.

Mr. ROGERS. But nothing further?

Mr. BURNES. Nothing further.

Mr. OATES. I do not understand whether this is to be investigated by a commission or by a committee.

Mr. BURNES. By a joint committee of Congress.

Mr. CHEADLE. Has the work been discontinued?

Mr. BURNES. I think not.

It is a well-known fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress of the United States and the department of the Government most interested in the control and management of this work have been fully and duly advised of the fact that the work needed careful executive attention and administration. It is not for me to say nor do I believe there will be found any material cause of complaint against the officials of the War Department—I mean the head of the War Department and the head of the Engineers—unless, indeed, they have been negligent or careless in regard to the administration of the law. But that wrongs unparalleled almost in public works have been allowed to be perpetrated, or perpetrated without observation on the part of those whose duty it is to observe, is beyond question. Therefore this investigation has been provided for. As giving information now that will be of service to the public and perhaps of service to every member on this floor, I will have read and published in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, not only the facts and figures relating to the appropriations for the work, but all of the facts with reference to its continuance and completion as they have come to the Committee on Appropriations of this House; and I ask the Clerk to read from a report made by the committee on the urgent deficiency bill making the final appropriations.

Before that is read, however, I wish to say that appropriations having been doubled beyond the estimates originally made, and there being still a demand for more money to complete the work, the Appropriations Committee determined to make a finish of it and for that purpose called before the committee all the parties engaged in the work, or nearly all, and consulted them with reference to the estimates which had been submitted for its completion. The estimates were $320,000. After a full examination and cross-examination and re-examination, the last dollar and the last cent that anybody asked for was $355,000 to make the final completion of the work.

Mr. SAYERS. In that connection, my colleague should state that we also had Major Lydecker before us.

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; Major Lydecker was before the committee.

Now, with reference to the time, it was provided in the law that this work should be finished by the 1st day of November. I find nothing on record with regard to the fact, and I can only bear personal testimony as to my own recollection, and as we were particular with regard to the final appropriation, so we were particular in giving more time than was demanded by any one in connection with the work, as I recollect. Therefore, to my mind there is no justifiable reason in departing from or for extending the time for the completion.

I ask the Clerk to read from the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASED WATER SUPPLY, WASHINGTON CITY.

The bill appropriates $355,000 to complete the work of increasing the water supply of the city of Washington. The estimate submitted in the annual Book of Estimates for 1889 for this object was $320,000, but upon examination it was deemed necessary to increase the amount asked for to the sum which is given, and to place the appropriation in this bill in order that the work, which is now suspended for the lack of funds, may be resumed at the earliest moment practicable. The engineer officer in charge of the work, Major Lydecker, gives positive assurance that the sum recommended, $355,000, will complete this work without further delay, and that there will be no further application to Congress for appropriations.

In this connection it is proper to call attention to the fact that the original estimates for this work have been largely exceeded. The original act authorizing the extension of the water supply, passed July 15, 1882 (vol. 22, Statutes at Large, page 170), appropriated for the work $1,485,279.30. Since that time Congress has made the following additional appropriations:

July 7, 1884	$87,500
March 3, 1885	87,500
March 26, 1886	5,000
August 4, 1886	555,000

Making the aggregate appropriations to date $2,220,279.30, which, added to the sum now asked for and recommended, make a total of $2,575,279.30, or $1,090,000 over and above the amount originally appropriated for the work, and based on estimates of its entire cost.

Something of the history and progress of this work may, with profit, be given here.

The plan of connecting the reservoirs by means of a tunnel aqueduct was the work of Capt. R. L. Hoxie, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, when he was in charge of the water supply and sewerage of the District of Columbia, under Maj. William J. Twining, Engineer Commissioner.

Preliminary plans were presented to Congress in February, 1879; but it was not until July 15, 1882, that an act was passed and approved authorizing the work to be done. Under this act the various parts of the work were provided for separately, according to the estimates submitted, and of the whole amount appropriated to complete the works for "increased water supply, Washington," about $600,000 were allotted for the tunnel aqueduct.

A contract to "complete the tunnel in every respect" was, after public bidding, entered into near the close of the year 1883. In the progress of the work the plans made by Captain Hoxie were found quite immature, and his estimate of cost but little more reliable than a bold guess. For example: The plans contemplated a tunnel without a brick lining; the necessity for such lining was soon apparent. The plans contemplated shafts of given depth; that at the eastern end had to be sunken 43 feet beyond the given depth; that at the western end 47 feet beyond the given depth; that at Foundry Branch 28 feet; that at Rock Creek 16 feet; that at Champlain avenue 24 feet—all below the given depths for such shafts.

In May, 1885, Capt. T. W. Symons succeeded Captain Hoxie as superintending engineer, under Major Lydecker, however, by whom the necessity for the brick lining of the tunnel was clearly recognized. Meanwhile, in addition to the original appropriation of $1,485,279.30, the further sum of $175,000 had been appropriated by acts of July 7, 1884, and March 3, 1885. Perhaps but little of these enormous appropriations remained unexpended when Major Lydecker was placed in charge of the work. He requested Congress to appropriate $395,000 for its completion. Pending an examination of the situation by the subcommittee on the "District appropriation bill" of the first session Forty-ninth Congress, the sum of $5,000 was appropriated to protect and preserve the property or work from injury; and after a thorough examination by such subcommittee and an able report thereon, the further sum of $555,000 was, on August 4, 1886, appropriated, with the confident hope and assurance that no further appropriation would be necessary.

At the present session of Congress your committee was confronted with an estimate—again to complete the work, of course—requiring an additional appropriation of $320,000. After a careful examination of the whole matter, including an examination of Major Lydecker, your committee concluded to appropriate $35,000 more than the estimate, making the further sum of $355,000, in order to be able to say that the most earnest and solemn assurances have been given by Major Lydecker that he can and will finally complete said entire work without any further or additional appropriation, and at an early day. The importance of such early completion to the people residing or sojourning in the city of Washington is apparent to all, and no reasonable doubt of such completion ought to exist.

It must not be understood that the committee has any want of confidence in the integrity or skill of Major Lydecker; on the contrary, it is very evident that he has struggled faithfully against the difficulties of an immature, if not impracticable, plan which descended to him from his predecessor, and for which he is in no way justly chargeable. The result, however, to the Government has been disastrous. A work—this tunnel—originally estimated to cost, say, $600,000, will have cost when the present appropriation is expended, say, $1,400,000. And the entire work for this increased water supply, originally estimated to cost $1,485,279.30, will have cost $2,575,000.

Can no method be devised that will give the same degree of certainty in the cost of public works that attends the construction of works by private enterprise? Would an engineer, architect, or superintendent of a work carried on by private individuals hold his position for a day, or be a second time employed by any one, if he should make such mistakes as we have seen have been made in this matter, to the injury of the General Government and of the people of the District? Remedy must come, if it come at all, through the executive department rather than the legislative. The former has the power to apply it.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk also to read a part of a supplemental report made by the committee at the same session of Congress on the same subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

In this supplementary report the committee deem it proper to refer to so much of the report already made, accompanying said bill H. R. 6437, as refers to the "increased water supply, Washington City," and to add that at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress the subcommittee having in charge the District appropriation bill made a thorough investigation of the facts bearing upon the plan and progress of the work of completion of the tunnel for the water supply of Washington, embodying their views in report No. 3109 of that session. The following extract is taken therefrom:

"WATER SUPPLY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

"The amounts recommended under above head are in accordance with the estimates of Executive Document 39, present session. The $160,000 asked for the completion of the reservoir is needed because it has been found necessary to replace much of the bottom of the same with hard clay at places where quicksand or other unsafe conditions were unexpectedly found, and to haul from other sections of the tunnel the stone needed for lining, that excavated nearest the reservoir being soft and crumbling.

"The sum needed to complete the tunnel is explained in same document and the reasons for its appropriation further set forth in the voluminous testimony which accompanies this report. The original estimates contemplated, as a rule, a surface conduit, to connect the existing reservoir with the new one, 4 miles distant. The plan finally adopted was for a siphon tunnel to be sunk under Rock Creek and driven (as was expected) through continuous solid rock. In the construction of the work, however, the rock has not been found continuously solid or homogeneous, and nearly one-half of the tunnel passes or will pass through rock which softens and crumbles on exposure to air and water. This has compelled heavy outlay for lining these portions, and the method pursued has been to insert in the sections of the tunnel which require treatment a brick lining with dry stone packing.

"Capt. R. L. Hoxie, United States Engineers, having submitted to the committee some written strictures on this method of lining, and maintained that a concrete lining would be safer and cheaper, he was given a full hearing before a subcommittee, and the engineers in charge, Maj. G. J. Lydecker and Capt. T. W. Symons, were also examined in defense of their plans. General M. C. Meigs, Col. Thomas L. Casey, Lieut. Col. W. P. Craighill, and Maj. William Ludlow, United States Engineers, were also consulted upon the questions raised.

"The subcommittee investigating the matter, though not convinced that a mistake had been made in the plans adopted for lining the tunnel, but recognizing the difficulty, the novelty, and the importance of these questions and the expediency of submitting them to competent experts, have, in recommending the amount called for by the estimates, provided that the Secretary of War shall forthwith take the advice of the highest engineer board of the Army upon the plans and methods heretofore pursued. One-half of the above sums are chargeable to the District of Columbia."

In neither the report from which the above was taken nor that to which this is supplementary was it intended to point out or determine either the merits or demerits of the plan or plans of the work as adopted, nor was it the purpose or intention of either committee to cast blame upon or award praise to any particular person or persons for the part taken by him or them in either the inception or prosecution of the work. Beyond the errors, whether at the inception or subsequently, which experience has demonstrated, and the inequality of estimates, which appropriations, made and now to be made, have established, the subject need not in this paper be pursued.

The names of Capt. R. L. Hoxie, Maj. William Twining, Capt. T. W. Symons, and Maj. G. J. Lydecker, all of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, were mentioned in the reports, and each had more or less to do, at one time or another, with the work under consideration, and yet a more complete investigation than has been given and fuller knowledge of the subject might show circumstances or conditions, having relation to imperfections of the science of their profession or to geological or other mysteries, which neither industry nor skill can ascertain and determine in advance, that would exonerate either one or all of them from censure. The Executive Department in authority or a special committee of Congress may appropriately make such investigation and determine wherein the faults properly lie.

This committee has sought only to make, and now again makes, an earnest protest against the great and growing evil of careless, inaccurate, or unreliable estimates of the cost of public works, upon which Congress is compelled to rely in the authorization of and the appropriations for such works. This evil has grown into an almost universal custom, and in nearly all cases Congress finds, when it is too late, that vast expenditures in excess of estimates are required. This excess is often double the estimates, and not infrequently is followed by the added burden of a suit and judgment in the Court of Claims on a careless contract. The alarming discrepancies between the estimated and actual cost of the works mentioned in the original report afford Congress an excellent opportunity to emphasize its abhorrence and make manifest the necessity of reform.

Mr. BURNES. In addition to what has been presented upon this subject by the committee, I desire to submit two letters just received, one from the Secretary of War and the other from the engineer in charge of the work, Major Lydecker. They are addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and have just been received. These letters will give the House the information in possession of the committee up to date.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, October 3, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your information a copy of a report dated the 2d instant, from Maj. G. J. Lydecker, Corps of Engineers, stating that it is now apparent that the Washington aqueduct tunnel can not be completed by November 1, 1888, as required by the urgent deficiency act approved March 30, 1888, making appropriations for the work, and suggesting that some provision may be made which will enable the tunnel to be kept clear of water and the work continued to insure completion as soon as possible, and especially to facilitate the examination of all matters relating to the work on the tunnel and to its management.

Very respectfully,

R. MACFEELY,
Acting Secretary of War.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT,
Washington, D. C., October 2, 1888.

SIR: The urgent deficiency act approved March 30, 1888, appropriated $355,000 for the Washington aqueduct tunnel, and required all the work to be completed by November 1, 1888.

Under date of March 29, 1888, I reported to the Chief of Engineers that it would be absolutely impossible to comply with this provision of law and stated the reasons in full. As soon as the bill became a law operations were resumed and every effort made on my part to force the contractors up to the greatest possible rate of progress, but, as is well known, the work is still far from completion.

As it is now apparent that it can not be completed in the time specified, and as it is probable the accounting officers of the Treasury will decline to audit accounts for work done after that date, I respectfully request that the appropriation committees of the Senate and House of Representatives be informed of this matter, in order that some provision may be made that will enable the tunnel to be kept clear of water, and the work continued, to insure completion as soon as possible, and especially to facilitate a most intelligent and exhaustive examination of all matters relating to work on the tunnel and to its management. Such examination I most earnestly desire, in view of the representations recently made in Congress and in the public press.

In connection with this matter I may properly add that we have heretofore discovered defective work in the tunnel lining, and at once caused it to be made good by the contractors. The rigid examination now in progress has developed some large holes; but such as are already shown up can be made perfectly good at a cost of not more than $5,000, while the sum now due the contractors and withheld to insure proper work is more than ten times that amount. Further, they are under heavy bonds to make good all defective work now known or that may be developed by the examination in progress.

Finally, there need be no delay in the time of completing the work due to any known defects, or such as are likely to be developed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. J. LYDECKER,
Major of Engineers.

THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. BURNES. This, Mr. Speaker, is all I have to submit with regard to the proposition under consideration.

Mr. ROGERS. Pardon me a moment. What amount of money now is at the disposition of the contractors to go on with the work?

Mr. BURNES. I do not know the amount now unexpended, but have not heard from any quarter that there was an insufficiency of money to complete the work.

Mr. ROGERS. There is no stoppage of the work at all?

Mr. BURNES. There is no stoppage of the work unless after the 1st of November a question as to whether payments can be made for work after the time fixed by law for its completion.

Mr. ROGERS. Does not the conference report provide that the time shall be extended from the 1st of November until next June?

Mr. BURNES. No, sir. There is no extension at all. The law now provides that the work shall be completed by the 1st day of November, 1888, and I do not know, but I presume that these contractors are under bonds with a penalty for its completion by that time.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman state whether or no Major Lydecker is still in control of this work?

Mr. BURNES. Undoubtedly he is; and perhaps I ought to say that he seems now to be taking some interest in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. That is a very pleasant announcement.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] upon whose testimony it was that the report was made reflecting so severely upon Captain Hoxie? Who were the witnesses?

Mr. BURNES. I will say to my friend from Arkansas that it would be impossible for me to tell now exactly with certainty who the witnesses were, or what were the sources of the information upon which the report was based.

Mr. ROGERS. Was Major Lydecker one of them?

Mr. BURNES. He was before us, and gave his views freely.

Mr. ROGERS. Was he one of the witnesses?

Mr. BURNES. He was before us; but I can not say he was there in the capacity of a witness.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the committee will now give Captain Hoxie a shot at him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNES. Well, I will say that I hope the Government of the United States will so profit by these lessons that no contract for any public work shall be hereafter sublet by the contractor. These contractors have perhaps done no more with reference to this work than to sublet it and profit by the margin between the contract price and that at which it is done by the actual workmen. They took the contract and sublet it for the margins they could make. They have taken the place of the Government, and let the work to the men who are actually doing it; and although it may be said that they are responsible upon their bond, yet, on the other hand, penalties in bonds of this character are most generally valueless. Every sort of claim to defeat a recovery is usually made, and too often with success. If the contractor of a public work were required actually to perform it with his own employés he could not escape responsibility for neglect or fraud, which his system of subletting almost invariably causes. As it is, he makes his gain, the subcontractor is generally the loser, and upon his head the odium is cast, when it rightfully attaches to his principal.

I sympathize with the suggestion of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], and I hope this committee which is to be raised will give Captain Hoxie an opportunity of presenting his side of the case.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Before the gentleman from Missouri leaves this subject I ask him to yield to me to have read from the desk some charges and statements that have been made in the public press in regard to the letting of this contract.

Mr. BURNES. I yield to my colleague on the committee all the time he desires.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I send to the Clerk's desk the matters which I desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HERE IS MORE RICHNESS—HOW BECKWITH & QUACKENBUSH OBTAINED THEIR CONTRACT—MAJOR LYDECKER'S FRIENDLY REPORT—HOW THEY WERE $83,200 HIGHER THAN THE LOWEST BIDDER, BUT THIS MADE NO DIFFERENCE TO THE MAJOR—WAS IT DUE TO FAMILY INFLUENCE?

When the Congressional inquiry into the construction of the Aqueduct tunnel is made some very interesting facts will be brought to light in regard to the letting of the contract to Beckwith & Quackenbush. In pursuance of an advertisement, bids for the work were opened October 5, 1883. There were, in all, seven bids for the construction of the tunnel, and of these that of J. H. Dewees & Co., of this city, was the lowest, at $464,900, on the amount of work estimated for in the first estimates of the engineers in charge. Next came Eugene Robinson, of Detroit, at $540,903, and Beckwith & Quackenbush were third, at $548,100, or $83,200 more than J. H. Dewees & Co., and $7,197 more than Eugene Robinson. The bids in detail were as follows:

"J. H. Dewees & Co., excavation of tunnel at $6.74 per cubic yard, $431,360; earth excavation in shafts at $6.25 per cubic yard, $9,375; rock excavations at $12.40 per cubic yard, $14,880; brick masonry at $12 per cubic yard, $3,000; concrete masonry at $5 per cubic yard, $3,300; dry packing at $2.50 per cubic yard, $1,000; air shafts complete at $4.75 per linear foot, $1,995. (Total amount of bid, $464,900.)

"Eugene Robinson, excavation of tunnel at $7.78 per cubic yard, $497,920; earth excavation in shafts at $5.60 per cubic yard, $8,400; rock excavation in shafts at $16.24 per cubic yard, $19,488; brick masonry in shafts at $16.70 per cubic yard, $4,175; concrete masonry at $15.75 per cubic yard, $9,075; dry packing at $2.25 per cubic yard, $900; air shafts complete at $2.25 per linear foot, $945. (Total amount of bid, $540,903.)

"Beckwith & Quackenbush, excavation of tunnel at $8 per cubic yard, $512,000; earth excavation in shafts at $6 per cubic yard, $9,000; rock excavation at $10 per cubic yard, $12,000; brick masonry at $18 per cubic yard, $4,500; concrete masonry at $5 per cubic yard, $3,400; dry packing at $2.50 per cubic yard, $1,000; air shafts complete at $15 per linear foot, $6,300. (Total amount of bid, $548,150.)"

The advertisement for bids reserved to the War Department the right to reject any or all bids, but it is not often that a contract is let to a bidder who is over $80,000 in advance of the lowest bidder unless there is some very good reason for rejecting the lower bid. In this case there were two bids below that of Beckwith & Quackenbush, and it will be for the Congressional committee to ascertain why they were thrown out and the work given to the present contractors, under whose subcontracts all the frauds that have been discovered were perpetrated.

Col. J. H. Dewees, of J. H. Dewees & Co., did not allow the contract to go to Beckwith & Quackenbush without a vigorous protest. The bids were opened October 5, 1883, and it was at once apparent that J. H. Dewees & Co. were the lowest, and on October 9 Major Lydecker sent Colonel Dewees a note asking him to call at his office the next day. Colonel Dewees said yesterday to a Post reporter that he called in response to the note, and found Major Lydecker and Lieutenant Hoxie in the office. He had a long conversation with them, in the course of which every item of the bid was gone over, and Colonel Dewees says the two officers argued to convince him that he could not do the work at the amount of his bid. Mr. Dewees, however, was satisfied that he could do it and make money, but the officers seemed very solicitous lest he should lose money. They also told him that the contract required that the bidder should have a plant worth $50,000 with which to prosecute the work. Colonel Dewees acknowledged that he had no plant, but said that he had $50,000 cash with which to buy a first-class plant.

THE FIRST PROTEST.

He soon learned that the Secretary of War was about to award the contract to Beckwith & Quackenbush, and that this award was to be made upon the advice of Major Lydecker, concurred in by General Wright, then Chief of Engineers, though General Wright had cautioned Major Lydecker that he assumed a grave responsibility in not awarding the contract to the lowest bidder. Colonel Dewees, upon receipt of this information, wrote a letter to the Secretary of War, vigorously protesting against the award of the contract to any bidder other than himself. This letter is on file in the office of the Chief of Engineers of the Army. It reads as follows:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., October 19, 1883.

"SIR: We are bidders for work on the new water supply works of Washington, D. C., to the amount of $464,900. We made this bid in response to a public advertisement, and we have a right to assume that the object of the advertisement was to secure the lowest responsible bid. Our bid is, as we are informed and believe, $83,200 lower than that of Beckwith & Quackenbush, of New York, and $7,093 less than that of Eugene Robinson, of Detroit. We learned some days since by the public newspapers, and yesterday by information orally communicated to our associate, Louis E. Johnson, by General H. G. Wright, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, that the contract is about to be awarded to Beckwith & Quackenbush, at their bid of $83,200 higher than ours.

"Against this we protest. It is neither just to us nor to the Government. It favors private parties at the public expense, and for no reason. We are responsible bidders, and are prepared to convince any one of that fact who is willing to see the lowest responsible bidder prevail. We shall not rest under the imputation of having made a bid we could not execute, and shall not forego the profits we are entitled to make by the proposed work without a vigorous protest wherever the same can be heard. With the highest respect to you, we venture to remind you that you are responsible for any acts of your subordinates, and that the engineer department of the District government is in this matter under your control. We ask you to stay the award of the contract to any bidder higher than ourselves, and assure you that our bond will be ready to secure the performance of the contract, to which we are entitled. We will add that neither Major Lydecker nor Lieutenant Hoxie have any right to favor other parties on the pretense that as professional experts they believe we can not profitably do the work under our bid. That is our affair. We have a right to the contract whether we make or lose by it if we give you satisfactory security. Appealing to your sense of justice and to your official obligation to see that the Government is served in preference to private persons,

"We are, very respectfully, your most obedient servants,

"J. H. DEWEES & CO.

"Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR."

In order that Major Lydecker would have no reason to allege that their bond would not be satisfactory, they at the same time addressed him the following note:

"WASHINGTON, October 19, 1883.

"SIR: Having reason to believe that we are the lowest bidders upon the bulk of the work upon the Washington Aqueduct, we hereby respectfully notify you that we are prepared to furnish all necessary bonds and money as per our bids and specifications, which you in your wisdom may require.

"Very respectfully,

"J. H. DEWEES & CO.

"Maj. G. J. LYDECKER,
"Engineer-in-Chief."

WAS IT A FAMILY AFFAIR?

Colonel Dewees said yesterday that he never received the desired information from Major Lydecker, but his two letters had the effect of delaying the award of the contract. Soon afterward, however, Major Lydecker's father and a number of New York gentlemen came to Washington and called on President Arthur, and immediately thereafter the contract was let. He then wrote the following letter to the Secretary:

"No. 1701 BOUNDARY STREET, Washington, D. C., October 22, 1883.

"SIR: I learn through the daily newspapers of this city that you have awarded the work of construction of a tunnel for increasing the water supply of Washington, D. C., the bids for which were opened October 5, 1883, to Beckwith & Quackenbush, of Mohawk, N. Y., and have assigned as the reason thereof that they are the lowest bidders for said work. I am surprised that you have permitted yourself to fall into so grave an error, inasmuch as from the information that I have obtained, and which I deem reliable, I am satisfied that I and my associates are the lowest bidders by many thousands of dollars, and we are able to respond to the conditions of the letting in all other respects. May I, therefore, ask that you will re-examine such bids and reconsider the action you have taken, and thereupon award the said work to the parties found to be in fact the lowest bidders.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"J. H. DEWEES.
"For J. H. DEWEES & CO.

"P. S.—Will you please advise us of the amount of our bids and the bids of Beckwith & Quackenbush, also of the amount of the bonds required, and the time within which the same is required to be executed.

"J. H. DEWEES & CO.

"To the Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR."

The reply of the Secretary was as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, October 27, 1883.

"GENTLEMEN: The Department is in receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, in which you assert the claim that you were the lowest bidders for the work of tunnel construction for increasing the water supply of Washington, D. C., the contract for which you understand has been awarded to Messrs. Beckwith & Quackenbush, of Mohawk, N. Y., and request that the subject of the award of such contract be reconsidered, and that you be furnished with certain specified information in regard thereto.

"In reply I beg to inform you that your bid for the work in question was rejected under the provisions of a clause in the advertisement for proposals by which the right was reserved to reject any and all bids or parts of bids, and upon the recommendation of the Engineer officer in charge of the work, concurred in by the Chief of Engineers.

"Although the Secretary of War is under no obligation to explain to private individuals the reasons which governed the rejection of bids, there is no objection to stating that among the reasons which governed the action of the Department in rejecting your bid in this case were the facts that your bond was fatally defective and that you failed to comply in essential particulars with the instructions to bidders.

"Very respectfully,

"ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
"Secretary of War

"Messrs. J. H. DEWEES & CO.,
"1701 Boundary street, Washington, D. C."

"According to this letter," said Colonel Dewees, "the contract was not awarded us because our bond was defective, when we stood r ady to give bond for any amount, and had been refused all information as to what bond would be required, and because we had no plant when we stood ready to provide a plant. In fact, Beckwith & Quackenbush were without the plant, and had to buy engines and boilers and machinery before they could begin the work."

MAJOR LYDECKER'S REPORT KEPT SECRET.

Not satisfied with the reasons given for the rejection of their bid, Colonel Dewees again wrote the Secretary of War, requesting a copy of Major Lydecker's report to the Secretary, for the purpose of answering the same in detail on all points, including his own personal experience during the last twenty years on the Pennsylvania Railroad and other important works, and asking the Secretary to suspend judgment until he and his associates had been given an opportunity for a full hearing. This report of Major Lydecker's was never furnished, and no hearing of any kind was ever granted. Colonel Dewees, however, wrote yet another protest to Secretary Lincoln, asking him to reconsider the contract, and received the following reply:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, November 2, 1883.

"GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31th ultimo, protesting against the award of a contract for work on the new water-supply works of Washington, D. C., to Beckwith & Quackenbush, and claiming that the contract should be awarded to you for the reason that you were the lowest bidders, and to state in reply that I have re-examined the papers in the case and see no reason, either in them or the statements contained in your communication, to change the views which led me to approve the recommendation of Major Lydecker, the officer in charge of the improvements, and General Wright, the Chief of Engineers.

"Very respectfully,

"ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
"Secretary of War.

"Messrs. J. H. DEWEES & Co.,
"1701 Boundary street, Washington, D. C."

Colonel Dewees does not believe that this correspondence gives the real reason for the rejection of his bid. He says that at least one of the firm of Beckwith & Quackenbush is interested in the New York aqueduct contract, in which the father of Major Lydecker also has an interest. Whether there is any other connection between the firm and Mr. Lydecker, sr., Colonel Dewees does not know.

As to his ability to make a fair profit out of the work at the prices at which he offered to do it, Colonel Dewees has no doubt, and he told a Post reporter yesterday that the present contractors must have made between $30,000 and $50,000. Their profits on the brick work alone, he said, must have been enormous. It is paid for at the rate of about $ 0 per thousand, while the average cost of laying brick is about $14 per thousand. The concrete masonry work is done at $15 per cubic yard, using concrete at $1 per barrel, while similar work on the foundation of the Congressional Library is done at $4.80, with cement costing about $2.50 per barrel.

Colonel Dewees is a contractor of long experience and is an engineer by profession. Mr. Eugene Robinson, of Detroit, is a reputable contractor who has constructed some important works, among them being the great tunnel under the lake at Chicago from the crib to the pumping station of the water-works. Since the close of President Arthur's administration the attorney for Beckwith & Quackenbush is said to have been Mr. W. S. Bissel, of Buffalo, N. Y., who was a former law partner of President Cleveland.

WILL THE GOVERNMENT LOSE ANYTHING?

There has been considerable discussion as to whether the Government will lose anything financially by the fraud in the construction of the tunnel. There is some question as to this. Of course the Government recognizes no subcontracts, and in this case will look to no one but Messrs. Beckwith & Quackenbush or their bondsmen to make the work good. If the contractors have sublet the work and have been imposed upon by the subcontractors or their subordinates the Government will still hold them responsible and call upon them to make it good.

Ten per cent. of the price for the work done has been retained by the Government, and will of course cover part of the loss. If, however, the work is all or nearly all defective, it may be beyond the means of the contractors to make it good. In this case the Government would look to their bondsmen, and here another question arises. The bondsmen for Messrs. Beckwith & Quackenbush went on their bond for $200,000 on the original contract, in which the lining of the tunnel was not contemplated. This work was let by a supplemental contract, and the question is whether the bondsmen are liable for the defects in the work under this supplemental contract, which was not contemplated at the time the bonds were signed. General Macfeely, the Acting Secretary of War, thinks that the Government is amply protected. He said in conversation with a Post reporter that he had no doubt about the liability of the bondsmen for all the defective work in the tunnel, whether done under the original or the supplemental contract.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the clause in the bill providing for an investigation authorizes an investigation of the manner of letting the contract as well as of the manner of conducting the work?

Mr. BURNES. It is the opinion of all the conferees that it does.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. BURNES] whether this work is being prosecuted now under the original contract or under a subsequent contract?

Mr. BURNES. In reply to my friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] it is proper to state that at some time prior to the appropriation of $355,000 the work had been suspended, and my impression is that that state of suspension had continued for a year or more, and that the contract had been practically forfeited. At all events, I believe there was no obligation upon the part of the Government to resume work under that contract, and in consequence of that it was provided in the law of the urgent deficiency bill that the Secretary of War might let the work of completing the contract to the original contractors or to anybody else at his discretion.

Mr. SAYERS. Was it not also thought that inasmuch as the contractors had their plant already there, they might be able to do the work more cheaply than new contractors?

Mr. BURNES. The old contractors having their tools and their plant, it was deemed probable that they could afford to make a lower bid for the work than anybody else, but we could not do better than give to the Secretary of War the power to receive bids and let the work in his best discretion.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman mean to say that the original contractors had forfeited their contract?

Mr. BURNES. I have never examined that matter; but that was the understanding on the part of our committee. The contract was at an end at the election of the War Department. At least no other suggestion was made, no other impression existed so far as I know. Consequently we inserted in the bill the provision as stated, authorizing the Secretary of War to let the finishing contract at his discretion——

Mr. ROGERS. Did not the contractors give bonds for the execution of their contract?

Mr. BURNES. I presume so, but have not seen them. If this last contract were let without bond it is to be regretted; but at present I can not say what security the Secretary has reserved.

Mr. ROGERS. Has the committee called for them?

Mr. BURNES. The committee called only for papers bearing upon the work—its progress, character, and cost.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman state whether or not the inception of this work was prior to his connection with the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. BURNES. Oh, yes; several years before.

Mr. ROGERS. Then the committee, so far as the gentleman is concerned, is not responsible for the original contracts which were entered into?

Mr. BURNES. Not at all. Nor was the committee or any member of it at any time responsible for the original contracts. They were the administrative features of the enterprise.

Mr. ROGERS. How long since this work began?

Mr. BURNES. I think it began in 1878.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, will the gentleman state whether or not the Committee on Appropriations, when they reported the provision authorizing the letting of the second contract, considered the question whether we were thereby releasing the original contractors from the performance of the work?

Mr. BURNES. There was no possible release of those contractors; and I will state to the gentleman that it was submitted to the committee that a percentage of work done and materials furnished was retained by the Government that would be good security and would cover all possible damages. It was also represented to us that these contractors had made a claim (which Major Lydecker, however, refused to recognize) for a very large amount of extra work. But this claim could give the Government no security for probable impending losses, as the justice of the claim is positively denied, and in the present condition of the work, as we understand it, the contractors have no right to any compensation.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman state whether the amendment embraced in this report is broad enough to authorize an inquiry into the original contract, including the question I have suggested touching the release and the reletting?

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman is so much better qualified than myself to speak as to a legal proposition that in his presence I dislike to express a positive opinion; yet it seems to me the provision reported is sufficient.

Mr. ROGERS. I appreciate the courtesy and the compliments of the gentleman; but I did not hear that part of the conference report read, and am simply seeking information, in the hope that if we go into this investigation (which seems to be foreordained and absolutely necessary) it shall be complete, and that we may fix the responsibility wherever it should properly fall. Perhaps it would be well to have that part of the report again read.

Mr. BURNES. I think it would be.

Mr. WHEELER. Would it not be best to let this matter go over until to-morrow, so that we may in the mean while give it further examination?

Mr. BURNES. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will allow the Clerk to read again that part of this report which relates to the investigation of the aqueduct in Washington City. We desire to hear the precise language.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Increase of water supply, Washington, D. C.: That all work heretofore performed upon the Washington aqueduct tunnel, together with the provisions of any contract made for the same or any portion thereof, shall forthwith be fully investigated by a joint select committee of six members, of whom three shall be members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three shall be members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. Said committee shall have authority to employ a clerk and stenographer and such experts as it may deem necessary for the investigation; it may sit during the session of Congress or in recess, and shall have full power either in full committee or subcommittee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers and to conduct its investigation either in Washington or in such places as may be deemed necessary; it shall make full report of its proceedings and the conclusions arrived at, with such recommendations as it may deem proper, to Congress on or before January 1, 1889; and for these purposes the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by said committee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ROGERS. I observe that the organization of this committee will be a peculiar one; and it is barely possible that upon the question as to the scope of this investigation the committee might be equally divided. Whether under the terms of the provision just read the committee would be authorized to go into the question of the letting of these last contracts might be, I think, to some extent a matter of controversy. So far as concerns the work which has been done, I believe the provision is broad enough in its scope; but the gentleman from Missouri, if he will re-examine the verbiage, will see that it speaks of inquiring into the "work heretofore performed," not into the letting of contracts.

Mr. BURNES. It says "any contract."

Mr. ROGERS. The committee is authorized to investigate into the work under any contract heretofore made, but there might perhaps be controversy whether the use of the word "work" would authorize the committee to examine into the method of letting these contracts. To my mind, with the evidence we have now before us, the letting of the contract to the present contractors is a matter which should be very carefully inquired into. There ought to be, it seems to me, very conclusive reasons shown to justify the rejection of the bid of parties who offered to do the work for $80,000 less than the persons to whom the contract was awarded, which seems to have been the case here.

Those reasons, whatever they may have been, do not appear except in this correspondence between Dewees & Co. and the Secretary of War. I think there ought to be a very careful investigation into this matter. It has been talked, perhaps stated in the public press, that this man now in the management of this work, who it seems recommended the letting of this contract, has shown much more interest in the Metropolitan Club of this city, and perhaps in the "lancers" and the "germans" about the city, than in the management of this work; and whenever I find a person educated at the expense of the Government, and charged with the supervision of works involving the expenditure of large amounts of money, who, instead of devoting himself to the discharge of his duties, engages in such pursuits as I have suggested to the neglect of his legitimate duties, and when a contract has been let under the circumstances stated, I desire to know whether any of the money has gone into his expenses at the Metropolitan Club or not. I think the scope of this investigation ought to be broad enough to cover that ground.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from Arkansas will permit me to call his attention to the language of the amendment. While I think his criticism is not altogether inappropriate, that is to say, the object might be more clearly expressed than it is, I desire to call his attention to the language of the amendment, and ask whether in his judgment it is not sufficient? It is as follows:

That all work heretofore performed upon the Washington aqueduct tunnel, together with the provisions of any contract made for the same or any portion thereof, shall forthwith be fully investigated by a joint select committee of six members, of whom three shall be members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three shall be members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Mr. ROGERS. My criticism is entirely just, that the language of the amendment goes to the performance of the work and provides nothing in regard to the letting of the contracts.

Mr. BURNES. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas, there is but one mind, as I understand it, in the House and that is that the investigation should be full and complete, and should cover the letting of all contracts, as well as the work done and the character of that work and the conduct of those connected with it, officially or otherwise.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think the gentleman has observed the full force of the suggestion I make. It is manifest the organization of this committee is unusual. The committee is to be composed of three Senators and three Members, six in all. Suppose the committee should divide equally on the question as to the proper construction of the amendment, who would decide?

Mr. BURNES. I am advised by others better informed than myself in reference to these matters, that this is the usual method in reference to the appointment of joint committees of the two Houses.

Mr. ROGERS. The committee might find itself divided equally, three on one side and three on the other; who then shall decide?

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to say to my colleague on the committee, from Missouri, that in my judgment there is considerable force in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Arkansas. If there is any doubt as to the sufficiency of the scope of this amendment, in my judgment the report had better be disagreed to and sent back to the committee for further consideration. It is too important a subject for any doubt whatever to exist in regard to it.

Mr. ROGERS. If I am recognized——

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. BURNES. I thank my friend from Arkansas, to whom I would say, in answer to his inquiries with regard to the matter, that at the time the last appropriation was reported there was no question raised, no thought and no suspicion of fraud or fraudulent practices either in the War Department or before Congress. Late revelations have come upon us entirely without previous notice or warning. We were prepared for the great expenditures, but we did not anticipate the carelessness and indifference of engineers in charge of the work and by which the frauds reported were made possible.

Mr. ROGERS. But my friend from Missouri will observe that in ordering an investigation upon a matter of such importance as the one here involved, the scope of the authority conferred upon the committee should be so full and complete as to enable an intelligent and faithful report to be submitted to Congress. But I will not take time to repeat the statement I have already made touching the limited scope of the amendment. I think there should be no question as to the language of the amendment. It is now limited merely to the performance of the work under the contract without reference to the letting of the contract. I believe my friend from Missouri would act wisely, and the circumstances would justify him, in allowing the matter to go back to the committee for further consideration as to whether the language of the amendment does cover all that is intended to be covered in the investigation.

Mr. BURNES. I am willing to do that.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman prefer that I should make the motion or that he should make it?

Mr. RYAN. There are other matters.

Mr. BURNES. I understand we can not have a separate vote on each one of these propositions, but the conferees can get by discussions an understanding of what the wish and will of the House is, which it is our desire to carry out.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. SOWDEN. I understand amendment 107 as modified includes the claim of one of the Bell telephone attorneys, named Grosvenor Lowrey, for $911.20. I should like to know just exactly what the status of the matter is, and the difference between the original amount and the sum agreed upon in the modified agreement.

Mr. BURNES. The amendment to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania alludes was placed upon the bill in conference, on the faith of a paper presented from the Department of Justice, showing certain balances due to certain assistant district attorneys in South Carolina, and perhaps in other States. They were regularly certified by the Department, and we appropriated for them because of that certification.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to know whether the sum of $911.20, an alleged deficiency or balance claimed by Grosvenor Lowrey, a special counsel in the Bell telephone cases, is included in the sum of $14,957.72 provided for in this amendment?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir. I see in this list furnished from the Department of Justice the following:

Fees of district attorneys of the United States courts, etc.

And among the names that of Grosvenor Lowrey, of Massachusetts, appears for $911.20.

Mr. SOWDEN. Is that included in the $14,957.72?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir. That sum was added to the amount of the bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the gentleman know that there is a protest pending against the payment of this additional allowance to this attorney on the ground that he had charged exorbitantly and extortionately for his services?

Mr. BURNES. I have heard a good deal of criticism upon some attorney for charges for expenses, etc., but I was not aware that this item of $911.20 had relation to that individual, but it is blended with other items, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be correct in his statement. I do not know. I never heard of any protest against it. It came to us duly certified by the acting Attorney-General.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the gentleman know that this man Lowrey charged at the rate of $15 an hour to study up and acquaint himself with the intricacies of the law involved in the question he was called upon to assist in trying, and that he not only charged that, but charged $100 a day, too, while traveling from New York to Cincinnati and return, and charged while there actually engaged in the service of the Government $500 for his services and $171 more for traveling expenses there and back, not including a board bill of $70, and $100 for each day detained there; and that the Government itself protested against the exorbitancy of the charges, in consequence of which his services in the case were dispensed with? And does not the gentleman know further that the present Acting Attorney-General has protested against the payment of a single cent more in addition to the exorbitant amounts already exacted and paid to this attorney? In view of these facts I would like to know why it is that this sum of $911.20 is included in this amendment or modified agreement on the part of the conference committee, which covers the sum of $14,957.72.

Mr. BURNES. I think if the gentleman will look at the report from the Department of Justice upon which this appropriation is made he will find that it is sent to us by William A. Maury, Acting Attorney-General. But I did not stop to inquire whether Mr. Maury or Mr. Jenks or Mr. Garland signed it. I took it for granted that in the auditing of this $911.20 the Department of Justice had followed the law and that there was no question about what was due. Surely the gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken in his statement of the extraordinary amount charged for by the hour. The Department of Justice would not audit such a claim.

Mr. SOWDEN. Allow me to state that this man has already received over $12,000 for services alleged to have been rendered by him; and I understand that his charges were so exorbitant—and this balance still remaining and claimed by him now is a part of the same character of charges—that the Department of Justice itself dispensed with his services. I think under these circumstances the House should never consent to the allowance of this additional claim made by this attorney, and I hope that the report, if it goes back to the conference, will be considered with a view to striking it out. I hope it will be excluded.

Mr. BURNES. I have no objection to giving the matter more thorough consideration. I know nothing of the merits or demerits of the claim.

Mr. SOWDEN. I have examined it very carefully.

Mr. BURNES. I have heard rumors of charges and extra charges and exorbitant charges in this connection, but I know nothing personally of the facts. The Department of Justice audits and certifies the claim or allowance in an official communication, and I trust such a claim as the gentleman describes would not receive such a high indorsement.

Mr. SOWDEN. If the matter goes into conference again I hope the question will be considered; and the suggestion is therefore submitted for that purpose.

Mr. BURNES. I will look into it.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri as to the disposition of the amendment numbered, I think, 231?

Mr. BURNES. We will reach that in a moment.

The next proposition to which I wish to call the attention of the House is the proposition made by the Senate amendment to pay to the widow of Chief-Justice Waite $8,745, being the balance of his salary for one year, in consideration of the eminent services of the late Chief-Justice. I can say that the House conferees had and have all the sympathy for the surviving members of that family that the conferees on the part of the Senate have; and that they share with the conferees on the part of the Senate equally in respect for this great man who is gone. We submitted a proposition to them that they might consult their own Judiciary Committee, and if that committee would say there was any precedent for it in all of the past, we would recommend to the House concurrence in the amendment.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee came before us and frankly admitted that there was no such precedent; that Ellsworth and Marshall and Taney and Chase all died, leaving families in circumstances needing assistance, and yet that no such proposition as this was ever even submitted to Congress.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Congress had never refused to make such an appropriation, but had not been asked.

Mr. BURNES. No such proposition as this was ever made before to Congress in behalf of any one of the predecessors of Chief-Justice Waite; nor has any proposition been made in behalf of any of the widows or orphans of associate justices, or of the circuit judges or district judges; and I see no reason why a judge even of a lower court than the Supreme Court might not be entitled under our system of government to the same consideration that is given to the Chief-Justice. That is all I care to say. We could not recognize this principle. I would be as much gratified to take money and give it for the help of these worthy people as anybody else; but we feel that it is not within our power, nor in accordance with the limitations placed upon us, as well by the Constitution as by the public sentiment of the country, to use the public money in such a way.

The next proposition is one with regard to an indefinite appropriation of a year's salary to the widow and children of a man in Jacksonville, Fla., an employé of the Government in the collector's office, who died of yellow fever and left a widow and children in destitute circumstances. Again our charity was appealed to with that sentimentality which seems to be the highest law in another body of legislators. We find no justification for such an appropriation, nor for the persistency with which it has been insisted upon elsewhere. The Cassibianca plea is urged in support of this amendment. It is said he stood on the burning deck when all but him had fled. It seems to me too absurd for discussion.

Mr. SENEY. What is the amount?

Mr. BURNES. It is an indefinite amount. It is one year's salary.

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire now, as my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is in his seat, to ask him in reference to the claim of Lowrey of $911 and some cents, whether the Acting Attorney-General did not protest against its payment? I would like the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] to corroborate my statement on that subject.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, all I know about the matter is that I had a conversation with Solicitor-General Jenks, who is the Acting Attorney-General in this case, and I know he stated that on account of the amount of the charges this attorney rendered, severed or discontinued the contract that had been made with him. That is all I know about it.

Mr. SOWDEN. That is all I wanted to know; and I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I would next call attention to the last amendment to the bill, not, however, the last to be considered. That is the amendment No. 231 in regard to the Public Land Strip. The amendment makes no appropriation, and is an admitted attempt at legislation on an appropriation bill, in the face of the express rules of the Senate and of this House. If we are to recognize the continuance of this pretended right on the part of the Senate to put upon appropriation bills, which must originate in this House, any kind of amendment they please, whether it is relative to an appropriation or to administration, it will not be long until such bills will be loaded with all the legislative propositions pending in that body, because it is a much easier method of legislation than can be had by a fair observance of well-settled principles and policies of legislation. That is one objection to this proposition. Another objection, sir, is that it undertakes to disregard the principle of allowing the people of a community, as far as possible, to govern themselves.

These people in this Public Land Strip have expressly desired to have a Territorial organization; and as a last resort, if that be denied them, they do not desire, as I understand, to have the laws over them administered from the State of Kansas. Kansas is my neighbor, and Kansas people are generally my friends and acquaintances. I do not desire to say that this feeling of the people in that territory against Kansas is right or wrong, but my information is that it is intensely hostile to the proposition to be annexed to Kansas for any purpose. And in the Public Land Strip there is an uneasiness with regard to the disposition of the lands, including town sites. It has been said that there are schemes and plots and counterplots in Kansas, on the border, and elsewhere, that cause that uneasiness. It may be that that feeling of uneasiness is without proper cause, but as it exists and the people have asked for a different jurisdiction over them, I think the amendment should be resisted.

I say this without any disrespect to the State of Kansas, whose laws, I presume, are about as good as the laws of any other State, unless it be Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. RYAN. I will say to the gentleman that this proposition does not extend the laws of the State of Kansas over the Public Land Strip at all. It simply extends the laws of the United States for the punishment of public offenses over this strip and attaches it to the Federal judiciary of Kansas for administration.

Mr. BURNES. Of course. But Kansas officials are put over them, and practically to them the secret is the same.

The United States judges of Kansas, in the administration of the laws you place in operation in this Strip, are, in the minds of the people there, a part of Kansas, Kansas laws and institutions. They may be unreasonable, but they want something else. They seek, first, local government; and, secondly, a connection, if local self-government is not attainable, with the State of Colorado.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat conversant with the situation, because No Man's Land lies immediately adjacent to my district. So far as the wish of the people upon that Strip is concerned as to whether they shall have a Territorial government or shall be attached to any other portion of the United States, their main object is to get some law. They have no law at present. A change is necessary, not only for the interests of the people on that Strip, but also for the interests of the people of my district and of my State. Doubtless many gentlemen will remember some murders of citizens of Kansas that were committed on this No Man's Land Strip during the past summer. The victims were citizens of my district. There was a controversy in a county bordering upon No Man's Land, a difficulty growing out of a county-seat fight, and one party of men went down into the No Man's Land Strip for the purpose of avoiding a conflict, and another party followed them for the purpose of bringing on a conflict. The result was that these murders were committed, and there was and there is no law to punish them. My own State has made considerable of an investigation in reference to the power to punish the men who have committed these offenses, and I believe it is conceded by the best lawyers who have examined the question that there is no law for the punishment of an offense committed upon this Strip. These murders were committed within 8 miles of the State line, within 8 miles of organized communities, organized counties and townships, and the result of this state of things is that the people of No Man's Land have come to the conclusion that they must have law of some kind or else their property and their lives will be at the mercy of any band of ruffians that may come down there.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] think that if this amendment should be agreed to it would have a retroactive effect and allow grand juries to go into that Territory and indict men for past offenses?

Mr. PETERS. Oh, no; I do not think it could have any such effect as that.

Mr. LANHAM. But it might have a very desirable prospective effect.

Mr. PETERS. Yes. Now, the object of this proposition is to afford the people some temporary relief. I am, as most of the members of this House are, strongly in favor of the Oklahoma bill. I desire the formation of a Territory there. I desire the passage of any legislation that will give those people the protection of the United States laws, if it be only such a measure as this, to afford the people some temporary relief. The very fact of the extension of the laws of the United States over that strip would have a tendency to check the commission of crimes and would also have the effect to break up the rendezvous of horse-thieves and other criminals that now exists there and can continue to exist in defiance of law. In an hour's ride they can go up into Kansas and steal a horse and get back into this strip, and there is no power beneath the flag to go in there and arrest them.

Mr. DUNN. I suppose that people from Kansas could go down there and steal a horse, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETERS. But they do not want to do it.

Mr. RYAN. And if any one should do that, the moment he brought the stolen property into our State he would be arrested and punished.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, if a horse was stolen there our State law would punish the thief, and it gives jurisdiction to punish him in any county into which the property is taken.

Now, the objection is urged that these people in No Man's Land desire to be attached to the State of Colorado. So far as that is concerned, I do not believe the people of Kansas care about it one way or the other.

Mr. RYAN. Not a straw.

Mr. PETERS. They do not care whether the jurisdiction is given to Colorado or to the Territory of New Mexico or to Arkansas, or to any other State. What the people of Kansas desire is that this strip, which is now the rendezvous of horse-thieves, murderers, and scalawags of every class from all over the United States, may be placed under the law so that that nest of thieves may be broken up.

Mr. SPINOLA. Why not bring in a bill for that purpose?

Mr. PETERS. A bill was passed in the Forty-ninth Congress providing for this very relief. It went to the President two days before the close of the session and for some reason or other he did not have time to examine it, or at all events it did not meet Executive approval.

Mr. SOWDEN. Is there not a bill pending now in this Congress for the same purpose?

Mr. PETERS. There is a bill now pending for substantially the same purpose, but there is no possible chance to secure any legislation of that kind at this session unless it be secured on an appropriation bill.

And I may say, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri, that I presume one of the reasons why the Senate put this amendment on the bill was the necessity of some provision of this kind, and the belief that no other relief could now be afforded.

Mr. HOOKER. Is the bill to which the gentleman has referred the one which was reported by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN?

Mr. PETERS. I allude to that bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. The Oklahoma bill would also give the people this relief.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; either of those bills would give the people of No Man's Land and the citizens of Kansas the relief they desire; but it is apparent that neither of those bills can possibly pass at this session. Upon the Oklahoma bill, as well as upon the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the question of "no quorum" has been raised, consequently the only hope for relief is through some measure of this kind attached to an appropriation bill. This, as I have suggested, was undoubtedly the motive which actuated the Senate in placing this provision on the bill.

Mr. SYMES. Does not this provision also extend the land laws of the United States now in force to No Man's Land and attach it to the southwestern land district of Kansas; and would not that result in the acquirement of pre-emption titles to the whole of that Public Land Strip, although the policy of this House, as evidenced in connection with Judge Holman's bill, and particularly in connection with the Oklahoma bill, is that only homesteaders shall acquire title there? Are we not therefore by this provision proceeding to revolutionize a policy in favor of which the House has declared itself?

Mr. PETERS. That is a rather long question.

Mr. SYMES. I knew the gentleman had a long head, which I thought could hold a long question.

Mr. RYAN. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. SYMES. I do.

Mr. RYAN. If my colleague [Mr. PETERS] will allow me, I will say it is true that a part of the amendment does extend the land laws of the United States over that territory and attach it to the southwestern district of Kansas for entry purposes. But I think it proper to state that the Senate conferees intimated to the conferees on the part of the House their perfect willingness to surrender that feature of this amendment.

Mr. SYMES. Is it understood that the conferees on the part of the House desire the Senate to surrender that portion of the amendment?

Mr. RYAN. I think that at least a majority of the House conferees desire them to surrender the whole amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to state in this connection that so far as No Man's Land is concerned I would not favor any provision which would be at all in conflict with the policy of this House as evidenced by the discussions here in connection with the Oklahoma bill and on other occasions. I am opposed to the pre-emption feature; I am opposed to any other policy in this respect than that which has been foreshadowed by the Oklahoma bill. But that is a matter which could be agreed upon in conference. What I am pleading for is simply that this question be permitted to go back to the conference committee, so that this amendment may be changed in such a way as to conform to the policy of the House as expressed upon this subject.

Mr. HERBERT. I wish to inquire whether there is any difference between this provision and the provision on the same subject contained in the bill reported by Judge HOLMAN?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; there is quite a difference.

Mr. HERBERT. I mean do they not agree in respect to the extension of the laws of the United States over the region of country referred to?

Mr. PETERS. The provisions of this amendment do not go as far as the provisions of the Holman bill.

Mr. PERKINS. The Holman bill provided for local government, while this does no such thing. It simply extends the laws of the United States temporarily over the territory and attaches it to Kansas for jurisdictional purposes. That is all there is in this amendment.

Mr. RYAN. All that the Senate conferees insist upon is that the laws of the United States for the punishment of public offenses shall be extended over this territory, and that it shall be attached to Kansas for the purpose of the execution of those laws. The Senate, I presume, would not insist particularly upon this territory being attached to Kansas, but would perhaps be equally willing to attach it to Texas, Colorado, or New Mexico. What the Senate conferees insist upon is that the people in this territory shall have the protection of Federal law with reference to the punishment of crime.

Mr. PETERS. I believe that what the people of No Man's Land desire as a measure of temporary relief is that there shall be some law extended there for the protection of the community; and that is what my people desire. So far as concerns the question of acquiring land there—whether it be acquired under the homestead law or otherwise—I am willing that question should be settled in the future either by the passage of the Oklahoma bill or by some other legislation. What we desire is that the protection of the law shall be extended over this body of land lying immediately adjacent to Kansas; and this, I believe, is what the people of No Man's Land desire. They are more urgent in regard to having some law extended there which will protect their persons and their property, which will punish thieves and murderers, than they are in relation to the acquirement of real estate, in respect to which they believe that the passage of the Oklahoma bill or some similar measure at the next session of Congress will give them proper relief.

I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] for his courtesy, and yield him back the floor.

Mr. BURNES. I yield to my colleague [Mr. MANSUR] for ten minutes.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to address the House I will in the first place ask for the reading of what took place in the Senate concerning this matter. It is short.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PLUMB. I was instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to offer this amendment to cover an emergency which exists in regard to the strip known as No Man's Land. By some oversight that strip has not been included in any judicial district of the United States, and, while there are 6,000 or 7,000, or perhaps even 10,000, people on that Strip, they have no means of protecting their rights to life or property, and no means of acquiring title to the lands on which they have settled.

A year ago last winter the Senate passed a bill which the House finally concurred in, which went to the President a couple of days before the adjournment of the session in March, but the President did not sign it. That bill is in substantially the terms of this amendment which I have proposed. During this session the Senate has passed two bills with reference to this subject, one to accomplish what is proposed by this amendment, and another to attach the Strip permanently to the State of Kansas. The other House has acted upon neither.

This arrangement is a temporary one. I have little doubt myself that in due course of time this Public Land Strip will be incorporated in whatever Territory may be formed out of the Indian Territory, but in the mean time it is a Botany Bay for all that section of country. About two months ago some six or seven people were killed at one time in that territory. The dispatches say that some sixteen or seventeen others have been killed since that time. Lawless characters from the whole country around go into that Strip and prey upon the adjoining portions of Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, and Kansas.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the amendment propose to extend the jurisdiction of the courts?

Mr. PLUMB. It proposes to extend the jurisdiction of the United States courts, and it provides for the survey of the land. It provides that these people may make entries under the homestead law in the adjacent district of Kansas. That will not be inconvenient to them, because all the business can be done by mail, and before the time when these entries are required to be made, as they can only be made in five years, undoubtedly Congress will act in such a way as to make some permanent disposition of this territory.

Mr. CULLOM. All I desire to say is that this Congress certainly ought not to adjourn without doing something to protect those people.

Mr. PLUMB. This amendment, of course, is out of order as much as anything can possibly be; but I very much hope that in view of the circumstances of the case and the very great emergency no point of order will be made upon the amendment. It meets with the unanimous concurrence of the Public Lands Committee. The subject has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations, and no member of that committee, I think, will make a point of order. This appears to be the only possible chance of obtaining any legislation which will protect the lives or the property of the people who are living on that Strip, or the lives or the property of the people who live adjacent thereto, and who are being preyed upon by lawless characters who make their headquarters on that Strip.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, the people of the district I represent have a large interest in this matter also. I think I am within the limit when I say there are five hundred men in my district waiting each day for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma to cast in their destinies with that new municipality. In addition to that I have seen a petition signed by 3,000 to 4,000 voters in my district in favor of the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma. There are other petitions aggregating over 6,000 or 7,000 signatures praying for that form of organization and government to be extended over this land in connection with the west part of the Indian Territory. And I offer the statement of these facts as a partial explanation of the interest I take in this proposition.

Now, in the Senate, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], that is the explanation of the position upon which most extraordinary legislation on the part of that body is sought for the purpose of giving law to a portion of our common country which apparently in all past legislation has been ignored. Whatever may have been the condition of affairs there heretofore the condition of affairs now seems to be much better than it was. About September 15 a territorial convention was held in No Man's Land. It assembled after full notification. It was advertised. It met and passed resolutions. They selected again as delegate to represent them before this Congress, as far as he could, O. G. Chase. I have read letters from Mr. Chase respecting this people, and there is no reign of terror in that land.

But let me read the proceedings of that convention. They are as follows:

NO MAN'S LAND—A TERRITORIAL CONVENTION NOMINATES OFFICERS AND ADOPTS STRONG RESOLUTIONS.

BEAVER, NO MAN'S LAND, September 17.

Inclosed I send you the platform adopted by the Oklahoma Territorial convention which assembled here last Saturday. The convention had been well advertised, and was a large and enthusiastic gathering of the friends of Territorial government. John Dale, who had been in Washington during the winter helping the Kansas annexation and Cherokee Live-Stock Association in their schemes for town-site, scrip, and other speculations, was present, and in a lengthy speech attempted to capture the true friends to home rule and convert them to his way of doing business, but he failed, and was invited to sit down, and left the room in disgust.

O. G. Chase was nominated as a delegate to the Fifty-first Congress. A full Territorial ticket for the third annual council was also put in the field, and it was generally agreed that nine-tenths of the population prefer to remain as we are rather than yield to the Kansas annexation schemes.

A large number of old soldiers were also present and organized a post of the Grand Army of the Republic on the same day, which brought out scores of army flags and many greetings amid old army friends.

The platform of principles is as follows:

"Resolved, That this convention, having been called by notices inserted in each of the newspapers published in this Territory, does hereby heartily indorse the action of our Territorial council in its wisdom in adopting the Colorado laws, as enunciated in council bills Nos. 9 and 10, and that we furthermore indorse our friends in their successful effort in adding section 18 to the Oklahoma bill, authorizing the governor of this new Territory to adopt the Colorado laws for it until the Legislative Assembly shall otherwise provide.

"Resolved, That the Territorial party will in the future act as it has done in the past, and constantly insist upon local Territorial government authorized by Congress to secure for our people schools, courts, and a United States land office within our borders, the same as other Territories have.

"Resolved, That we earnestly recommend a full, free, and honest vote be had in each precinct in this Territory at the November election for all Territorial, county, and precinct officers, and that returns be made to the council meeting, held in Beaver on the first Wednesday in December, as prescribed in council bills numbers 7 and 10, pages 116 and 128, Territorial Records.

"Resolved, That we congratulate ourselves upon the successful establishment of law in No Man's Land, which is respected and obeyed better here than are the laws in States adjacent, and that we implore Congress to lay aside strife, envy, tariff, and political prejudice long enough to give us the long-looked-for and much-coveted aforesaid legislation and backing.

"Resolved, That we ask our friends to keep an eye single to the wants and necessities of the 15,000 people who, in the language of Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, 'have made such laudable efforts to create a republican form of government in No Man's Land.'"

When this question was raised four or five days ago the distinguished chairman of our Committee on the Public Lands, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], got up and stated he would oppose this measure. I will read what then took place from the RECORD, page 9863. Here it is:

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to add a word. That so much of the amendment as proposes to attach the Public Land Strip to any portion of the State of Kansas will be as strenuously objected to by myself as by any other member on the floor. If the Land Strip is to be organized into a land district at all it should be a separate district. It contains three and a half millions of acres, and I am confident when the subject is carefully considered the House will not consent to add it to any of the adjacent territory. I shall object to any other arrangement than that I have indicated.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETERS. Would there be any objection if the amendment only extended the laws of the United States so far as crime is concerned over No Man's Land?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir; and I will explain the reason why.

Mr. PETERS. I hope it will be done.

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir, I will explain; and I desire first to call the attention of the gentleman to another resolution adopted at the same convention at Beaver:

Resolved, That we congratulate ourselves upon the successful establishment of law in No Man's Land which is respected and obeyed better here than are the laws in States adjacent; and that we implore Congress to lay aside strife, envy, tariff, and political prejudice long enough to give us the long-looked for and much coveted aforesaid legislation and backing.

That is to say they want a Territorial organization of their own, and in that feeling I participate. Now, as I have said, the statements made by the distinguished Senators from Kansas and Illinois, which have been read in the hearing of the House a few moments ago, indicate that they put their action upon the basis of peace and pacification for the people there. But the people themselves deny it. They say it is not on that ground at all, but as this resolution indicates, that they want a separate and distinct organization of their own. And more than that, Mr. Speaker, this Territory if put into this condition, in my judgment, with all the land laws of the United States in force, and authority for the Secretary of the Interior to proceed and survey the lands and make the lands subject to the present laws of the United States, is in direct conflict with the terms and provisions of the bill known as the bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and is so considered by the friends of that measure; and therefore as the friends of that bill, and speaking for them, we are prepared to fight this provision to the bitter end. I know I can speak in this regard for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] who sits in front of me; the gentleman from Arkansas; the gentleman from Wisconsin, and other distinguished gentlemen who are not now present, and it will certainly take a quorum of this House to pass this measure through it.

Mr. PETERS. I should not support that amendment of the Senate myself, so far as that is concerned; but the suggestion——

Mr. BURNES. After the statement of my colleague, debate is entirely unnecessary, in view of his declaration, and I think the House is perfectly willing to let it go.

Mr. MANSUR. Very well; although I have not concluded what I had to say, I am perfectly willing and content to let the matter go with that understanding.

Mr. BURNES. Of course, I do not desire to prevent my colleague from continuing his remarks if he wishes to proceed further. But debate is unnecessary.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow a question?

Mr. MANSUR. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. Do you propose to insist upon the presence of a quorum if the Senate amendment is simply to extend jurisdiction over that territory for the punishment of crimes, and not in any way attaching to it another land district or extending the land jurisdiction over it?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir; in any event. The Oklahoma bill has the right of way, and we have by a poll of the House ascertained that over two hundred members——

Mr. PETERS. As I understand the gentleman from Missouri, then, he proposes to punish the people in my district to make a little capital for another measure pending in Congress.

Mr. DUNN. Let the people of your district stay at home.

Mr. PETERS. They do stay at home. It is not my people who are making this difficulty. It is the outlaws in this No Man's Land who are placed beyond the reach of criminal jurisdiction.

Mr. MANSUR. My position is this: that the Oklahoma bill has the right of way. Now, if we are correct in our information, two-thirds or more of the House are in favor of its passage. Having the right of way at the opening of the next session of Congress, it will have its day, and filibustering in a full House will neither delay its passage nor beat it.

Mr. PETERS. But is it not true that every friend of the Oklahoma measure from the West, and especially from Kansas, in this House would vote for the Oklahoma bill as quickly and readily if this feature or amendment in relation to crime in No Man's Land was put into this bill or into a separate measure?

Mr. MANSUR. No, sir; and I call the attention of the gentleman to the resolution of September 15, passed at this meeting, in which the people there expressly deny that they are willing to be attached to any other public land district.

Mr. PETERS. And I venture to say in response to the gentleman, and I know it is a matter of fact, for I have been amongst them, that the people of No Man's Land are about equally divided on the question, and the convention to which he alludes expressed the convictions of a large minority of the citizens, but not the convictions of a majority of them. They are divided upon this very question now just as they were two years ago, when they sent here two delegates, one in favor of annexation to Kansas and another in favor of the separate organization of the territory.

Mr. MANSUR. But here is the action of an organized convention, in which Mr. Dale, one of the very parties that you refer to, who came here and advocated your own views, was hissed for expressing annexation sentiments. Now, what authority has the gentleman for saying that it was a minority of the people and not a majority of the citizens of that Territory who were represented in that convention?

Mr. PETERS. Because the very same element that met there passed a resolution that sent one of these delegates to Congress. The other convention has not met yet and we have not heard from the other side.

Mr. MANSUR. When were you last there?

Mr. PETERS. Last week.

Mr. HEARD. Will my colleague allow a question?

Mr. MANSUR. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. I understand the resolution as read by my colleague to be directed to the extension of the land laws over that district.

Mr. MANSUR. We object to that because the people object——

Mr. HEARD. But my colleague does not permit me to finish. He does not understand me. I say the objection I understand you to read from the resolutions adopted there was against the adoption of the extension of the land laws and not against the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. MANSUR. Yes; against the whole thing.

Mr. HEARD. Then my colleague did not read that far; he only read part in response to a question.

Mr. MANSUR. I will read it:

Resolved, That the Territorial party will in the future act as it has done in the past, and constantly insist upon local Territorial government authorized by Congress to secure for our people schools, courts, and a United States land office within our borders, the same as other Territories have.

Mr. HEARD. They insist upon a Territorial organization. I understand that; and I stand with him willing to give that to these people; but what I undertake to say as a friend of Oklahoma is that I do not see how it would militate against that organization if until we get enough members of this body present to pass the bill we should give them now the protection which is proposed by this bill. Therefore I am in favor of giving to them the protection which is guarantied by the institution of some court which will administer the Federal law for the prevention and punishment of crime. I am also in favor of giving them a Territorial form of government at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. MANSUR. Within ninety days we can give to Oklahoma a Territorial organization, so far as the action of the House is concerned, and those blessings which will flow from that form of government are tenfold greater than those which would follow the acceptance of this proposition.

Mr. HEARD. Let us give them both.

Mr. PERKINS. Will my friend yield to me for one question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired, and this debate is all proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. The question I desire to ask is, if in the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] he understands that the people of Oklahoma would not desire the laws of the United States extended over them temporarily pending the consideration of the organization of a Territorial form of government for them?

Mr. MANSUR. My understanding is that with the hope of having the Oklahoma bill passed at an early day in the next session they prefer to let the matter stay as it is. That is the latest information I have.

Mr. BURNES. If my colleague is through I desire to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I may not possibly be able to submit what I desire to state to the House in that length of time, because what I will offer is largely composed of evidence which I desire the House to hear. Now, I agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] to the effect that it is absolutely necessary that some sort of criminal jurisdiction should be enforced within this tract of country known as "No Man's Land."

Mr. HOOKER. How many people are there on it?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not know. I have seen various estimates about it. I represent a district bordering in part upon this region, and for the last eight or ten months I have received frequent and numerous complaints from a part of my constituency concerning the depredations committed upon them by parties coming down from "No Man's Land" into Texas. Now, I do not care where the jurisdiction may go—whether it is Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, or anywhere else—but there seems to me to be an absolute and pressing necessity that some political organization should have criminal jurisdiction, at least temporarily, over this region.

Now, let us for a moment see what is this "No Man's Land." In the report of the Secretary of the Interior, submitted at the beginning of this session, I find the following:

PUBLIC-LAND STRIP.

Because of its anomalous condition, this portion of the public domain should receive the prompt attention of Congress. This tract of land is bounded on the east by the Indian Territory, on the north by Kansas and Colorado, on the west by New Mexico, and on the south by Texas. It is a little over 168 miles long from east to west, and a fraction over 34 miles in width from north to south; contains 5,738 square miles, or 3,672,640 acres. Excluded from the boundaries of these States and this Territory, it has always been outside of any political jurisdiction. It is simply a part of the public domain, over which the land laws have not been extended, and within the limits of which no tribunal, civil or criminal, has jurisdiction to protect property or punish crime.

* * * * * * *

The territory should also be placed under some political organization, so that civil and criminal law may be properly administered therein.

I do not think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] has at all exaggerated the conditions of lawlessness which obtain in "No Man's Land" and the country immediately adjacent thereto. As I have stated, for the last several months I have received complaints from my constituents as to the situation there. I hold in my hand a letter addressed by General Henry E. McCullough, the State land agent of Texas, to the governor of Texas, on 5th December last, and by him referred to me. I read from that letter this statement:

I find a strip of land about 30 miles wide extending all along the north end of the Pan Handle, known as the "Neutral Strip," which seems to belong to no country, State or Federal—at least, no government seems to exercise any lawful control over its citizens, or rather inhabitants, and from all I can learn there is a collection of lawless men from all parts of the world on it, and our people complain of their depredations, in this, that some of them come down into the stock ranges in the Pan Handle with their Winchesters, axes, and wagons "hunting," when there is little or no game, camp in out-of-the way-places, and when they start back always have their wagons well loaded with wood, and it is believed that some, if not all, of them have some fresh beef under the wood; and some of these people make a practice of coming down regularly into our border counties and cutting and hauling off the best cedar and other timber that grows on both railway and school lands, and none of our people seem to feel at liberty to interfere with them in any way, and without they are backed by some State authority they will hardly undertake it.

Mr. DUNN. Is it necessary to extend the laws of the United States to the Public Land Strip to prevent the commission of crime in Texas?

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman will wait until I get through with the evidence that I desire to submit. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an article found in the Fort Worth Gazette, coming from a correspondent at Mobeetie, Tex., a few days after the date of the letter which I have just read from General McCullough, and which was sent from the same place.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHEOL IN NO MAN'S LAND—THE PUBLIC LAND STRIP OVERRUN WITH THIEVES AND RUSTLERS—MURDERS OF DAILY OCCURRENCE—A GENERAL DEMAND FOR CONGRESS TO PLACE THE PUBLIC LAND STRIP UNDER STATE OR FEDERAL SURVEILLANCE—CATTLE KILLED FOR THEIR HIDES—THE EARLY DAYS OF CALIFORNIA REVIVED—SPECIMEN CASES OF CRIMES.

[Correspondence of the Gazette.]

MOBEETIE, TEX., December 12.

A stockman from Hansford County is here to find out what protection, if any, can be invoked from the Federal or State authorities against the aggressions of a band of thieves and rustlers who are operating in the Neutral Strip. The state of affairs existing along the northern border of Texas, as reported by him, is most peculiar and deplorable. Cattle which drift across the line into the Strip are killed for their hides or a choice piece of steak by the rustlers, and their carcasses are strewn thick upon the prairies like those of the buffalo some years ago.

The offenders are well known, but the Strip being absolutely without law and under the jurisdiction of neither the State nor Federal Government, they are insolent and defiant. A few days ago one of them, in response to a warning to cease his misdoings, sent word to the cattlemen that they ought to arrest him if they could. The cattlemen along the border are very much worked up over the situation, and say that unless Congress does something speedily they will be compelled to take the law into their own hands. The only form of a court existing in the Strip is a vigilance committee, which seems utterly powerless to cope with the lawless elements, which, on account of the shelter it offers to criminals, have flocked in there from all quarters. Murders are almost of daily occurrence, and the murderer, if he is a dangerous character and has friends, goes scot free.

The report of a horrible tragedy comes through some stockmen who drove to market through the Strip a short time ago. Five men killed a boy, a sheepherder, who, it seems, was suspected of stealing sheep. They demonstrated to the satisfaction of the vigilance committee that the deed was done in self-defense, and after an acquittal lynched two men and a woman, the father and mother of the boy and a party living with them. A few weeks ago a man who had established a claim and built a dug-out made a trip out of the Strip, and on returning found an occupant in his dug-out who refused to give it up. An altercation ensued, the result of which was that the usurping occupant was killed. His slayer retreated to the dug-out of a friend, and when the vigilance committee came after him was so well intrenched that they had to retreat without him. These are specimen cases of crimes which are of ordinary occurrence.

The reports which reach the press from the Strip are few and meager, and thus the public has been left in the dark as to the actual condition of affairs. Settlers are filling it up very fast, and with the assistance of the Federal authorities they would soon be able to rid it of the rustlers. The law-abiding elements are looking anxiously forward to some action by Congress at its present term. If they should be disappointed there is a strong probability that the early days of California will be revived by concerted action of the law-abiding elements.

Mr. LANHAM. A dispatch published recently in the Dallas News contains this statement:

The governor has letters from the Pan Handle complaining that desperate thieves and robbers from No Man's Land are coming down into the border Texas counties and stealing stock. Owing to their numbers and the sparse population of the Texas counties, they are able to get off with their plunder to market. A company of rangers is asked for to protect the settlers, but at present the governor can not spare a company for that distant service.

Only a few days ago I received a letter from T. J. Fagan, the county attorney of Lipscomb County, Texas, from which I will read the following extracts:

We of this county are bounded on the north by No Man's Land and on the east by the Territory. Depredations of every character are almost of daily occurrence, and the State officers are powerless to prevent them. Only this morning (September 17) a poor man called to see me whose son had been foully shot down and killed in the Strip. Of course I could do nothing for him. * * * Horses and cattle are taken from our citizens daily.

Mr. Speaker, I have produced these statements and letters to emphasize the necessity of having some character of criminal jurisdiction enforced within this Territory. Something must be done. It is manifest to every one who has given any attention to the situation that there is no possibility of passing the Oklahoma bill at this session of Congress. These murders and depredations are of daily occurrence. What objection can there be, then, to giving to these people the relief which they so much need and for which they constantly appeal?

Here is a large territory where the people who inhabit it have neither the restraints nor the protection of any laws, State or Federal. The people themselves of this region, as well as the citizens of adjoining States, need that some authoritative jurisdiction should be asserted—some power ought to be competent to punish the crimes committed in this territory—and there ought to be something done whereby criminal process can reach those offenders who violate the laws in Kansas or Texas and take refuge in this lawless country. Depredations of every character, it seems, are being perpetrated both within and without this neutral strip, and the offenders can bid defiance to any jurisdiction. If these conditions continue the worst of consequences may obtain.

Invasion and retaliation will be the only resources left to those who are being despoiled of their property, and any good people who may reside in this territory will inevitably feel the terrible effects of such a course. A reign of terror will ensue, and the life and property of no man will be safe. In the presence of such an urgent demand for the force and authority of the criminal law it is but a poor answer to a suffering people at this juncture to bid them wait for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma.

As before stated, it is not material as to where jurisdiction may be lodged—whether in Kansas, Colorado, or Texas; it may not be specially important just now as to the adoption of any particular system of land laws for "No Man's Land." That may be deferred for a future time. But it is of the highest importance that the lives and property of the people should be preserved, spoliation and bloodshed avoided, and the wholesome exercise of the criminal laws enforced; and the sooner this is done the better.

I am not actuated in these remarks by a spirit of antagonism to the Oklahoma bill, but because I am convinced of the necessity for speedy action. The measure proposed may be limited to purposes of temporary relief, and in no way obstruct the future policy of Congress as to the organization of Oklahoma Territory. The committee on conference can abandon that feature of the Senate amendment which treats of the "privileges and benefits of the land laws," and confine its operation alone to the extension of criminal jurisdiction over this Territory as a measure of temporary relief.

Mr. BURNES. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, it is a very unfortunate thing for many people in that part of the country, as well as for the people at large, that the Oklahoma bill did not become a law at this session of Congress. However, it can not now become a law, and the responsibility for its failure rests with the gentlemen who saw fit to demand a quorum when it was impossible to get one here during the long and tedious course of the present session. I have gone as far as any gentleman in the endeavor to pass that bill, because in all its provisions it is one of the best and most important measures for the people that has come before Congress for years. Nevertheless, sir, I now face the fact that it can not become a law at this session, and we find in this strip of land, 140 miles long and 30-odd miles wide (the peculiar character of which I have described to the House on different occasions during the last three years) a crying necessity for some law.

The people there are without law or order. Murders are committed upon the border of my State of Colorado and upon the border of the State and the district of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], and there is no law to punish the murderers. The question is, what shall be done in the interim between this time and the meeting of the regular session of Congress in December, when we shall have a quorum and when we can pass the Oklahoma bill? Shall murder run riot? Shall horse-stealing continue to be the "business," as some claim it is now, of 10 per cent. of the people in that region, and shall there be no authority to punish that or other crimes? I trust that state of things is not to continue. I would object and demand a quorum before I would allow any amendment to the deficiency bill to go through here which would extend the pre-emption law, or any other land laws, over No Man's Land, as is now proposed by the amendment sent here by the Senate; but the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has explained, and I have understood from other gentlemen concerned in the conference report, that the Senate will not insist upon that.

The question now is simply this: Shall we extend United States Federal court jurisdiction over No Man's Land and attach it to Southwestern Kansas, for the purpose of punishing crime and restoring and preserving order in that territory until the next session of Congress? I will not take the responsibility of opposing such a proposition as that. I advocate and urge upon the House the importance of such a measure. I have received letter after letter on this subject; I have received resolutions on this subject; I am familiar with what has been read here by gentlemen who have preceded me; but I will not weary the House by going over the details. It has become a notorious fact, familiar to all of us, that murder, horse-stealing, and other crimes have come to be the order of the day there, and we ought to extend some court jurisdiction over that region until we meet in the next session of Congress, when the Oklahoma bill can become a law.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, let me repeat what I have previously said upon this floor, that this strip of territory called No Man's Land, with all its lawlessness, is about as free from crime as that portion of the so-called Indian Territory over which we have been trying to extend the Oklahoma bill, carrying with it civil law and government. We have been violating, ever since the treaty with the Indians in 1866, an express provision of that treaty which guarantied our extending court jurisdiction over that benighted country for the protection of the native Indians, the half-breeds, and the white men.

Crimes have been common for years in that part of the Indian Territory known as the Cherokee Strip, the Oklahoma country, and other portions outside of the five civilized tribes. Warrants are issued and the marshal and his posse from the western district of Arkansas go to make arrests. The officers are often resisted, and additional murders committed before the arrests can be effected. The expense to the United States is enormous. This trouble will continue until local government and local courts are organized in that country. It is to be hoped another session of Congress will not pass without such legislation.

Mr. BURNES. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to see any reasons why the laws of the United States should not be extended over this No Man's Land as proposed in the amendment reported by the conference committee. I have heard a great deal about men being very much in love with other people's land and desiring to acquire it, but there seem to be more people in love with this No Man's Land than I have ever heard of as being in love with anybody's land. [Laughter.]

Now, I can not conceive why any one can possibly object to extending over that region the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States for the punishment of crime and the regulation of civil rights. I had hoped that probably there might be a very happy solution of the difficulties arising with regard to No Man's Land (which seems to produce so much trouble) by an equitable division of this territory between the States of Kansas, Colorado, and Texas; and we might give Arkansas a small strip of it if the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] does not object.

Mr. DUNN. Your friends, the Indians, stand between us and that land.

Mr. HOOKER. And I hope they will always so stand.

Mr. SYMES. As the sole Representative from the State of Colorado, I wish to say that we do not desire any portion of No Man's Land. We are generous, and are willing it should be given to the poor people who choose to go West as pioneers.

Mr. HOOKER. Some gentlemen insist that we ought not to extend over this territory the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States for the punishment of crime. Why? Because they want the Territory of Oklahoma established! That is a singular reason for not agreeing to the report of this committee. Because you can not make a Territory of it you object to extending the laws of the United States over this strip of land which now has not the benefit of those laws!

Why, sir, this strip of land would make a very queer looking Territory—a Territory 30 miles wide and 148 miles long! This strip of land is to be organized into a Territory and then into a State; for I take it for granted, if it ever be made a State, it will not include any more land than what is now called No Man's Land. I believe that a better disposition of it would probably be to cut it up and attach it to the coterminous States, extending over it the laws of those States respectively, as well as the laws of the United States. But if that is not agreeable to gentlemen here, there certainly can be no objection to extending over that territory the laws of the United States for the punishment of crime. If there exists there all the crime that is stated, and if the character of the population is such as it is said to be, there should be no objection to extending over that territory the laws of the United States for the punishment of crime as proposed in the report of the conference committee.

But, Mr. Speaker, what sanctity invests No Man's Land, and what reason is there that while you may make an organized Territory of it, you can not extend to it the land laws of the United States—the homestead law and the pre-emption law? Is there any such sanctity attaching to this region that the laws which apply to other lands of the United States should not be applied there? No Man's Land is spoken of as a Territory. It is not a Territory yet; it is nothing; it is no man's land; it is a nonentity; you can not designate it as a Territory. What is there so sacred about this No Man's Land that the land laws of the United States should not be extended over it, or that the instruments of the surveyor can not be put upon it to determine what it is and what are its boundaries? What is there so sacred about it that citizens of the United States should not be permitted to establish homesteads there, when the Government of the United States has surveyed the land? I am not aware that there is anything peculiar about this No Man's Land distinguishing it from other lands of the United States; and I can not understand why the land laws of the United States should not apply there.

I have no objection to the proposition as it comes from this committee; but if it be deemed objectionable, it certainly can not be objectionable simply to extend over this region of country the laws of the United States for the punishment of crime, for the security of life, liberty, and property.

As to the Oklahoma bill, which gentlemen say they are going to pass, it has not passed yet. It may pass at the next session beginning in December, but it must go through other ordeals than this House before it can become the law of the land. It must stand the test of examination in the other branch of the legislative department; and then it must stand the scrutiny of the Chief Executive. So that even when you have a quorum, it does not follow that this measure is to become a law. I will say that I doubt very much the wisdom of passing any measures which are to become laws of this country without the presence of a quorum. If the requirement of the Constitution making a majority of the whole body necessary for a quorum be wrong, change it; but so long as that provision exists, it is to my mind exceedingly questionable whether any law should go upon the statute-book which has not received the sanction of at least a quorum as now called for by the terms of the Constitution and the organization of this House.

But I can see no objection to the proposition as it comes from the conference committee extending the criminal laws of the United States over this region of country; and I understand that gentlemen on the other side agree with me in this particular. I think that our conferees, if this matter should go back for reconsideration in conference, ought to be instructed to agree to the proposition to extend at least the criminal laws of the United States over this region. For myself, I do not see any particular reason why the land laws of the United States—the homestead, and pre-emption laws—should not apply there, giving preference, if you choose, to persons who have already located land in accordance with those laws.

If there be bona fide settlers to any extent give them that preference if they have a right to it. I see no reason why the land laws of the United States should not apply to this nondescript territory as they do to the defined and surveyed boundaries of other Territories. This is all I desire to say.

Mr. BURNES. I yield now for ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to use the whole ten minutes. I am satisfied I have very fixed and stubborn objections to this amendment, because, first, upon the excellent ground upon which the objection was placed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] in charge of the bill, it comes as an amendment to an appropriation bill when it contains no appropriation, but is legislation pure and simple in violation of the established rules of both Houses. Those of us who have been in Congress long have seen the vicious results of legislation on appropriation bills, and in every case we have heard it justified on the plea of emergency.

This Public Land Strip has been there in the same place it is now ever since 1846; ever since it was wrested from Mexico. The surrounding States have not been terrorized by the inhabitants who live upon it. They must be a wonderfully orderly people for self-government. They have not attracted the attention of the country by the enormity of their crimes.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman allow me there?

Mr. DUNN. No; I can not yield. The complaint made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] is that a party of Kansas citizens went down there fleeing from the fury of their neighbors, and that their neighbors followed them and killed them. He then says these people go up into Kansas and commit crimes up there. I want to know if the extension of the laws of the United States over the Public Land Strip can give jurisdiction to try people for offenses committed in Kansas and Texas? Now, the laws of the States are ample for this purpose. It is in violation of the wishes of the people who live on this Strip, who are entitled to their own local government.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNN. No, I can not yield. It places them under the jurisdiction of a remote court, some one told me probably 300 miles distant from them. The expense of administering the laws will be extraordinarily great and extraordinarily precarious. People from the Territory will be arrested and dragged this great distance to be tried before a jury of some other vicinage and not that of the offense. It violates the whole spirit and genius of our Government, of local self government, of autonomy for the Territories and for the States. It gives the people about the Kansas land office a chance to make one universal grab of all the lands before the people of the Territory will be apprised of the fact they are in a land district.

We all know, who have been at all intimately connected with the management of the Oklahoma bill, that this scare has all sprung up since that bill came up. If the complaint urged by gentlemen in the surrounding States could be considered as retributive justice pursuing those who have defeated the passage of the Oklahoma bill, then the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and his friends would have my profound sympathy. They are vials of wrath laid up for them against the day of judgment.

Mr. HOOKER. Pour them out. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNN. We all know there is one element greater and stronger and more powerful than all others in defeating the passage of the Oklahoma bill, and that is the great cattle syndicates of Texas who are grazing their cattle upon the Cherokee Strip.

Mr. LANHAM rose.

Mr. DUNN. I do not yield. They are there. They are the enemies of the Oklahoma bill. They do not want the people there. These cattle-grazing contracts and leases are now expiring, and it is all-important to defeat the passage of the Oklahoma bill. I am told the Secretary of the Interior has notified Chief Mayes, of the Cherokee Nation, to make no more contracts or leases, and that if he does they will not be respected, and that those who undertake to lease those lands may expect local government will be organized for that Territory.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say here, and I mean it all, that no expedient of this kind, after the filibustering experience encountered by the Oklahoma bill, shall go through this House without a quorum to carry it through; and every argument made here in favor of this measure is tenfold stronger for local government for these people living there and on that territory; and I serve notice now upon all who may be interested in this measure that it can not pass until there is a quorum to pass it.

Mr. BURNES. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I made a reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR], as I understood his question. In the course of the discussion I understood him to ask me when I had been in my district. I answered "last week." I am now informed that his question was when I had been in No Man's Land. I misunderstood his question, therefore, I desire to make this correction.

Mr. BURNES. I am quite satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that further discussion on this item would be a useless consumption of time in view of the assurances of gentlemen of known character and integrity as to their views upon it, and I will therefore pass from it and call attention to the next provision, which is amendment numbered 41. This is a proposition to appropriate $2,500 to employ a certain counsel in the case of Samuel Strong, I believe, against the District of Columbia. The conferees have not agreed with regard to it, simply because they could not understand exactly what they should do, but probably mainly because of certain public assurances which were given by the conferees to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA.] For the purpose, therefore, of redeeming the promises and assurances made to him, as we had to report a disagreement anyway, we have therefore brought that provision back as a subject of disagreement, although I think, in fact I know, that the conferees on the part of the House and Senate could have agreed upon a proper settlement of the amendment. But, for the purpose of giving the gentleman from New York an opportunity of explaining his position and views upon the subject, it is here on a disagreement, and I yield to him now so much time as he may desire.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House the gentleman from Maryland submitted an amendment, which the Senate has added to the bill. The House, by an overwhelming vote, after a full discussion of the question on its merits, rejected the proposition for two reasons; one based upon the facts of the case, and the other that it was new legislation, and hence it was ruled out.

This is new legislation upon this bill, incorporated by the Senate. The facts of the case are these: Samuel Strong had a claim against the District of Columbia, arising from work performed and material furnished in making certain improvements for the District. The claim was a very large one. Work had been performed by him under contracts, some twelve or thirteen in number, between the District and Mr. Strong, under the provisions of which he was to receive his compensation in the current money of the United States; and it was also provided in the contracts that Mr. Strong should pay the men employed by him in the same kind of money.

Mr. Strong did it, but the District of Columbia never paid him one solitary dollar in the current money of the United States. On the contrary, it forced him to accept in lieu thereof certain certificates issued by the District, against which he protested, but he was compelled to accept them in order to try to relieve his necessities, he having expended all of his own available money in the prosecution of the contracts up to that time. These certificates were hypothecated in the banks of this city, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia pledged their honor as officials and men that when the paper became due for which the certificates were pledged they would take up the paper and redeem the certificates. They never took the paper up. The certificates were sold at 45 and 50 cents on the dollar, and that is the only compensation Mr. Strong ever received for the vast amount of work performed and material furnished.

The case went into the courts, and on four different contests Mr. Strong beat the District every time, never once losing a suit—three times in the courts of law and once before a reference composed of three referees. But each time by some technicality the District, by its representatives, had the findings or verdicts set aside, throwing the case back; and it has been lingering in this way for some fifteen years, until Mr. Strong has reached the age of eighty years. This Congress passed a joint resolution providing for the appointment of three arbitrators to settle the question and to determine what, if anything, was due to him, and if anything, to provide the money to pay him, or if nothing was due him to let the fact be known. The President approved that bill and appointed the arbitrators, and the District, through its attorney, applied to this House for an additional appropriation of $2,500 to defend or protect the District before the arbitrators.

Now, sir, the law as it stands to-day, provides some $10,000 or $12,000 for the support of that branch of the government of the District of Columbia, that is to say, the legal side of it. The district attorney of this city and his assistants are the proper persons to protect the District in all suits of this character. But since the appropriation was made the arbitrators have met and the District was represented by its attorney, and it took a much shorter time than was anticipated. After sitting for five days the court adjourned, both sides being fully heard, and heard on the side of the District of Columbia by its regular and legally constituted representative, the district attorney for this District.

Therefore there is no use at this present time of including an appropriation in any bill to pay for any extra counsel in connection with that case. It is a subject that certain gentlemen of this city have availed themselves of for the last fourteen or fifteen years, and on which they would apply to Congress for a special appropriation to test the case of Mr. Strong, and, as the figures will show, some thousands of dollars have been spent in that connection. Now, the case is closed for the present with leave to file briefs on both sides with the referee, and there is no longer any necessity for this appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. May I ask whether the award is to be final? If it is final, it terminates the whole question.

Mr. SPINOLA. If anything is coming to him, which is undoubtedly the case, the referees will say what it is to be.

Mr. RYAN. The right of appeal does not exist.

Mr. SPINOLA. No, sir. Therefore I would suggest the propriety of not taking up the time of the House with this, and the conferees on the part of the House should be requested to suggest to the Senate the propriety of striking out this item. It is only a small one, but small ones nevertheless grow larger.

Mr. BURNES. The conferees on the part of the Senate and House, it is due I should say, have been considerably exercised over this matter. This litigation between the District of Columbia and Mr. Strong, or rather by Mr. Strong against the District of Columbia, has been running on here, as alleged, for fifteen years in civil suits, one of which lasted here about three months.

Mr. SPINOLA. For seventy-nine working days.

Mr. BURNES. For seventy-nine working days, as stated by the gentleman from New York. While the case was in that condition and while the counsel for the District of Columbia were confident that they were in the right, as we are advised, a resolution passed through the Senate providing for an extraordinary tribunal for the termination of this lawsuit. The resolution declared that this litigation should be taken out of court, taken away from the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, and committed to arbitrators to be appointed by the President of the United States. This resolution, thus passed through the Senate, was passed in some way through the House.

I doubt if any gentleman present can recollect the circumstances of its passage. Nevertheless it became law. A week or ten days ago the arbitrators were appointed; but before they were appointed the conferees in conference regarded the situation as somewhat grave and serious, and concluded that the attorney who had made this case his special study and who had been in it from the commencement should be retained—what his name is I do not now remember. The District commissioners thought so. We thought so. We thought the best we could do in defense of the rights of the District of Columbia was at least to appropriate a suitable sum to employ the attorney who of all others was best qualified to try the case before the arbitrators. Before we had reached any determination the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] informed us that the arbitrators had met, heard the case, and adjourned, and had directed briefs to be forwarded to them.

Now, that is the situation. The amount involved is generally believed to be a half million dollars. A claim amounting to half a million of dollars that has been in the court for fifteen years is, it is said, thus unceremoniously and speedily disposed of, without the aid and assistance, so far as the District is concerned, of the attorney who knows most about it. Notwithstanding its adjournment and notwithstanding what my friend from New York says, I think that this lawyer ought to be retained, and that he ought to pursue these arbitrators, if necessary, to their homes, either individually or collectively, and get before them the rights of the District of Columbia as against the plaintiff, Mr. Strong.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman tell me what he means by the arbitrators adjourning?

Mr. BURNES. I have just stated what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] has said on that subject. I know nothing in the world in regard to it except what the gentleman has stated. I understand from the gentleman from New York that these arbitrators, appointed probably a week or ten days ago, have already had a meeting in the city, have had before them some one representing the city and some one representing Mr. Strong; that they have had some sort of hearing and have adjourned, gone to their homes, and requested those having briefs to file to send them to them at their homes.

Mr. ROGERS. A board of arbitration is simply a court, and until the award is made and the board of arbitration is dissolved there is no reason why briefs can not be presented or any other matter pertinent to the matter under arbitration, and the fact that they have adjourned and gone home can not cut the Government out from a hearing.

Mr. BURNES. I think not; and for that reason I suggest that this provision ought to be made. I hope my friend from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will be perfectly willing, in that spirit of fairness which has always characterized him, to allow this provision to be made for the payment of this lawyer, who is the only one thoroughly acquainted with the case. I trust he will interpose no opposition. If this provision is not made I have information which leads me to believe that the conferees on both sides will agree to report a provision repealing the joint resolution creating this board of arbitration.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, in order that the gentleman from Missouri and the House may understand the position of this question, I will state that it was no momentary hearing that was had before the arbitrators. It took one day to arrange the manner in which the case should be presented, and, after that was done, two days were allowed to each side. Each side occupied its full two days, and there is no other gentleman in the District of Columbia so well qualified, in my judgment, to handle the case on that side as was the assistant District attorney who appeared there on behalf of the District. He had his full two days, and the other side had their two days, and they have agreed now to submit their briefs to the arbitrators, who will take them up, together with all the evidence and all the law governing the case, and examine them at their homes, and then return here to give their decision. There was no extra counsel called in. There was no extra counsel retained.

The gentleman referred to by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] (I think Miller is his name) had been retained by the District of Columbia and had drawn annually a certain amount of money for appearing in this case; but whenever he appeared the assistant District attorney appeared also, and was as familiar with the law and the facts in the case as any human being could be with any question of that character; and, in my judgment, no man could have presented the case of the District more ably than did Mr. Davis, the assistant District attorney. Therefore there is no longer any necessity for this item remaining in the bill. If there was any necessity I would withdraw my objection to it. Who is to receive this money if it is appropriated? We shall simply put it in here to be raided upon in the future and probably drawn from the Treasury upon some pretext or other.

The amount is only $2,500, and I have no particular objection to it if the House is willing to let it go in, but I do not see any occasion for it. Mr. Strong was thrown out of court four times. The long trial referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] lasted seventy-nine working days, and then the judge took the case from the jury upon the ground that the contracts were null and void from the fact that there was no appropriation made for their execution at the time they were created. The case was appealed to the court in banc, who unanimously reversed the judgment below. Subsequently there was another trial, extending through three weeks, and the court above set the verdict aside upon the ground that the trial judge was drunk when he charged the jury, notwithstanding the fact that the whole twelve jurors made affidavit that they had never seen him intoxicated upon the bench.

But the object of the whole proceeding was to keep this man out of his money. There was a determination that he should never receive a penny of what was due him, notwithstanding the fact that he had sacrificed his entire fortune in the performance of these contracts and had never drawn a solitary dollar in money from them.

Again, when the three referees heard the case, the hearing occupied eighteen months, and when they rendered a verdict in favor of Mr. Strong, that was set aside upon the ground that they had not allowed the full face value of the certificates of the District of Columbia. Mr. Strong had been forced to take those certificates, and the referees gave the District credit for what the certificates sold for under the hammer, 45 cents on the dollar; but the court set aside the finding upon the ground that the referees should have allowed the full face value of the certificates.

The same thing is required by this arbitration, and by that means this man will lose $100,000. He received about $200,000 in certificates, but he did not realize more than about $45,000 from them. These are the facts. If the Senate think that by any threat on their part to repeal this arbitration they can compel the passage of this amendment, I will say to them now that they will not pass this bill this session unless they have a quorum here. I, for one, have had enough dictation from that end of the Capitol. They have made interpolations into bills here time after time.

Into one bill in reference to guns and fortifications they undertook to graft something which no man here fought with more determination than did my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. Now, sir, I am perfectly willing that justice shall be done in this matter, and that is all that we have asked for. I have known Mr. Strong from boyhood. He is from my own State. I can recollect him perfectly well for the last fifty years of my life, and a more honest and upright mechanic never trod the earth. He built the wings of this Capitol, and if you can find a better piece of work anywhere on the face of the earth I should like to have it pointed out. No fault was ever found with his work under those contracts; they were approved and accepted at once. He has never had a lawsuit against him in all his long life as a public builder, although he has built some of the finest structures in this country. But in this case there has been a disposition and a determination on the part of the District of Columbia to rob him of what justly belonged to him.

That determination has led to this controversy. When the resolution was before this body the subject was fully discussed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] and I debated it here for an hour and a half, and other gentlemen also took part in the discussion. It was discussed almost as fully as any ordinary bill that has come before the House for action at any time this session when I have been present.

Therefore I do not see any necessity for making this appropriation; yet I shall not oppose it any further. If the committee think proper to put it in, let that be done, and we will take our chance of action on the subject hereafter.

Mr. BURNES. I now desire to call up the amendment making an appropriation for Chinese indemnity.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. BURNES. No, sir. I call it up at the instance of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA]—not that I care to have it considered particularly, but to give him the opportunity to be heard upon it.

Mr. MCKENNA. What does the gentleman mean by saying that he does not care to have the amendment considered?

Mr. BURNES. I mean that the conferees are practically agreed with regard to it; and unless some gentleman desires to show we are in error, and does it, we are likely to adhere to our action.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not think that this House will concur in that amendment; for with the evidence now before the House I can not conceive why it should do so. The question has not been considered or reported by any committee properly so called of this House. I know of no foundation for the presentation of this provision at this time, except possibly a line or two in the President's recent message on this subject. He says:

Therefore I recommend that, without acknowledging legal liability therefor, but because it was stipulated in the treaty which has failed to take effect, and in a spirit of humanity befitting our nation, there be appropriated the sum of $276,619.75, payable to the Chinese minister at this capital on behalf of his Government as full indemnity for all losses and injuries sustained by Chinese subjects in the manner and under the circumstances mentioned.

Mr. SAYERS. Has not the gentleman some printed evidence of an arbitration of this matter?

Mr. MCKENNA. An arbitration?

Mr. SAYERS. I mean a consideration of the matter by the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. MCKENNA. I have not any evidence——

Mr. SAYERS. Have you not the document in your hand?

Mr. MCKENNA. I really have some doubt to what the gentleman refers; I think there may be some misunderstanding. I have in my hand Executive Document No. 272.

Mr. SAYERS. That is what I mean; there is no misunderstanding between us.

Mr. MCKENNA. This is a statement of claims submitted by the Chinese minister, I suppose, to Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State. It is entirely ex parte; it comes entirely from Chinese sources. This matter may have been investigated by Mr. Bayard; as to that I can not speak. It was recommended to be paid in the treaty recently negotiated, and the treaty contained a stipulation that this payment should be in full indemnity of all demands. But, Mr. Speaker, that treaty has been rejected by the Chinese Government, hence the clause providing that this payment shall be in full indemnity for all demands is not obligatory on their part.

It may be said that if we appropriate this money and it be accepted the Chinese Government would accept it upon the terms in which we appropriate it. But there is no necessity yet of appropriating it. In the Forty-ninth Congress, Mr. Speaker, there was a recommendation to pay $147,000 as indemnity for what was called the Rock Springs massacre in Wyoming Territory. It was then declared that there was no legal or moral obligation on the part of this Government to pay that money, and it was also distinctly declared the payment should not become a precedent. In opposition to that measure I took occasion to say in substance that if its passage was a good precedent it ought to be followed, and if a bad precedent it was sure to be followed. Sir, we now have it followed. Was it a good precedent or a bad precedent? The same declaration accompanies this recommendation—that it must not become a precedent; that this payment is made not because we are under any legal obligation to make it, but simply because it is befitting the nation that we should do so. This declaration that it is befitting the nation to pay this money is one of strong appeal to all of us. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not exactly know where we are going to stop. It has been declared to-day on the floor of this House by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] that a group of men went down into No Man's Land, followed by another crowd of men, and that some were killed. Would it be proper for us upon an appropriation bill to make provision for paying the heirs of those persons killed in No Man's Land, over which no court has jurisdiction, and over which this Government declines to extend its criminal statutes?

Where are we to stop? It was said in the last Congress that we should stop with the action then taken. We now find this claim of $276,000 presented in this Congress. Is there to be another such claim in the next Congress?

I think, Mr. Speaker, we ought at least to wait a little while. This Chinese matter is not yet settled. It has advanced far, and I am sure is going to advance further; but there is a great deal yet to be done. The bill known as the "Scott bill" which we passed, which was also passed by the Senate and approved by the President, is no complete settlement of this question. That legislation possibly fails with the act to which it was amendatory, which expires in about four years. Hence, that is but a temporary measure. It may be that further negotiations will be undertaken; and it is certain that further legislation will be enacted, because further legislation is necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as there is no legal obligation on our part to pay this money, as the Chinese Government, without any excuse whatever, according to the message of the President, has refused to ratify a treaty, some clauses of which they proposed themselves, and which, as the President in substance says, they gave us to understand would be satisfactory to them—as this clause of indemnity was embraced in that treaty, and they have voluntarily rejected the treaty, I do not think they have any claim upon us which should induce this Government to make haste to grant this appropriation for the indemnity of Chinamen who are supposed to have suffered in the remoter sections of this country.

I have no desire to obstruct any measure by what are called dilatory tactics, by insisting upon a quorum, as I could do; for, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in that style of action except in very extreme cases. I assume that members who are now present are fairly representative of the sentiment of this House; and I therefore assume that what commends itself to their judgment would commend itself to the judgment of a full House; that the House and country would be satisfied with their action. Hence I shall submit the question to the House, deficient in numbers as it is, on the statement, and if they choose to pass this appropriation, or rather concur in this amendment, if they have the power to do it, they must take the responsibility of doing it.

Mr. BURNES. The next proposition will extend beyond 5 o'clock, and therefore with a single remark on this Chinese amendment I think I shall move an adjournment. The conferees were not inclined to make this appropriation until the receipt of the President's message, but after the suggestion of the President and the further suggestion on the part of the State Department both sides agreed to the amendment. We would like to have the opinion and the judgment of the House, as I am sure neither side is quite clear or decided whether this appropriation should now be made or not.

It will be remembered in the treaty just rejected by China there was a provision which, while it denied the validity of the claims, contained a proposition to pay them $276,274. The rejection of that treaty by China leaves the subject of this payment a liability denied by suggestion, in the treaty, but appropriated for, notwithstanding the rejection of the treaty. We have agreed to this appropriation. But we ask the judgment of the House. We are desirous of knowing the extent of the objection to this appropriation. I now move the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 4, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of citizens of Apollo, Pa., praying for the repeal of that portion of the internal-revenue law which classes druggists as wholesale liquor dealers; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VANCE presented a memorial of W. L. Lassite and 57 others, citizens of Northampton County, North Carolina, praying for a certain amendment to the interstate commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Select Committee on Indian Traders, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (S. 3582) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Chippewa bands of Indians in the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; and

A bill (S. 3583) regulating the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3529) granting a pension to Miss Elizabeth E. Tuttle, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6334) for the relief of Isaac Roshon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 483) for the relief of Elizabeth Jones, widow of John Jones, deceased, and to place the name of said John Jones on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9668) granting a pension to Joseph Rosier;

A bill (H. R. 210) granting a pension to Ephraim Nye;

A bill (H. R. 7) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh;

A bill (H. R. 308) granting a pension to John Lynn;

A bill (H. R. 9178) granting a pension to Jane Jackson;

A bill (H. R. 7683) granting increase of pension to Hugh Brady; and

A bill (H. R. 9173) granting a pension to Mary J. Drake.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 2407) to authorize the conveyance of certain Absentee Shawnee Indian lands in Kansas, heretofore reported from that committee.

CONDEMNED CANNON AND SMALL-ARMS.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (S. 3612) donating condemned cannon and small-arms to Naval Post No. 400, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that the bill may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I thought there were no cannon or anything else of that kind to be given out.

Mr. CAMERON. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on the subject. I ask that the letter be read.

Mr. CULLOM. I tried to get something of the kind through and failed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, September 29, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 12th instant, inclosing a letter and other papers from Mr. John F. Mackie, Secretary of Naval Post No. 400, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, in relation to obtaining condemned cannon and small-arms, for the purpose of decorating their hall, and requesting information upon the subject, and, if the object desired can be accomplished by an act of Congress, that a bill to that effect be draughted by the Department.

In reply I have to state that, from time to time, unserviceable cannon and small-arms are deposited at the several naval stations for inspection, and, when condemned as useless for naval purposes, they are, under the provisions of existing law, sold at public auction and the proceeds deposited in the Treasury. The sums so realized are small, and it would seem that the principal advantage to the Government by so disposing of the same is in preventing an accumulation and consequent care of such old material as has been found to be no longer of use in the naval service. I am, therefore, of opinion that the donation of the articles in question, for the purpose stated by Mr. Mackie, might very properly be authorized by Congress.

I transmit herewith, as requested by you, a draught of a bill providing for the donation of the arms mentioned by Mr. Mackie, and return his letter with its inclosures.

Very respectfully,

D. B. HARMONY,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I think I must object to its present consideration.

Mr. CAMERON. Why does the Senator object?

Mr. CULLOM. I want to see whether there can not be a general distribution of such cannon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3613) for the relief of the Standard Under-ground Cable Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3614) granting an increase of pension to William H. Webster; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Secretary return to the House of Representatives House enrolled bill No. 10633, entitled "An act for the relief of Dr. John B. Read," with the message that before the delivery of said enrolled bill to the Senate a motion had been made in the Senate, pursuant to its rules, to reconsider the vote of the Senate passing said original bill, and the Senate had ordered that the House of Representatives be requested to return said original bill to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, as soon as possible, a copy of his letter and the report of the board provided for by a joint resolution of this present Congress, and transmitted by him to the House of Representatives on the 4th day of June, 1888, on the subject of Dr. John B. Read's claim, together with all orders, correspondence, and papers occurring, made or had on the subject of the said Read's claim after the passage of said joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say with regard to this matter what I think the Senator from Vermont knows pretty well, that the papers in the case have been several times called for, and all that we know of can be found, I think, in the files of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state that under the joint resolution of June, I think it was, the Secretary of War was directed to report to Congress the findings of the military board that he should organize under that joint resolution, and all the evidence on that subject, to Congress. It appears that a communication of that kind was sent to Congress in the other branch on a date named in a report of a committee; and that communication was never printed. In endeavoring yesterday to find the papers to see what the communication of the Secretary of War was, I was informed that the letter of the Secretary of War sent in pursuant to the joint resolution was in the hands of one of two gentlemen who were named, members of the other House, and that they were both out of town. So what the Secretary of War said upon the subject it was impossible for me to ascertain.

I did find in the committee of my friend from Connecticut what appears to be the report of the board of officers organized by the Secretary of War pursuant to the joint resolution; but I could not find any of the evidence which had been submitted. I thought, therefore, it was better, considering the importance of the principle of this case when we come to consider it—although the amount, I believe, is only $17,000—that we should once for all get into the possession of this body the whole of the proceedings.

Mr. HAWLEY. The report of the board in full is in the files of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, but undoubtedly there are papers that were submitted in evidence to the Army board which are still in the War Department.

Mr. HAMPTON. The bill was referred to me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs. I offered the joint resolution which was passed requesting the Secretary of War to appoint a board of officers to pass upon the claim. The board was appointed and the Military Committee acted upon the report of that board.

My own recollection is that the Secretary of War sent no communication at all to the committee or to Congress. If so, I did not see it. It may have gone to some member of the other House; but we acted upon the report of the board of ordnance appointed by the Secretary of War, and we simply adopted the findings or recommendations of that board. I think the Secretary of War made no communications to the committee or to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

VIOLATIONS OF CIVIL-SERVICE LAW.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate whether or not during the present year there have come to the knowledge of the Department of Justice any violations by officers of the United States or other persons of sections 11 and 14 of the act of January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States;" and if so, whether or not any prosecutions have been instituted to punish such violations under section 15 of said act.

Mr. BERRY. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over and be printed.

NAVAL ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual volumes of the astronomical observations of the Naval Observatory for 1886, 1887, and 1888 be printed, and that 1,800 additional copies of each report be printed, of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

ANIMAL INDUSTRY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed 50,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1887, of which 13,000 copies shall be for the use of the members of the Senate, 27,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture; the illustrations to be executed under the supervision of the Public Printer, in accordance with the directions of the Joint Committee on Printing, the work to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had directed the Clerk to return to the Senate, in accordance with its request, the bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read, and also to inform the Senate that the Speaker had signed the above enrolled bill before receiving a message of recall from the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3559) to amend section 2304 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCRAE, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. HERMANN the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3427) to amend section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

POLITICAL REMOVALS FROM ARMORIES AND ARSENALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday in relation to political removals from armories and arsenals. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] yesterday in the course of his remarks read what appears to have been a newspaper article, although he does not say from whence he obtained it, reciting the proceedings of a Cabinet meeting in 1882 with regard to political assessments. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that while I do not pretend to recollect everything which may have occurred in a Cabinet meeting at which I was present (and it is asserted I was present, as all the members of the Cabinet were present except Mr. Lincoln), I have myself no recollection of any such meeting at any time. About one thing I am certain, that neither at any Cabinet meeting at which I was present nor anywhere else was there ever a suggestion made by anybody that a failure to contribute to the political campaign should work any disaster or any danger to any incumbent of a public office.

I do not say that there may not have been some discussion as to whether it was proper to allow these circulars to be sent to the Departments. I have an impression that there was something of that kind, but it must be borne in mind that that was before the passage of the present civil-service law.

I wish to say, further, that during the time I occupied an official position in one of the Departments of the Government I never heard a question raised that a failure to contribute was a matter to which the head of the Department, or the Executive, or anybody else, would pay the slightest attention. I think all my associates in the Cabinet will bear me out in saying that from the way the collections were made then, if made from public officials, it was utterly impossible, without great effort on the part of the head of a Department, to find out who had paid and who had not. So far as I am concerned, I never knew who had paid and who had not; neither do I believe any other member of the Cabinet did.

I recognize the necessity in every political campaign that there should be what is ordinarily called "the sinews of war." I know a campaign can not be properly conducted without some expense. There must be clerk-hire, there must be postage, there must be printing, and a great variety of things paid for. When a committee attempts to reach out and have its influence felt in every part of this great country, the expense must amount in the aggregate to considerable; but I will say for myself that I regard it as a very grave misfortune that the people shall have come to believe that vast sums of money are collected or are necessary for the carrying on of political campaigns.

I do not think it is promotive of good morals to have the people of the United States believe that the success of either party in these campaigns depends upon the amount of bank capital they are able to raise. If that is true, in this campaign I think the Republican party might as well surrender now as at any other time. The ability of our Democratic friends to raise money, not only in this campaign, but in all other campaigns, has always greatly exceeded that of the Republican party, unless it may have been immediately after the war, when they were in the demoralized condition they were, growing out of their connection with the rebellion.

To begin with, they have a solid South, in which it is not necessary that a dollar shall be expended for the publication of political documents, for the less of that their people have in that section of the country the more likely they are to succeed. The 153 votes that represent the Democratic solid South in the electoral college can be won, with the exception perhaps of West Virginia and Virginia, without a contest. It does not take an effort. That is done in most of those States not by determining what is the will or what is the wish of the voters of that State, but it depends entirely upon the ability of the counting officers to transfer to the proper column a sufficient number of figures to indicate the election of the Democratic candidates.

So they need no money in the solid South. That enables them to do as they did in 1884—to call upon the solid South for contributions to be used in the North. It was reported in 1884, and undoubtedly truthfully, that the State of Georgia and other Southern States furnished the Democratic national committee a large amount of money to carry on the campaign. I have never heard it denied. They certainly had no need of it in their own State, and undoubtedly they had the financial ability and the disposition to assist by furnishing means to the committee for use in the Northern States.

Starting with 153 votes they do not need a great deal of money, I repeat, to make a very great showing in the States that are doubtful. If they can carry New York, Connecticut, and Indiana, or perhaps some other State of about the same electoral strength as Indiana or Connecticut, the contest is over. So this great contest, involving the political destiny of this people, involving our economical and industrial interests everywhere in the Union, is left to a few doubtful States, not to exceed four, and the contest is there carried on.

I said a moment ago that the Democratic party had the opportunity, had the means, had the power to raise vast sums of money for the purpose of carrying on this and other campaigns. I only need to name the fact that at the head of their committee they have put the most distinguished capitalist of this country, if not of the world; and that to-day it is an open secret that all the men who control immense wealth in this country, all the men in this country of extraordinary wealth, no matter how acquired, are in full sympathy with the effort to repeat this Democratic Administration.

With nearly $60,000,000 of the people's money in the banks throughout the United States that ought to have been in public circulation and not in the banks, which ought to have been paid upon the public debt of the United States, it is easy for the Democratic national committee to call upon the people who are plundering the Government in this way for their contributions, and they will hardly say "nay" to them when the retention of this money, for which they pay no interest whatever, in the banks depends upon the good-will of a Demo-
